Besides partaking of civic hospitality, the representative visitors dined with the Savage Club, and with Sir Hugh Gilzean Reid, LL.D., attended a reception at the Foreign Press Association, and a soirée of the Newspaper Society, and met their colleagues of the British Section at a garden party given by the President and Committee. The wonder remains that, with all these social engagements, five sittings dealing with solid business were satisfactorily accomplished.

The British International Association holds its general meeting as we go to press at the office of the Linotype Company, by kind permission of Sir Joseph Lawrence, M.P. Delegates to the Liège Congress are to be chosen upon as widely distributed a territorial basis as possible, and with due regard to a knowledge of French, the language in which all Congress business is transacted.

G. B. STUART.

CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS.

23, Leeson Park, Dublin, April 30th, 1905.

In your issue of April 29th Mr. W. F. P. Stockley remarks that "many people would like to have the evidence for and against Cromwell's sending Irish prisoners to the West Indies."

Prendergast, in his 'Cromwellian Settlement of Ireland' (London, Longman, 1865), quoting in part from the Order Books of the Commissioners of the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England for the Affairs of Ireland, preserved in the Record Tower, Dublin Castle, wrote as follows:—

"After the summer assizes of 1653, Sir Charles Coote, Lord President of Connaught, and Colonel Sadleir, Governor of Galway, were directed to treat with Colonel Stubbers or other merchants about having a properly victualled ship for eighty or one hundred prisoners ready to sail with the first fair wind to the Indian Bridges, the usual landing-place in the Barbadoes, or other English plantations thereabouts in America. These were proprietors who had been sentenced to death for not transplanting, but had been pardoned by his Excellency. At Barbadoes the prisoners were to be delivered to certain merchants (who were to pay the cost of transportation), all except ten, who were to be consigned to a person to be speedily named. This was a Mr. Edward Smyth, a merchant resident at the Barbadoes. His lot, however, was afterwards increased to twelve, ten men and two women; and upon receiving them at the Indian Bridges, or elsewhere in that island, he was to pay Colonel Stubbers four pounds per man for transportation and victuals."

Prendergast gives, in a series of foot-notes, references to the various pages of the Order Books in which the entries are to be found which justify his statements. In Hardiman's 'History of Galway,' p. 134, it is stated that Stubbers transported from that city to the West Indies no less than one thousand persons, whom he there sold as slaves.

A letter to Lord Byron in Carte's 'Collection,' vol. ii. p. 412, asserts that the thirty survivors of the citizens and garrison of Drogheda, "all that were left of them" after five days of massacre, were shipped to the West Indies to be sold as slaves. WILLIAM F. DENNEHY.

LAMB'S LETTERS.

May 8th, 1905.

THE facts stated in Messrs. Dent & Co.'s letter in your issue of May 6th are interesting, and speak for themselves. The added explanation of the law citing from Hinkson, 'Copyright Law,' p. 50, is somewhat vague. I have not seen the work referred to, but apprehend that if it contains such a statement as that extracted, it is open to serious objection. The statement is misleading, if not absolutely inaccurate.

"Legally the property in letters remains in the person to whom they are sent." "Remains" here is vague—"vests in" probably is meant. But what is intended to be conveyed by the term "property in letters"? Property in the substance of the communication, or the paper on which it is written? The law really is that the copyright in a private letter remains in the writer: the property in the paper on which it is written is probably in the receiver, but even this is doubtful. The property in the copyright, so to speak, is the very foundation of the right to restrain publication.

W. A. COPINGER.

*.* We should have thought that our statement, or rather Mr. Hinkson's, was fairly clear to the lay mind, being defined by the circumstances. However, we may commend to those who wish to investigate the subject Dr. Copinger's own authoritative work on 'Copyright,' fourth edition, p. 46. We are aware that the question is not altogether clear, depending on decisions which may be nullified to-morrow.

WOMEN'S DEGREES AT DUBLIN.

Trinity College, Dublin, May 10th, 1905.

YOUR reference to the action of Trinity College in conferring numerous degrees recently upon women from Oxford and Cambridge shows a misapprehension of the facts of the case, which are simply these: After some twenty years of discussion and opposition to the admission of women to degrees in this University, the matter reached a crisis, and the opposition collapsed. The Board of Trinity College agreed to their admission. The great majority of the junior fellows and professors had always been in favour of the movement, and after full debate in the Senate of the University, the petition for a king's letter was carried by the overwhelming majority of seventy-seven to eleven. Once the principle was established and the "king's letter" obtained, every privilege heretofore enjoyed by men was fully extended to women, and it was felt that retrospective compensation was due to them after their long exclusion. Certain privileges were at once accorded to women who, being excluded from this College, had entered the Royal University of Ireland, but we could not acknowledge their degrees to the full extent, this University having no ad eundem relations with the Royal. In like manner we felt that those women who had preferred the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge should have the same recognition from us as young men who had gone to those universities for their education, but who subsequently wished to have our degrees in addition. Had they been men they could have obtained degrees in their own universities, and then taken them ad eundem here, so the principles we had adopted entailed, as a corollary, their right to obtain their degrees from us.

Your insinuation that we have made these arrangements for the purpose of "adding money to the coffers of Trinity College" is an unworthy one. It is, I think, sufficiently answered when I tell you that we have already expended upwards of 1,500*l.* in making preparation for the education of our women students in one branch alone—viz., that of medicine—and no expense will be spared to put them in every way on an equality with men. We have not been actuated by any sordid motives, but by a true spirit of liberality towards a class to many of whom the possession of a degree is of vital importance. As to your remark that "courtesy is singularly forgotten when one university directly nullifies the decision of another," I may mention that our Vice-Chancellor, Mr. Justice Madden, communicated what we had done to the Vice-Chancellors of Oxford and Cambridge, and received most courteous replies from both, without the least idea underlying those letters that we had in any way taken an unfair advantage of those universities over which they so worthily preside.

ANTHONY TRAILL,
Provost of Trinity College.

* * We publish Dr. Traill's letter with pleasure. We made no insinuations about money, but we were bound to state a fact which is material to the discussion. We have yet to learn that the Vice-Chancellors represent the general feeling of the universities concerned. When we do, we shall possibly admire their open-mindedness, but hardly their sense of logic.

THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS.

THE Congress held at Algiers from April 19th to 26th will be remembered by Orientalists as the busiest and most interesting in which they have taken part. The bright French town, enclosing the old pirates' nest, with its steep and crooked alleys lined by native shops—unpleasant-looking kennels, secreting apparently more comely and sometimes artistic interiors of courts and balconies—the wooded slopes with charming views of the harbour and bay, and the mélange of European and Oriental costumes and of racial types in the streets, would have provided enough entertainment for any Orientalist for the first time brought into contact, through a kind of porthole, with the actual East. But there was also a hinterland to explore—the broad plain of cultivated land, dotted with villages built in European style, but inhabited chiefly by native Kabyles and Arabs, which stretches over about twenty miles to the Atlas Mountains, the valleys and heights of which, again, are occupied by the gipsy encampments of the Arabs, and the desert not far beyond. Extensive excursions, eastward to Timgad, Biskra, and Constantine, and west to Blida, Tlemcen, and Oran, had been arranged for the days following the conclusion of the Congress. But many members took advantage of the interruptions caused by the Easter festivals to visit, singly or in parties, the more accessible places of interest, such as Hammam el-Ouan, Blida and the Gorge de la Chiffa, Tizi-Ouzou, and Cherchell.

Under these circumstances a somewhat formidable "Programme des Fêtes et Réceptions" was announced by M. René Basset in the name of the Commission of Organization. It included, besides the usual informal gathering at the commencement and the formal opening and closure of the Congress, two public lectures, a "Fête Hippique" on the parade-ground, a "Fête Mauresque," a "Vin d'Honneur" given by the municipality, a ball and a banquet to delegates given by the same, and the Governor-General's ball. On the 19th the presence of the English sovereigns was made the occasion of an illumination of the town and harbour. It may therefore be said that the French authorities, who were at the same time entertaining two other congresses, spared no effort to give a generous welcome to their guests, who met them with a hearty appreciation. The banquet given by the municipality took place at midday on the 25th—in a temperature indeed suggestive of a different occupation—and the Hôtel Excelsior, where it took place, may certainly be congratulated upon a triumph of culinary art. But the culmination of the festive and spectacular aspects of the Congress was reached in the ball given by the Governor-General, M. Jonnart, on the same evening. The official residence in the Mustapha, with the lines of its Moorish architecture, and the paths and trees in the grounds charmingly illuminated, and its courts and rooms thronged with European and Oriental costumes, among which a large number of Arab sheikhs were distinguished by their tall figures and their scarlet robes covered with military decorations, certainly presented what La Dépêche Algérienne termed a "theoria" of brilliant colours such as one would scarcely have expected to witness so far west.

The formal opening of the Congress on the 19th presented the usual features—a long series of addresses made on behalf of governments, universities, and learned societies. The speeches were for the most part commendably brief. The message of the Khedive's Government was delivered in sonorous Arabic (which was also heard at the banquet), but for the most part the English, French, and German delegates were content with their native tongues. The India Office and the Government of India were represented by Sir Charles Lyall. One speaker made a feeling—though, in fact, quite impersonal—allusion to sacrifices made on behalf of science in crossing the rather rough waters of the Gulf of Lyons. It must be admitted that so favourite a winter resort as Algiers might be better served in regard to the comfort of passengers.

Both the lectures were very well attended. That of M. Rouanet on Arabic music was a very finished exposition, based upon the lecturer's own researches in the literature and the living tradition. He instituted an elaborate parallel between the development of the musical art and that of the architecture and general civilization of the Islamic world. In general he ascribed to the Arabic music a more mystic and less intellectual character ("mixophrygian") than that of the Europeans; and his view would certainly seem to be borne out by the interludes of native connoisseurs and professional women artists by which a rather lengthy discourse was diversified. M. Brunache's lecture on the pilgrimage to Mecca gave an interesting exposé of the ceremonies of the Haj, a subject the present interest of which is attested by an Arabic work recently published at Algiers and by an account of the pilgrimage of 1902 written in English by Haji Hussain Khan and Mr. Sparrow.

For the Algiers Congress the decision made at Hamburg in 1902, to publish only an abstract of the proceedings, has been rescinded. The papers are to be sent in to the Commission not later than May 31st. But scholars will probably be grateful for some information in advance of the full texts, which can scarcely be expected immediately. On this occasion the sections were seven in number, as follows:—I. India (including Iran); II. Semitic Languages; III. Languages of Islam; IV. Egypt, African Languages, Madagascar; V. The Far East; VI. Greece and the East; VII. African Archaeology and Musalman Art. Concerning each of these we will now add a few details, reserving for the end a notice of the joint meeting of Sections I., III., V., and VI., and the general recommendations of the Congress.

I. The Indian Section is generally admitted to have been one of the most important and fruitful, a result largely due to the counsel and direction which M. Senart was ready to lend at every turn. Profs. Scherman and de la Vallée Poussin were chosen as secretaries, and Sir Raymond West, Prof. Pischel, Count Pullé, Prof. Bloomfield, and M. Senart successively presided. Among the most valuable contributions may be cited Dr. Fleet's identification of the site of Sagala (Sākala) with Sialkot, an identification which found general acceptance; M. Senart's paper on the Vajrapāni of the Græco-Buddhist art (regarded as representing Kuvera); and Prof. Rapson's instalment (read in absence of the author) of his decipherment of the Kharosthī documents discovered by Dr. Stein in Chinese Turkestan. Prof. Kirste presented some interesting combinations relating to the forms of n, d, and ch in Jaina MSS., and Prof. Bloomfield discussed some passages in the 'Rig-Veda.' The origin of the Pali language was reconsidered by Prof. Windisch, who would vindicate for it after all a Māgadhī origin; and Prof. de la Vallée Poussin treated the psychology of the Buddhist Wheel of Life.

The Iranian field was represented by Mr. Arthur Christensen's paper 'Sur la Patrie de l'Avesta,' a paper by Mr. Arakelian on the Guebres of Persia, and an address on Sufism. There were two papers on Armenian subjects.

Among the works and reports presented to this section we may note Prof. Kielhorn's 'Tables of Indian History,' which are destined to supply a very valued conspectus of the native dynasties; Prof. Bartholomae's long-pondered translation of the Iranian 'Gāthās'; the first part of a very elaborate concordance to the 'Vedas,' by Prof. Bloomfield; and an instalment of a translation of the 'Bodhisattva-bhūmi,' by Profs. Bendall and de la Vallée Poussin, the last having already appeared as an article in Muséon. Sir Charles Lyall read Dr. Grierson's report upon the progress of his great undertaking. In connexion with a brief note submitted by Prof. Rhys Davids in connexion with the proposed Pali Dictionary, the recent death of Prof. Edmund Hardy was commemorated in sympathetic terms by Prof. Scherman.

This section met six times, and was well attended.

II. The section of Semitic Languages included among its rather numerous officers two Englishmen, Canon Driver being president, and Mr. F. C. Burkitt one of the secretaries. There was a full programme of about twenty papers. Prof. D. H. Müller sought to prove a correspondence of h and s in South Semitic dialects to sh in the northern; and Dr. Paul Haupt wrote on the traces of Epicurean and Stoic philosophy in the book of Ecclesiastes, and also suggested, to account for the word "Sadducee," an etymon gaddiqim, "the just," the expression having an ironical sense. We should mention also an important Vienna papyrus discussed by Prof. Wessely. It relates to a tax on the Jews of the town of Arsinoe, and supplies much information of a sociological character. M. Thureau-Dangin announced two new Babylonian kings, and M. Ph. Berger read a paper entitled 'Sur l'Épigraphie d'une Prêtresse récemment trouvée à Carthage par le Père Delattre.' The whole field of the Semitic languages seems to have been fairly represented, and the papers were well discussed. The section listened to an attempt to prove a relationship between the Maltese dialect and the ancient Phœnician.

III. The Islamic Section was far the most picturesque, the presence of a number of Arab sheikhs lending colour and also life to the assemblage, over which Profs. de Goeje, Montet, and E. G. Browne presided. No Jihād was preached, however, although an attempt on the part of Dr. Vollers to demonstrate the presence of vulgarisms in the Koran met with lively protests. A number of the papers bore special reference to the local features of Mohammedanism in Algeria, Morocco, and Egypt, while others dealt with the Islamic system of education and the system now applied in Egypt, the classification of the Arabic sciences, &c. A wide interest attaches to a proposal by Sheikh Muhammad Asal to seek primarily in Arabic itself for the means of representing modern ideas. A paper by Prof. Guidi on 'The Nasib in Arabic Poetry' was read by Prof. Nallino; and there were many others. Bibliographers and librarians will take note of Dr. Codera's account of ancient and modern books existing in Morocco.

To this section Prof. E. G. Browne presented a large number of publications in the name of the University of Cambridge, the Gibb Trust, Mrs. Lewis, Miss Gibson, and himself.

IV. In the African Section no Englishman, except Mr. F. W. Green, took part. A majority of the proceedings related to Egypt (Prof. Mahler, 'Die Sothis und Monddaten der alten Aegypter'; Baron Carra de Vaux, 'Étymologie du mot Pyramide'; Prof. Wiedemann, 'Le Culte des Animaux en Égypte'); but Malagasy and Berber were also dealt with, and Signor de Gregorio considered 'L'Étymologie des Préfixes dérivatifs des Langues Bantoues, prenant pour Base le Chinyunja.' This section met five times.

V. Prof. J. J. M. de Groot, of Leiden, presided over the Far Eastern Section. Neither the scholars present nor the papers were very numerous. But of the latter some have an interest for wider circles. Indianists must refer to Prof. Chavannes's 'Indian Tales translated into Chinese'; and the paper of M. G. Soulié entitled 'Les Mongols: leur Organisation administrative d'après les Documents Chinois,' which was presented by M. Cordier, touches the frontiers of several studies. M. Pelliot cited the chief Musalman works published in Chinese (none earlier than 1642).

VI. Three of the papers presented to the Section Grèce et Orient will appeal to classical scholars—that of Prof. Kretschmer, who, writing on 'The Formation of the Modern Vulgar Greek in the Hellenic East,' endeavoured to trace a marked influence by non-Attic dialects; that of the President (Prof. Krumbacher) on 'Oriental Elements in Byzantine Literature,' the work largely of writers from Syria, Egypt, and Asia Minor; and M. Toutain's proof that Egyptian divinities were worshipped by Greeks at Delos during the last two centuries preceding the Christian era.

VII. The Section of African Archæology and Musalman Art, which met twice under the presidency of Prof. Max van Berchem, was largely occupied with the camel (M. René Basset, 'Le nom du Chameau chez les Berbères'). M. Marçais wrote on 'Proto-Arabic Decorative Art,' and M. Sarre on the 'Persian Art of Islam.' We must take note of Comte Godchot's discussion of 'La Colonisation Romaine en Afrique par les Militaires.'

The combined meeting of Sections I., III., V., and VI. presented a rather curious scene, when Count Pullé delivered his important lecture on the 'Cartography of Indo-China' to an audience consisting mainly of Arab sheikhs, who had not realized the exceptional character of the meeting in their usual chamber. Reproductions of more than two hundred ancient maps were exhibited round the walls, and two photographs of especial importance, a gift from the Italian Minister of Education, were acknowledged with warm applause. A move was then made to another apartment (which, however, was by some found with difficulty, and which presented an audience of a quite different aspect), where Dr. A. Müller, of Berlin, lectured on the Pahlavi documents in Syrian character brought by the German Mission from Chinese Turkestan. Dr. Müller's decipherment of these important finds is already known from the publications of the Berlin Academy.

The general meeting which concluded the Congress was scantily attended, and, like the Congress as a whole, lacked some picturesque figures which may be remembered at the Hamburg and other sessions. The business consisted of (1) the provisional choice of Copenhagen as the scene of the next gathering—Tiflis having been mentioned as an alternative; (2) the recommendation of M. Duchène's proposed researches on the origin of the Peuls; (3) the recognition of an International Commission to further the material and scientific objects of the Orientalische Bibliographie. This Commission, recommended by the Indian Section, on the initiative of Prof. Scherman, is to be composed of Profs. Kuhn and Scherman (Germany), Cordier (France), Mr. Thomas (England), Prof. Bloomfield (United States), Count Pullé (Italy), and other members to be subsequently chosen.

The vote of thanks to M. René Basset and his colleagues was very thoroughly earned. The arrangements for the Congress worked very happily, and the session was altogether enjoyable. There was no plague of bulletins. If we might venture a word of dissatisfaction, it would be to the effect that one meeting per diem for the transaction of business is quite sufficient, at any rate in a city so full of interest as is Algiers, and that a too full programme of engagements may interfere with the opportunities of private intercourse and intimacy, which are one of the acknowledged objects of such gatherings.

Literary Gossip.

AMONG the contributions to the June number of the Independent Review will be the following articles: 'Mr. Balfour and the Constitution,' by Mr. J. A. Spender; 'Public Feeding of Children,' by Canon Barnett; 'The English Farm Labourer,' by Mr. Seeborn Rowntree; 'Catholicism and Morals,' by Mr. G. G. Coulton; 'The Future of China: a Japanese View,' by Mr. A. M. Latter; and 'John Keats,' by Mr. R. G. Mayor.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL are about to issue a new series, entitled "The Dryden Library." The first volume will be a 'Selection from the Poems of Austin Dobson,' and will contain a frontispiece drawn by G. H. Boughton. This illustrates one of the poems, and was drawn by the artist in his copy of 'Old-World Idylls,' which he afterwards presented to the author. Among other volumes nearly ready are Canon Cheyne's well-known translation of the Book of Psalms; 'Shakespeare's Sonnets,' edited by Prof. Dowden; 'Chaucer's Canterbury Tales,' edited by Mr. A. W. Pollard; and 'Burns's Poems,' edited by Mr. Lang.

PART L. of the Proceedings of the Society of Psychical Research is about to be issued by Messrs. Brimley Johnson & Ince. It contains an important article by Prof. Charles Richet on 'Metapsychics,' the word coined by himself for what is usually called psychical research in this country. The Professor suggests a provisional classification of phenomena, and points out the inadequacy of all theories hitherto propounded, more especially the spiritualistic hypothesis.

As we go to press the Senate of Cambridge University is voting on the addition to the reforming syndicate of Mr. E. S. Roberts, Dr. Adam, Dr. S. H. Butcher, and Mr. G. H. Hardy, whose nomination has received the sanction of the Council.

WE regret to notice the death last week of the Venerable Edwin Hamilton Gifford, who had reached the age of eighty-four. He had a brilliant career at Cambridge, being Fifteenth Wrangler and Senior Classic and Chancellor's Medallist in 1843. He was a distinguished theologian. We noticed last year (February 6th) at length his edition of the 'Præparatio' of Eusebius, in five volumes, which reveals his accuracy as a translator, and his great diligence and very varied learning as an annotator. The whole work forms, as we said, "a grand contribution to our knowledge of early Christian literature." Besides this edition Dr. Gifford published 'Sermons' (1864); 'Warburtonian Lectures' (1870-4); 'Romans' (1881) and 'Baruch and the Epistle of Jeremy' (1888), both in 'The Speaker's Commentary'; 'St. Cyril of Jerusalem,' in the "Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers"; and other theological adversaria. Latterly he had lived in retirement, but before his long term of service in the Church, which culminated in the Archdeaconry of London, he had been a schoolmaster. He went from Shrewsbury under Kennedy to Cambridge, and returned to his old school as assistant master. When Prince Lee left the headship of King Edward's School, Birmingham, to become a bishop, Gifford was appointed to take his place, which he held for fourteen years (1848-62).

At the annual meeting of the Trustees of Shakspeare's Birthplace, held according to established custom on May 5th at Stratford-on-Avon, Mr. Sidney Lee was re-elected Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Trust. The Rev. Francis H. Hodgson, the present owner of Clopton House (near Stratford), which abounds in Elizabethan associations, was appointed to a vacancy in the Executive Committee. During the past year Mr. Lee acquired for the Birthplace Library a copy of Florio's 'World of Wordes,' 1598, in its original vellum cover. The autograph signature on a fly-leaf of Sir George Carew, the owner of Clopton in Shakspeare's time, shows that it was bought for that place in the year of its original publication. This interesting volume was at one time in the library of James Crossley, of Manchester.

A CORRESPONDENT in New York writes as follows:—

"Nearly two years ago I was able to send you a paragraph, which you very kindly published, about the authorized life of Benjamin Harrison, late President of the United States. You will recall that this was entrusted to the hands of Mr. John L. Griffiths, a lawyer of Indianapolis, Indiana. He was then in England, arranging to procure some material from eminent English lawyers who had been associated with the late President in the Behring Sea arbitration case. It may now further interest your readers to know that Mr. Griffiths has just been appointed United States Consul in Liverpool, and that he expects to command leisure from his official duties to complete the life of President Harrison within the first year of his service abroad. He will be found a very interesting figure in the legal and literary circles in which his lines will now naturally be cast."

AMONG the manifestations of the Schiller centenary, which occurred this week, is the publication of an exact facsimile of the first edition of 'Die Räuber,' with the preface and passages suppressed by the author, and comment by Dr. Schüddekopf. The reprint is issued by Mr. A. Weigel, of Leipsic, and is limited to 550 copies. The original is a very scarce book.

Das litterarische Echo for May 1st has an interesting special Schiller number, with appreciations from all sorts of writers, and many portraits of the poet. Mr. George Moore's tribute begins:—

"I have never read a line of Schiller in my life, and I do not think I ever shall; nor have I read anything about him or heard him discussed, but it would be rash if any reader should conclude that I have got no opinion about him."

What will the average German make of this pronouncement from a prominent English man of letters, which is followed by the repetition of Mr. Moore's wild theory about names? The advertisement of ignorance is a form of fun in which, we fear, too many English writers are qualified to indulge.

A NOTICE appears in the Bibliographie de la France of the first volume of 'Vers et Prose,' a collection which is to appear four times a year, and is devoted to "the defence and illustration of 'lyrism' in prose and poetry." Inedited works and numerous translations of foreign writers will be given. Among the items of the first number are 'Trois Poèmes d'Amour,' by Mr. W. B. Yeats, translated by Stuart Merrill; the Prologue of 'Ajax,' a tragedy by M. Moréas, and a story by M. Maeterlinck, 'La Massacre des Innocents'; while M. Vielé-Griffin sustains the theme that "Verlaine was our last great poet."

WE regret to hear that Sir John Leng has been laid aside from active work for several months past.

THE Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland have fixed on Edinburgh as the place of their annual gathering, some time in June, when they will be entertained by members of the Scottish trade. A few leading members of the London publishing trade are expected to join the gathering.

WE presume that we shall soon have in English the 'Peter and Alexis: Antichrist' of Merejkowski, as we see it is already available in a French version.

MR. A. CRAWLEY writes to point out that κ.τ.λ. is included and explained in Mr. Collins's 'Author and Printer,' which we noticed last week. He is right; we missed it, owing to the smallness of the Greek type, and the fact that it has not a heading to itself.

AT the Readers' Dinner this evening Mr. Laurie Magnus, managing director of Messrs. Routledge & Sons, will propose "Literature," which will be responded to by Prof. Churton Collins. In addition to the visitors mentioned a fortnight ago, Sir John Macdonell, Major Martin Hume, Mr. T. Marlowe, and Mr. T. Secombe have promised to be present.

THE Académie Française at its meeting last week made the formal distribution of the Janin and Saintour prizes. The Prix Jules Janin, offered for the best studies on ancient literature, has been divided between MM. Couat and Fournier, who have received 1,500fr. for their commentary on Marcus Aurelius, and M. Poyard, who has received the same amount for his study on Demosthenes. The Prix Saintour of 3,000fr., limited to essays on old French authors, has been divided between MM. Chanard and Laumonier, each of whom has received 1,000fr., and MM. Frenel and Gohin, between whom the remaining 1,000fr. has been divided. The Prix Langlois has not been awarded.

M. GEORGES D'ESPARBÈS, who has been appointed Keeper of the Palais de Fontainebleau, is the right man for the place, for he has a remarkable knowledge of the history which it covers, as may be gathered from his 'Légende de l'Aigle' and other works. M. d'Esparbès, who has written much in poetry and in prose, is one of the collaborateurs on 'Les Annales Politiques et Littéraires.' That other Napoleonic residence Malmaison is to be opened to the public shortly. The Keeper, M. Pallu de la Barrière, is already in charge, but various alterations and rearrangements will have to be effected before the official opening can take place.

THE distinguished author Johann Ziegler, whose death is announced from Vienna, was born in Hamburg in 1835. He entered the Austrian service as naval engineer, and rose to a high position in his profession. His work in connexion with the publication of the naval archives turned his attention to literature, and he subsequently wrote many feuilletons for the Wiener Tageblatt. His sketches and stories were very popular. His best-known books are 'Vom grünen Wasser' and 'Wiener Stadtgänge.'

THE Parliamentary Papers of the week include vol. xv. of the Board of Education Special Reports, the title of this volume being The Teaching of Domestic Science in the United States (1s. 9d.); and a Copy of Application received from the University College of Sheffield for the Establishment of a University in Sheffield (3d.).

SCIENCE

Ice or Water: another Appeal to Induction from the Scholastic Methods of Modern Geology. By Sir Henry H. Howorth. 2 vols. (Longmans & Co.)

THIS is a clever work, which will take its place by the side of the author's earlier writings on 'The Glacial Nightmare' and 'The Mammoth and the Flood.' It sets forth, in an expanded form, many of the arguments which are familiar to the reader of these works, and of Sir H. Howorth's numerous articles on geological matters elsewhere. Although directed mainly against the glacial theory, his attacks strike at some of the root-principles of modern geology. If our author be correct in his views, if his interpretation of geological phenomena be sound, then almost all the geologists of repute in the twentieth century will have to mend their ways: it is not simply that they are wrong in matters of detail, but they err—and err grievously—in fundamental principles. Sir Henry Howorth not merely fails to see the work of ice in most of the dolphin-backed rocks, scratched and scored as they may be; but he holds that rain and rivers, however long they may have acted, are not responsible for sculpturing the broader features of the earth's surface; and, going to the root of the matter, he calls upon us to contract very considerably our views of geological time.

If some of the main conclusions and even fundamental conceptions of the geological teaching of the present day are to be swept away, what has Sir Henry to put in their place? Nothing, apparently, but a reversion to the catastrophic principles of the early geologists—those principles which have been weighed again and again by some of the keenest intellects which ever attacked the science, and, in the result, have been found wanting. Such cataclysmal views were held, naturally enough, by most of the pioneers of geology at a time when men had but a dim perception of the science and were groping for light; but as illumination broke in they came to be gradually discarded in favour of others which, if less striking to the imagination, were regarded by most of the deepest thinkers as more in accordance with the known economy of nature. Go with any person unversed in geology to a deep valley, with a river flowing between precipitous rocks, and he will immediately suggest that these rocks have been riven by some mighty convulsion of the earth; it is the simple explanation that occurs to the very beginner, and it requires wide experience and profound meditation on natural phenomena to make a student realize the important part which the river itself has played in the formation of the valley. Yet, in giving subaerial denudation its credit for a fair share of this valley-making, it is by no means necessary to deny the probability that some fracture of the earth's crust determined the direction in which the engines of erosion were quietly set to work. How much of a valley is due to original fracture and how much to subsequent erosion remains a matter of opinion. After all, it is largely a question of degree in most matters which are in dispute between the "convulsionists" and the "denudationists." While the former are always giving prominence to underground activity and the latter to superficial action, he must be indeed a bigoted advocate who shuts his eyes to either of these great natural powers.

In seeking to revive the views of an older school of geologists, our author brings to their support many ingenious arguments, setting them forth with great clearness and with remarkable command of language, though his style has a diffuseness which recalls the eighteenth century rather than our own. His industry in searching the literature of the subject is as great as his skill in detecting and exposing the weak places in the arguments of those whom he opposes. He has, in fact, produced a work which is not to be lightly laid aside, and which represents a vast amount of honest and careful labour. In his dedication to the Prime Minister he describes it as a book which has cost him "some years of work and thought." As such it demands serious attention, and the author may be sure that it will duly receive it from his opponents. Whether it will carry conviction to them is, however, another matter.

Sir H. Howorth frequently directs his acute criticism against "the geological creed of the Geological Survey," attacking the views of what he calls "the wild men" of the Survey. These are the very men who spend their days in communion with the rocks in the field, and consequently acquire an unparalleled familiarity with them, thus avoiding the crude conclusions often reached by those whose reading of the sort is but superficial. It is not until one has stood face to face with the monuments of the earth's history, absorbing their teaching year after year, that the potency of causes, which to the uninitiated seem trivial, comes to be realized with fulness and force.

The bulk of Sir Henry's voluminous work is devoted to an attempt to destroy the glacial theory. He will hear of no Ice Age—he can scarcely see any marks of ice action in the drift—not even in the striations on the rocks. "It is," he says,

"because the ice monster is quite incompetent to do the work that an appeal must be made elsewhere, and why I so persistently have appealed to water as against ice as the real fashioner of the drift phenomena, and notably of the striae so persistently referred to as glacial."

No doubt the glacial hypothesis makes great demands on the imagination, but so does the diluvial theory which the author has exhumed and brings forward to depose it. If the glacial hypothesis involves a cataclysm, much more does the diluvial theory. It is true the cause of an Ice Age has never been satisfactorily explained, but neither can we account for the stupendous earth movements and sudden rush of water which the diluvial origin of the drift demands. The fact is, the origin of the drift, view it as we may, offers difficulties of exceptional gravity; but those who know most about such deposits conscientiously believe that, so far as the so-called "glacial drift" is concerned, the difficulties become fewer and lighter when ice is invoked as the principal agent in its formation. Yet no sound geologist will deny that water in a liquid form may also have played its part—and often a very important part—in the accumulation and distribution of such drifted materials.

While we cannot give adherence to the views of Sir Henry Howorth, we acknowledge that the publication of such works as his have a salutary tendency. They expose the weak points of our popular tenets; they set the advanced men thinking, and thus tend to check anything like recklessness of theory. No doubt the advocates of the powers of ice and rain and rivers have sometimes carried their favourite views much too far. That is only natural. It is difficult for any man with strong faith in his principles to avoid excess in their application, and in so far as the book helps to check this exaggeration it does good. At the same time there is the fear that such works may unsettle the lay mind, and lead many to doubt whether geological science after all really has any fixed principles.

Sir Henry Howorth notes with satisfaction that "glacialists" have in recent years greatly modified and moderated their views, so that he is encouraged to believe that "Time is on his side." It is true, too, that geologists at the present time are much more disposed to pay heed to the operation of subterranean agencies than they were a generation ago. But this is a very different thing from a return to the catastrophism of the early days of geology. Like our author, we have great veneration for the "Old Masters." They were men who did wonderful work in their time, but still we cannot think that all the advantage was on their side, and certainly we dare not allow our veneration for the past to blind us to the value of the science of to-day.

Although this polemical treatise is described on the title-page as being "in three volumes," two only have yet been issued. These, however, run to more than a thousand pages. The third volume will contain the completion of the argument against the glacial theory, and, we believe, an elaborate defence of the diluvial origin of the drift.

RESEARCH NOTES.

THE researches into the nature of colloids before referred to in this column (see The Athenæum, No. 4032) are still proceeding, and continue to yield very interesting results. The injection of a colloidal solution of a metal, such as, for instance, platinum, into the veins of a healthy person produces a great alteration in the function of nutrition, the quantity of uric acid excreted being much increased, while at the same time the quantity of oxygen consumed is reduced. With patients suffering from inflammatory diseases like typhoid fever, pneumonia, acute meningitis, and some stages of tuberculosis, the reaction is even more marked, a rapid diminution of the feverish symptoms and a great elimination of poisonous substances taking place. The reason of this seems to be that such colloids act as catalytic ferments, or, in other words, as bodies which bring about or hasten chemical changes without themselves undergoing change. But this is the part played by the different serums and other preparations having a yeasty or leaven-like action of late years used in therapeutics, which have always, in practice, proved more or less uncertain in their action, and which contain bacteria whose presence is not without danger. It is, therefore, claimed by physiologists so eminent as M. Albert Robin and M. G. Bardet, that in the near future they will be replaced by metallic ferments whose action can be calculated upon with certainty, and themselves measured with greater accuracy than the serums. A curious thing about the affair is that the first hint of this discovery was given by a Japanese student named Kitasato, who noticed that the ferment of lacquer owed its activity to the presence in the resin of an extremely small quantity of iron, presumably in colloidal form. The part played by diffusion in catalysis by metallic colloids has been exhaustively studied from the mathematical side by Dr. H. J. S. Sand, in a paper recently contributed to the Royal Society, and one is glad to think that the importance of the study of ferments was long ago indicated by so distinguished an Englishman as Boyle.

Whether metallic colloids have a similar action when taken by way of the mouth cannot yet be said, but it at any rate seems probable. The beneficial effect of mineral waters like those of Contrexéville, Carlsbad, and many other places in assisting the excretion of uric acid is well known, and many causes have been assigned for it. M. Garrigou, however, in a communication made by him last year to the Académie des Sciences, pointed out that all these waters contain a trace of certain metallic colloids, which may therefore well be the origin of the reaction. It is also possible that any success which may have accidentally followed the homœopathic treatment is due to the same cause, although the explanation given of it by its practitioners is widely different. So, no doubt, some of the remedies used by ancient nations like the Egyptians, and by primitive folk like those we call savages, were really efficacious, although their action was generally attributed to magic. In the Harveian oration lately delivered by Dr. Richard Caton he draws attention to the wisdom of the Egyptian prescription of rest for rheumatic disease of the heart; and a peculiarly horrible means of producing increased activity of the lacteal glands, long in use among semi-civilized peoples, has lately been shown to rest upon solid foundations of fact.

Two new modes of producing anaesthesia, which are said to be entirely free from the dangers attending the use of chloroform, and even of ether and nitrous oxide, have lately been announced. One is a benzoic ether, produced by the application of chloride of benzol to the substance produced by the reaction of bromide of ethylmagnesium upon diamethylaminocetone, and is called by its inventor, M. Fourneau, stovaine. It is said to resemble cocaine in its action, but with much less harmful effect, and is used for producing local anaesthesia only. M. Chaput has used it as a lumbar injection in several cases of laparotomy, and reports that it is efficacious, but that the patient must not be of too emotional a nature. The other and apparently less terrifying anaesthetic is nothing but an electric incandescent lamp of sixteen candle power, covered with a blue glass, and held at a distance of some six inches from the eyes of the patient, whose head as well as the lamp must be included under the same veil of blue silk. It is said by M. Redard, of Geneva, who is responsible for the invention, that this will produce perfect anaesthesia in a few minutes, provided the patient keeps his or her eyes open, and continues to look steadily at the lamp. One would like to know whether some hypnotic action is not involved in this.

The question of the real nature of nervous action has been again raised, this time by M. Mendelsohn in a communication to the Institut Général Psychologique. The older theory that it might be identical with the electric current—of which, curiously enough, we know the conditions, but not the nature—has been put an end to by experiments which show nervous action as inferior in speed to electric, that the nerve is a bad conductor of electricity, that it can be excited by mechanical means as readily as by electrical, and that compression of the nerve when electrically excited will prevent its action on the muscles, although it certainly would not prevent its conveying an electric charge. M. Mendelsohn, however, suggests that as the prolongations of the nerve-cells are always surrounded by chemical solutions, it is possible that their action may be electro-chemical in its nature, and that variability of nervous excitement may correspond with the size, number, and speed of the ions, or electrically charged atoms, to be found in these solutions. As this would account for the cessation of nervous action at death, while muscular and some other functions continue to be discharged for a short time, this may be said to take us a little further than any theory on the subject yet advanced. Nevertheless, it is up till now very far from proved.

In this connexion it may be well to note the histological studies of Dr. Georges Marinesco, who has lately taken up the cudgels against Dr. Metchnikoff and his theory that old age is caused by the increased voracity of certain "giant cells" within the structures of the body. The Roumanian professor declares that he is unable to detect any evidence of phagocytosis, or the consumption of one cell by another, within the "noble" parts of the body, such as, for instance, the nerves. On the other hand, he sees abundant reason to believe that senescence and finally death is brought about by the defective nutrition and gradual decay of the higher nervous structures. From this there seem to follow two consequences. Any attempt to delay the advance of senility by doctoring with serums, or other means of arresting a phagocytosis which does not exist, is useless. And, secondly, death is just as much a normal phenomenon in the history of the individual as is birth.

F. L.

TOTEMISM AND THE DOMESTICATION OF ANIMALS.

BOTH Dr. Jevons and your reviewer seem to complicate the question unnecessarily by assuming that totemism implies the intermingling of the kins. But clearly, if totemism were ever adequate to bring about the domestication of animals, it would be under the most favourable conditions; and these would be found where the customs of residence and rules of descent resulted in a segregation of the kins. If each totem-kin comes to occupy a well-defined district, the only persons within it who infringe the commonly observed tabu are the husbands or wives introduced from without; and they may well in course of time have come to observe the same food restrictions as their fellows. Under these circumstances, therefore, if at all, totemism should bring about domestication.

It seems, however, very questionable whether simple abstention from killing an animal will result in its domestication. An English landlord who let the rabbits increase and multiply instead of shooting them would hardly thereby turn them into domestic animals. Domestication implies: (1) that the species is efficiently propagated in captivity or under such restraint as is sufficient to distinguish the animal from a wild one; (2) that man enjoys the services or products of the animal.

Now examples of totems in captivity are of the rarest, and it is difficult to see what would lead the savage to keep them so on any large scale. Moreover it is a long step from keeping in captivity to domestication; many savages keep pets, but they are not domestic animals. Again, ex hypothesi, savages abstain from killing or using the totem; they likewise abstain from the use of its products. How then did the cow-kinsman educate the cow into giving milk except at such periods as were natural to it in the wild state? By what process and for what reason did he bring it to reproduce its species in captivity?

If totemism brought about these results, it could only have been by a transformation into something which was not totemism. But it can hardly be argued that the domestication of animals precedes the rise of garden culture; with garden culture—as we see among the Pawnees and others—come in such ideas as the Corn-spirit. If other animal cults preceded the domestication of animals, there seems no good reason for regarding totemism as the prime cause. Possibly dedication to a deity and confinement in the temple area are important factors.

N. W. THOMAS.

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—April 19.—Mr. H. B. Woodward, V.P., in the chair.—The following communications were read: 'The Blea-Wyke Beds and the Dogger in North-East Yorkshire,' by Mr. R. H. Rastall, —and 'Notes on the Geological Aspect of some of the North-Eastern Territories of the Congo Free State,' by Mr. Gaston Félix J. Preumont, with petrological notes by Mr. J. A. Howe.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—May 1.—Annual Meeting.—Lord Avebury, President, in the chair.—The Rev. R. B. Gardiner and Mr. C. J. Prætorius were appointed scrutators of the ballot.—The President delivered his annual address, containing the usual notices of deceased Fellows, and passing under review the chief incidents connected with the Society during the past year.—The following resolution was thereupon moved by Mr. W. Minet, seconded by Mr. E. W. Brabrook, and carried unanimously: "That the best thanks of the meeting be given to the President for his address, and that he be requested to allow it to be printed." The President signified his assent.—The following were declared duly elected President, Council, and officers for the ensuing year: President, Lord Avebury; Treasurer, Mr. Philip Norman; Director, Mr. F. G. Hilton Price; Secretary, Mr. C. H. Read; Other Members of Council, Mr. W. Paley Baildon, the Rev. E. S. Dewick, Mr. M. S. Giuseppi, Mr. W. Gowland, Sir Henry H. Howorth, Mr. W. Page, Sir E. M. Thompson, Lord Balcarras, Mr. J. W. Clark, Mr. L. H. Cust, Viscount Dillon, Sir Herbert E. Maxwell, Mr. W. Minet, Mr. F. M. O'Donoghue, Mr. H. F. Pelham, Mr. R. P. Spiers, and Mr. J. W. Willis Bund.

LINNEAN.—May 4.—Prof. W. A. Herdman, President, in the chair.—Mr. A. J. Dicks and Mrs. Maude Muff were elected Fellows.—Prof. P. F. A. Ascheron, Prof. G. Haberlandt, Prof. A. A. W. Hubrecht, and Prof. C. R. Zeiller were elected Foreign Members.—Mr. R. N. Rudmose-Brown's paper on 'The Botany of Gough Island: Part I. Phanerogams and Ferns,' was read by the General Secretary. Gough Island or Diego Alvarez lies in the mid South Atlantic, and may be regarded as the most outlying member of the Tristan da Cunha group, a small island between seven and eight miles long, and half as wide, rising to a height of 4,000 ft. It has been occasionally visited, but never permanently inhabited. The chief features of the vegetation are the tree Phyllica nitida and the tree-fern Lomaria boryana. Four of the seventeen species of phanerogams are almost certainly introduced, while two are new to science, a species of Cotula and an Asplenium. The Scottish Antarctic Expedition lay off the island for three days in April, 1904; but, owing to high sea, landing was only practicable on one day, when the materials for the present paper were collected.—A few remarks were made by the President, the General Secretary, and Mr. H. J. Elwes.—The second paper was by Prof. A. G. Tansley, 'The Study of Vegetation: its Present Condition and Probable Development.' Restricting his remarks to a special branch of the subject, the author proceeded to consider the plant-association as the unit, the great fact being the association of plants under definite conditions of environment. Instances were given of sets of plants found in meadows, woods, cultivated fields, moors, and dunes.—A discussion followed, in which the President, Prof. G. Henslow, Mr. Elwes, Prof. E. B. Poulton, the Rev. J. Gerard, Mr. A. O. Walker, Mr. H. Groves, and Prof. F. W. Oliver took part.—Dr. G. H. Fowler communicated a paper, by Messrs. E. W. L. Holt and W. M. Tattersall, on the Schizopoda captured in the Bay of Biscay during a cruise of H.M.S. Research, to which he has added an appendix dealing with the distribution statistically. The paper forms Part V. of the series on Biscayan Plankton. Ten genera and eleven species were described: of these one species is new to science; and one, previously known from a single example, is represented by eight specimens.

PHILOLOGICAL.—May 5.—Annual Meeting.—Mr. W. H. Stevenson in the chair.—Prof. Dr. Tobler, of Berlin, was elected an Honorary Member.—The Treasurer read his cash account.—The Council of University College were thanked for the use of the College rooms for the Society's meetings.—The following members were elected on the Council for the coming season: President, Rev. Prof. Skeat; Vice-Presidents, Drs. W. Stokes, H. Sweet, J. A. H. Murray, Rev. A. H. Sayce, Prof. Napier, and Dr. H. Bradley; Ordinary Members: Messrs. S. Dickson-Brown, W. A. Craigie, T. Ely, and D. Ferguson, Prof. G. Foster, Prof. Gollancz, Dr. F. Heath, Profs. Ker, Lawrence, and Littledale, Drs. McCormick and J. B. Mayor, Prof. Morfill, Mr. Nesbitt, Dr. Oelsner, Profs. Postgate, Ridgeway, Rippmann, and Strachan, and Mr. Stevenson; Treasurer, B. Dawson; Hon. Sec., Dr. Furnivall.—Prof. Skeat read some 'Notes on English Etymology.' Angard (or rather augard) is a variant of ogard, and equivalent to overgart. The original sense was "excessive," and the etymology is, practically, from gart, the pp. of gar, to cause, to do, preceded by O.N. af- or of-, "extremely," or by over-, with the same sense. "Overdone" is the same as "excessive." Berth meant, originally, "a favourable position," and is allied to A.S. gebyrian, to be fitting, to suit; cognate words are M.Du. beurte, convenience, M.Dan. bört, M.Swed. börd, Norw. byrt, a turn, course, due order; allied to G. gebühren, to suit. The buffet on which little Miss Muffet sat is the F. bouffette, a tuft, from M.F. bouffer, to puff up; some say she sat on a tuffet, from F. touffette, a tuft. Crewels were originally skeins of yarn; from the O.F. escrouelles de laine, portions of wool, diminutive of O.F. escroue, a shred, M.Du. schroode, a shred; and escrouelle is a doublet of scroll. Crimp is allied to A.S. gecerymptum, in Wright-Wülcker, col. 328. A fire-dog, i.e., an andiron, is translated from F. chenet, a little dog, also an andiron. Frisky may have been directly suggested by O.F. frixquet, lively; not connected with O.H.G. frech, but only with O.H.G. frise, lit. "fresh." Inkle, a kind of tape, was also spelt enkle, and is probably from Du. enkel, single, which was spelt inkel in W. Flemish. Kelp is probably from M.Du. schelp, sedge, Low G. schelp, sea-weed; from Lat. scirpus in the Vulgate. Loach is probably from Late L. **alocca*, spelt alloca in Mone's glosses; cf. Ital. locca in Florio, and Prov. aloco, loco in Mistral. Neaptide corresponds to nēp-flōd in the Corpus Glossary; and nēp is Mercian for A.S. **næp*, from **nāp*, pt. t. of **nāpan*, M.E. nyppen, to pinch, to nip; the neaptile is a scanty or limited tide. The verb to parch may have arisen from O.F. parche, which was short for parchemin, parchment; it not only meant "parchement," but also "husk," just as the husk of a coffee-bean is still called parchment. The sense may have been "to dry the husk." Puke is probably quite distinct from puce, and was the name of a stuff, once of first-rate quality; cf. M.Du. puyck, woollen cloth, and Du. puik, first-rate. Notes were also given upon rathe, a cart-rail, &c.

SOCIETY OF BIBLICAL ARCHAEOLOGY.—May 10.—Mr. H. R. Hall read a paper on the eleventh-dynasty temple at Dêr el Bahari excavated by Prof. Naville and himself for the Egypt Exploration Fund during the winters of 1903-4 and 1904-5. The site of their work was the space left untouched during Prof. Naville's excavation of the well-known temple of Queen Hatshepsut. The result of their labours is the discovery of the funerary temple of the eleventh-dynasty king Mentuhetep III. (Nebhabet-Ra), containing the graves of priestesses of the goddess Hathor, a divinity specially worshipped at Dêr el Bahari. The existence of eleventh-dynasty buildings here had long been suspected, but not hitherto discovered. The temple was reached in the course of the first season's work, 1903-4, and the great court and the northern colonnade cleared, and some fine reliefs were discovered. In the past season, 1904-5, the temple was approached from the south, and the central pyramid and shrines of the priestesses of Hathor were cleared. In the course of the digging some fine portrait-statues of the twelfth-dynasty king Usertsen III. were unearthed, as well as many small objects such as workmen's tools, left during the repairs to the temple, which seem to have been effected during the reign of Siptah, of whom a relief was found on the facing of the pyramid. The temple is of importance as being the most perfect known temple-building of this early period, and the most ancient building at Thebes. Architecturally it is interesting, as it stands on an artificially squared platform of rock, approached by a sloping ramp flanked by colonnades which led up to a granite doorway, beyond which was a sort of ambulatory of proto-Doric columns surrounding a square central erection, apparently the base of a pyramid. At the back of this are finely decorated shrines of the priestesses of Hathor. What lies beyond remains yet to be explored. About two-thirds of the work is completed, and it is expected that the excavation of the remainder of the site will reveal the existence of the king's own shrine, which, if well preserved, will be a most remarkable relic of Egyptian antiquity. The paper was very fully illustrated by lantern-slides showing the buildings and other monuments described.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- MON. Society of Arts, 8.—'The Uses of Electricity in Mines,' Lecture I., Mr. H. Willock Ravenshaw. (Cantor Lecture.)
 — Surveyors' Institution, 8.—'The Licensing Act, 1904, with Special Reference to the Question of Compensation and Monopoly Value,' Mr. J. D. Wallis.
 — Geographical, 8½.—'Exploration and Survey in Central Tibet and to the Sources of the Brahmaputra,' Capt. C. H. D. Ryder.
TUES. Asiatic Society, 4.—Anniversary Meeting.
 — Royal Institution, 5.—'The Study of Extinct Animals,' Lecture III., Prof. L. C. Miall.
 — Society of Arts, 8.—'Excavation of the Oldest Temple at Thebes,' Mr. H. R. H. Hall. (Applied Art Section.)
WED. Meteorological, 4½.—'Measurement of Evaporation,' Mr. R. Strachan; 'Logarithmic Slide-Rule for reducing Readings of the Barometer to Sea-Level,' Mr. J. Ball.
 — Chemical, 5½.—'The Chlorination of Methyl Derivatives of Pyridine: Part I., 2-Methyl Pyridine,' Mr. W. J. Sell; 'The Absorption Spectra of Uric Acid, Murexide and the Ureides in relation to Colour and to their Chemical Structure,' Mr. W. N. Hertley; 'Further Studies on Dihydroxymaleic Acid,' Mr. H. J. H. Fenton; 'The Thermal Decomposition of Formaldehyde and Acetaldehyde,' Messrs. W. A. Bore and H. L. Smith; 'The Synthesis of Formaldehyde,' Messrs. D. L. Chapman and A. Holt, jun.; 'The Influence of Light on Diazo Reactions,' Preliminary Notice, Messrs. K. J. P. Orton, J. E. Coates, and (in part) F. Burdett.
 — Folk-Lore, 8.—'Arunta Totemism and Marriage Law,' Mr. Andrew Lang; 'The Religious Ideas of the Arunta,' Mr. N. W. Thomas.
 — Microscopical, 8.—'The Movements of Diatoms and other Microscopic Plants,' Mr. D. D. Jackson.
 — Society of Arts, 8.—'The Use of Wood Pulp for Paper Making,' Mr. S. C. Phillips.
THURS. Royal, 4½.
 — Society of Arts, 4½.—'Plague of India,' Mr. C. Creighton. (Indian Section.)
 — Royal Institution, 5.—'Flame,' Lecture III., Sir James Dewar.
 — Faraday, 8.—'Application to Electrolytes of the Hydrate Theory of Solutions,' Dr. T. M. Lowry.
 — Antiquaries, 8½.—'Enamelled Bookbindings,' Mr. Cyril Davenport; 'Excavations at Caerwent in 1904,' Mr. A. T. Martin.
FRI. Royal Institution, 9.—'The Native Races of the British East Africa Protectorate,' Sir Charles Elliot.
SAT. Royal Institution, 3.—'The Evolution of the Kingship in Early Society,' Lecture I., Mr. J. G. Frazer.

Science Gossip.

DR. SAMUEL RITTER VON BASCH, whose death in his seventieth year took place recently at Vienna, was the physician of the Emperor Maximilian of Mexico. He was imprisoned with his master, and obliged to be present at his execution in his medical capacity. Von Basch published a volume of recollections, entitled 'Erinnerungen an Mexico, Geschichte der letzten zehn Monate des Kaiserreiches,' which is invaluable to students of the events described; and he was the author of a number of medical works on heart and lung diseases.

A SECOND report of the Commission for the investigation of Mediterranean fever has been issued by the Royal Society, and contains the results of recent epidemiological inquiries in the Maltese islands by Dr. Ralph W. Johnstone, medical inspector Local Government Board. These are not regarded as sufficient in themselves to enable a final conclusion to be reached respecting the mode of entry of the specific infection into the human body, and of the propagation of the disease; nevertheless, real advance has been made from many points of view. A description of the general sanitary conditions which prevail in the islands, whether as regards arrangements in dwelling-houses, the disposal of house refuse, or the operations of the undesirable "misbla" system—the last-named being a manure heap—furnishes particulars which are not flattering to the public health department. The officers of this organization, by the way, are but poorly paid, despite their responsibilities. The goat is the usual source of milk in Malta, and the animals are driven about the streets in flocks and milked at the customer's door into his own vessel. Regulations affecting these vendors are conspicuously wanting. The distribution of the fever in the Mediterranean fleet during the three-year period 1901-1903 is shown in a table, the ships, as a whole, supplying an incidence of 28.55 per 1,000 of strength constantly in Malta. Another table gives the distribution amongst the garrison during the seven-year period 1897-1903, from which it appears that 25.6 per 1,000 was the average annual attack-rate for the whole garrison.

RESPECTING the new tenth satellite of Saturn, the discovery of which was announced in our 'Science Gossip' last week, the editor of the Astronomische Nachrichten writes that the near agreement of its period with that of Hyperion having led him to suspect their identity, he telegraphed a query to Harvard College, and the answer was that Hyperion and the new body were both registered on the same plate, the latter about three magnitudes fainter than the former. We have here, then, a remarkable case of two satellites revolving round their primary in almost exactly the same period.

It was stated some time ago, from No. 79 of the Circulars of the Harvard College Observatory, that fifty-seven new variable stars had been detected in the smaller Magellanic Cloud on the photographic plates taken with the 24-inch Bruce telescope at Arequipa. But it now appears, from Circular No. 96, that a more complete examination of all the plates by Miss Leavitt has revealed the existence of hundreds of variables in the Nubecula Minor, as astronomers more usually call that remarkable object. In fact, no fewer than 843 are now enumerated in addition to the previous fifty-seven, raising the whole number to 900. The Magellanic Clouds (which were first thoroughly examined by Sir John Herschel in the course of his observations at the Cape of Good Hope) derive their name from having been described by Pigafetta, who accompanied Magellan (Magalhaens) in his voyage round the world, and was present when the latter was killed on the small island Mactan, near Cebu, one of the Philippines, on April 27th, 1521. But the clouds had been noticed by Arab voyagers down the Red Sea several centuries before; and what purports to be a drawing of one of them is given in Yule's account of Marco Polo, as said to have been seen by that famous traveller. They are more usually called by astronomers the Nubecula Major and Minor.

DR. J. PALISA, of Vienna, has obtained recently a large number of visual observations of some of the small planets recently photographically discovered at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg.

FINE ARTS

THE MONUMENTS OF ROME.

Le Forum Romain et les Forums Impériaux. By Henri Thédénat. (Paris, Hachette et Cie.)—In what is nominally a third edition of a previous work M. Thédénat has here incorporated much that is really new, upon a subject to which few living scholars have done more service than himself, the writer of the 'Forum' article in the monumental dictionary of Daremberg and Saglio. He has evidently spared no pains to bring his studies and information up to date, and to arrange what is of profound interest in the most intelligible form.

In the first part of the volume, in which the monuments and the excavations are reviewed according to their chronological sequence, it has been sufficient to add a chapter here and there (in order to record the remarkable discoveries of Commendatore Boni during the last few years), and to increase the bibliographical references, set out in workmanlike fashion at the foot of each page.

But the second part of the book—'Une Visite au Forum'—has been entirely recast, and supplies, as the result of first-hand observations several times repeated, an admirable handbook for those who are fortunate and wise enough to use it on the spot. The method which has been chosen to save the intelligent visitor from the inevitable confusion of an injudicious survey is highly to be praised. The author understands travelling humanity, and is anxious that those who go to see should see sympathetically and profitably. Does he not invite honeymoon couples to copy the fair example of that young wife (by the way, she was not born in 182 B.C., as a lapsus calami on p. 305 makes it appear) who spent her seven short years of married life sine querella?

After having obtained from the south-west a general impression of the Forum, the visitor is taken, chapter by chapter, round its visible relics; he can find his place on the plans, even without great skill of topography, by means of the numbers, and he can turn at will—for the cross-references are clear and adequate—to the first part of the book for historical amplification, or to the extensive index (which occupies fifty pages) for a complete list of the pages and points bearing on the question. So, if time prevents him from seeing and reading everything, he may yet, in two hours, see something of the Forum, "et en emporter, avec le désir d'y revenir plus longuement [we know that desire in all its intensity], une idée complète et une connaissance suffisante."

The author rightly pauses for one chapter "en terre chrétienne," and gives an interesting account of the Chapel of the Forty Martyrs and the Church of Sancta Maria Antiqua, revealed, with the shrine of Iuturna, after the demolition (in 1900) of the Church of Santa Maria Liberatrice. The frescoes and inscriptions in this Christian corner of the Forum are carefully described.

Besides the three main plans upon which the book is hinged, there are others of particular reference—e.g., that of the Basilica Julia, which indicates, by letters and crosses, the spots where sketches or diagrams of game-boards have been found scratched in the stone. The illustrations are chosen for use, not for mere display, and the modern publications dealing with the subject are wisely recapitulated at the end.

It is a pity that so many misprints in the quotations and references at the foot of the pages in part i. have escaped the vigilance of the proof-reader. Greek suffers the worst outrages, but English, Italian, and German words have also a grievance; and even in French, Sulla would scarcely recognize himself as "Scylla" (p. 69).

From the point of view of the student of archaeology, the book is refreshing to read for the clearness of its style and the convenience of its arrangement, and valuable for the mature results of a labour which is not guilty of laboriousness. For the general traveller it may well supply the incentive to a genuine and thorough study of one of the most fascinating places in the world.

Recent Discoveries in the Forum (1898-1904). By an Eye-witness, St. Clair Baddeley. (George Allen.)—Mr. Baddeley, as he states or implies with rather egotistical iteration, has witnessed the excavations conducted by Commendatore Boni, which he here endeavours to describe. Of his genuine and active interest in the subject there is no doubt, but his competence to interpret his visions is doubtful. He is wanting in style and scholarship; almost every page is disfigured by odd mistakes in English or inaccuracies of reference. A few instances will serve to show the kind of thing to which the reader is subjected: "Clivus Sacra Via," passim; "bevilled," p. 10, but "bevelled," p. 16; "By a strange coincidence, however, on the very day in that year, when this Festival became due, the Coliseum was struck by lightning in several places, an event which led to its immediate re-establishment under Alexander Severus" (p. 25); "cf. Lanciani Bull. Comm., 1902, p. 125" (p. 27); "bathing-women (balnearii)" (p. 42); "As it was to be feared the vases might suffer if placed in the metal pail without intervening cloths, and the cloths having been sent for, the delay consequent was curtailed by the writer devoting his best handkerchief and dropping it down to the explorer as a consecrated thing" (p. 50); [Cicero] "Philip, 13" (p. 101); "Servius (A.D. Æn., xii. 139)" (p. 102).

Mr. Baddeley's photographs are good enough of their kind ; but his pictures and enthusiasm are not sufficient to guide a fellow-countryman through the complications of the Forum as it is to-day.

Topography and Monuments of Ancient Rome. By Samuel Ball Platner, Western Reserve University. "College Latin Series." (Boston, U.S., Allyn & Bacon.)—This book, as its preface explains,

"is intended to serve as an introduction to the study of the topography of ancient Rome for students of Roman antiquities and history, and incidentally as a book of reference for those who have any special interest in the monuments which still remain. It contains an outline of the successive stages in the growth of the city, a discussion of the topography of each region and the position of its buildings so far as this is known, and a somewhat detailed description of the more important structures."

The first three chapters provide useful information about authorities, general topography, and building materials; the fourth sketches in epitome the development of the city from the primary Palatine settlement to the so-called "Aurelian wall"; chapters v.-vii. deal with special architectural features, such as bridges, aqueducts, and gates; and the remaining thirteen—in other words, three-quarters of the book—give a review of the topographical and architectural details of each region, over a hundred pages being devoted to the Forum.

We have tested the volume in several ways—in its treatment of localities, its historical summaries, its references, and its index—and it bears such examination in a satisfactory manner, though in one or two respects the index might be made more complete. The treatment is careful and comprehensive, avoiding confusion as far as possible in so complicated a subject, and giving the bond fide teacher and learner just what is wanted—a clear outline, with adequate references to ancient and modern authorities, by means of which those who will may go on to further investigation of the subject. The author has kept pace with the recent discoveries, though, unfortunately, he has not been able to revisit Rome himself since 1900. He is alive to the opinions of scholars and experts, and avoids all reproach of self-advertisement or assumed originality by an acceptable modesty of style and criticism. He has worked hard and honestly, and inspires others to do likewise. The book is certainly to be recommended for the use of classical students in English schools and universities.

The maps and plans, reproduced (with some changes) from the works of accepted topographers, are of unequal merit and usefulness. We could have wished for a larger map of ancient Rome; for a somewhat more decisive diagram of the successive stages in the growth of the city (p. 59); for a less crowded plan of the Servian city (p. 46); and for a more purely Republican plan of the Forum (p. 165). In the plan of the Palatine (taken from Richter's 'Topographie') several letters are left unexplained. The illustrations, in most cases reproduced from photographs, are uniformly good and clear, an important accompaniment in a volume of this kind. The general arrangement of type and references is effective, and there are but few misprints.

THE NEW GALLERY.

THE moment one enters the Gallery one experiences a curious shock of surprised delight at the sight of Mr. Havard Thomas's Lycidas. One discovers afterwards, it may be, all manner of points on which one may approve or disapprove, but the first impression is indisputable—the impression of a real statue, something that stands and exists by itself, something that imposes upon the imagination by the lumps and hollows it presents to the eye. It has the odd effect of making all the rest of the statuary here look like painted simulacra; here, perhaps, we have, after all, the secret of its rejection by the Academy. It is, then, a genuine statue, by reason of the convincing reality of its relief, but oddly enough it also bears unmistakably the traces of its place of origin. With every intention of being nothing but the most literal of realists, Mr. Havard Thomas has, all unknown to himself, produced a work of late Greek sculpture such as the art patrons of Herculaneum admired. Without having the Greek sculptors' summary treatment of planes—indeed, the 'Lycidas' is extraordinary for the complexity and elaboration of the minor divisions of the surface—it yet resembles the bronze statues at Naples in the bluntness of the forms and the pleasant gaucheries of the movement. Mr. Thomas has translated his figure into wax with what seems to us a too complaisant literalness. The defects of a common and ill-bred Italian model are all here—the too prominent collar-bones, the clumsy articulations, the thick ankles, the misshapen feet. Nothing is omitted, nothing abbreviated or slurred. And, what is more, everything seems to have been accepted with the same zest, the bad forms as readily as the good, and the strange thing is that we yet have to admit the immense difference between this and a cast from life, have to admit that this is decisively a work of art. The artistic activity must, we imagine, in such a case take effect without the consciousness of the creator—almost, as it were, against his will—and it is brought about by the zest and energy with which Mr. Thomas apprehends the forms. To some creators—to the greatest, in fact—such a delighted apprehension can only occur where the forms are themselves distinguished or significant; but if we suppose a mind which refuses to select, which grasps with the same eagerness every form that organic life can show, something of that intensity of feeling would animate the work, and give us the needed sense of purpose and conviction. It is only when the imitation of organic form is listless and indifferent, or done merely from a sense of duty, that we are left cold and unmoved or actually distressed. And, in point of fact, a great deal of modern portrait sculpture is inspired by no more than a dull sense of duty to the sitter, so that its appearance of selection only implies a less complete execution, and not a greater artistic impulse than Mr. Thomas's penetrating and resolute investigation of actual shapes. For all that, it would be wrong to suppose that such a view of naturalism as this statue discovers can ever lead to the highest kind of art or evoke such pure feelings of æsthetic enjoyment as where the purposeful selection is more apparent and more thorough. Only in the case of the human figure the mere act of seizing and holding in the mind, through all the complicated stages of execution, such a subtle and gently accentuated pose as we have in the 'Lycidas' does imply definite creative power, as well as technical skill of a very high order.

Here, as at the Academy, the Sargents dominate the exhibition, so far as painting is concerned, and, indeed, we are inclined to think that one of the portraits in the North Room, that of Mrs. Ernest G. Raphael (No. 216), is not only the best work that Mr. Sargent shows anywhere this year, but also one of the best he has shown for a long time. It is no doubt unpoetical and lacking in mood, and the whole arrangement is almost harsh in its stiffness and symmetry, a feeling which is aided by the prim erectness of the pose, and the cutting out of the face and bust upon the dark background and black dress. But the modelling is wonderful, and the strength and insistence of the relief, which are got, too, without any apparent forcing of contrasts, are extraordinary. By the side of this most portraits—many even of Mr. Sargent's—would shrivel to flat and thin unreality. Then the colour is, within its own severely restricted limits, fine, and the indications of the accessories—the sumptuous Empire chair, and the table with its bric-à-brac—show at its best Mr. Sargent's taste for subdued magnificence. We prefer Mr. Sargent in such a dry restrained mood as this reveals to that in which he has endeavoured to surround Sir Frank Swettenham with Oriental splendour. The figure dressed in white linen, which Mr. Sargent renders by his peculiar convention of a rather unpleasant green tone, seems crushed by the weight of its surroundings, especially by the heavy and leaden crimson of the curtain, a colour to which Mr. Sargent, unfortunately, inclines too readily. The figure is treated here in a vein of literal commonplace which is out of key with the splendour of its setting. Only by weighting the figure with some warm and saturated colour could it have maintained its predominance. The laws of colour symbolism require as much respect as the laws of actual appearance, if not more, and it is on this side of his art that Mr. Sargent will have to extend his researches if he is to score the same successes in heroic portraiture that he has in genre. His immense success has by now given him opportunities which bring new responsibilities, and the problems he has to face require for their solution a great deal besides accuracy of observation and masterly representation.

Sir George Reid sends two portraits, which are admirable in their unaffected, somewhat prosaic, but sound interpretation of character. We like especially the Balfour Browne, Esq. (18). There is, perhaps, no living portrait-painter who is so sure to carry his interpretation up to a certain point, though Sir George's inability to get beyond, either in psychology or in artistic purpose of design and chiaroscuro, seems as definitely fixed.

Mr. George Henry's Satin Gown (105) is the most ambitious portrait he has yet shown. It is undoubtedly very effective in the simplicity of its design and the limitation of its colour scheme. But it seems to us essentially an exhibition picture, not a portrait that one could safely introduce into a living-room, while the simplicity strikes us, after all, as of an elaborate and affected kind, like so much of modern decorative art and poetry, not the outcome of a genuinely simple and sincere way of seeing things.

In landscape there is nothing of striking interest. Mr. Harold Speed's Alcantara, Toledo by Moonlight (202), which has been bought for the Chantrey Bequest, is really only remarkable for the striking nature of the subject. The manner of representation is of the most ordinary and uninspired kind. Mr. Wetherbee seems to have a genuine lyrical vein; his sense of colour and his control of mass improve slowly, but without intermission. His May Dawn (139) comes nearer, we think, to successful expression of a difficult idea than anything we have seen hitherto. We also like Mr. Adrian Stokes's Afternoon in a Forest (155) better than anything he has yet done in the attempt to recapture a primitive method of vision. This is really the most general impulse among the artists who exhibit here. It is interesting to speculate whether it is merely a lingering survival from the days when Burne-Jones and Mr. Strudwick exhibited here, or whether it is, in fact, the beginning of a new movement. We incline to think that both elements concur, but as yet the new movement, if such there be, seems not to have attracted any sufficiently powerful temperament to give it any striking vitality.

Mr. Austen Brown's landscapes are in quite another direction. He seems scarcely to have found the just balance between naturalistic effect and the desire for decorative design and colour, but both his works this year show a distinct advance. The Spring Pasture is less hot in colour and laboured in quality than his wont.

Mrs. Dods-Wither's Nameless Castle (119), Mrs. Swynnerton's Water Nymph (187), Mr. Stott's Birdcage (148), Mr. Sidney Lee's Cathedral Doorway (160), and Mr. Sholto Douglas's very clever portrait of the late Earl of Kenmare (92) are among the remaining pictures which claim attention by reason of some distinctive purpose.

Altogether, although the level of attainment is not so very much higher, the evidences of genuine artistic effort, if of the most distractingly diverse kind, are far more evident here than at Burlington House.

A NORTHAMPTONSHIRE CHURCH CHEST.

WE are glad to note that the parting with old church furniture is beginning to excite the attention of more intelligent parishioners. At the Easter vestry recently held at Daventry, Canon Collins, rector and chairman, and Councillor Wykes, one of the churchwardens, were severely cross-questioned as to an item of 4l. 10s. among the receipts. It came out that the money was received for some old pew-doors that had been stored in the belfry, and for an old chest. It was admitted that these church goods were sold without a faculty. A further statement was made to the effect that a furniture dealer in Northampton was offering what was supposed to be this very chest for sale at the price of 15l. The chairman pleaded that the chest had not been in the church for many years, and that it was so old and broken as to be of no practical use. We understand that efforts are being made to restore, if possible, this ancient chest to the church to which it has belonged for so many centuries, and from which it was divorced by the careless ignorance of those who ought to have been its guardians, and to have known its value and associations. In this case it was all the more important to retain this relic, for Daventry has lost almost the whole of its once important and historic church, and this chest is one of the very few perceptible links with pre-Reformation days now remaining. A correspondent who has seen the chest describes it as an exceptionally good example of a church chest with traceried panels, circa 1400. This case ought to be laid before the Peterborough diocesan chancellor. Rulings have been obtained, if we mistake not, in chancellors' courts, not only to the effect that the sale of church goods without a faculty is illegal, but also that purchasers of such property buy it at their own risk, and are liable to be compelled to return the purchase unrequited. There was a case in another Midland county, in the "seventies" of last century, where the chancellor of Lichfield diocese compelled the restoration to a parish church of a quantity of oak panelling, advertised for sale, which had been illegally ejected several years before out of the chancel.

SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE'S sale last Saturday may not prove to be the sale of the season, but it will rank as one of the most interesting. A total of 30,017l. 19s. 6d. was realized by 132 lots. The collection of pictures, arranged in 89 lots, formed during the earlier half of the last century by Mr. Edward Cheney, of Badger Hall, Shropshire, and now sold by order of Mr. Francis Capel-Cure, a collateral relative of Mr. Cheney, only realized 6,991l. 9s. 6d. Very few of the pictures were of any artistic consequence, being mostly old copies manufactured for the average English and American collector, not too fastidious on the score of critical taste, by whom an old Italian master secured in situ is often taken for that reason as genuine. Several of the pictures were at Burlington House in 1886. The most important was an example of Marco Baxaiti, a head of a young man in black dress and cap, with long fair hair, a landscape seen through a window on the right, signed "Marchus Baxaiti. P." 840 gs. Very few of the other old masters in this collection need be mentioned, the exceptions being: F. Guardi, The Scuola of St. Mark (SS. Giovanni and Paolo), with numerous figures, 230 gs. G. B. Tiepolo, The Finding of Moses, 250 gs. Tintoretto, Portrait of a Procurator of St. Mark, in dark red velvet robe, edged with white fur, 220 gs. Bartholomeo Capello, in red robe trimmed with ermine, holding the hand of his young son, 115 gs. Polidoro Veneziano, The Virgin and Child, with St. Elizabeth and St. John in a landscape, 160 gs. Quite the most valuable picture in the whole collection was a genuine Romney portrait of a lady in white dress, with black cloak thrown loosely over the shoulders, large white bonnet with blue ribbons, and a white veil fastened below her chin; this portrait was given by the Duke of York to his aide-de-camp, General Cheney, and is catalogued as Princess Amelia, daughter of George III., which is manifestly absurd, inasmuch as the Princess was only a young girl in her "teens" when Romney ceased painting portraits, and the lady in the picture is a full-grown woman; the portrait realized 2,800 gs. One of about a score of replicas by Colvin Smith of his portrait of Sir Walter Scott, painted in January, 1828 (not 1816), and referred to by Lockhart, fetched 250 gs.

Among the miscellaneous properties, the Romneys overshadowed everything else, and may be grouped together, although derived from various sources. The Horsley Children (George and Charlotte, children of George Horsley, of Epsom, and Charlotte, daughter of Sir George Talbot, the girl on the steps of a terrace, holding a cornflower in her left hand, and giving with her right hand a bunch of flowers to her younger brother) was one of the artist's later works: it was painted in 1793, and he received 105l. for it. It was lent to the Grafton Gallery Romney Exhibition in 1900 by Mr. F. B. Macdonald, to whom it was bequeathed by George Horsley, the boy in the picture, and who subsequently sold it. It now realized 4,400 gs. The companion pair of Romneys—Paul Cobb Methuen, and his wife, the elder daughter of Sir Thomas Gooch, of Benacre—are comparatively early pictures; the former was painted in 1776, and the latter in 1784, when Romney's price for portraits such as these, then known as "three-quarters," was 18 gs. They now brought 400 gs. and 3,400 gs. respectively, a curious comment on the wide commercial differences between the values of portraits of men and women. The portrait of the Hon. Mrs. Beresford, if it is accurately named—it is very little like that of this lady by Romney which was engraved by J. Jones in 1788—is not an idealized representation, and is not suggestive of her as she appears, with her two sisters, in Sir Joshua's fine picture of 'The Three Graces,' now in the National Gallery. She is in a white satin low dress with muslin frill, and blue waistband with buckle. This fetched 1,900 gs. The portrait of Lady Emilia Kerr, afterwards McCleod (it was painted in 1779, four years before her marriage), in pink dress with gold bands and trimming, a loose shawl thrown over her shoulders, brought 2,600 gs., and is an excellent example of Romney's work soon after he had established himself in Cavendish Square, and had taken away a large percentage of the work which would otherwise have fallen to Sir Joshua. The Portrait of a Gentleman (lot 103), in blue coat with brass buttons, white stock, and powdered wig, sold by the executors of the Rev. S. D. Brownjohn, represents, there can be little doubt, the "Mr. Hawkins" who sat to Romney in 1777; this was doubtless George E. Hawkins, son of Pennell Hawkins, and one of four generations of the same family who acted as surgeons to George II. and George III. This portrait realized 520 gs. The other two Romneys went for small sums.

One of the most attractive and popular pictures of the sale was James Ward's whole-length portrait of Miss Georgiana Musgrave, when a child, in white muslin dress, standing in a landscape, holding some flowers. According to the sale catalogue, this was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1798 under the title of 'Miss Walker,' although no explanation is given as to why it should have been so called, but the Academy catalogues of that time were scandalously inaccurate. It fetched 1,600 gs., probably a record price for a work by this artist. The Opie portrait of R. B. Sheridan, referred to in last week's Athenæum as the property of Sir Lewis Morris, brought 300 gs.; curiously enough, there is no record of Opie ever having painted Sheridan. Another picture by Opie, The Market-Girl, a whole-length portrait of a girl in a brown dress, seated in a wood, holding a basket on her left arm, sold for 340 gs. The sale also included: Gainsborough, Portrait of Indiana Talbot (who married Lewis Peak Garland in 1774), in light blue dress with gold trimming, and gold-embroidered sash, hair dressed high, and seated on a bank, 2,000 gs. Hoppner, Portrait of Lady Elizabeth Townshend, afterwards Loftus, in white dress, with black lace shawl, 400 gs. J. B. Greuze, Head of a Young Girl, in white dress and dark shawl, with a yellow scarf round her neck, 220 gs. L. Cranach, Portrait of a Gentleman, in black dress trimmed with fur, and black cap, holding a miniature, 500 gs. Sir W. Beechey, Portrait of Mrs. Marshall, in white dress with pink shawl, reclining on a sofa, 280 gs. G. Morland, Lime-Kilns, a landscape with peasant and horse near a shed on the right, a cart drawn by two horses coming up from a pit in the centre, signed and dated 1792, 200 gs. Rembrandt, Portrait of an Old Man, in yellow cloak, holding his hands before him, signed and dated, 290 gs. Sir H. Raeburn, Portrait of John Rennie, in dark blue coat with brass buttons, 330 gs. (another portrait of Rennie was lent by the Raeburn family to the exhibition at Edinburgh in 1876). J. Ruysdael, A Mountain River Scene, with cottages among trees on the far bank, 280 gs. Reynolds, Portrait of John Barker, designer of Ramsgate Harbour, whole-length, in a crimson velvet dress with white wig, seated in an arm-chair at a table, a view of Ramsgate Harbour on the right, engraved by J. Jones, 100 gs.

The most interesting picture sale of the week in Paris was that held by M. Paul Chevallier at the Galerie Georges Petit on Monday and Tuesday. It comprised the small but important series of modern pictures, drawings, and pastels by artists of the Impressionist School formed by the late M. Paul Berard, who was one of the earliest and most enthusiastic believers in the artistic merits of Monet, Renoir, Sisley, and others, all of whom may be said to have emerged with credit from this sale. The principal works were: Claude Monet, La Débauche, signed and dated 1881, 27,100fr.; Les Coquelicots, same date, 12,000fr.; La Cabane des Douaniers à Varangeville, 1882, 9,200fr. (this was purchased by M. Durand-Ruel, whose remarkable collection of the same school was recently seen at the Grafton Galleries); Gelée Blanche, 11,000fr.; Les Bords de l'Epte, 15,500fr.; La Mer à Varangeville, 10,200fr. Berthe Morisot, La Femme à l'Eventail, 4,900fr.; La Petite Cigale, 11,200fr. Renoir, L'Après-Midi des Enfants à Vargemont, 1884, 14,000fr.; Les Enfants, a composition of six heads, 1881, 8,700fr.; La Fête de Pan, 15,000fr.; La Fillette à la Ceinture Bleue, 1879, 13,200fr.; Songeuse, 1879, 12,000fr.; L'Enfant Blanc, 1883, 10,300fr.; Le Petit Écolier, 4,000fr.; La Petite Pêcheuse, 1879, 10,000fr.; Baigneuse, 6,500fr.; Géraniums dans une Bassine de Cuivre, 1884, 7,000fr. Sisley, Les Coteaux d'Argenteuil, 1873, 10,100fr.; L'Abreuvoir de Marly (not, as stated in the catalogue, La Seine au Bas-Meudon), 1875, 12,500fr.; Les Bords de l'Oise, 1873, 8,650fr. The entire collection of 134 lots, including decorative furniture, porcelain, and a few objects of art (a Louis XVI. secrétaire brought 18,000fr.), produced a total of 371,240fr.

Fine-Art Gossip.

LAST Wednesday was the private view of water-colour drawings of the British Riviera by Mr. Baragwanath King at Messrs. H. Graves & Co.'s galleries.

At the Fine-Art Society's rooms Mr. Albert Goodwin's water-colours of the 'Cathedrals of England' are on private view to-day.

At the Modern Gallery the Misses Warren have also an exhibition of water-colour drawings of English cathedrals and landscapes.

MESSRS. CARFAX & Co. have opened a show of oil paintings, water-colours, and drawings by Mr. Henry Tonks.

At Mr. McLean's gallery oil pictures, by Mr. J. C. Mathews, of the Royal Artillery and His Majesty's cavalry regiments, with some portraits, are open to private view.

THE Alpine Club have now open till the end of the month their annual exhibition of photographs at the club rooms in Savile Row.

At the Brook Street Art Gallery the painting by E. L. Weeks of 'Shah Jehan leaving the Great Mosque of Delhi,' which was exhibited at the Paris Salon in 1886, is on view.

IN view of an announcement of a book upon the same subject, we are asked by Miss Frances Low to say that her book, entitled 'Stories of the National Gallery Pictures and of the Artists who Painted Them,' has been delayed through prolonged ill-health. She hopes to complete it in time for this year's Christmas books.

THE announcement of the death at Algiers of the sculptor M. Charles Cordier, on April 30th, has only just reached Paris. Cordier was in his seventy-sixth year, and studied art under Rude. He first attracted public notice in 1853, when he sent to the Salon two busts in bronze and coloured marble, a negro and a negress, which the jury refused to exhibit. They were then shown privately, and achieved a great success. They are now at the Luxembourg. Cordier executed statues of Maréchal Gérard and Ibrahim Pasha, and a monument to Columbus in Mexico.

SEVERAL French artists and collectors are complaining in no measured terms about the treatment their pictures received at the St. Louis Exhibition. There was no lack of enthusiasm, but ordinary care seems to have been wanting. A collector who was particularly requested to lend a portrait of Washington has received the picture back covered with blisters, and damaged by excessive heat and cold; the portrait was insured for 50,000 fr., but the insurance company has refused to allow more than 5,000 fr. The pictures lent by MM. Agache and Jean Béraud have also suffered; a canvas by the latter has returned covered with a "magnifique couche de boue." Some of the objects of art, particularly those of a fragile nature, have also suffered.

HAVING finished for the present their excavations of the Scottish Roman Wall, the Scottish Society of Antiquaries have started upon the large Roman station at Newstead, close to Melrose, and under the shadow of the Eildons. This may help to settle the point as to whether or not this was the Trimontium of the early writers. When the railway for the Waverley route was cut through at Newstead more than fifty years ago, many altars and Roman remains were unearthed, some of which are now in the Edinburgh Antiquarian Museum.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

COVENT GARDEN. — Ring des Nibelungen.
Don Pasquale.

THE third and fourth sections of the 'Ring' last week at Covent Garden fully answered to the expectations raised by the performance of 'Die Walküre.' In the awakening scene in 'Siegfried' Frau Wittich was very fine. We cannot forget the wonderful impersonations of the heroic maiden of the late Frau Klafsky and of Fräulein Ternina, yet Frau Wittich is superior to many Brünnhildes whom we have seen and heard. Wagner did not spare vocalists when they were wanted for dramatic purposes, so that if this lady showed signs of fatigue in the closing scene of the 'Götterdämmerung,' she must be judged with all leniency. Herr Kraus was an excellent Siegfried. In his acting he displayed freshness and vigour, and he did not shout, but sang his music artistically. Herr Reiss's impersonation of Mime was uncommonly clever: he inspired, in turn, contempt and pity. Herr Hinekley's Hagen was striking; the part suits his voice well. The Rhine Maidens (Madame Agnes Nicholls and Fräulein Alten and Behnó) were most satisfactory. Madame Kirkby Lunn was impressive as Waltraute, though her voice was not at its best. The orchestral playing under Dr. Richter was magnificent throughout.—The second cycle began on Wednesday evening. The only difference in the cast of 'Rheingold' was that Wotan was represented by Herr van Rooy, who gave, as usual, a forcible rendering of the part.

Last Tuesday Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale' was revived, the last previous performance of the work in London being at the Lyceum in 1881. It is the fashion nowadays to depreciate Donizetti. In this opera, however, he has written some clever, fresh, piquant music. The story is thin, and the opera would be all the better for a few cuts. The music sounds very light after Wagner, but then it is a genuine comic opera. Mlle. Bosetti was heard to better advantage in this work. Signor Mancinelli conducted with skill and spirit; the performance was, indeed, very good.

BECHSTEIN HALL.—Joachim Quartet Concert.

THERE was a very large audience on Monday evening at the first Joachim Quartet Concert given this season at the Bechstein Hall. The programme was devoted to Beethoven's music, and the three quartets selected illustrated what are known as the composer's three styles. They were the one in G, Op. 18, No. 2; the 'Rasoumofsky,' Op. 59, No. 1; and the posthumous work in C sharp minor. Dr. Joachim has been over sixty years before the public, and it is not surprising that the technical strength and fire which he displayed in ripe manhood are somewhat reduced. On Monday, however, he was in specially fine form, and the warm reception given to him and his worthy associates was thoroughly well deserved. The rendering of the 'Rasoumofsky' was a genuine triumph: the playing was fine, the reading ideal.

Musical Gossip.

HERR KUBELIK's performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto at his concert at Queen's Hall on Thursday of last week showed notable development of his powers of expression. In his interpretation of the first movement there was a marked increase in breadth of style and virility, and he was able to charm by the tenderness and grace with which he set forth the lovely phrases of the Larghetto. He also gave a clear-cut and technically brilliant performance of Wieniawski's Concerto in D minor.—Of Beethoven's Concerto another interesting and effective rendering was accomplished by Herr Bronislaw Huberman in the same room last Saturday afternoon. This artist excels in purity and sweetness of tone, and he possesses in a high degree the qualities needful for an adequate interpretation of Beethoven's exacting work. The suavity and refinement of his playing in the Larghetto gave pleasure, and his easy mastery of difficulties in the Finale made a decided impression. Saint-Saëns's Concerto in B minor was likewise played by the Polish violinist in a manner that left scarcely anything to be desired.

Two interesting pieces were produced at the Royal Academy of Music last Friday week. The one was 'The House of Shadows,' a dramatic phantasy by Mr. E. L. Lomax, a clever, weird piece with musical accompaniment, in which both drama and music were evidently intentionally vague. The other piece was 'Dross,' a music-drama without words, by Mr. Paul Corder, a young and talented composer. In this short work there are character and skill, and also one or two touches of humour, a quality none too common nowadays.

DR. FREDERICK COWEN will conduct the British Festival at the Crystal Palace on Saturday, June 24th. The programme includes Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; Sir E. Elgar's 'Challenge of Thor,' from his 'King Olaf'; Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Wedding Feast,' from his 'Hiawatha'; Dr. Cowen's 'Old English Dances'; Mr. Edward German's 'Tarantelle,' from his 'Gipsy Suite'; and songs from Sullivan's 'Ivanhoe.' The vocalists will be Mesdames Agnes Nicholls, Clara Butt, and Ada Crossley, and Messrs. Ben Davies, Kennerley Rumford, and Andrew Black.

MR. MARK HAMBOURG, at his only recital this season at Queen's Hall, on Saturday afternoon, May 20th, will play the 'Caprice,' by Mr. Frank Bridge, which won the prize recently offered by Mr. Hambourg. Two other pieces, by the blind pianist Mr. E. Watling and by Mr. Felix Swinstead, were highly commended by the adjudicators. A similar prize, we are glad to note, will be offered every year by Mr. Mark Hambourg.

MASCAGNI'S 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' with Madame Calvé, has been fixed for the opening night, May 22nd, of the Waldorf Theatre, Aldwych. It may be noted that every seat in the theatre will be reserved, and can be booked in advance. The orchestra of sixty-five musicians will be under the direction of Signor Amaldi Centi.

AN orchestral concert will be given at Bechstein Hall on Monday evening, June 5th, the programme of which will include rarely heard works.

THE death is announced of Ernst Pauer, pianist, composer, and lecturer, on the 9th inst., at Jugenheim-an-der-Bergstrasse, at the ripe age of seventy-eight.

MISS K. M. O'REILLY writes:—

"In last Saturday's Athenæum (April 29th) there is a slip of the pen of your reviewer touching on Mr. Dent's book on 'Alessandro Scarlatti.' Mr. Dent is right on the senior Scarlatti having written little harpsichord music of any good. He did not do much of it at all, and hardly any is published. He wrote almost entirely operas, oratorios, and masses. Some of his work for voices are some of the most perfect things ever penned or sung. His son Domenico, circa 1683 to 1777, is the great writer for harpsichord, and the leader up to Handel and Bach. He met Handel in Venice and Rome, and it is his (Domenico's) music that gives the accurate, dainty, 'clear-spoken' part playing (almost better than Bach and Handel) that is so essential a grounding for all pianists. Pray forgive a Scarlatti enthusiast, both as student in her day, and since as teacher, for commenting thus."

With reference to the above, we beg to say that there was no slip of the pen. Alessandro Scarlatti wrote a fairly large quantity of harpsichord music—if it was "any good" is a matter of opinion. The writer refers to the son Domenico as "the leader up to Handel and Bach." He was no "leader," but strictly a contemporary. He was born in 1685, and died in 1757. Miss O'Reilly's dates "circa 1683 to 1777" are erroneous.

THE season of Italian opera by the Sonzogno Company commenced, as originally announced, at the Sarah-Bernhardt Theatre, Paris, on Tuesday, May 2nd. The representation of works by Puccini, Mascagni, Giordano, Franchetti, Leonecavallo, and Cilèa is the main object of the undertaking, and whatever the merits of this or that composer, of this or that work, there is no doubt that as regards opera Italy at the present day is most enterprising. The first night was devoted to Francesco Cilèa's 'Adriana Lecouvreur,' an opera which was given here last autumn with marked success at Covent Garden by the Naples company. On May 4th was given Umberto Giordano's 'Siberia,' and on May 5th the Sonzogno prize opera 'La Cabrera,' by M. Gabriel Dupont.

THE Beethoven Festival at Paris commenced last Friday week, the first three symphonies being performed by the Colonne orchestra under the direction of Felix Weingartner.

A SECOND Sonata for pianoforte and 'cello by Dr. Camille Saint-Saëns was produced last Saturday at Paris by the composer and M. Hollmann. The First Sonata, in C minor, published as Op. 32, was written many years ago.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |  |
|--------|--|
| SUN.   | Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.  |
| —      | Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.  |
| MON.   | Miss Vivien Chartres's Violin Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.                              |
| —      | Mr. Dalhousie Young's Concert, 3, Eolian Hall.                                       |
| —      | Joachim Quartet, 8, Bechstein Hall.  |
| —      | Misses Walenn and Muriel Spencer's Violin and Pianoforte Recital, 8.15, Eolian Hall. |
| TUES.  | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| —      | Mr. George Mackern's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Eolian Hall.                             |
| —      | Miss Zimmermann and Herr Muehlen's Pianoforte and Song Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.   |
| —      | Herr Huberman's Violin Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.                                     |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| WED.   | Master Mische Elman's Violin Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.                               |
| —      | Joachim Quartet, 8, Bechstein Hall.  |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| THURS. | Mr. Ullph Smith's Musical and Humorous Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.                |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| FRI.   | Joachim Quartet, 3, Bechstein Hall.  |
| —      | Mr. Lionel Tertis's Viola Recital, 8.30, Eolian Hall.                                |
| —      | Hegedüs's Violin Recital, 8.30, Queen's Hall.  |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| SAT.   | Mozart Society, 3, Portman Rooms.  |
| —      | Mr. Mark Hambourg's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.                             |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |

DRAMA

Shakespearean Tragedy: Lectures on 'Hamlet,' 'Othello,' 'King Lear,' 'Macbeth.' By A. C. Bradley, LL.D. (Macmillan & Co.)

THOUGH based on materials used in teaching at Liverpool, Glasgow, and Oxford, and preserving, for the most part, the original form of lectures, these essays of Prof. Bradley are designed for a wide public, which they appear to be well on their way to secure, and may possibly even exercise some influence upon stage production. This, however, will necessarily be faint, the anxiety of the manager-actor, who alone is in the position to mount and present a Shakespearean tragedy, being rather to furnish opportunities for histrionic accomplishment or spectacular display than to cast any strong light upon psychology, or to extract from scene and situation their final significance. It is, accordingly, to the Shakespeare scholar that the work definitely appeals. From most treatises similar in aim it differs in the absence of almost all effort at emendation of text or investigation as to Shakespeare's life and character, and inquiry into his place in the world that grew up around him. The avowed aim is to assist the student in "dramatic appreciation" to realize more nearly the great tragic shapes as they issue from the imagination of the master dramatist. In thoroughness of workmanship the book recalls German models. It is free, however, in the main from the great defect of much German criticism, that of dwelling wholly or principally upon what is too obvious to call for mention or too fantastic to win acceptance. Of the two sections into which all work of the class must be divided—exegesis, otherwise interpretation, and conjecture—the larger share must in this, as in all cases, be assigned to the latter.

That it is a work of importance and value, as well as of interest, no careful reader—and it is certainly not a book to be skimmed—will deny. That much may be learnt from it is not to be disputed, and it may even be granted that when our dramatic teachers study its principles and profit by its lessons, "then is doomsday near." While admiring and approving, however, much that is said, we feel that a volume not much inferior in bulk would be requisite to include all points of dissidence, or at least all cases in which a different reading is tenable. An instance in which we find ourselves at total variance with Prof. Bradley presents itself in the third section of the first lecture, the theme of which is 'The Substance of Shakespearean Tragedy.' Herein it is said:—

"One reason why the end of 'The Merchant of Venice' fails to satisfy us is that Shylock is a tragic character, and that we cannot believe in his accepting his defeat and the conditions imposed on him. This was a case where Shakespeare's imagination ran away with him, so that he drew a figure with which the destined pleasant ending would not harmonize."

Now the whole of this is wrong. The end of 'The Merchant of Venice' does not fail to satisfy, and to present Shylock as a tragic character is a heresy kindred with that—to compare small things with large—of Signora Duse when she sentimentalizes Cyprienne des Prunelles in 'Divorçons.' What is said, moreover, charges Shakespeare with bad workmanship. Shakespeare knew well enough, as did those around him, what he intended. Look at the place of the play in the First Folio; it is between 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' and 'As You Like It.' A glance at the titles in the quartos, apart from the position of the work among the comedies, is in itself enough to settle the question. In all of these as a portion of the title occur, with no other variation than that of orthography, the words: "With the extreme cruelty of Shylocke the Jew towards the saide Merchant in cutting a iust pound of his flesh."

Most significant of all are the facts that Shakespeare has enshrined the defeat, mortification, and surrender of the Jew in the delicious scenes at Belmont, that from the fifth act Shylock is banished, and that the whole makes a swanlike end. There is naught of accident in this, the play being in its line a masterpiece of construction. If it be said that moderns assign to Shylock something of fatality, or rather, perhaps, sentimentality, that is beside the question. Not so did Shakespeare. Writing from Venice within a decade of the production of 'The Merchant of Venice,' Thomas Coriate says that, according to English thought, to look like a Jew "is meant sometimes a weather-beaten, warp-faced fellow, sometimes a phrenticke and lunaticke person, sometimes one discontented." It is otherwise in Venice, but this is the case in England. If some stress is laid on this, it is because the heresy that presents Shylock as a tragical character is at once too recent and too prevalent for one to allow it to receive support so influential as Dr. Bradley affords. We could fancy, but have no right so to do, Dr. Bradley withdrawing from his position, when in a subsequent section he says:—

"Most people, even among those who know Shakespeare well and come into real contact with his mind, are inclined to isolate and exaggerate some one aspect of the tragic fact. Some are so much influenced by their own habitual beliefs that they import them more or less into their interpretation of every author who is sympathetic to them."

What is said concerning the secular character of the mystery of Elizabethan drama is well urged. We shall advance nearer towards a comprehension of what this is when we substitute "circumstance" for more high-sounding words. The tragedy of the Greeks shows man the slave of circumstance; that of Shakespeare and the romantic school generally shows him at war with circumstance. Dr. Bradley holds, though he is guarded in statement, that the "fate" which is described as the ultimate power in the tragic world "appears to be a mythological expression for the whole system or order, of which the individual characters form an inconsiderable and feeble part" (we break off in the middle of a long sentence, which is, perhaps, not fair). He is himself not wholly ready to adopt Wordsworth's lines concerning

Poor humanity's afflicted will,
Struggling in vain with ruthless destiny.

In dealing with construction in Shakespeare's tragedies our author points out that in 'Romeo and Juliet,' with which he is but indirectly concerned, Romeo's dream, which begets Mercutio's lines on Queen Mab, is connected with his mind's misgiving as to the Consequence yet hanging in the stars, which shall

Begin his fearful date
With this night's revels.

It may aid him to note how in this play nearly everything that will happen to the young lovers is the object of direct prevision. From the moment that Juliet declares,

My grave is like to be my wedding bed, to the close, every forthcoming calamity is directly foreseen in a manner that Shakespeare does not seem again to have employed. To the secondary characters this extends, and Benvolio says to Mercutio, "An I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee-simple of my life for an hour and a quarter," a price, indeed, that Mercutio is forthwith to pay. It is useless to multiply instances which meet us on almost every page.

Of the wit combats between Shakespeare and Ben Jonson heard at the Mermaid it is said "which Fuller imagines." Surely "reports" is the better word. Though too young to have been present, Fuller must inevitably have been told of them. To the category of "merely lunatic views" our author assigns conjectures such as that Hamlet was a woman in love with Horatio, or that, wishing to oust from the throne his innocent uncle, he "faked" the ghost. It is scarcely fair to speak of those whom Hamlet bids "unhand" him as his "terrified" friends. Most that is said concerning Hamlet (see pp. 102 et seq.) is thoughtful and well expressed. What seems contradictory, especially in Hamlet's treatment of Polonius, appears inevitable so soon as the theory that Hamlet is a creature of inconsistency and moods is accepted. As regards the theory of insanity, comment on which is and will remain endless, it is conceivable, as is held by lunacy experts, that the mere simulation of madness may bring about a species of dementia. One is inclined to wonder, as does the actor, why the scene is not presented in action in which Ophelia describes to her father the entrance into her chamber of Hamlet, "with his doublet all unbraced," and other marks of distraction, for, if exhibited instead of described, it would have furnished brilliant histrionic opportunities, and might have cast light upon the question of Hamlet's madness not elsewhere to be obtained. That Shakspeare shrank from the scene is inconceivable, and it is improbable that he mistrusted the power of Burbage or Taylor to render it. Too much seems to be made of the "æsthetic disgust" of Hamlet at the conduct of the players or the ranting of Laertes in the grave scene. That the impatient counsel to the murderer in the play scene to leave his damnable faces, and begin, is due to such disgust we are not prepared to agree.

We concur with Dr. Bradley in assigning prominence to the marked habit of repetition, uncommon in tragic parts, displayed by Hamlet. The objection to the scraps of songs sung by Ophelia, like that to similar touches in 'Othello,' still heard from certain critics, on which our author comments, may be dismissed as a simple and modern outcome of ignorance.

A rather prosaic interpretation seems at times fixed upon passages that are written "according to the trick." When Iago asks concerning Othello, "Can he be angry?" &c., his comments are not meant to be taken literally. They are spoken with design and for effect. Much is said about the misreading of the text which makes Othello appear jealous before he really is so. We have seen very many Othellos since we first contemplated Macready. Most of them were painfully incompetent, but none of them that we recall was guilty of this error. Dr. Bradley is of opinion that Othello should be black, not brown. This we will not dispute. Sufficient prejudice exists against such unions to make us disapprove of the use of the words "filthy-minded cynic" to one disliking of "the marriage of an English lady to a negro like Toussaint." We scarcely accept the assertion that Mephistopheles "has Iago for his father." We do not credit Emilia with a devotion to Desdemona quite so exemplary as is claimed for her. What is conjectured about Cassio's invective against drink, and Hamlet's disgust at his uncle's drunkenness, is unconvincing. The same hand penned the phrase concerning rousing the night-owl with a catch which drew for us the picture of that king of toppers Falstaff, and made Gratiano, the merriest of characters after Mercutio, imprecate—

Let my liver rather heat with wine
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.

The attempt to read ethical intention into the dramatic utterances of Shakspeare is no more tolerable than that of denying every charge of youthful vivacity or indiscretion that has been brought against the dramatist.

It is a just criticism upon 'Lear' to say that while it seems the dramatist's greatest achievement, it is not his best play. The more than hinted preference for a happy termination will appeal to many. Condemnation is passed on the theatrical fool whom Shakspeare derived from the morality plays, but from this censure the fool in 'Lear' is excepted. Many others should enjoy a like immunity.

At this point we stop, though the passages we had marked for comment are not half exhausted. If we have dealt principally with the points on which we have to express a measure of dissent, we are not insensible to the value of a work which is one of the most notable in its line—a line that offers high attractions to the greatest wits. It is pleasant to find Dr. Bradley mentioning Prof. Dowden as the one among his predecessors he would single out for special commendation. In this respect author and critic are in complete accord.

THE WEEK.

HAYMARKET.—The Creole: a New Play in One Act. By Louis N. Parker.

A PLEASING historical sketch in one act by Mr. Louis N. Parker, given at the Haymarket, serves to introduce one more Napoleon Bonaparte, a character who, on the modern English stage, yields only in popularity to Hamlet. What foreign source, if any, has supplied Mr. Parker with his plot is undeclared. So strictly in accordance with historical fact is, however, the story that there is no occasion to wander afield in search of motive. Returning from Egypt to take charge of events in Paris, now rapidly hastening to a crisis, Bonaparte arrives on October 16th, 1799, at the Rue de Victoire, the precise scene and time of the action. On his way from Fréjus, where he has landed, he has heard of nothing but the misdeeds of Josephine, whom he is burning to clasp to his breast. Assembled in his house and awaiting his coming are, in addition to Fouché and Talleyrand, his mother, Joseph and Lucien his brothers, and his sisters Elise, Pauline, and Caroline. The purpose in the domestic portion of the gathering is further to enlighten him as to the delinquencies of his wife. After one of those scenes of quarrel and rebuke which were a recurrent and painful feature in the Bonaparte household, the returning hero dismisses them all, and locking the door to prevent the entry of Josephine, whose arrival he expects, sets himself to work at his correspondence. Keeping his promise to Fouché and Talleyrand, he remains deaf and inaccessible to her pleadings, though strangely moved by the sound of her voice. It is not, indeed, until her two children Eugène and Hortense Beauharnais join their appeal to hers that Bonaparte can be induced to listen. When at length he opens the door and sees her kneeling and weeping without, the sight is too much for his fortitude. He opens his arms, into which she plunges herself, the past is forgotten, and in a torrent of uxoriousness he passes an act of amnesty. If, as is just, no more is asked of this than it professes to offer, all is well. Short as it is, the piece is at once faithful to history and dramatic. Napoleon is not presented in his most heroic aspect, and his relatives, with the exception of Madame Bonaparte, are a trifle contemptible. The play is only the more meritorious therefor. Mr. Cyril Maudo, admirably made up, presented a striking picture of the returning warrior; Miss Wallis was excellent as Madame Bonaparte—Madame Mère, Madame Letizia (sic) Buonaparte (sic) she was quaintly called on the programme; and Miss Jessie Bateman was agreeable as Hortense. Bonaparte's sisters were perhaps a little caricatured, but the Directoire costumes were well worn and effective.

AVENUE.—Jasper Bright: a Play in Three Acts. Adapted from the German by Arthur Sturgess.

EMBOLDENED by his success in 'A Case of Arson,' and fortified by further though scarcely adequate study of our language, Mr. Henri de Vries has joined the list of London managers and undertaken a season at the Avenue. The experiment has a certain amount of interest. Mr. de Vries is a clever actor of bourgeois parts, and has, as his previous performances exhibit, insight into character. His delineation of Jasper Bright, the pork butcher, in 'Die Herren Söhne,' a piece first seen six years ago at the Berliner Theater, is a ripe and mellow piece of acting. Unfortunately the piece itself is a poor and rather verbose treatment of a portion of the motive of 'Our Boys,' is out of date, and in almost all respects ineffective and unprofitable. Rather curiously, though the scene had been transferred from Germany to England, the characters had English names, and the interpreters, with the solitary exception of Mr. de Vries, were English, the atmosphere remained German. It is to be hoped, but it seems scarcely probable, that the management has something more exhilarating in reserve. We have not yet forgotten what a lesson was taught those of our stage who were willing and able to profit by the performances, almost a generation ago, of Madame Beersmann and her associates of the Rotterdam dramatic company.

GREAT QUEEN STREET.—Epicæne; or, the Silent Woman. By Ben Jonson.

So far removed are we from the comedy of the Jacobean age that an experiment such as that attempted in the revival of Jonson's 'Epicæne' can have none but purely archaeological interest. The one lesson to be learnt from a representation such as was given at the Great Queen Street Theatre is that Jonson is as immeasurably the inferior of Shakspeare in comedy as in poetry, in tragedy, and in dramatic sense generally. Our ancestors seem not to have perceived this, and Milton even puts "Jonson's learned sock" in a sense before Shakspeare's "native wood-notes wild." Dryden, in his 'Essay of Dramatic Poetry,' speaks of 'Epicæne,' with inconceivable exaggeration, as "the greatest and most noble of any pure, unmixed comedy in any language"; Coleridge describes it, with more reticence, but with great implied eulogy, as the most entertaining of Jonson's comedies; and the Master of Peterhouse, while commenting on these utterances, writes of the play as in its kind without a rival outside Molière, who is spoken of as Jonson's "peer"! Some of the characters in 'Epicæne' are cleverly designed, but the comic scenes are of little account beside those in 'Henry IV.,' in 'Twelfth Night,' and in 'A Midsummer Night's Dream.' In listening to the language of Sir John Daw and other characters we

GEORGE ALLEN'S LIST.

READY IN MAY.

G. F. WATTS. REMINISCENCES.

BY

Mrs. RUSSELL BARRINGTON.

With 5 FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS in COLOUR,
4 PHOTOGRAVURE PORTRAITS, and

27 other Illustrations from HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED DRAWINGS, mostly by G. F. WATTS, and 3 Facsimiles of Handwriting.

Royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, with Design on Cover by WATTS, 21s. net.

This work is the result of a friendship between the great Artist and the Author, extending over twenty-eight years.

It contains many incidental references and intimate touches concerning the leading British Painters of the last quarter of a century, particularly LEIGHTON. But the value and absorbing interest of the work are in the many descriptions of WATTS at work in his studio and of the intellectual evolution of his noblest Pictures.

Mrs. Barrington's knowledge of Watts's views of art and of his methods is quite unique. At his request she acted as his official interpreter, and aided him constantly by her suggestion and criticism.

THE SENSITIVE,

And other Pieces.

By A. E. MANNING FOSTER.

Printed on UNBLEACHED ARNOLD HAND-
MADE PAPER. Limited to 500 Copies.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

[In a few days.]

BIRD LIFE GLIMPSES.

By EDMUND SELOUS.

With 12 Chapter Headings and 6 Full-Page
Illustrations by G. E. LODGE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net. [Nearly ready.]

VERSES FROM MAORILAND

By DORA WILCOX.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net. [Just out.]

EURIPIDES.

HIPPOLYTUS. BACCHAE.
ARISTOPHANES' 'FROGS.'

By Prof. GILBERT MURRAY.

With an Appendix on 'The Lost Tragedies of Euripides,' and an Introduction on 'The Significance of the Bacchae in Athenian History'; and 12 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d. net. [Second Edition.]

THE TROJAN WOMEN.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net.

SEPARATE EDITION OF THE PLAYS.

Paper Covers, imperial 16mo, 1s. each net.

HIPPOLYTUS. [Third Edition.]

THE BACCHAE.

THE TROJAN WOMEN.

RUSKIN REPRINTS

FOR THE POCKET.

Bound with gilt tops and backs and Autograph on side.

22 VOLUMES NOW READY,

WITHOUT ILLUSTRATIONS,

INCLUDING

MODERN PAINTERS.

Vols. I., II., and VI.

Fcap. 8vo. cloth limp, 2s. 6d. net.

Leather limp, 3s. 6d. net.

Also the following

ILLUSTRATED VOLUMES.

Cloth limp, 3s. 6d. each.

Leather limp, 4s. 6d. each.

MODERN PAINTERS.

Vol. III. With 26 Illustrations.

Vol. IV. With 151 Illustrations.

Vol. V. With 138 Illustrations.

THE STONES OF VENICE.

Vol. I. With 94 Illustrations.

Vol. II. With 50 Illustrations.

Vol. III. With 20 Illustrations.

THE SEVEN LAMPS OF ARCHITECTURE.

With 14 Illustrations.

LECTURES ON ARCHITECTURE AND PAINTING.

With 15 Illustrations.

GIOTTO AND HIS WORKS IN PADUA.

With 56 Illustrations.

THE POETRY OF ARCHITECTURE.

With 28 Illustrations. [June 2.]

FROM
MR. ALSTON RIVERS'
LIST.
—
THE SOUL OF LONDON.

BY FORD MADOX HUEFFER.

Imp. 16mo, 5s. net.

The reception accorded to this volume on the day of publication by the London and Provincial Press stamps it as the book of the month.

The WORLD says:—

"AMONG ALL THE MANIFOLD BOOKS OF WHICH MODERN LONDON HAS BEEN THE SUBJECT, ONE MIGHT SEARCH IN VAIN FOR ANY FELLOW TO THIS DEEPLY CONTEMPLATIVE WORK, WITH ITS FINE INSIGHT, ITS COMPREHENSIVE SYMPATHY, ITS VIVID YET RESTRAINED SENSE OF THE PICTURESQUE, ITS SINGULAR POWERS BOTH OF GENERALIZATION AND ANALYSIS, AND ITS UNERRING EYE FOR FACTS AND FEATURES WHICH GO TO GIVE THE MODERN BABYLON SUCH INDIVIDUALITY AS IT MAY BE SAID TO POSSESS."

CURRENT FICTION.

"Mrs. H. H. Penrose, who is one of the women novelists to be taken into serious account, has not written anything better worth reading than 'THE UNEQUAL YOE.'.....Mrs. Penrose is a bold thinker and strong writer. She has set before herself the difficult task of placing a certain order of religionists in that ridiculous and contemptible light in which they really do stand to the vision of minds not only rational but reverent, without casting slight or ridicule upon religion itself."—World.

No book published this season has been so widely and favourably reviewed, or so keenly appreciated by the reading public as Mr. Archibald Marshall's 'THE HOUSE OF MERRILEES.'

Mr. Reginald Turner's 'PEACE ON EARTH' is, says the Daily Telegraph, "both clever and unconventional." The Yorkshire Post describes it as "a book which deserves wide appreciation as a singularly sane and powerful analysis of the profound principles which he finds in the theory of anarchism; principles which are, very possibly, least understood by those who profess and call themselves anarchists."

'THE COUNTERMINE' is a clever and original story of military life by Arthur Wenlock, who is, says the Morning Leader, "to be heartily congratulated upon a book which blends humour and excitement so agreeably."

MR. THOMAS COBB'S NEW NOVEL,
THE FRIENDSHIPS OF VERONICA,

WILL BE PUBLISHED ON TUESDAY NEXT.

LONDON: 13, ARUNDEL STREET, W.C.

NEW BOOK BY MR. ANDREW LANG.

JOHN KNOX AND THE REFORMATION.

By ANDREW LANG.

With 2 Photogravure Plates and 3 other Illustrations. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO. 39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.; New York and Bombay.

ADOLF WEIGEL, Publisher, Wintergartenstrasse 4, Leipzig.

SCHILLER CENTENARY, MAY 9, 1905. READY AT THE END OF APRIL.

Die Räuber

Ein Schauspiel von Friedrich Schiller

Frankfurt und Leipzig 1781

Exact Facsimile Reprint of the First Edition, with the Preface and the Passages suppressed by the Author. Published with a Bibliographical and Literary Sketch by Dr. C. SCHÜDDEKOPF, of the "Goethe und Schiller-Archiv," at Weimar. Of this Reprint only 550 Copies will be issued, viz.:—Nos. 1-50, on fine Japan Paper. Price 2l. 10s. Nos. 51-550, on Dutch Hand-made Paper, Van Gelder. Price 1l.

The original was, even at the lifetime of Schiller, a very scarce Book. It is wanting now even in some of the most important public libraries of Germany. International Book-lovers will be satisfied to find in this splendid reproduction a fair compensation for the unattainable original.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SEVENTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION

Estab.] FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE. [1835.

Accumulated Fund over ... £6,000,000
Paid in Claims more than ... £12,400,000

PROFITS.

These are divided every five years solely amongst the Assured. At the 1902 Division a Cash Profit of £761,802 was apportioned amongst the members, being considerably more than one-third of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years.

ENDOWMENT-ASSURANCE

Policies are issued, combining Life Assurance at minimum cost with provision for old age, and are singularly advantageous.

L. F. HOVIL,

Actuary and Secretary.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS, EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,

ACCIDENT AND DISEASE
(SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID, DIPHTHERIA, APPENDICITIS, &c.)

BURGLARY AND FIDELITY INSURANCE.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.
Established 1849. CLAIMS PAID £4,800,000

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN,
GOUT, AND INDIGESTION.
And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

DAVID NUTT,

57-59, LONG ACRE, W.C.

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. XIX. MAY, 1905. No. 4, 1s. 6d. net.

Contents.

EDITORIAL and GENERAL.

ORIGINAL CONTRIBUTIONS:—

The Place of the Doloneia in Epic Poetry. R. M. HENRY.

Note on Aeschylus 'Ag.' 1060-1. J. W. MACKAIL.

Adversaria Graeca. T. W. ALLEN.

Notes on Demosthenes. III. HERBERT RICHARDS.

On Literary Association, and the Disregard of it in 'Longinus.' A. W. VERRALL.

'Repraesentatio Temporum' in the 'Oratio Obliqua' of Caesar. I. A. P. SAVUNDRANAYAGAM and the Editor.

Tibulliana. J. P. POSTGATE.

The Zeugma in Horace 'Epode' XV. E. H. ALTON.

On the Montpellier Manuscripts of Persius and Juvenal. S. G. OWEN.

NOTES.

REVIEWS:—

Some Recent Works on Aristophanes. H. RICHARDS.

Edmonds and Austin's 'Characters of Theophrastus.' J. H. VINCE.

BRIEFER NOTICES.

CORRESPONDENCE:—

The Imperative in St. John xx. 17. H. J. ROBY.

REPORT:—

Proceedings of the Oxford Philological Society. Hilary Term, 1905. A. H. J. GREENIDGE.

VERSION:—

Campbell's 'To the Evening Star.' R. QUIRK.

ARCHAEOLOGY:—

Platner's 'Ancient Rome.' G. J. LAING.

Prof. Furtwängler, Ageladas and Stephanos. CHARLES WALDSTEIN.

British School at Rome.

Monthly Record. F. H. MARSHALL.

SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

JUST OUT.

MISTER DORMOUSE, and other

Verses for Children. By GERALDINE M. SEYMOUR. Square demy 8vo, printed at the Ballantyne Press on Hand-made Paper, Red-and-black Title, gilt top, bound in art linen, fancy gilt boards, with label, 2s. 6d.

The THREE-CORNERED HAT.

Translated from the Spanish of Don PEDRO DE ALARCON by LADY GOODENOUGH. 16mo, iv-225 pp. cloth, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

A CHAPTER from MALORY

(Book XXI. Ch. VIII.). Retold in Spenserian Stanza by HENRY CLORISTON. Square demy 8vo, printed at the Ballantyne Press on Hand-made Paper, Silver-and-blue Wrapper, 1s. net.

GUBBIO, PAST and PRESENT.

By LAURA MCCrackEN. Illustrated by KATHARINE MCCrackEN. With Preface by PAUL SABATIER. Fcap. 8vo, xvi-319 pp. Photogravure Frontispiece, 30 Illustrations, mostly Full-Page, and 2 Maps, art linen, gilt top, 5s. net.

Contents:—Antiquity of Gubbio—Growth of Gubbio—Medieval History—The Montefelbri, The Palazzo dei Consoli, Cathedral, Palazzo Ducale—Art and Churches of Gubbio—Life of S. Ubaldo—The Euginine Tables—The Festa of the Ceri—S. Francis and the Wolf—The Umbro-Roman Theatre, the Mausoleum, the Aqueduct.

TO BE PUBLISHED IMMEDIATELY.

The BURDEN of DEMOS, and other

Poems. By A. M. VIALLS. Crown 8vo, wrapper, 1s. net.

FORBIDDEN IN RUSSIA.

TRAGIC STORIES from RUSSIA.

From the Russian of NEMIROVITCH, DANTCHENKO, MAXIM GORKY, LEO TOLSTOY, and others. Translated by W. F. HARVEY. Crown 8vo, wrapper, 1s.

READY EARLY IN JUNE.

The RUSSIAN EMPIRE and

CZARISM. By VICTOR BERRARD, Editor of the 'Revue de Paris.' Translated by E. L. CHARLWOOD. Crown 8vo, cloth.

** A brilliant survey of the historical, geographical, and economic evolution of Russia, leading up to a masterly analysis of the present situation, and an appreciation of Russian policy at home and abroad.

ELLIOT STOCK'S

NEW BOOKS.

In crown 4to, bound in cloth, gilt, copiously illustrated, price 21s. net.

The HISTORY of the SOCIETY of APOTHECARIES of LONDON. By C. R. B. BARRETT, M.A. Oxon, Author of 'The Trinity House of Deptford Strond,' 'Essex Highways, Byways, and Waterways,' &amp;c. With numerous Illustrations by the Author.

"A book which is interesting and valuable. Excellently illustrated."—Athenæum."Mr. Barrett has collected with care and industry a vast amount of noteworthy detail, and has arranged it conveniently in this handsome volume."—Spectator.

In crown 4to, appropriately bound, price 10s. 6d.

The TABLE BOOK of the CINQUE PORTS: being the Index to the Decrees of the Courts of Brotherhood and Guestling, from 1433 to the Present Time.

"A book of great interest."—Hastings Visitors' List."We welcome the volume as one of the most interesting contributions to local history. It is not a book to be taken up and laid down hastily; it is one that will repay careful study."—Hastings Chronicle.

In square 8vo, appropriately bound in cloth, illustrated, price 3s. 6d.

MY NEW ZEALAND

GARDEN. By A SUFFOLK LADY.

"Every nook and corner in the 'New Zealand Garden' is graphically described, and the numerous full-page photographs help the reader to realize the magnificent things in shrubs, trees, and flowers which can be reared out of doors in this beautiful land."—Oxford Chronicle.

NEW NOVELS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, illustrated, price 6s.

The KNIGHT of the NEEDLE

ROCK and his DAYS, 1571-1606. By M. J. WILSON.

This is a story of Elizabethan times, the chief incidents taking place in the Isle of Wight, Guildford, and in London.

"Miss Wilson presents us with an entirely new and original kind of fiction. The reader feels himself in real historical company."—Athenæum."Miss Wilson has compiled a remarkably interesting and informing book. In general interest and genuine romantic episodes it is worth half a score of ordinary novels, and gives evidence of great care, ability, and good taste."—Academy.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, price 6s.

The PAINS of HAPPINESS.

A Novel. By RASSAC TORRIANI.

"The author interweaves a double love story with no little skill."—Pall Mall Gazette."The story is full of incident, adventure, and romance, and has movement and interest from beginning to end. The tone of the work is thoroughly healthy."—Rock.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In square 8vo, printed on Hand-made Paper by the Chiswick Press, appropriately bound, price 3s. 6d. net.

ZETETES, and other Poems. By MAURICE BROWNE.

In crown 8vo, appropriately bound, price 3s. 6d.

The LOVE-SONG of TRISTRAM

and ISEULT. By CYRIL EMRA.

In crown 8vo, appropriately bound, price 1s. 6d.

VERSES CHIEFLY ABOUT NATURE. By G. E. M.

"The versification is smooth and often graceful."—Oxford Chronicle."A pleasing gift of verse and an earnest, religious spirit are the two notes of this little book of song."—Glasgow Herald.

In crown 8vo, appropriately bound, price 1s. 6d. net.

The TREASURES of DARK-

NESS, and other Verses. By M. B. W.

"Its gracefully turned and dignified lyrical pieces give a not unbecoming expression to feelings of familiar simple piety of the refined ecclesiastical sort."—Scotsman.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

NOW READY.

THE FIRST NUMBER

OF THE

UNIVERSITY
REVIEW:AN INTER-UNIVERSITIES MAGAZINE OF WIDE ACADEMIC AND GENERAL INTEREST.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

The University Movement.

Right Hon. JAMES BRYCE, M.P.

Universities and Examinations.

Prof. ARTHUR SCHUSTER, F.R.S.

Shakspeare and Stoicism.

Prof. E. A. SONNENSCHN, M.A.

Questions for Discussion.

Sir OLIVER LODGE, F.R.S.

Malaria and a Moral.

(Illustrated.)

Prof. RONALD ROSS, F.R.S.

The Education of the Citizen.

Prof. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A.

Foreign University News.

News and Notes from the Universities and Colleges of Great Britain and Ireland.

ILLUSTRATED.

Price SIXPENCE net.

MAY BE OBTAINED THROUGH ALL BOOK-
SELLERS AND NEWSAGENTS.

London: SHERRATT &amp; HUGHES.

SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

RAPID REVIEW.—"A really great novel....Mrs. Ward has made of Lady Kitty a figure that the hardest must love and forgive."

FOURTH IMPRESSION IN THE PRESS.

THE MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE.

By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD.

With Illustrations by ALBERT STERNER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

JUST PUBLISHED, with a Portrait, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

IN PEACE AND WAR:

Autobiographical Sketches.

By Sir JOHN FURLEY, Kt., C.B.,

Author of 'Struggles and Experiences of a Neutral Volunteer,' &c.

ITALIAN LETTERS OF A DIPLOMAT'S WIFE.

By MARY KING WADDINGTON.

With 24 Portraits, Views, &c. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

SECOND IMPRESSION READY IMMEDIATELY.

WORLD.—"One of the most interesting books of the season.....Chatty, vivacious, observant, good humoured, pleasantly descriptive, and teeming with references to famous and notable people, and to places and events of interest, these letters are models of their kind."

A VAGRANT ENGLISHWOMAN.

By CATHERINE I. DODD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GUARDIAN.—"This is a very delightful book. The writer possesses that rarest of all gifts, true humour."

MORNING POST.—"Full of amusing incidents and clever character sketches."

TRINITY HOUSE, LONDON:

Past and Present. By WALTER H. MAYO. With a Frontispiece and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Shortly.]

THE WATERLOO LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. each Volume.

The Series will comprise some of the best Works of Modern Authors. The Volumes are well printed and issued in a neat cloth binding of special design.

The following Volumes, with others, are ready:—

The CRUISE of the "CACHALOT." With 8 Full-Page Illustrations and a Chart. By FRANK T. BULLEN.

The WHITE COMPANY. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations. By A. CONAN DOYLE.

JESS. With 12 Full-Page Illustrations. By H. Rider HAGGARD.

EVENING STANDARD and ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"Neat, well printed, and cheap."

MORNING LEADER.—"An attractive series."

ATHENÆUM.—"Well printed and neatly bound."

OTHER VOLUMES TO FOLLOW.

FORTHCOMING SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

TWO MOODS OF A MAN.

By HORACE G. HUTCHINSON,

Author of 'Crowborough Beacon,' 'Glencairly Castle,' &c.

[Shortly.]

ROSE OF LONE FARM.

By ELEANOR G. HAYDEN,

Author of 'Turnpike Travellers,' 'Travels Round Our Village,' 'From a Thatched Cottage,' &c.

[Shortly.]

* * Messrs. SMITH, ELDER & CO. will be happy to send a Copy of their CATALOGUE post free on application.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO. 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

NOTICE.—A NEW NOVEL by

AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE,

ENTITLED

ROSE OF THE WORLD.

IS NOW READY at all Booksellers' and Libraries, price 6s.

LIVERPOOL DAILY POST.—"A charming romance.....The book is a distinct success; it grips the attention of its readers, even of jaded reviewers."

JUST PUBLISHED, with 16 Full-Page Illustrations, small demy 8vo, 9s. net.

SPRING IN A SHROPSHIRE ABBEY.

By Lady CATHERINE MILNES GASKELL,

Author of 'The New Cinderella' and 'Old Shropshire Life.'

On MAY 22, large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE UPTON LETTERS.

By T. B.

* * In 'The Upton Letters' a schoolmaster gives his experiences of life to a friend in Madeira. Dated from "The Upton"—which is neither Uppingham nor Repton—the correspondence tells of men and books, no less than of boys and lessons. The letters were returned to their writer when his friend died.

TRACKS OF A ROLLING STONE

By the Hon. HENRY J. COKE,

Author of 'A Ride over the Rocky Mountains,' 'Creeds of the Day,' &c.

With a Portrait Frontispiece. Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Mr. Coke is to be congratulated on his entertaining book."

WORLD.—"A volume of fascinating interest as well as of high literary merit."

A LIFE OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

By SIDNEY LEE, Editor of 'The Dictionary of National Biography,' Honorary Doctor of Letters in the Victoria University. With 2 Portraits of Shakespeare, a Portrait of the Earl of Southampton, and Facsimiles of Shakespeare's known Signatures. Fifth and thoroughly Revised Edition. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

TIMES.—"A marvel of research.....Never before has learning been brought to bear upon Shakespeare's biography with anything like the same force."

MRS. HENRY DE LA PASTURE'S NEW NOVEL.

FIFTH IMPRESSION HALF SOLD.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Peter's Mother is as delightful a character as the imagination of a novel-writer ever figured forth."

PETER'S MOTHER.

By Mrs. HENRY DE LA PASTURE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BRITISH WEEKLY.—"Peter's Mother' is distinguished in thought and manner and, as a piece of literature, will stand high among the books of the year."

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4047.

SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY), May 20, at 3 o'clock, JAMES GEORGE FRAZER, Esq., D.C.L. LL.D. Litt.D., FIRST of TWO LECTURES on 'The Evolution of the Kingship in Early Society.' Half-a-Guinea the Course.

TUESDAY, May 23, at 5 o'clock, the Rev. HENRY G. WOODS, D.D., the Master of the Temple, FIRST of THREE LECTURES on 'Velazquez.' Half-a-Guinea.

THURSDAY, May 25, at 5 o'clock, Prof. J. A. FLEMING, M.A. D.Sc. F.R.S., FIRST of THREE LECTURES on 'Electromagnetic Waves.' Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription to all Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

LINNEAN SOCIETY of LONDON.—

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the ANNIVERSARY MEETING will be held at the ROOMS of the SOCIETY, BURLINGTON HOUSE, on WEDNESDAY, May 24, 1905, at 3 p.m.

B. DAYDON JACKSON, General Secretary.

REMBRANDT, MERYON, WHISTLER,

LEGROS, SEYMOUR HADEN, &c.—Exhibition of fine Prints now open at Mr. R. GUTKUNST'S, 16, King Street, St. James's, S.W., 10 to 6. Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S

SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27, King Street, St. James's.

ROMNEY HOUSE, 39, South Molton Street,

Bond Street.

ON VIEW, FINE OLD ENGRAVINGS, MEZZOTINT PORTRAITS, Fancy Subjects, Sporting and Naval Prints, &c.

PICTURES WAREHOUSED in a fine, light, dry

Warehouse.—Apply to THOMAS McLEAN, 7, Haymarket, London. Terms moderate.

HOME ARTS and INDUSTRIES ASSOCIATION.

The TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL EXHIBITION will be held in the ROYAL ALBERT HALL, S.W., on WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY, and SATURDAY, May 24, 25, 26, and 27. Admission One Shilling every Day after Wednesday.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT

INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital 30,000l.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbotts Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the free use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary, Mr. GEORGE LARNER, 28, Paternoster Row E.C.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINA-

TION will be held on JUNE 28, 29, and 30 to FILL UP not less than EIGHT RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS, THREE NON-RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS, and SOME EXHIBITIONS.—For particulars apply to the HEAD MASTER, 19, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

MERCHANT TAYLORS' SCHOOL, Charterhouse

Square, E.C.—FIVE ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, for Boys under 14 years of age on June 11, 1905, will be competed for on JULY 3, 4, and 5 next. An ORDINARY ENTRANCE EXAMINATION will be held on WEDNESDAY, July 19, at 1.30 p.m.—For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS

FOR THE NONCONFORMIST MINISTRY.

DR. WILLIAMS'S TRUSTEES offer for open

connection UNDERGRADUATE SCHOLARSHIPS, tenable in the University of Glasgow only; and DIVINITY SCHOLARSHIPS for Graduates, tenable in any approved School of Theology or University. The Scholarships are open to Students of all Denominations preparing for the Nonconformist Ministry.

For particulars apply to the SECRETARY, Dr. Williams's Library, Gordon Square, London, W.C., before JUNE 1.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN

(University of London),

YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, LONDON, W.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS.

A REID SCHOLARSHIP in ARTS, annual value 31l. 10s. First Year, 28l. 7s. Second and Third Years, and an ARNOTT SCHOLARSHIP in SCIENCE, annual value 48l., both tenable for Three Years, will be awarded on the results of the EXAMINATION to be held at the COLLEGE on JUNE 28 and 29.

For further information apply to the PRINCIPAL.

LONDON INTER-COLLEGIATE

SCHOLARSHIP BOARD.

SCHOLARSHIPS AT UNIVERSITY, KINGS, AND EAST LONDON TECHNICAL COLLEGES.

Intending Candidates should apply at once to the SECRETARY of the Board, King's College, Strand.

Last day for entry, MAY 30.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORs in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITS, THRING & CO.,

who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

COUNTY of LONDON.

EDUCATION ACTS, 1870-1903.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the post of a PRINCIPAL ASSISTANT in the EXECUTIVE OFFICER'S BRANCH of the EDUCATION DEPARTMENT. The Officer appointed will be required to assist the Executive Officer in the work relating to Higher Education, especially in connexion with Secondary Education, Scholarships, and the Training of Teachers. Candidates must have had a University or other equivalent training; and experience in connexion with Secondary Schools and in Educational Administration is desirable. The Salary attached to the position is 400l. per annum, rising by annual increments of 25l. to 600l. per annum.

The person appointed will be required to give his whole time to the duties of the Office, and will in other respects be subject to the usual conditions attaching to the Council's service, particulars of which are contained in the Form of Application.

Applications should be made on the official forms, to be obtained from the Clerk of the London County Council, at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W., or at the Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C. The applications must be sent in not later than 10 A.M. on SATURDAY, June 3, 1905, addressed to the Clerk of the Council as above, and accompanied by copies of not more than three recent Testimonials.

Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for appointment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.

The County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W.,
May 11, 1905.

BANGOR NORMAL COLLEGE

for the Training of Schoolmasters for Elementary Schools in Wales.

(Conducted on the principles of the British and Foreign School Society.)

APPOINTMENT OF PRINCIPAL.

The COMMITTEE of MANAGEMENT will shortly proceed to appoint a PRINCIPAL to the above Institution. Candidates must be University Graduates, and must be qualified to take part in the professional training of the Students. They are also requested to state what other subjects included in a Training College Curriculum they would be prepared to teach.

Salary 350l. per annum, rising by increments of 25l. every two years until it reaches 500l.

Applications, with fifty copies of not more than five recent Testimonials, should be sent not later than JUNE 7, 1905, to the Secretary, to whom also all inquiries for further information should be addressed.

Canvassing among the Members of the Committee will be regarded as a disqualification.

Rev. DANIEL ROWLANDS, M.A., Secretary.

Normal College, Bangor.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES

and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the Post of PROFESSOR of EDUCATION in the NORMAL DEPARTMENT (MEN) and in the DEPARTMENT for the TRAINING of MEN TEACHERS for SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials, should be sent, on or before SATURDAY, June 3, 1905.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.

May 6, 1905.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES

and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the post of ASSISTANT LECTURER in LATIN.

Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials (which need not be printed), must be sent on or before SATURDAY, June 3, 1905.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.

May 6, 1905.

UNIVERSITY of BIRMINGHAM.

LECTURESHIP IN GREEK.

The COUNCIL invite applications for a LECTURESHIP in GREEK LANGUAGE, LITERATURE, and ARCHEOLOGY (vacant by the appointment of Mr. J. H. Hopkinson, M.A. Oxon., to the Wardenship of Hulme Hall, Manchester, at a stipend of 200l. per annum, under the general direction of the Professor of Classics. Duties to begin OCTOBER 2, 1905.

Applications, with not less than twelve copies of Testimonials, should be sent before JUNE 5, 1905, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars can be obtained.

GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

CITY of SHEFFIELD.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

TRAINING COLLEGE FOR TEACHERS.

The SHEFFIELD EDUCATION COMMITTEE will require in SEPTEMBER NEXT a TUTOR (MALE) for the NEW TRAINING COLLEGE for TEACHERS. His strong Subject should be Mathematics, with Geography as a Subsidiary Subject. [Salary, 200l. a year, non-resident.

Applications are also invited for the following Posts, which will be open in SEPTEMBER NEXT:—

One LADY TUTOR, Resident, 100l.

One LADY TUTOR, Non-resident, 150l.

It is desired that one of the Lady Tutors should be strong in Mathematics and Science, and the other in French and English.

Forms of application may be had on application to

JNO. F. MOSS, Secretary.

Education Office, Sheffield, May 17, 1905.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIAHRRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, GENEVA, GOLFE-JUAN, HAVRE, HYÈRES, JUAN-LES-PINS, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, MONTE CARLO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS (Est, Nord, Lyon), PAU, ROUEN, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOULON, TOURS.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 248, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

THE UNIVERSITY of LEEDS.—DEPARTMENT

of ANCIENT and MODERN HISTORY.—A VACANCY will arise in the ASSISTANT LECTURESHIP on OCTOBER 1, 1905, and applications for the appointment will be received by the REGISTRAR up to JUNE 10. Salary 200l.—Further particulars on application.

ST. DAVID'S COLLEGE, LAMPETER.—

WANTED, MATHEMATICAL LECTURER (Honour and Pass), 150l. and Capitation Fees. Furnished Rooms in College.—Further particulars from the PRINCIPAL.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES,

ABERYSTWYTH.

TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.

ASSISTANT MISTRESS OF METHOD.

The COUNCIL invite applications for the post of ASSISTANT MISTRESS OF METHOD and ASSISTANT LECTURER in EDUCATION in the TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENTS of the above COLLEGE.—Applications must reach the ACTING REGISTRAR, from whom full particulars may be obtained, not later than TUESDAY, June 13, 1905.

WALLASEY PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

The LIBRARIES COMMITTEE invite applications for the post of SUB-LIBRARIAN. Preference will be given to persons having a good education, experience in modern Library methods, and a knowledge of the Dewey Classification.

Commencing salary 70l. per annum. Duties to be entered upon as early as possible.

Applications, with copies of not more than three recent Testimonials, endorsed on outside "Sub-Librarian," to be lodged with the undersigned by MAY 27.

Canvassing will be considered a disqualification.

H. W. COOK, Clerk and Solicitor,

Wallasey Urban District Council.

Public Offices, Egremont, Cheshire.

MUSICAL JOURNALIST can find OPENING

on TRADE JOURNAL. Must be young, energetic, and well up in Musical Matters, both Technical and Trade.—Apply DELTA, Box 1006, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

AS ASSISTANT EDITOR, or would assist an Author to Revise MSS. and Prepare Work for Press. Would undertake Morning Secretarial Work. Good Linguist and a Graduate.—J. B., care of Price, 6, Boundary Road, N.W.

EXPERIENCED POLITICAL ORGANIZER

and PRIVATE SECRETARY (LADY) requires WORK, part or whole time (Liberal).—F. M., 61, Cathcart Road, Redcliffe Gardens, S.W.

LADY seeks ENGAGEMENT as PRIVATE

SECRETARY.—Shorthand, Typewriting (own machine), French, German, Indexing, Research Work. London, Country, or Abroad. Two-and-a-half years' experience. Excellent testimonials.—Apply M., Box 1009, care of Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

SECRETARYSHIP WANTED to Literary Man,

Society, M.P., Club, &c., or LITERARY APPOINTMENT by a GENTLEMAN educated Eton and Sandhurst, sixteen years in Army, Adjutant of his Regiment, age 41.—Address CARE A. T. (Box 1001, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LADY PROOF READER, of some experience,

WANTS SITUATION. In London preferred.—Apply, personally or by letter, J. E. F., Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL

WORK and INDEXING.—Apply Miss PETHERBRIDGE (Nat. Sch. Tripos), 52A, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

TYPEWRITING—Reviews, Novels, Plays, Poetry,

Scholastic Work, Letters, &c. TYPED, or from Dictation (Shorthand if desired). Foreign and Scientific MSS. a speciality. Ten years' experience. Duplicating. Cheap prices.—GRAHAM, 34, Strand, W.C. (Charing Cross).

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON

OFFICES. Authors' MSS. Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Circulars, &c., duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established twelve years. SIXES & SIXES, 229, Hammersmith Road, W. (Private Address: 13, Wolveston Gardens, Hammersmith.)

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., SCIENTIFIC, and of all descriptions. COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Dictation Rooms. Shorthand or Type-writing. Usual Terms.—Misses E. B. and I. FORAN, Penington House, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, London.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

REPRODUCTIONS IN MONOCHROME OF FAMOUS WORKS OF ART BY THE AUTOTYPE PERMANENT PROCESS.

Amongst the numerous Publications may be mentioned:—

SELECTIONS from

The NATIONAL GALLERY, London.

The WALLACE COLLECTION.

The TATE GALLERY.

The WALKER ART GALLERY, Liverpool.

DRAWINGS by HOLBEIN from the Royal Collection, Windsor Castle.

SELECTED EXAMPLES of SACRED ART from various Collections.

ETCHINGS by REMBRANDT.

DRAWINGS by ALBERT DÜRER.

PICTURES from the LOUVRE, LUXEMBOURG, PARIS.

Prospectuses of above Issues will be sent free on application.

Full particulars of all the Company's Publications are given in

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE. Now ready, NEW EDITION, with upwards of 150 Miniature Photographs of Notable Autotypes and 23 Tint-Block Illustrations. For convenience of reference the Publications are Arranged Alphabetically under Artists' Names. Post free, One Shilling.

A Visit of Inspection is invited to

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMPBELL TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.O.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Rensington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITER.—Miss E. M. TIGAR, 64, Maitland Park Road, Haverstock Hill, N.W. PLAYS and MSS. of every description. Carbon and other Duplicate or Manifold Copies. Established 1884.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, &c., carefully executed, 8d. per 1,000 words, paper included.—Miss A. MASSIE, Strathairly, Southfleet Avenue, Longfield, Kent.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

GREEK and LATIN accurately TYPE-WRITTEN. MSS. carefully Revised.—MURISON, St. Winifred's No. 1, Ledger's Road, Slough.

LITERARY AGENCY.—INDEXING, Translations (French, German, Latin). Authors' MSS. carefully Revised and Proofed. Terms moderate. Type-Writing 8d. per 1,000 words. References.—Miss A. HORSFIELD, 48, Church Street, Barnsley, Yorks.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURCHES, 34, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED. And supplied with every requisite.

Write for 'THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST.'

The Imperial News Agency, 2 and 4, Tudor Street, London, E.C.
America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.
Australia: Holt's Chambers, 121, Pitt Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application.
Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

Catalogues.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 140, containing a Special Article, entitled 'The RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS,' by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the New Edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters and Engravers,' &c. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

LEIGHTON'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 Illustrations, price 2s JUST ISSUED. Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

W. GLAISHER'S NEW GENERAL CATALOGUE OF REMAINDERS (Spring, 1905)

IS NOW READY, and can be had on application. It contains many important BOOKS, offered at a GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE by

WILLIAM GLAISHER,

Wholesale and Export Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROSE & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

B. H. BLACKWELL, 50 and 51, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CATALOGUE of CRITICAL EDITIONS of LATIN CLASSICAL AUTHORS and Standard Works dealing with Greek and Roman History, Literature, and Art.

IN THE PRESS.

CATALOGUE of MISCELLANEOUS SECOND-HAND BOOKS, chiefly ENGLISH, including SELECTIONS from the LIBRARIES of the late Rev. ALBERT WATSON, M.A., formerly Principal of B.N.C., the late Prof. FREEMAN, the late R. S. WILSON, M.A., formerly Fellow of B.N.C., and from other Libraries recently purchased by the Advertiser.

READY SHORTLY.

CATALOGUE of the THIRD (and LAST) PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late Prof. F. YORK POWELL, including Greek and Latin Classical Writers and Mediaeval Authors, Ecclesiastical History, Antiquarian Works, Law, Philosophy, and Miscellaneous Items.

H. H. PEACH, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 11 contains Books on Art, Bibliography, Doves Bible, Emblems, &c.

CATALOGUE No. 43.—Etchings by Whistler and Samuel Palmer—Engravings after Turner—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Drawings of the Early English School—scarce illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

LITERARY CUTTINGS.—Extensive COLLECTION on Literary and Political Subjects, with Illustrations, property of deceased Journalist, FOR SALE. May be seen by appointment.—W., 110, Brecknock Road, N.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—Spink & Son, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8 1/2 in.—Address W. Biscombe Gardner, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

MARLBOROUGH.—TO BE SOLD, WITH POSSESSION.—AXHOLME, on the London and Bath Road, within a mile of Marlborough College, with fine Views of the magnificently Timbered Slopes of Savernake Forest, a DETACHED FREEHOLD RESIDENCE, with Six Bedrooms, Dressing Room, Three good Reception Rooms, and Domestic Offices. Stabling, Lodge, Gardener's Cottage, and other Out-buildings. Well-timbered Ground, nearly Four Acres, bounded and intersected by the River Kennet.—Solicitors, Messrs. KAYS & JONES, 37, Norfolk Street, W.C. Particulars of Mr. MARK JEANS, Marlborough.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WINTER APARTMENTS—Comfortably Furnished Sitting-Room and One Bedroom. Pleasant and central. No others taken.—R. H., 65, Grove Hill Road, Tunbridge Wells.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Sales by Auction.

The Library of JOHN GABBITAS, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, May 22, and Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the LIBRARY of JOHN GABBITAS, Esq., of Melbury Road, W., and Bournemouth, comprising Works illustrated by John Leech, George Cruikshank, Phiz, &c.—the Writings of George Borrow, Coleridge, Dickens, and Thackeray—Historical Works of Freeman, Fronde, Gibbon, Green, Grote, and other Standard Literature—Sporting Books—The Studio (a Set), and other Books of Prints—Editions de Luxe of Bulwer Lytton, Rudyard Kipling, and R. L. Stevenson; a COLLECTION of BOOKS, chiefly Bound by the Guild of Women Binders and the Hampstead Bindery, consisting of some fine examples of Contemporary Artistic Bindings, several of which have been exhibited, and many are Extra-Illustrated; other Properties, including an unusual Collection of Books on Puzosim—Books with Coloured Plates—Surtees's Writings in the Original Parts—Trials—Cokayne's Peerage—Punch, 1841-87—Lottery Bills—Hamerton's Etchings and Etchers, First Edition—Rogers's Italy and Poems, Extra-Illustrated—Books of Prints, Biography, Voyages, Travels, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The Library of Works on Natural History, Sport, &c., the Property of EDWARD BIDWELL, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, May 24, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of BOOKS on NATURAL HISTORY, SPORT, &c., the Property of EDWARD BIDWELL, Esq., comprising Booth's Notes on Birds—Buller's Birds of New Zealand—Bacon's Annals of Ipswich—Drummond's Ancient Scottish Weapons—Harvie-Brown and Buckley's Fauna of Scotland—The Ibis (complete set)—Latham's Falconry—Lord Lilford's Coloured Figures of British Birds, First Edition, and Birds of Northamptonshire—Macgillivray's British Birds—Martin's Thetford, with extra Illustrations—also County Natural Histories—Transactions of Natural History Societies—Pamphlets, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A valuable Collection of Books by or relating to Shakespeare.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, May 25, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, a valuable COLLECTION of BOOKS by or relating to SHAKESPEARE, His Works, Times, and Influence on subsequent Writers, including Early Editions of his Plays and of those of other Elizabethan Authors—rare sixteenth, seventeenth, and Eighteenth Century Books, which contain direct allusions to the Poet—many Volumes of importance which are known to have been used by the Dramatist in the compilation of his Plays, and others which show parallel passages.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The valuable Library of His Honour Judge PHILBRICK, K.C.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, May 29, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable LIBRARY of His Honour Judge PHILBRICK, K.C., including Specimens of the Presses of Aldus, Fyner, John of Westphalia, Jenson, Schoeffer, Valdarfer, and the Elzevirs—Bindings by Roger Payne, Rozerain, Padeloup, Derome, &c.—Collection of Editions of Walton and Cotton's Complete Angler, the Bikon Basilike, and the Works of La Fontaine—choice French Illustrated Books—also valuable Books on Art, many in choice Bindings—Library Editions of Standard Works, including Books on Napoleon—Batemian's Orchidaceae of Mexico—Ittenbach's Pinetum Britannicum—and a Coloured Copy of Griffith's Palms of British India—the Collection of Books on Philately.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Valuable Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 1, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS, Ancient and Modern, ILLUMINATED MANUSCRIPTS, HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS, and AUTOGRAPH LETTERS, including the Nautical Library (containing his Log-Books) of H.R.H. the Duke of Clarence (Prince William Henry, afterwards King William IV.)—fine Illuminated Horse, Bibles, and Thirteenth-Century English Psalter, and other Service Books—Historical Documents of the Tudors and Stuarts—Two Miniature Paintings on Grisaille, attributed to Simon Bening and Albert Dürer—Autograph Letters of David Garrick, Robert Browning, C. Dickens, Jas. Roswell, Mrs. Piozzi, Lord Lovat, P. B. Shelley, Andrew Marvell, S. T. Coleridge, &c.—Autograph Journals of Thos. De Quincey, Mrs. Inchbald, and others—a Series of Sir Walter Scott's Works, chiefly First Editions, with numerous Sets of Illustrations—rare Tracts on America, including Roger Williams's Key to the Language of America, 1643—Keith's Tracts, &c.—Books from the Library of the Emperor Napoleon I. at St. Helena—the Countess of Pembroke's Tragedie of Antonie, 1595—Extra-Illustrated Copies of Camden's Britannia and Pilkington's Dictionary of Painters—Scarce Works illustrated by Geo. Cruikshank, Rowlandson, and others—Issues of Private Presses, &c.; also Three important Works of William Blake, in fine condition, viz., Visions of the Daughters of Albion, The Book of Thel, and The Marriage of Heaven and Hell.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Greek and Roman Coins, the Property of the late HARRAN P. SMITH, Esq., New York.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 5, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of GREEK and ROMAN COINS in Gold, Silver, and Bronze, formed by the late HARRAN P. SMITH, Esq., of New York, U.S.A. (sold by order of his Executors).

May be viewed two days prior. Illustrated Catalogues may be had.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, May 22, and TUESDAY, May 23, the LOUIS HUTH COLLECTION of ORIENTAL PORCELAIN, Objects of Art, and Decorative Furniture.

On WEDNESDAY, May 24, the LOUIS HUTH COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS.

On WEDNESDAY, MAY 24, and THURSDAY, May 25, the LOUIS HUTH LIBRARY.

On FRIDAY, May 26, the LOUIS HUTH COLLECTION of Fine EARLY ENGLISH SILVER.

On FRIDAY, May 26, Fine EARLY ENGLISH SILVER, the Property of LORD MONTAGU of BEAULIEU and ARTHUR C. MAY, Esq., and an ITALIAN CRYSTAL BIBERON, the Property of JOHN GABBITAS, Esq.

On SATURDAY, May 27, MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS of the late C. A. STARTIN, Esq., the late THOMAS BELL BARKER, Esq., and others.

On MONDAY, May 29, and Three Following Days, the HAWKINS COLLECTION of UNSET PRECIOUS STONES.

On SATURDAY, June 3, highly important PICTURES, the Property of the Right Hon. LORD TWEEDMOUTH.

Library of the late Rev. H. CLEMENTI-SMITH, removed from Holland Park (by order of the Executors), and other private Properties.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., EARLY IN JUNE, the above Properties, including Rare and Standard Works in all branches of Literature.

Valuable Autograph Letters and interesting State Documents

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., EARLY IN JUNE, an important COLLECTION of AUTOGRAPH LETTERS, ORIGINAL MSS., and other Items, including fine Examples of Charles Dickens, Harrison Ainsworth, and other Modern Writers; also many Letters and Documents of great Literary and State interest.

Valuable Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, May 24, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, valuable MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, comprising Foster's Miniature Painters, the beautiful Fifty-Guinea Edition, with the Plates Hand Coloured, 2 vols.—Champlin and Perkins's Cyclopædia of Painters, Special Edition, 4 vols. morocco extra—Bryan's Dictionary of Painters, by Williamson, 5 vols.—Planché's Cyclopædia of Costume, 2 vols., and other Fine-Art and Illustrated Books—Louthborough's Scenery of England and Wales, and other Books with Coloured Plates—Early Printed and Black-Letter Books, including a Copy of Hollinshed's Chronicles, 2 vols. in 4, 1577—Scarce and Curious Books in Old English Literature—Glareanus, Dodecachordon Basilæ, 1547, and other Works on Music—Books on Natural History—Library Editions of the Writings of Grote, Gibbon, Hallam, Matthew Arnold, and others—Hakluyt's Voyages, New Edition, 12 vols.—Burton's Arabian Nights, illustrated, 13 vols.—Handsome Sets of the Works of Dickens and Thackeray—Lamb's Essays of Elia, boards, uncut, 1823, and other First Editions of Esteemed Authors—Alken's Seven Ages of Man, Coloured Copy, in original wrapper—Encyclopædia Britannica, Tenth Edition, 36 vols.—Books of Prints and Engravings.

To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

Entomological Sale.—Lepidoptera.

TUESDAY, May 23, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., several important COLLECTIONS of LEPIDOPTERA, including many rare examples, in fine condition; also a large number of Lots, just received in Papers from various Collectors Abroad—Entomological Cabinets—Wall Cases, &c.

Catalogues in course of preparation.

Astronomical Telescope by T. Cooke & Sons, 10-in. Object Glass, and Accessories.

FRIDAY, May 26, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will include in his SALE on FRIDAY, May 26 (by order of the Executors of the late Col. KNIGHT) ASTRONOMICAL TELESCOPE by T. Cooke & Sons, of York, with Object Glass, 10in. clear aperture: Equatorial Mounting, with Adjustment for Latitude; Driving Clock, with Maintaining Power and Regulating Adjustment; the whole mounted on a massive Iron Column, divided in centre to facilitate moving, and for adjustment in Azimuth—a Battery of Eye-Pieces—Micrometer—Sun Diagonal, &c.—Chronometers—Sextants—Barometers and Thermometers—Microscopes—Compasses—and other important Apparatus, all in excellent condition.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Telescope may be viewed by order only.

Curiosities.

MR. J. C. STEVENS'S NEXT SALE of CURIOS will take place on TUESDAY, May 30, and will include a most interesting COLLECTION of ARMOUR, SWORDS and DAGGERS, MACES, VASES, MARBLE SLABS, and OIL PAINTINGS from PERSIA—a fine Assortment of Banners, Prayer Wheels, Trumpets, Metal Vases, Wood Carvings, &c., from Thibet—Native Curios from Northern Nigeria—Early Stone Implements from Denmark—Chinese and Japanese Porcelain, Cloisonné, Bronzes, &c., and Curios from all Parts. Also about 70 Lots of Coins from different sources.

On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale. Catalogues may be had on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Persian and Thibetan Curiosities.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., on TUESDAY, May 30, a most interesting COLLECTION of ARMOUR, Swords and Daggers, Maces, Vases, Marble Slabs, and Oil Paintings from Persia—a fine assortment of Banners, Prayer Wheels, Trumpets, Metal Vases, Wood Carvings, &c., from Thibet.

On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Sale No. 3,036.

ULVERSTON.

Important to Connoisseurs, Collectors of Old China and Pottery, Arms and Armour, Foreign and other Curios, Coins and Medals, Books, Prints and Pictures, Miniatures, Old Carved Oak and Mahogany Furniture, &c.; Curators of Museums and the Public generally.

M. D E R O M E & S O N are in receipt of instructions from W. W. HODGSON Esq., of Fountain Street, to remove to

THE DRILL HALL, ULVERSTON,

And therein

SELL BY AUCTION,

On MAY 29, 30, 31, and JUNE 1 and 2, 1905,

Commencing each day at 1 o'clock precisely,

HIS ENTIRE COLLECTION

As briefly summarized in the following Order of Sale:—

MONDAY, May 29.—OLD CHINA and POTTERY.

TUESDAY, May 30.—OLD CHINA (continued), GLASS, and ENAMELS.

WEDNESDAY, May 31.—ARMS and ARMOUR; SAVAGE, PRE-HISTORIC, and EARLY BRITISH ITEMS.

THURSDAY, June 1.—HORNS and ANTLERS; FOREIGN and OTHER CURIOS, COINS, TOKENS, and MEDALS; SILVER and SHEFFIELD PLATE; OLD CANDLESTICKS and RUSH-LIGHT HOLDERS.

FRIDAY, June 2.—BOOKS; PICTURES on GLASS; NEEDLEWORK PICTURES and SAMPLERS; MINIATURES; PRINTS and ENGRAVINGS; CARVED OAK and MAHOGANY FURNITURE.

COMPLETE CATALOGUES, price One Shilling each (by post Sixteenpence), and DAILY CATALOGUES, price Threepence each (by post Fourpence), may be obtained from the AUCTIONEERS, at their Offices, 21, Strandgate, Kendal.

Kendal, May 16, 1905.

THE SO-CALLED TEMPLE OF MINERVA

MEDICA: Painting and Sculpture at the Paris Salons, by H. H. Statham; Sculpture in Relation to Architecture (Institute of Architects); Embroidery at the Burlington Fine-Arts Club; Types of Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column); Sculpture at the Central Library, Hammersmith; Municipal Buildings, South Shields; Selected Design for Lambeth Municipal Buildings, &c.—See the BUILDER of May 20 (4s. by post 4½d.).—Through any News-agent, or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

HARVARD LECTURES on the REVIVAL of LEARNING. By

J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D., Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Public Orator in the University of Cambridge, Hon. Litt.D. Dublin. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

A HISTORY of CLASSICAL SCHOLARSHIP. From the Sixth

Century B.C. to the End of the Middle Ages. With Chronological Tables, Facsimiles from Manuscripts, and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, xxiv+672 pp. 10s. 6d. net.

SPECTATOR.—"As a work of reference his book is of the highest value. The fact that there is no book of a similar character in English, together with the exactitude and extent of the information it contains, make it indispensable to all interested in scholarship."

The PRESERVATION of ANTIQUITIES: a Handbook for

Curators, Translated, by permission of the Authorities of the Royal Museums, from the German of Dr. FRIEDRICH RATHGEN, Director of the Laboratory of the Royal Museums, Berlin, by GEORGE A. AUDEN, M.A. M.D. Cantab., and HAROLD A. AUDEN, M.Sc. Vict., D.Sc. Tübingen. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

TO BE PUBLISHED JUNE 1. Royal 8vo, 25s. net. Price to Subscribers before publication, 20s. net.

RECORDS of the BOROUGH of LEICESTER. Being a Series

of Extracts from the Archives of the Corporation of Leicester. Vol. III. 1509–1603. Edited by MARY BATESON, Fellow of Newnham College, Cambridge. Revised by W. H. STEVENSON, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, and J. E. STOCKS, M.A., Rector of Misterton, Archdeacon of Leicester. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

The PLATONIC CONCEPTION of IMMORTALITY and its

CONNEXION with the THEORY of IDEAS. An Essay which obtained the Hare Prize, 1903. By R. K. GAYE, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 5s. net.

The RELIGION of ISRAEL: a Historical Sketch. By R. L.

OTTLEY, Canon of Christ Church, and Hon. Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 4s. [Immediately.]

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

A SHORT HISTORY of the HEBREWS to the ROMAN

PERIOD. Crown 8vo, with 7 Maps, 5s.

MATHEMATICAL and PHYSICAL PAPERS. By the late Sir

GEORGE GABRIEL STOKES, Bart., Sc.D. LL.D. D.C.L. Past Pres. R.S., &c. Reprinted from the Original Journals and Transactions, with brief Historical Notes and References.

Vol. V. (Concluding Volume). Demy 8vo, 15s.

KUMMER'S QUARTIC SURFACE. By R. W. H. T. Hudson,

M.A. D.Sc., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Lecturer in Mathematics at the University of Liverpool. Demy 8vo, 8s. net.

A TREATISE on PLAGUE: Dealing with the Historical, Epidemiological, Clinical, Therapeutic, and Preventive Aspects of the Disease. By W. J. SIMPSON, M.D. Aberd. F.R.C.P. Lond. D.P.H. Camb. Professor of Hygiene, King's College, London; Lecturer on Tropical Hygiene, London School of Tropical Medicine; formerly Health Officer, Calcutta; Medical Adviser to the Government of Cape Colony during the Outbreak of Plague in 1901; Commissioner for the Colonial Office to Inquire into the Causes of the Continuance of the Plague in Hong-Kong. With Maps and Illustrations. Royal 8vo, 16s. net.

LANCET.—"We congratulate Prof. Simpson upon the completeness of his work. He has given to the practical physician an accurate guide to the diagnosis and the treatment of plague; the bacteriologist will find here a trustworthy account of the plague bacillus, its nature, its virulence, and its vitality; the sanitarian will read of the way in which to deal practically with an epidemic; and the politician, if he will but realize the condition of India as recorded in these pages, will be enabled to form some idea of the pressing calamity, which threatens to assume aspects and proportions that may in the near future require most strenuous endeavours to allay."

The GEOGRAPHY of DISEASE. By Frank G. Clemow,

M.D. Edin., D.P.H. Camb., Physician to H.M. Embassy, Constantinople. With 12 Maps and Charts. 15s. ("Cambridge Geographical Series.")

BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL.—"The works of all these writers [Hirsch, Lombard, Davidson, and others] have to a greater or less extent become classics, and there is every reason to expect that Dr. Clemow's book will attain the same position.....The information is conveyed in a readable and scholarly style throughout."

THE REVISED VERSION.—SCHOOL EDITION.

ST. JOHN. The Revised Version. Edited, with Notes for the use of Schools, by the Rev. ARTHUR CARR, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d. net.

PITT PRESS SERIES.—New Volumes.

THUCYDIDES. Book VI. Edited, with Introduction and Notes,

by A. W. SPRATT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of St. Catharine's College, Cambridge. Extra fcap. 8vo, 6s.

ARISTOPHANES.—The ACHARNIANS. Edited by C. E.

GRAVES, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of St. John's College, Cambridge. 3s. [Immediately.]

GALDOS.—TRAFALGAR. Edited, with Notes and Introduction,

by F. A. KIRKPATRICK, M.A. 3s. [Immediately.]

(Subject for Cambridge Local Examinations, 1905.)

London: Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane. C. F. CLAY, Manager.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S LIST.

FREE OPINIONS.

BY MARIE CORELLI.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

The JAPANESE SPIRIT. By OKAKURA-YOSHISABURO. With an Introduction by GEORGE MEREDITH. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.
"A remarkable and deeply suggestive book. Everybody should read it."—Westminster Gazette.

The FIRST ROMANOV (1613-1725). A History of Muscovite Civilisation and the Rise of Modern Russia under Peter the Great and his Fore-runners. By R. NISBET BAIN, Author of 'The Pupils of Peter the Great,' 'Peter III., Emperor of Russia,' &c. With 8 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

The FAR EASTERN TROPICS: Studies in the Administration of Tropical Dependencies. By ALLEYNE IRELAND. With a Coloured Map. Large crown 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.]

CATHERINE DE' MEDICI and the FRENCH REFORMATION. By EDITH SICHEL, Author of 'Women and Men of the French Renaissance,' 'The Household of the Lafayettes,' &c. Demy 8vo, with 12 Illustrations, 15s. net.
"Miss Edith Sichel has done a fine and distinguished piece of work. She has written a brilliant and a scholarly book; a book it is both tempting and difficult to overpraise. For Miss Sichel is gifted with much of the rare projective vision of the born historian."—Times.

JOHN GRAHAM of CLAVERHOUSE, VISCOUNT of DUNDEE, 1648-1689. By C. SANFORD TERRY, M.A. Illustrated, demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"On the whole it does not seem too much to say that this book promises to be the definitive biography of a man whose character has been traduced by 'prejudice founded upon wilful neglect of evidence.'"—Morning Post.

The KING in EXILE (CHARLES II.). By EVA SCOTT, Author of 'Rupert, Prince Palatine.' Demy 8vo, illustrated, 15s. net.

"Miss Scott is to be congratulated on a notable contribution to Stuart history. Not merely has she unravelled with skill the entanglements of a singularly intricate subject,.....but she has sketched the characters of the banished Royalists with a living touch."
DORA GREENWELL MCCHESENEY, in the Daily Chronicle.

The SUN and the SERPENT: a Contribution to the History of Serpent Worship. By Brigadier-Surgeon C. F. OLDHAM. Demy 8vo, with 33 Full-Page Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

PENTHESILEA: a Poem. By LAURENCE BINYON, Author of 'The Death of Adam,' &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"'Penthesilea' is a story of passion and action, and of passion and action the poetry is full. This is the highest point of execution, of poetic mastery, that Mr. Binyon has yet reached."—Times.

RECENT SIX-SHILLING FICTION.

JÖRN UHL. By Gustav Frenssen.
The most popular German Novel of Modern Times.

"A fine novel.....the whole is mingled with a strain of poetry strangely fascinating and characteristic, for the author is no cold realist, and his imagination is at least as strong as his powers of observation. His insight into human character, too, is marvellously keen."—Athenæum.

CRITTENDEN. By John Fox, Author of 'The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come,' &c.

"Fresh, wholesome, and charming.....The characters excellently drawn.....Will add to an already brilliant reputation."—Speaker.

IN SEARCH of the UNKNOWN.

By R. W. CHAMBERS, Author of 'Cardigan,' &c.
"A delightful web of convincing improbabilities."—Speaker.

Please write for Complete Catalogue and Announcement List and Prospectuses of all New Books.

A. CONSTABLE & CO., LIMITED,
16, James Street, Haymarket, S.W.

ROUTLEDGE'S NEW UNIVERSAL LIBRARY. 1s. NET.

Printed from accurate Texts, entirely Unabridged, and where necessary Annotated and Indexed. Pott 8vo (size of "The World's Classics"), olive green, cloth extra, full gilt back, 1s. net. Olive green lambskin gilt, gilt tops, silk register, 2s. net.

PALGRAVE'S GOLDEN TREASURY of SONGS and LYRICS. With Notes and Index of First Lines.

The SPECTATOR. Edited by G. A. AITKEN. With Introduction, Notes and Index (6 vols.) Vol. I. LETTERS. 1 to 100.

VICTOR HUGO'S WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. With Index.

JEFFREY'S ESSAYS from the EDINBURGH REVIEW: ENGLISH POETS and POETRY. 605 pp.

LESSING'S LAOCOON. Translated, with Preface and Notes, by Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, Bart.

MILL'S DISSERTATIONS and DISCUSSIONS. I. 1 vol. REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT. With Index (now first added). 1 vol.

MILL'S ON LIBERTY. With Index (now first added). 1 vol. UTILITARIANISM. With Index (now first added). 1 vol.

COLERIDGE'S AIDS to REFLECTION. Revised, with Copious Index, and Translations of the Greek and Latin Quotations, by THOMAS FENBY.

LOWELL'S MY STUDY WINDOWS. With Index.

"I hardly know a book more interesting to the real student of real criticism."—Prof. SAINTSBURY, 'Hist. of Criticism.'

BRIMLEY'S ESSAYS. Edited by W. G. CLARK, M.A.

TRELAWNY'S RECORDS of SHELLEY, BYRON, and the AUTHOR.

Mrs. GASKELL'S LIFE of CHARLOTTE BRONTE. 1 vol. SYLVIA'S LOVERS. 1 vol. CRANFORD. 1 vol.

Sir LEWIS MORRIS'S POEMS. Authorized Selection.

HOLMES'S POET at the BREAKFAST TABLE. 1 vol. PROFESSOR at the BREAKFAST TABLE. 1 vol.

CARLYLE'S HEROES and HERO-WORSHIP. 1 vol. SARTOR RESARTUS. 1 vol.

POE'S TALES of MYSTERY and IMAGINATION.

HUGHES'S TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS. 1 vol. TOM BROWN at OXFORD. 1 vol.

MARRYAT'S The KING'S OWN. GRIMM'S FAIRY TALES. 1 vol. ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES. 1 vol.

HARRIS'S UNCLE REMUS. 1 vol. NIGHTS WITH UNCLE REMUS. 1 vol.

The following—amongst others in active preparation—will appear shortly.

LANDOR'S IMAGINARY CONVERSATIONS. I. CLASSICAL DIALOGUES.

MATTHEW ARNOLD'S ON TRANSLATING HOMER. With F. W. NEWMAN'S 'Homeric Translation in Theory and Practice,' and ARNOLD'S 'Last Words.'

PEACOCK'S NOVELS. 2 vols. Vol. I. HEADLONG HALL, MELINCOURT, NIGHTMARE ABBEY, and MAID MARIAN.

Sir WILLIAM FRASER'S WORDS on WELLINGTON.

LAMB'S ESSAYS of ELIA.

MAINE'S ANCIENT LAW.

HAWTHORNE'S SCARLET LETTER.

GOLDSMITH'S CITIZEN of the WORLD.

DARWIN'S VOYAGE of a NATURALIST.

SWIFT'S JOURNAL to STELLA.

MACAULAY'S LITERARY ESSAYS.

HARE'S GUESSES at TRUTH. With Index.

BROWNING'S POEMS.

TENNYSON'S POEMS. 600 pp.

BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

Mrs. HENRY WOOD'S The CHANNINGS.

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, LIMITED.

T. WERNER LAURIE'S NEW BOOKS.

CLIFFORD'S INN, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

A Detailed Prospectus sent on application.

PICTURES in UMBRIA. By KATHARINE S. MACQUOID, Author of 'In the Ardennes,' 'About Yorkshire,' &c. With 50 Original Illustrations by THOMAS R. MACQUOID. R.I. (Uniform with 'The Cathedral Series'). 6s. net.

'Pictures in Umbria,' gives an account of the marvellous old hill cities—Perugia, Assisi, and others—and endeavours to convey the charm of the scenery around them, to describe the art treasures they contain, and to recall the associations interwoven with their history.

CLASSIC MYTHS in ART. By JULIA ADDISON. Illustrated with 40 Plate Reproductions from Famous Painters. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. net.

An interesting account of Greek myths, illustrated from the works of great artists. The most interesting myths of literature are represented and illustrated from the works of ancient sculptors or more moderate paintings.

CHATS on VIOLINS. By Olga RACSTER. Fully illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. net. [The Music Lover's Library. Vol. I.]

A LINDSAY'S LOVE. A Tale of the Tuileries and the Siege of Paris. By CHARLES LOWE, Author of 'A Fallen Star,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"I can recommend this book to all readers who appreciate a fresh and vigorous story of romance and war, told with a freshness of touch which is becoming more and more rare in modern fiction."—T.P.'s Weekly.

The BELL and the ARROW. An English Love Story. By NORA HOPPER (Mrs. HUGH CHESSEON). Crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

"Mrs. Chesson is to be congratulated on her first novel. This is a book of great promise and of a considerable performance."—Athenæum.

The COURTSIPS of CATHERINE the GREAT. By PHILIP W. SERGEANT, B.A. (late Scholar of Trinity College, Oxford). Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d. net. [Third Printing.]

"Extremely interesting and pleasant reading."—Saturday Review.
"A valuable addition to the scanty English literature upon the subject."—Leeds Mercury.

THE CATHEDRAL SERIES.

The CATHEDRALS of NORTHERN FRANCE. By FRANCIS MILTOUN. With 80 Illustrations from Original Drawings and many minor decorations, by BLANCHE McMANUS. 1 vol. decorative cover, 7½ by 5¼ by 1½. Cloth gilt, 6s. net.

The CATHEDRALS of SOUTHERN FRANCE. By FRANCIS MILTOUN. Uniform with 'Northern France.' Cloth gilt, 6s. net.

R. L. STEVENSON: a Record, an Estimate, and a Memorial. By ALEXANDER H. JAPP, LL.D., F.R.S.E. Illustrated with Facsimile Letters and Photogravure Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. net. [Second Printing.]

"Dr. Japp has much to say about R. L. Stevenson that we are glad to hear. Altogether this is a very informing book, a contribution of distinct value to our knowledge of R. L. Stevenson."—Spectator.

CONFESSIONS of a YOUNG MAN. By GEORGE MOORE, Author of 'Esther Waters,' 'The Mummer's Wife,' 'Evelyn Innes,' &c. A New Edition, Revised, and with a New Foreword. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"It is difficult to convey a sense of the book's brilliance in a brief review. His style has the delicious freshness of youth. His paragraphs reveal blossom after blossom, with a promise of a rarer beauty yet to come at each full stop."—Manchester Guardian.

WITH THE REVISED LAWS OF BRIDGE AND COMMENTS THEREON.

The COMPLETE BRIDGE PLAYER. By EDWYN ANTHONY ('CUT CAVENDISH'), 320 pages. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Second Printing.]

"The latest book on bridge and one of the best."—Pall Mall.

T. WERNER LAURIE, Clifford's Inn, London.

BLACKIE & SON'S LIST.

THE LATEST BOOK ON "BRIDGE." A BOOK OF BRIDGE.

By PONTIFEX.

Printed in Red and Black, in soft leather cover, gilt edges, 400 pages, 5s. net.

This little book forms a complete guide to Bridge, embracing a general description of the game; a working theory of the Declaration of No Trumps founded upon analysis and detailed experiment; hints as to the play of the cards both by the dealer and his adversaries; a statement of the recognized leads; and a code of the newly revised Laws of Bridge.

A NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK ON JAPAN.

DAI NIPPON. The Britain of the East.

A Study in National Evolution.

By Dr. HENRY DYER. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

"An intelligent description of some of the most marked features in the political and economic conditions of the Empire of Japan as it now is."—Times.

"The many topics on which Dr. Dyer learnedly discourses. We recommend every one who desires to gain a just view of the present position and future prospects of Japan to read his most instructive and interesting work."—Academy and Literature.

** FIRST LARGE EDITION NEARLY EXHAUSTED. SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

DANTE AND VIRGIL.

By H. M. BEATTY, M.A. LL.D., Member of the Council of the Dante Society.

Limp leather, gilt top, size 6½ in. by 3½ in. 2s. 6d.

"Beautifully printed and neatly bound in a red morocco cover, this booklet is as pleasant to handle as to read, and is worthy in every respect of its fascinating, if difficult subject."—Glasgow Herald.

THE RED-LETTER LIBRARY.

A SERIES OF SELECTIONS FROM THE GREAT MASTERS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Limp leather, gilt top, 2s. 6d. net; cloth, gilt top, 1s. 6d. net.

Messrs. BLACKIE & SON, Limited, have much pleasure in announcing that they have made a number of important additions to the "RED-LETTER LIBRARY." Price 1s. 6d. net, cloth, gilt top; 2s. 6d. net, leather, gilt top.

LORD TENNYSON. In Memoriam. Introduction by ALICE MEYNELL.

LORD BYRON. Select Poems. Introduction by ARTHUR SYMONS.

GEORGE HERBERT. Select Poems. Introduction by his Grace the ARCH-BISHOP of ARMAGH.

BOSWELL. Johnson's Table Talk. (Selections from the Life of Johnson.) Edited, with an Introduction, by W. A. LEWIS BETTANY.

S. T. COLERIDGE. Select Poems. Introduction by Mrs. MEYNELL.

WILLIAM CARLETON. Select Stories. With an Introduction by TIGHE HOPKINS.

W. M. THACKERAY. Roundabout Papers. With an Introduction by CHARLES WHIBLEY.

MILTON. Select Poems. With an Introduction by Prof. WALTER RALEIGH.

HENRY VAUGHAN. Silex Scintillans. Edited, with an Introduction, by W. A. LEWIS BETTANY.

FRANCIS BACON. Essays. With an Introduction by FREDERIC HARRISON.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER. Select Poems. Introduction by the BISHOP of RIPON.

OTHER VOLUMES IN PREPARATION. Complete List on application.

THE RED-LETTER SHAKESPEARE.

Edited by EDMUND K. CHAMBERS.

A New Edition of Shakespeare's Plays, in Single Volumes, for the general reader. Text printed in Red and Black.

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES ARE NOW READY.

The MERCHANT of VENICE.

The TEMPEST.

ROMEO and JULIET.

The TAMING of the SHREW.

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

RICHARD III.

OTHER VOLUMES TO BE ISSUED IMMEDIATELY.

In cloth, 1s. net; in limp leather, 1s. 6d. net.

Messrs. BLACKIE & SON, Ltd., will be pleased to send a Set of their ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES and PROSPECTUSES, containing particulars of "The Red-Letter Library," "Great Novelist" Series, "Standard Two-Shilling Library," Children's Books, and General Literature, POST FREE.

London: BLACKIE &amp; SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey, E.C.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

WITH A MEMOIR OF THE AUTHOR BY Field-Marshal EARL ROBERTS, V.C.

THE SCIENCE OF WAR.

BY

Colonel G. F. R. HENDERSON,
Author of 'Stonewall Jackson and the American Civil War,' &c.

Edited by Capt. NEILL MALCOLM, D.S.O.

With Photogravure Portrait of the Author and 4 Maps. 8vo, 14s. net. [Next week.]

JOHN KNOX

AND

THE REFORMATION

By ANDREW LANG.

With 2 Photogravure Plates and 3 other Illustrations. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION, WITH AN INTRODUCTORY NOTE
ON THE UNIT OF FAMILY HOLDING UNDER
EARLY TRIBAL CUSTOM.

The TRIBAL SYSTEM in WALES.

Being part of an Inquiry into the Structure and Methods of Tribal Society. By FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D.
(Edin.), Litt.D. (Camb). With 3 Maps. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

CARTHUSIAN MEMORIES, and other Verses of Leisure. By WILLIAM HAIG BROWN, LL.D., Master of Charterhouse; Hon. Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge; Hon. Canon of Winchester Cathedral; Head Master of Charterhouse, 1863-97. With a Photogravure Portrait of the Author. Fcap, 8vo, 5s. net.A BIBLIOGRAPHY of WORKS in ENGLISH on PLAYING CARDS and GAMING.

Compiled by FREDERIC JESSEL. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

HAY FEVER.

A Story.

By WALTER HERRIES POLLOCK and GUY C. POLLOCK.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"The ingenuity and gay extravagance are capitally sustained throughout."—Westminster Gazette.

"I have had a hearty laugh over 'Hay Fever'—several hearty laughs."—C. K. S., in the Sphere.

"There is some really excellent fooling in this attractive, though very short, book.....A thoroughly enjoyable jeu d'esprit."—Court Journal.

"A clever and entertaining jeu d'esprit."

Pall Mall Gazette.

DORSET DEAR:

Idylls of Country Life.

By M. E. FRANCIS (Mrs. Francis Blundell).

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"One of its author's fascinating collections of village tales. There is the scent of sweetbriar all through the book, delicate and dainty, and never sickly or cloying."

Evening Standard and St. James's Gazette.

"Mrs. Blundell has often disclosed an intimate acquaintance with Dorsetshire life and character, drawn for the most part from the labouring classes, and in this volume of short stories she is at her best. Her scenes, which are charmingly and picturesquely described, are full of observation and thought, and as a 'bundle of sticks' 'Dorset Dear' should bring warmth and comfort to many a reader who asks for nothing better than the scent of spring flowers and the sight of green lanes."—Court Journal.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

VOL. III. NOW READY.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLAND.

By HERBERT PAUL. In 5 vols. Vol. III. FROM the DEATH of LORD PALMERSTON in 1865 to 1876. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.
Previously Published—Vols. I. and II. 8s. 6d. net each.

LIFE, LETTERS, AND LITERARY REMAINS OF J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

Edited by his WIFE. In 2 vols. illustrated, extra crown 8vo, 17s. net.

VOL. III. NOW READY.

A CHAPTER IN THE HISTORY OF ANNOTATION,

Being SCHOLIA ARISTOPHANICA. Vol. III. By WILLIAM G. RUTHERFORD. 8vo, 25s. net.

** Previously published, Vols. I. and II., 50s. net.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL HANDBOOKS.—New Vol.

A GRAMMAR OF GREEK ART

By PERCY GARDNER, Litt.D., Lincoln and Merton Professor of Classical Archæology in the University of Oxford. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

SECOND REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION.

GRAMMAR OF NEW TESTAMENT GREEK.

By Prof. FRIEDRICH BLASS, Dr.Phil. D.Th., Hon. Litt.D. Translated by HENRY ST. JOHN THACKERAY, M.A. 8vo, 15s. net.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.

NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

SHAKESPEAREAN TRAGEDY:

Lectures on Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, and Macbeth. By Prof. A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 10s. net.

THE

PRINCIPLES OF ECONOMICS

A Fragment of a Treatise on the Industrial Mechanism of Society, and other Papers. By the late W. STANLEY JEVONS, LL.D. M.A. F.R.S. With a Preface by HENRY HIGGS. 8vo, 10s. net.

THE TRADE POLICY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND HER COLONIES SINCE 1860.

By CARL JOHANNES FUCHS, Professor of Political Economy in the University of Freiburg i. B. Translated by CONSTANCE H. M. ARCHIBALD. With a Preface by the Right Hon. J. PARKER SMITH, M.A. M.P. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

COMPATRIOTS' CLUB LECTURES.

First Series. Edited by the Committee of the Compatriots' Club. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

POCKET EDITIONS OF THE NOVELS OF

SCOTT, DICKENS, & THACKERAY.

PRINTED ON INDIA PAPER.

Feap. 8vo, limp cloth, gilt tops, 2s. net; limp leather, gilt tops, 3s. net each.

NOW READY.

WAVERLEY. With 12 Illustrations.
GUY MANNERING. With 10 Illustrations.
PICKWICK PAPERS. With 50 Illustrations.
OLIVER TWIST. With 27 Illustrations.
VANITY FAIR. With 190 Illustrations.
The HISTORY of PENDENNIS. With 180 Illustrations.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LIMITED, London.

Messrs. HURST & BLACKETT beg to announce that the Second Edition of Mr. PERCEVAL LONDON'S great work on Tibet, entitled LHASA, is now ready in 2 vols., with all the original Illustrations, and the new Official Survey of Lhasa and Neighbourhood, price 2l. 2s. net.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.
In 1 vol. crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 5s.

THE RUSSIAN NAVY IN THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR.

By Capt. N. KLADO,
Of the Imperial Russian Navy.

"An interesting book, and proof of its author's astuteness and ability."—Standard.

VOLUME II. of FRIEDBERGER and FROHNER'S VETERINARY PATHOLOGY, Translated by Capt. HAYES and Edited by JOHN DUNSTAN, M.R.C.V.S., price 10s. 6d. net.

NEW NOVEL BY MADAME ALBANESI.
In 1 vol. 6s.

MARIAN SAX. By Madame Albanesi,

Author of 'Capricious Caroline,' 'Susannah and One Elder,' &c.
"This well-written story."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"This novel, like everything from the same pen, is admirably written and instinct with dramatic feeling."—Dundee Advertiser.
"The story is gracefully written and constructed."—Scotsman.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

A GENDARME of the KING. Being the Experiences of the Laird of Lindourie with the Great Frederick in the Seven Years' War. By PHILIP L. STEVENSON.

"Narrated with plenty of movement and with a graphic picture of Frederick himself."—Times.
"Major Stevenson has managed to conjure up the real spirit of life in Frederick's Courts and camps."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW NOVEL BY EDMUND DOWNEY.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

DOROTHY TUKE; a Tale of the Sea.

By EDMUND DOWNEY, Author of 'Through Green Glasses,' &c.

NEW NOVEL BY ALICE M. DIEHL.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

BREAD UPON the WATERS. By

ALICE M. DIEHL, Author of 'The Garden of Eden,' &c. [May 22.]

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

DORRIEN of CRANSTON. By

BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of 'The Induna's Wife,' &c.

NEW VOLUME OF

HURST & BLACKETT'S ATHLETIC SERIES.

DIVERSIONS DAY BY DAY. By

E. F. BENSON and EUSTACE MILES. 1 vol. 4s.

NEW SIXPENNY EDITIONS.

In medium 8vo, illustrated covers.

GOD'S PRISONER. By JOHN OXENHAM.
A KING'S WOMAN. By KATHERINE TYNAN.
HER OWN PEOPLE. By B. M. CROKER.
The MAN from DOWNING STREET. By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

LIVES of the ENGLISH POETS.

By SAMUEL JOHNSON, LL.D. Edited by GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., sometime Honorary Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford. With a brief Memoir of Dr. Birkbeck Hill by his Nephew, HAROLD SPENCER SCOTT, M.A., New College, Oxford. In 3 vols. medium 8vo, half-roan. Vol. I., Cowley—Dryden. [Immediately.]

The CAROLINE POETS. Edited, with Introductions, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY, M.A. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth. Vol. I. Chamberlayne, Benlowes, K. Philips, Hannay. 10s. 6d. net. [Immediately.]

SPECIMENS of the ELIZABETHAN

DRAMA, from Lyly to Shirley, A.D. 1580—A.D. 1642. With Introductions and Notes by W. H. WILLIAMS, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

ORIGINES ISLANDICÆ: a Collection of the more important Sagas and other Native Writings relating to the Settlement and Early History of Iceland. Edited and Translated by GUDBRAND VIGFUSSON and F. YORK POWELL. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth, 2l. 2s. net.

OXFORD MODERN FRENCH SERIES.

Edited by LEON DELBOS, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth. TWO NEW VOLUMES.

UNE TÉNÉBREUSE AFFAIRE.

By BALZAC. Edited by MARIE PÉCHINET. 244 pp. 2s. 6d.

VOYAGE AUX PYRÉNÉES. By

TAINE. Edited by W. ROBERTSON, sometime Examiner in Modern Languages in the University of Aberdeen. With a Map. 225 pp. 2s. 6d.

CONCORDANCE to the ITALIAN

PROSE WORKS and CANZONIERE of DANTE. Prepared by Members of the Dante Society, Cambridge, Massachusetts, and Edited by E. S. SHELTON and A. C. WHITE. 8vo, cloth. Subscription price, 1l. 8s. net. On publication the price will be raised to 1l. 16s. net. [Immediately.]

The MASAI: their Language and Folk-lore. By A. C. HOLLIS. With Introduction by Sir CHARLES ELIOT. Many Illustrations and a Map. 8vo, cloth, 14s. net.

SELECT DOCUMENTS ILLUS-

TRATIVE of the HISTORY of the FRENCH REVOLUTION. The Constituent Assembly. Edited by L. G. WICKHAM LEGG, M.A. 2 vols. crown 8vo, cloth, 12s. net.

The JOURNAL of THEOLOGICAL

STUDIES. Quarterly, 3s. 6d. net. Annual Subscription, post free, 12s. net. APRIL Number now ready.

Chief Contents.—THE LAUSIAC HISTORY of PALLADIUS. By C. H. TURNER.—THE GOSPEL according to the HEBREWS. By the Very Rev. Mgr. BARNES.—DOCUMENTS—NOTES and STUDIES—REVIEWS—CHRONICLE—RECENT PUBLICATIONS relating to THEOLOGICAL STUDIES.

ANNALS of BOTANY. Edited by

ISAAC BAYLEY BALFOUR, M.A. M.D. F.R.S., D. H. SCOTT, M.A. Ph.D. F.R.S., W. G. FARLOW, M.D., assisted by other Botanists. Vol. XIX. No. LXXIV. royal 8vo, paper covers, pp. 200, with 8 Plates and 5 Figures in the Text, 14s.

Chief Contents.—THE PROTEASES of PLANTS. III. By S. H. VINES.—NUCLEAR DIVISION in the POLLEN MOTHER-CELLS of LILIUM CANADENSE. By C. E. ALLEN.—ON the ANATOMY of ARCHANGIOPTERIS HENRYI and other MARATTIACEAE. By D. T. Gwynne-Vaughan.—ON TWO NEW SPECIMENS of SPENCERITES INSIGNIS. By Miss E. M. Berridge.—OPTIMA and LIMITING FACTORS. By F. F. Blackman.—THE LOCALIZATION of the INDIGO-PRODUCING SUBSTANCE in INDIGO-YIELDING PLANTS. By H. M. Leake.—GEOTROPIC RESPONSE at VARIOUS ANGLES of INCLINATION. By F. C. Newcombe.

ORGANOGRAPHY of PLANTS,

Especially of the Archegoniatae and Spermatophyta. By Dr. K. GOEBEL. Authorized English Edition. By ISAAC BAYLEY BALFOUR, M.A. M.D. F.R.S. Part II. (Special Organography), with 417 Woodcuts, royal 8vo, pp. xxiv+708, cloth, 1l. 1s. net; half-morocco, 1l. 4s. net. Part I. (General Organography), previously published, in cloth, 10s. net; half-morocco, 12s. net.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|   |         |
|---|---------|
| A NEW BOOK ON CANNING ... ..  | 615     |
| A COMPANION TO GREEK STUDIES... ..  | 616     |
| A GROUP OF CRIMINALS ... ..   | 617     |
| THE SOUL OF LONDON ... ..   | 618     |
| NEW NOVELS (The Hill; Waves of Fate; The Brooding Wild; The Jackal; Hay Fever; The Three Essentials; Jim Mortimer, Surgeon)... ..   | 619-620 |
| RECENT VERSE ... ..   | 620     |
| TWO IRISH DICTIONARIES ... ..   | 621     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (With Russian, Japanese, and Chinese; The Coming Power; English Past and Present; Highways and Byways of the South; The Rhymer's Lexicon; The Trial of Jesus; James Martineau, Theologian and Teacher; New Editions) ... .. | 622-623 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..  | 624     |
| TWO IDENTIFICATIONS IN GRAY'S LETTERS; CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS; LAMB'S LETTERS; 'DICTIONARY OF INDIAN BIOGRAPHY'; AN UNKNOWN EDITION OF THEOPHRASTUS; A NEW YORK LIBRARY; SALE ... ..  | 624-626 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..  | 626     |
| SCIENCE—AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY; ENGINEERING; ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..  | 627-631 |
| FINE ARTS—BRITISH WATER-COLOUR ART; ENGLISH FURNITURE—THE AGE OF OAK; COMPTON WYN-YATES; ENGLISH EMBROIDERY AT THE BURLINGTON FINE-ARTS CLUB; MR. TONKS'S WATER-COLOURS AT CAREFAX'S; ARCHEOLOGICAL NOTES; SALE; GOSSIP ... ..                | 631-634 |
| MUSIC—PHILHARMONIC CONCERT; MISS MARIE HALL'S RECITAL; MISS VIVIEN CHARTRES'S VIOLIN RECITAL; MISS ZIMMERMANN AND HERR ZUR-MUEHLEN'S RECITAL; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..   | 634-635 |
| DRAMA—BUSINESS IS BUSINESS; GOSSIP ... ..   | 635-636 |

LITERATURE

George Canning. By H. W. V. Temperley. (Finch.)

It is clear that George Canning has lost none of his interest for historical students. Mr. Temperley's is the third essay that has been made in the last two years to tell the story of his life, which means, in fact, to sketch the history of Europe during the first quarter of the nineteenth century. It is also the fullest, and by far the most industrious, yet is not the substantive classical account of Canning's career and character which must surely some day be written. The reason why the world has waited so long for this is perhaps not far to seek. The career was for the period unique; one must go back several generations to find its parallel. In a remarkable passage in his speech of April 30th, 1823, 'On the Negotiations at Paris, Verona, and Madrid,' Canning accepts and amplifies a parallel which some previous speakers had drawn between those days and the days of Elizabeth; and it is to Elizabethan times or thereabouts that we must go back to find instances of a similar rise from the ranks of obscure respectability to the highest offices of State. The conditions, indeed, were different enough, and the difference was all to the disadvantage of the man without connexions. In the earlier period "governing families" had been pretty effectually wiped out in the course of the previous age, and with the descendants of Welsh squires on the throne, Dudleys and Cecils and Walsinghams were as good as any man. But by the time Canning was born a new baronage had established itself, slower-witted than the old, and proportionately more jealous of new talent. That he broke through the barriers set up by this class, and compelled it to accept him, however unwillingly, as its master, was his distinction. It took its revenge by sneering at him in life, and burdening his memory with a suspicion of insincerity, in which no one who has studied him on the personal as well as on the public side can ever believe. Other novi homines, it is true, were pushed to the front before Canning; but neither of Addington nor of Perceval can it be said that he made his way thither by force of genius, as, indeed, both they and Canning were mutually aware. Mr. Temperley has summed up the position very correctly when he writes:—

"Not being of noble birth, he was suspected as an adventurer by the aristocrats, and had also the misfortune to be one of those 'confounded men of genius.' The amazing brilliance of his oratorical triumphs was thought to indicate superficiality and frothiness.....Canning's powers of ridicule raised him enemies everywhere at a moment when he had not a friend to spare.....Whilst Canning laughed and joked, and so made the Commons distrust him, Castlereagh, Liverpool, and Perceval, who never ventured to scandalize the House with a witticism, all passed him in the race for power. Canning's undoubted success at the Foreign Office was regarded as an accident, and even this fortuitous triumph was gravely marred by his high-handed oppression of the Danes! So reasoned all the Ultras and many moderate Tories. When we reckon all this jealousy of Canning's avowed ambitions, all this hatred of his championship of the Catholics, all this suspicion of his character and attainments, we are only surprised that he was ever within a measurable distance of success."

Nor was what Heine called the "High-Tory hatred" of Canning confined to members of that party. The humorous side of him, which was never long averted, frightened the solemn mandarins of one party no less than of the other:—

"He forgot that the success of a speech..... depends on its being intelligible to the stupidest man in the House. As Coleridge said, 'Canning should put on the ass's skin before he enters Parliament.'"

This was natural enough; the amazing thing is that even a man like Sydney Smith should have been unable to be fair to one who was in many respects a kindred spirit. Whether the two were personally acquainted we are not prepared offhand to say. Canning's schoolboy friendship with "Bobus" makes it at least probable, and we can answer for it that Sydney was at one time well known to a near relation of Canning. But it has always appeared to us unfortunate that the two men of that generation who knew that truth might be spoken with a laugh, and who had many aims in common, should not have been in active alliance.

That Canning's instincts were liberal it is impossible to doubt. Mr. Temperley cites a remarkable saying of James Mill to Macvey Napier in 1819, which has, we think, till now escaped the notice of his biographers, to the effect that "I would undertake to make Mr. Canning a convert to the principles of good government sooner than your Lord Grey or Sir James Mackintosh." The family traditions were all in that direction. His grandfather, Stratford the First, martinet though he was in his own family, admired, and once at least corresponded with, Voltaire. His father had written and published political verse with which The Anti-Jacobin, had it then existed, would have dealt very faithfully. The uncle who brought him up, the second Stratford, was a staunch Foxite; though how the events of 1789 and the following years might have modified his views, his early death makes it impossible to say. That they had a perturbing effect upon George's orbit cannot be doubted; nor was it until, in his own fine and often quoted image, "the spires and turrets of ancient establishments began to reappear above the subsiding wave," that his genius was free to take its natural course. All this part of his career is well told by Mr. Temperley, who makes out a very good case for crediting Canning's influence with whatever resistance Castlereagh in 1818 and the following years offered to the absolutist inclinations of continental statesmen. He has given deserved prominence to Bathurst's letter of October 19th, 1819, to Castlereagh at Aix-la-Chapelle, describing the Cabinet of the day before, and Canning's solitary opposition (why Mr. Temperley calls it "most violent" we do not know) to the project of periodical congresses to settle the domestic affairs of the various European States in the manner that should commend itself to the combined autocrats, which Castlereagh was prepared to adopt. Mr. Alison Phillips, in his recent 'Life of Canning,' observes that "it has been usual to ascribe to Canning's presence in the Cabinet the attitude of opposition gradually taken up by the Government of the dictatorial powers which, under the guidance of Metternich, the Grand [sic] Alliance was assuming in Europe."

Not so "usual," we fancy, as he thinks; but correct enough. We know what Metternich himself thought about the respective value of Canning and Castlereagh as promoters of the aims he had in view; and we may often notice the instinctive tendency of writers whose own political philosophy tends in the direction of absolutism to magnify Castlereagh and depreciate Canning.

So far as regards Canning's life in office, before 1809 and after 1816, Mr. Temperley is distinctly good, and, as we have said, industrious. He has also, as nearly every one who makes himself really acquainted with Canning seems constrained to do, fallen under that personal charm which even State Papers cannot wholly obscure, and which comes out clearly in all his private correspondence. The final biography of Canning will, if it ever appears, have nevertheless to take more account of this side of him than Mr. Temperley (who, as a rising historian, is naturally more concerned with his hero as a maker of history) has felt called upon to do. It will, for example, have to explain the grief felt by a brilliant woman of the world like Lady Granville at the death of a man who, in Mr. Phillips's opinion, was devoid of sentiment, and moved mainly by desire of power; and the affection which such a very different woman as Harriet Martineau constantly expresses for his memory in her 'History of Thirty Years' Peace.' We may be sure that the "eulogies poured upon him by admirers living closer to him" came in much fuller measure from those who had been attracted by his character than from persons "dazzled by his genius."

On the vexed question of the seizure of the Danish fleet, and the Tilsit revelations, Mr. Temperley writes pretty fully, following in the main the conclusions of Dr. Holland Rose as to the identity of the informer. But may not the news have come through several channels? It was a case where a prudent statesman would like corroboration.

At one point, even on the historical side, Mr. Temperley might with advantage have expanded his narrative — we mean in his account of Canning's conduct during the short-lived Grenville Administration of 1806. It is not a period in which he shows to advantage. He was still unhinged by the death of Pitt, and must have been feeling some remorse for the petulance which had sorely vexed Pitt during the inglorious reign of the "Doctor." His own career seemed to have received a serious set-back. Still, the memory of old kindness should have mollified his attacks on Fox, and a little less impatience would have saved him from incurring, not quite undeservedly, the charge of factious opposition. The period is decidedly interesting in the history of Canning's development, and was recognized as such by the anonymous author of the 'Memoir' which appeared in 1828, who devotes nearly twice as many pages to it as Mr. Temperley does lines. The work in question may be "a bookseller's venture, consisting chiefly of press-cuttings," as Mr. Temperley, paraphrasing Mr. Frank Hill, calls it; but the "cuttings" (comprising copious extracts from Canning's speeches) are well selected, and the book is all the more valuable in that it is far from an unqualified eulogy. The author was apparently a strong Liberal; and it is interesting to notice how, as he follows Canning's career, his approbation of him increases, though he is always ready to criticize the statesman, while full of genuine admiration of the man. Mr. Temperley will find the book well worth his perusal if, as we hope, he means to continue his study of Canning.

A great many small corrections are needed. One is tempted sometimes to ask if Mr. Temperley ever looked at his proofs. "Creevey was ill-formed and malicious," "the ill-formed charge that Canning was callous," are expressions that set the reader wondering if Mr. Temperley thinks "ill-formed" to be the adjective of "bad form." "Purpurea tollant aurea Britannii" is a form of words which we might know could never have proceeded from the classic Canning, even were the quotation not correctly given elsewhere. Castlereagh spoke neither of "ignorant impatience of taxation" nor of "ignorant impatience of the relaxation of taxation," but, if Miss Martineau, who gives her reference to Hansard, may be trusted, of "ignorant impatience to be relieved from the pressure of taxation," which is at least sense. When Mr. Temperley says that Castlereagh's "domestic record is almost the worst of any notable English statesman," we presume that "domestic" is opposed to "foreign." Otherwise we should like to see some authority for this fresh charge against a man whom, whatever his public faults, we have always been led to regard as one of average respectability in his private life. "Cease our fuming" is another misquotation, for which Miss Festing, from whom it professes to be taken, is not responsible. Canning certainly never introduced any Budget on June 31st. Proper names and foreign words are recklessly treated. We have "Marten" (for Martens), "Tallyrand," "the Sublime Port," "Carbonaris," "Mus-sulmen," "proces verbale." Was it "the French" who called the Lord Privy Seal the "sôt [sic] privé"? We had always supposed this gentle witticism to be as much Canning's own as the "Phat Duke." A curious habit of incorporating foreign words in the text without inverted commas or any difference in type gives the reader now and then a momentary shock; and the marks of reference to the notes are somewhat eccentrically placed, leading to occasional bewilderment. Mr. Temperley has, or his printers have, evidently something to learn in the art of typography. We mention this because we should be sorry to see a most praiseworthy book suffer from want of attention to these little amenities, which are more apt to affect the average reader's judgment than young authors are always aware.

---

A Companion to Greek Studies. Edited for the Syndics of the University Press by Leonard Whibley. (Cambridge, University Press.)

LIKE Dr. Sandys's latest book, this work can hardly be reviewed within reasonable limits. It is not a book, but a compressed encyclopædia, a vast collection of facts crammed into the smallest possible compass. To criticize the details would be a long task, and would need an expert in each of the many subjects which are included. We shall not attempt to do this, but shall fix our attention upon the main lines of the work, its proportion, and its measure of success in making clear general principles.

The chapters deal successively with Geography, Fauna, and Flora; with History; with Literature, Philosophy, and Science; with Art; with Mythology and Religion; with Public and Private Antiquities; and with Criticism and Interpretation. Each chapter is subdivided, and each section is done by an expert in that particular subject. None of the sections is long; some, indeed, are too short, as Miss Jane Harrison's three pages on 'Birth, Marriage, and Death,' or Dr. Gow's scrap on the 'Calendar.' The space allotted to History is given to a series of chronological tables, preceded by a critical account of the sources: Mr. Hicks, the writer, felt no doubt that even a sketch of the great movements of Greek history needed more space than he had. Canon Tristram's 'Fauna and Flora' are little more than lists of names with translations. We are grateful for these, which are, indeed, interesting and novel, and contain information which is not easily accessible; nevertheless, the fact remains that they are just catalogues. In philosophy, art, religion, law, and such subjects as these, the treatment is more literary, and more based on general principles. The section on dialects is disappointing, for all its erudition: we miss a comprehensive account of the dialectic peculiarities, and tables such as would be useful to the young student, in whose interests this book is compiled. The sections on 'Literature' and the 'History of Scholarship' are brief summaries of the standard works by the same authors. If we may judge from the learner's standpoint, choosing those sections which most effectively tell him what he wants to know, and what he does not know where to find, we should give the palm to Mr. Cook's 'Ships,' Mr. Wyse's 'Law,' Mr. Earp's 'Vase Painting,' and Mr. Gardner's 'Mythology and Religion.' This is not meant to imply necessarily a superiority in these articles over the rest, but only that they are specially useful to the undergraduate, and written with special tact for his benefit. We are glad to say that almost the whole book is interesting, in spite of its compression; but it needs to be taken in small doses.

In such a work no one will expect startling novelties. Prof. Ridgeway soberly trots in harness with certain quiet and conservative cobs whom the reader may name for himself. We hope that this may be taken as evidence that his views on the origin of currency and weight standards, and on the meaning of coin-types, long derided, are now generally accepted as true in the main. But although he who seeks novelties must seek elsewhere, the writers are all abreast of modern research. We also bear willing testimony to the fulness of the articles, while we may say that our examination has endorsed their accuracy. We regret to see, however, that the terms arsis and thesis are perpetuated in their wrong meanings (p. 624). Properly thesis applies to the ictus or beat of the foot, arsis to the uplifting of the foot; and since it is a common mistake to reverse these meanings, we make an exception here to our rule and mention it.

Whilst we admit the skill and scholarship of the writers of this book, and admire the wealth of its information, we confess to more than a passing qualm. What is the meaning of such a book? Classical studies are assailed on every hand by powerful foes and well-meaning friends; the time given to them is being slowly but surely curtailed everywhere. When are our students to learn the contents of this book? It seems pretty clear that the book is meant, and will be read, for Part I. of the Classical Tripos at Cambridge. That part of the tripos, as remodelled by the bold spirits of reform, now includes papers on literature, art, philosophy, and linguistic, as well as history, and the time of preparation has been reduced by nine or ten months. The inevitable consequence is—cram. Instead of studying the classical authors as literature, the student now studies them as vehicles for information, and supplements them by coaching in "literature." The appearance of this book, then, is, in our opinion, disquieting. We live in hopes of a real reform, both in schools and universities; but we think it will not be found in this direction. If that reform should ever be brought about, Mr. Whibley's compendium compendiorum will not be a cram-book, but a useful book of reference for those who cannot afford to buy the Pauly-Wissowa encyclopædia, and who do not expect to live until Daremberg and Saglio's dictionary is complete.

Some Distinguished Victims of the Scaffold.
By Horace Blackley. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

WE have here a useful and well-illustrated book, but we cannot commend its tone. Great criminals themselves may not deserve mercy, but surely some leniency should be shown to readers who take an historical interest in their revolt against the moral law. It is painful enough to follow the career of those whose offences have led them to the gallows without their actions being narrated in a semi-jocose style unworthy of a detective story. The author has been diligent in research and careful in grouping the facts he has gathered, but he has frequently presented the results in a way that cannot fail to be painful. Mr. Blackley, not content with such decorations as he thinks will adorn his narrative, frequently goes out of the way to instruct his readers as to the state of morals in the days when his criminals flourished. He has a vehement dislike of the first three Georges, and seems to imagine that in some way or other they were responsible for the injustice of our criminal law. This is surely unfair. On the country squires and the lawyers must rest the blame of a code which is said to have been at one time the bloodiest in Europe. The period embraced by his narratives was both dull and sensual, and we ought to realize that the death penalty for even trivial offences did not fill the imagination with the horror it does at the present day.

In 'The Love Philtre,' wherein the career of Mary Blandy is given in a very fairly accurate manner, it was surely out of place to style her mother "as consequential an old dame as ever flaunted sacque or nodded her little bugle over a dish of tea." We do not know on what authority the author has drawn this sketch of the old lady, and if we did should fail to see how it bore on the catastrophe that took place. From whatever point of view we regard Mary Blandy, hers was a terribly sad life which cannot but stimulate profound pity in those who know her history. She was the only child of Francis Blandy, a solicitor of Henley-on-Thames, who for several years held the post of Town Clerk of the borough. His neighbours regarded him as a rich man, as riches were counted in those days, and his only child was looked upon as a great heiress. She was also, if her portrait may be trusted, something more than good-looking. We are told she was much admired and received more than one offer of marriage. At length she was betrothed to an officer in the army, but her lover was ordered abroad, and no more is heard of him. In 1747 she became engaged to a lieutenant in the marines, William Henry Cranstoun, the son of a Scotch peer. Old Blandy and his wife must have been highly exalted by the idea that their daughter was to marry the son of a lord, even though he was not the heir of the title. He was asked to visit them, and on the first occasion prolonged his stay for six months. Lord Mark Kerr, who was a general in the army, was a friend of Mr. Blandy, and, finding out that the intentions of Cranstoun were not honourable, informed the parents that the Scotch adventurer was already married. This was true; but the scoundrel had what he regarded as a complete answer. He said, which was also a fact, that he was taking means to procure a divorce from the Scotch wife, who was a Roman Catholic, and, as he alleged, had promised to turn Protestant on their marriage, but had failed to carry out the contract. Probably no one in Scotland believed this statement; but the husband had persuaded himself that in the disturbed state of men's minds in the northern kingdom so recently after the battle of Culloden, he should find the courts compliant, especially as several of the wife's relatives had been concerned in the Jacobite rising. The Scotch judges, to his surprise, knew the laws of their country and possessed a conscience; but the cause moved slowly. It was not until the next year that the judgment was given in favour of the lady. The wife, who seems to have been a kindly woman and knew of her husband's flirtation with, or rather engagement to, Miss Blandy, wrote to her forwarding a copy of the decree of the court. Cranstoun was by no means abashed. He assured the Blandys that the marriage was certainly invalid, and that he was about to appeal to the highest tribunal north of Tweed for the purpose of getting the judgment set on one side.

Soon after this Mary Blandy's mother died, and her father became weary of Cranstoun's society, for he was now in very poor circumstances, his regiment was disbanded, more than half his slender income had been sequestered for the use of his wife, and there would doubtless be a heavy law bill to pay, so the lawyer summoned courage to act with reasonable prudence and forbade the adventurer to remain in his house. For nearly a twelvemonth the lovers did not meet. Had the old man continued firm in his resolve all might have ended well; but we must suppose that his daughter overruled him, for late in the year 1750 he withdrew the interdict, and the Scotchman came back. When he again left Henley we do not know; it may have been in consequence of another order of banishment or for the purpose of maturing a design against his host's life. After this last departure he never saw Mary Blandy again, but early in 1751 she received from him a box containing a present of table-linen and some "Scotch pebbles." Soon another box of similar pebbles arrived, and enclosed was a packet of powder for cleaning them. A doubt arises here whether these stones were sent as ornaments only, or if there was some magical motive for the present. This is a question it is impossible to solve. Considering, however, the mass of folk-lore which has been evolved all over the world regarding gems and bright-coloured stones, we may well imagine that there was some superstitious motive for the gift. Whether Cranstoun was one of those who really hold the wild beliefs of the Scottish peasantry, or only passed himself off as doing so for the sake of accomplishing his evil desires, we cannot tell, but Mary Blandy is stated to have said that a Scotch witch had foretold her father's early death. This she could only have heard from her lover. The powder which came with the second consignment of "Scotch pebbles" was, there cannot be a doubt, poison intended to be given to the old man. This she did at intervals. He was made very ill, and at last the servants became so suspicious that she was compelled to send for Dr. Addington, of Reading, a man who stood deservedly high in his profession, and he called in a neighbouring medical man to his assistance. Neither of them had any doubt that their patient was suffering from poison, but they were too late to save him. Before he died he told Addington that the poison had been administered by his daughter, "a poor lovesick girl." The doctor thereupon charged her with the crime, and she confessed that the powder had been sent to her by Cranstoun, but declared that she did not know that it was poison, as her lover had said that "it was harmless, and that if I would give my father some of it now and then, a little and a little at a time, it would make him kind to him and me." That is, the deadly drug was passed off as a love-potion, given to win her father's affection for Cranstoun. Many persons, when her trial came on, accepted her testimony, and believed her to have been the innocent victim of a designing scoundrel. Dr. Addington, who probably knew more of the case than any one else, did not accept her statement. He knew far too much of medicine to believe in love-philtres himself, and as she was a well-educated woman he naturally attributed to her a like amount of common sense. Folk-lore was a subject of ridicule, not of study, in those days. As to the wretched woman having been guilty of an intent to murder, we have ourselves grave doubt. It is not improbable that the poor creature was telling the truth when she said she had no intention of injuring her father, but only wanted to direct his affections to her lover and herself.

She was tried in the Divinity School, Oxford, as the town hall was at the time undergoing repair. The jury almost at once found her guilty on the conclusion of the evidence; it must, however, be borne in mind that in those days the counsel for the prisoner was not permitted to address the jury, but only to examine witnesses and raise questions of law. The carrying out of the death sentence caused an unwonted excitement all over England, and even in Scotland, where the divorce proceedings had led to very bitter feelings against her lover. Mr. Blackley thinks that the greater number in this country believed her guilty. We are not prepared to controvert his opinion, but think that the few persons who in those days studied popular superstitions must have been aware of the hold that love-charms had over the many, and must have regarded her as not a murderess in will, but an ignorant agent only. No diligent search was ever made for Cranstoun, who was in any case an equally great criminal. He was reported to have been in hiding for some time in Scotland; or, as others said, in Northumberland. If the pamphlets issued at the time be worthy of credit, he soon escaped to the Continent, and died before the close of the year at Furnes, a town now included in Belgium.

Mr. Blackley gives an account of the career of John Hadfield the forger, which is, in some respects, the best we have ever met with. He was the son of well-to-do parents, and must, we think, have received a fair middle-class education. His whole life was devoted to fraud, but he seldom preyed upon the poor. We cannot find space to trace his career even in the most skeleton fashion, and there is little occasion for doing so, as he would have been entirely forgotten had he not cruelly deluded into a bigamous marriage the once celebrated beauty Mary of Buttermere. It was this act, we feel well assured, not his forgery, that led to his death. Very early in the last century this impostor visited the Lake district under the assumed name of Alexander Augustus Hope, and gave it out that he was a brother of the then Lord Hopetoun. He said he had served in the army, but at the present time represented Linlithgowshire in Parliament. Soon after he arrived he went over to Buttermere, probably for the purpose of making the acquaintance of the celebrated Mary, who had been the subject of most inconsiderate, or perhaps we ought to say reprehensible, laudation in books, magazines, and newspapers. His next trip was to Grasmere, where he fell in with a rich Liverpool merchant called Crump, with whom he soon became on intimate terms. Hadfield told his new friend endless stories of his travels and strange adventures in war and peace. As his manners were good, and his conversation picturesque, it is not surprising that he fascinated Mr. Crump, but it is strange that he did it so quickly, for after but three weeks' acquaintance the merchant showed his appreciation of his friend by having a new-born son christened after him "John Hope." At the Queen's Head, at Keswick, Hadfield came in contact with Col. Moore, an Irishman, who had been member for Strabane in the recently extinguished Irish Parliament. They had many things in common, and soon became friends, but there was an additional reason. A good-looking young lady to whom Col. Moore was guardian was one of the party. Hadfield conducted himself as if he were in love with the Irish girl, who, there was reason to believe, would have an ample fortune. He made her an offer and was accepted. Had he been in a position to marry, and been the man he passed for, Moore would not have objected; but his consent as guardian was not asked. Soon after this Hadfield wrote to Col. Moore, who was still at Keswick, enclosing a draft for thirty pounds, drawn on Crump, which he asked him to cash; this he signed in his assumed name. His want of money, he explained, arose from his being called away suddenly into Scotland. The colonel regarded this as a great mark of confidence; it was so highly pleasing, as auguring well for his ward, that he not only sent him the sum asked for, but ten pounds in addition, so that his friend might not run short of funds on the way. The next morning the pleasant illusion vanished, for the landlord of the Queen's Head told the startling news that the impostor who called himself Col. Hope had married Mary of Buttermere. Suspicion was at once aroused in every quarter; but for the present the faith of two of his new friends remained unshaken. One was Crump, the Liverpool merchant, the other Nicholson, the chaplain of Loweswater, who had performed the marriage ceremony. It is useless to trace the wretched man's career further. Even his two friends could not resist the evidence which was soon produced that his name was Hadfield, that he was in no way related to Lord Hopetoun, and that he had a wife living. By signing the draft with a false name he had committed forgery, which was then and for some years after a capital offence, but we may be sure that the good-natured Crump would have taken care that the draft was not forthcoming had it not been for the cruel wrong to Mary of Buttermere.

The five other criminals treated of are Governor Wall, hanged for murder; the Perreau brothers, Ryland the king's engraver, and Fauntleroy, who were all forgers. In each case there is a bibliography of contemporary literature regarding the sufferers which is carefully compiled. It may be well to add in a future edition that some of the sympathy felt for Fauntleroy arose from his being thought to be a member of a French refugee family which came to this country on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. This story has not only never been proved, but further is probably not true. Long before that time there were Fauntleroys in Hampshire, Cornwall, and Wiltshire. A Bridget Fauntleroy was a nun at Shaftesbury who had a pension at the Dissolution, and John Fauntleroy was an ensign during the Civil War under Sir Marmaduke Roydon, and sent in his claim for a share in the money granted to indigent officers soon after the Restoration.

---

The Soul of London. By Ford Madox Hueffer. (Rivers.)

THIS volume contains five chapters of discursive impressionistic writing about London: 'From a Distance,' 'Roads into London,' 'Work in London,' 'London at Leisure,' and 'Rest in London.' With reference to the book's title, the author seeks to disarm criticism with an introductory statement to the effect that those who read his table of contents will be inclined to drop a tear of sympathy for one who has been trying—not for a few minutes, but for months—to find a suitable title for "this whole hotch-potch." The reviewer has read not only the table of contents, but the whole volume, and, while unable to offer the sympathetic tear, suggests that 'A Farrago of London' would have been a better title than that chosen; more fitting to what follows, and less pretentious. For the soul of London is precisely what this book overlooks. Some dashing sketches of certain aspects of the great city are to be found here, and several of them are very cleverly executed. But as for London's soul—one fancies Mr. Hueffer is too exotic, not human enough, too much a Londoner, if you will, assuredly too little a man of the world, to depict it. One may find more of that rare essence upon a single page of 'One of our Conquerors' than in the whole of this surface-skimming book. Dickens and Thackeray saw and painted something of London's soul. Even Stevenson, despite the whimsicalness of his method and the consistent foreignness of his point of view, when writing of London, came nearer to its heart a score of times than Mr. Hueffer at his best. The wilfully prosaic plodder may doubt this, and sniff over the Florizel extravaganzas. The reviewer knows one omnibus conductor who picked up a diamond from the mud in Piccadilly and honestly failed to find an owner for it, though it brought him a little fortune. To the adventurous, London is full of extravagant romance. If the reader would know what the sort of surface impressionism displayed here is like at its best, he may find it in Henley's 'London Voluntaries.'

But the severest critic will not suggest that the author of this little book falls short in his love and admiration of London. It is his understanding and seeing appreciation of it that are at fault. He loves it with a truly cockney devotion, with a jealousy that leads him into an almost ridiculous depreciation of the beautiful country that lies beyond the cab radius, a glorification of the fluent gamin of London's streets at the expense of that very much finer figure the countryman. Mr. Hueffer's talk of the "men who mope about fields and hedges" is exoticism of the feeblest sort—rank nonsense, to be candid. And as to his condemnation of what he calls the tea-and-cheese diet of the farm labourer, he should know that this produces rosier-cheeked children than the tea-and-jam diet of the slums. There are few more valuable foods than the cheese to which this good Londoner refers so contemptuously.

The weakness of impressionism—inaccuracy—is a prominent feature of the book. Upon p. 25 we are told that the Londoner is never proud of London, whatever he may think of his wife, his wine, or his back-garden. As a fact the Londoner is very frequently proud of various features of the capital, and especially of its immensity. The reviewer has heard a good Londoner reply to a foreigner's rhapsody upon some tree-decked Strasse of his native land, with the scornful assurance that the city it threaded could be put down in London without any one noticing it. Again, London is not at all the city of death, but a city of life and work. The moribund flee from it to obtain the life-giving oxygen of the country. "When a man is tired of life, he is tired of London," says Johnson. In what he has to say about the Thames Embankment Mr. Hueffer ignores the well-known fact that its condition is due to mistakes in the making and the use of rubble in place of a solid foundation. Despite his assertion upon an earlier page that London has no Valhalla, Mr. Hueffer, upon p. 145, falls into the vulgar error of describing Westminster Abbey as our Valhalla. As was pointed out in our review of 'The Roll Call of Westminster Abbey' (June 28th, 1902), it was not until Commonwealth days that Westminster Abbey began to be regarded as a burial-place for men who had earned distinction. Chaucer's place there was probably accorded not on account of his poetry, but because of his connexion with the Court, as Clerk of the Royal Works. The statement that "Paris is not France," and that "England is London," calls for no comment, for it is so obvious a contradiction of fact that we can only suppose it to be intentionally paradoxical. The remark describing London as the gate by which wealth has always entered England is equally incorrect. Has

Mr. Hueffer never read of the merchant adventurers of Bristol? The author seems weak in knowledge of London's early history (p. 49). We have records of London's importance as a mart long before feudalism was thought of. Tacitus tells us it was "very greatly crowded by the concourse of merchants." "Trustification" is not a word that the author should have permitted himself to use. "Glamour" and "glamorous" are both overused here, and Mr. Hueffer's Greek is, to say the least, slovenly (p. 151). His methods are not adequate, his generalizations provoke retort. The gambling spirit in London is not essentially modern. The South Sea Bubble and the railway mania are in themselves sufficient evidence against the conclusion. It is quite incorrect to say that there are no rigid social barriers left in London. There are still men of old family who, whilst fully prepared to be amused by the intellectual in their clubs, will admit no man outside their caste into their domestic circle, even though his recommendations be from Threadneedle Street itself. "Three moves are worse than a fire," is not particularly a London saying, since it came from Benjamin Franklin, and is far less true of London than of many other places. The absence of an index is a serious blemish in this class of book.

Withal—though singularly full of points which are disputable if not inaccurate—Mr. Hueffer's volume has a good deal of cleverness in it, and not a little of the smartness which many readers find interesting. Take the following for example:—

"The children of these countrymen are quite different. The power of generalization has left them altogether, with their town breeding; their conversation is a collection of town topics; their allusions are gathered from the interests of daily papers; they have international nicknames for the food in cheap eating-houses, and for common objects. Thus whiskers become 'Krugers'; slices of German sausage are 'Kaiser's telegrams'; macaroni is called 'A.J.B.' out of a fancied resemblance to the entwined legs of a Prime Minister of a certain epoch. Thus for the Londoner the 'facts' of the daily and weekly press take the place of any broad generalizations upon life."

The best part of the book is that which describes the approaches to London. What the whole of it lacks is mellowness. It is immature and half digested. But there is interest in it, and here and there come really happy touches.

NEW NOVELS.

The Hill. By H. A. Vachell. (Murray.)

THE Hill is Harrow Hill, and the story concerns Harrow boys and masters; and we may say at once that, whatever other merits it has, and they are considerable, it has this strong recommendation—that the author has scrupulously abstained from giving offence by too closely drawn portraits or ill-mannered caricatures. The story itself is interesting and well told. There is a capital description of a thrilling match at Lord's, and also of a "torpid" house-match at "footer," to use one of the comparatively few genuine Harrow abbreviations. In his preface Mr. Vachell expressly says that he has been obliged to select the less common types of Harrovians to illustrate the curious admixture of "strenuousness and sentiment" (a phrase quoted from Mr. G. W. E. Russell) which animates Harrow life. Now we grant him the strenuousness, gladly. Every Harrow boy has felt its influence, and not a few keep it all their life. But what of the sentiment? Does it exist in any public school as between boy and boy, even in the less common types? Every public-school boy, worth his salt, has a vague feeling of admiration and love for his school, even in the ultra-Philistine stage of his existence between fourteen and eighteen; but would not the average boy sternly reject as abnormal and "bad form" any avowal or demonstration of sentiment beyond an occasional hand on his shoulder, or a walk "up town" arm-in-arm? The horrid loneliness of the first night in the strange house may cause a smothered sob; the last meeting in "Speecher" will probably make the leaving boy choke and turn away with swimming eyes for a moment; but the five years between those two days are so full of keen and vigorous life that there is no time for sentiment. In the light of his preface, we think that Mr. Vachell has accomplished a difficult task very successfully—for few things are more difficult to write than a school story—but public-school men in general and Harrovians in particular must be left to judge for themselves how nearly this story of "the elect" reproduces and illustrates the typical life, and conveys the atmosphere of the old school on the Hill.

Waves of Fate. By Edward Noble. (Blackwood & Sons.)

FOR the novel-reader of discernment the appearance of a second work by the author of that fine story 'The Edge of Circumstance' is an event of considerable interest. Such a reader will open the present volume with a strong sense of pleasurable anticipation, and its first chapter will fill him with disappointment and foreboding. In this opening chapter Mr. Noble is concerned with a literary subject: the writing of the last lines of a novel by a ship captain who is cursed in the possession of an artistic temperament. One of the fixed canons of literature, at all events where young writers are concerned, should insist upon the exclusion of the novelist from among possible characters in story. There can be no sort of question that Mr. Noble is at his best in the description of action and movement, of scenes of stress, of hardship, and of daring. Before going further, however, the reviewer would urge upon every reader the advisability of persevering, even though cast down and disappointed by the opening chapter of this long and interesting volume. The book is a fine and vigorous piece of work, every page of which, with the possible exception of the first two or three, will repay the time the reader spends over it. Regarded as a whole, the story it tells lacks that rounded completeness which one might have expected from so capable a workman. It has not the epic simplicity and strength of the author's first book. It has lapses and inequalities. Its child talk is irritating; its analysis of the artist temperament inclines to be rambling and shadowy. But these flaws, in the reviewer's opinion, arise simply from inexperience. Mr. Noble has the real thing in him, the stuff of which literature is fashioned. If he will accept a word of well-meant advice, he will avoid the more exotic products of civilization, and continue, as in his first book, to concern himself with matters elemental. There lies his strength, and his gift is too good a one to waste. In the meantime, 'Waves of Fate' stands far above the ruck of new fiction, and should be read.

The Brooding Wild. By Ridgwell Cullum. (Chapman & Hall.)

MR. CULLUM describes his novel as "a mountain tragedy," and certainly tragedy is the name for it. He has made the effort to materialize in the Rocky Mountains Titanic elements of love and jealousy and crime, which, if they were successfully handled, would recall Athenian drama. Unfortunately his ambition has outsailed his power of execution, and from unskilful treatment the story loses the interest promised at the outset. It degenerates into something imaginary, on a colossal unhuman scale, and we remain disinterested spectators. Mr. Cullum's work is a conspicuous exemplification of failure through lack of inspiration. He has all the knowledge, one must suppose, and he has all the material. But he lacks the one thing needful—the spirit to blow old embers into flame. How promising was his material may be gathered from this brief statement of it. In the mountain solitudes lived two trappers, brothers of simple nature and in the prime of maturity. For purposes of his own a French half-breed tells them the story of a white squaw who is living among the remote Indians. This fable stimulates the imagination of the brothers, who go in quest of her. The squaw, however, is simulated by another "breed," and both the brothers, falling in love with her, enounce the initiation of the tragedy. But the reader will feel that the trickery is too flimsy to impose upon the men, unsophisticated though they be; and thus an atmosphere of unreality is engendered. There are undoubtedly in the tale tragic elements, which assume formidable dimensions towards the close.

The Jackal. By Coulson Kernahan. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

THE hero of Mr. Kernahan's new novel is an Irishman who owns the un-Irish name of Max Rissler, and he delights in references to his nationality. That probably explains his garrulous diversions from the main plot of his narrative, as well as his inconsequence. Frankly, Mr. Rissler, author and amateur detective, is not of much importance as either. His detective adventures are related with spirit and gusto; but we do not believe in them. They are manifestly invented. And when it comes to considering his skill as another Sherlock Holmes, we must simply shake our heads. Through no merit of his own he blunders upon amazing clues, and then botches everything. One gets annoyed with him, and finally tired of him. All the same, the mystery provided for us is ingenious and unusual. Lady after lady in society disappears, without respect of beauty, wealth, or position. They are not injured, but merely detained, somewhere unknown, by an unknown person and for unknown reasons. That is an excellent start, and Mr. Kernahan manages to interest us in the plot for some time with that "jump off." However, as we proceed we gather doubts, and those doubts gradually accumulate until we become convinced that the author is playing with us. We do not know if that was his intention, but the dénouement is so extravagant that he well might be.

Hay Fever. By W. H. and G. C. Pollock. (Longmans & Co.)

THIS really entertaining story can be confidently recommended to any fortunate possessor of high spirits who has a tedious railway journey ahead of him. The ludicrous dilemmas of Mr. Tempest, the middle-aged hero, succeed each other with a rapidity and smoothness which carry the action unfalteringly forward. The book has all the freshness of a humorous idea worked out and finished in the heat of the moment. Mr. Tempest is a stockbroker of pattern respectability, who is suddenly imbued with a double dose of youthful spirits and indiscretion through a mysterious cure for hay fever. Quick as sneezes is the succession of his extravagances and follies, while the farce is well supported and worked out by subordinate and resourceful characters. A happy conclusion is successfully arranged by the joint authors; and it would be unfair to spoil the fun by further revelations of its details.

The Three Essentials. By Dorothea Gerard. (Hutchinson & Co.)

WE can find no essential note of any kind struck in this story. From beginning to end it fails to interest us, possibly for no other reason than the author's own lack of interest in her characters and the situations presented. This is, at any rate, the suggestion made on the mind of one reader. The grammar and phrasing might have been better; but that would not matter so much if more important qualities were present. If they are, we have not detected them. Yet surely at one time the author could tell a better story in a better manner.

Jim Mortimer, Surgeon. By R. S. Warren Bell. (Newnes.)

JIM MORTIMER is a promising young surgeon and a powerful athlete, whose convivial and pugilistic tastes alienate a rich grandfather, his only surviving relative, and so lead to his accepting a poor practice, made vacant by hooligan violence, in the Blackfriars district. He is also stimulated to industry by having fallen in love with the beautiful and highly refined heroine. By a remarkable coincidence Jim becomes a boarder in the establishment presided over by her parents, who now live in very reduced circumstances near Jim's surgery. Eventually Jim is trapped by hooligans and much damaged, but the catastrophe brings round the lady and the grandfather to his succour and consolation. Though the author's flight is rather near the ground, he tells a fairly well-constructed story in a lively and graphic style not devoid of rough humour.

RECENT VERSE.

Poems. By T. Sturge Moore. (Duckworth.)—Mr. Moore's brown-paper-clad booklets are already familiar to those whose business or pleasure it is to keep abreast of the current of modern poetry. Here we have all six, beginning with 'The Centaur's Booty,' and ending with 'Theseus, Medea, and other Poems,' collected in a case of the same sober hue. All that glitters is not gold, and more of that true ore of poetry which is more golden than gold lurks within these unpretentious covers than is to be found in many a larger and gaudier volume of verse. This is not the place to discourse on the qualities of Mr. Moore's poetry. At its best—and the best, we think, are the dramatic poems, 'Pan's Prophecy,' 'The Centaur's Booty,' 'The Rout of the Amazons,' in which the Greek myths are revived, not merely retold, and a curious power is shown of realizing those borderland existences, Centaur and Faun and Pan—it is not easy to write of Mr. Moore's poetry without seeming extravagance of praise. In an age of recapitulation, mostly barren, its freshness, strength, and beauty command such admiration as his own youthful Theseus. If any one was ever disposed to fear that the springs of poetry had dried up for us, the children of "an empty day," let him open 'The Rout of the Amazons,' and read the Faun's speech beginning:—

Not far from where that lovely warrior lay,
I sat me down in deep and solemn mood, and we shall be surprised if his fears are not quickly dispelled.

The Birth of Parsival. By R. C. Trevelyan. (Longmans.)—Mr. Trevelyan's new drama is of more than ordinary merit, and deserves more than a passing notice. His 'Polyphemus,' which was related to the formal tragedy much as the short story is to the novel, was full of promise. The characters were well defined; the clash of conscience with circumstance was sounded unmistakably, the action was inevitable, and over all was thrown that veil of poetic imagination without which the presentment of the realities of legend even must be essentially prose. 'The Birth of Parsival' richly fulfils the promise of the earlier work. Wagner in his 'Parsifal' relates that "the stainless fool" was the son of Gamuret and Herzeleide, that his father was slain before his birth, and that his mother brought him up in "the forest and wild moorlands." A rather different account is given by Mr. Trevelyan. Frimutel, son of Titurel, Keeper of the Holy Grail, Lord of Monsalvat and King of the Grail-Knighthood, is invested by his father, in extreme old age, with his office and power, and informed of the condition attaching thereto—that he shall not marry, except by the express appointment of the Grail. Soon afterwards he goes alone into a distant country in order to assist the king of it to repel a heathen invasion. The action opens on the night of the day on which, by the magic powers of the Grail-sword, this object has been successfully achieved. Frimutel has vanquished the king's enemies, but has himself been vanquished by Love. In the first act Herzeloida, the king's daughter, is with Frimutel in his tent. Like Elsa in 'Lohengrin,' she insists on being told her lover's name. Hearing it, she at once recognizes the greatness of their sin, and urges Frimutel to repent. Punishment is not slow-footed here; for Kundry, who in this version of the story is simply the sibyl-like agent and interpreter of the Grail, has already arrived to pronounce his doom of dethronement and madness. The action then proceeds without either haste or halt. Madness falls on Frimutel, who kills the king's sons and flies to the forest. A child is born to the Princess, whose shame is discovered by chance, and mother and babe, on the advice of the priest Thaddæus, are exposed in the forest. There they meet Frimutel, who, mad no longer, but still unrepentant, appeals to Herzeloida not to leave him. Kundry, however, joins them, and Herzeloida decides to go with her

Unto that place appointed for thy rest
Where thou in peace and holiness shalt rear
This thy son Parsival, till all thy part
In him at length be without blame accomplished,
And at thy hands the Grail receive him back.

Such in brief outline is the story, the situation at the close suggesting that the present play is but the opening of a trilogy, the second of which should deal with the deaths of Herzeloida, broken-hearted at the departure of her son to seek adventures (so Wagner), and of Frimutel at his son's hands, according to the doom pronounced by Kundry:—

That which from thy rebellion shall be born
If thou destroy not, thee shall it destroy;

and the third with Parsival's own reign as king, and return to the sacred East with the Grail.

The tragic possibilities of the story are made the most of by Mr. Trevelyan, and it would be hard to say whether more praise should be given to the awe-inspiring scene of Frimutel's madness, in which he defies, as it were, the Almighty to single combat, and slays, as he believes, in their sleep two of His angels out of the legions by which he fancies himself beleaguered, or to the character of Herzeloida, who, with a woman's intuitive infallibility, realizes the greatness of their sin and the reasonableness of their punishment, and is torn between a love for Frimutel which never falters, and a love for her child which is strengthened both by the dangers shared with him and by a sense of the greatness of the mission reserved for him by the Grail. The king who stands between the genius of Frimutel and the womanly instinct of Herzeloida as the incarnation of common sense; the faithful waiting-women; the crafty priest, who is too pompous to be inhuman; the shepherds, who, seeking "some wandered goats," find the babe "naked as a worm in the warm sun," and thereby precipitate the tragedy; and last, but not least, Kundry, the "wise woman," ever on the watch

Lest zeal's excess make hard my heart,
And parch the springs of human pity there, are all endowed with life, not, as is so often the case, merely adhesive labels to a certain number of lines. The blank verse is dignified and plastic, monotony being avoided by a very skilful use of pauses, accentual variation, and broken lines. The play is cast in classic mould. There is, however, no formal chorus, but the dialogue is diversified by choric lyrics which are, with two exceptions, rhymeless, and are as successful as the limitations of our language permit, the most notable metrically being the one in which Frimutel, already "fey," welcomes Kundry in triumphant dactylic verses. It is to Mr. Trevelyan's credit that there are no purple patches. We will not, therefore, do him the injustice of quoting from a poem which should be read and studied in its entirety.

The Garden of Francesca. By Henry Cullimore. (Elkin Mathews.)—Some one has remarked that nothing is more alien to the spirit of true poetry than ingenuity. Of this quality there is an abundance in Mr. Cullimore's work, while the knowledge of his subject to be expected from a Professor of the English Language and Literature supplies the requisite technical equipment. It would be strange if Mr. Cullimore, thus furnished, did not produce creditable verses, and stranger still, perhaps, in the absence of the one thing necessary, if he produced better. The wind of poetry blows where it lists, and seldom or never are we conscious of its vital impulse in these pages. 'Florentius and Decidia,' a short, romantic, narrative poem in rhyming heroics, reveals Mr. Cullimore in his most scholarly and least inspired vein. Of the sonnets, 'La Marquise' and 'Lancelot' are ingenious. The play after which the book is named has some pretty rhetoric in the love scene, but the human interest of it is destroyed by Mr. Cullimore's inability to depict men and women. Paolo and his brother exchange "scores" like schoolboys. Francesca boasts to her husband of her love for Paolo, before she knows that it is returned, while Paolo is made to say:—

To love her is to spite my brother; why
This is the very lady of my dreams;
None other would be half so gracious to me
As one that loving me would work him harm!

At the end Francesca's behaviour is that of a hysterical schoolgirl, making her execution seem a needless and consequently unimpressive barbarity. The best thing in the volume is, we think, the version of "Vivamus, mea Lesbia," which is as fresh as any rendering of that over-translated masterpiece can now be.

Amid the perennial output of more or less mellifluous verse it is by no means unusual to find here and there not only promise, but also a certain measure of performance that rises distinctly above the average tide-mark of metrical expression. It is, so to speak, a lucky-bag into which you dip, finding as a rule dull pebbles or bits of common glass worn smooth by the waves, but occasionally a cornelian, an iridescent shell, or even perhaps a piece of amber. More precious finds are rare indeed, but mere prettiness may have its uses and may sometimes serve as a possible earnest of better things to come. A little volume called Verses from Maoriland (George Allen), by Miss Dora Wilcox, would seem, in spite of immaturity and the usual tendency towards experiment in unsuitable forms, to show some promise. That the writer is endowed with real poetic feeling is evident in the opening poem 'Onawe,' which is simple and dignified in treatment, besides displaying an admirable taste in rhythm. The following lyric, 'Suspiria,' also touches a higher level than the remainder of the verses, while giving the impression that in the natural course of development, and with a study of austerer models, the author, whose youthfulness we must needs assume, may do still better work when her muse shall have acquired merit in the shape of experience and a finer sense of selection:—

Clasped in the clinging arms of Death she lies
All robed in white as best befits a bride,
In solemn state amongst her draperies,—
The mirror by her side.

The deadly crystals glitter in the glass,—
The last late roses glimmer on her bed,—
The sunbeams steal between the slats, and pass
To greet her who is dead.

She will not sin, nor suffer, any more,
She heeds no comments from the curious crowd,
She does not hear it buzzing at the door;
Peace wraps her in its shroud.

And I? I have no sighs of vain regret
For dear lost love, for fair hopes vanish'd,
No passionate tears her poor pale fingers wet
Even now,—when she is dead.

Nay, deeper, deeper than the deepest Hell,
Stranger than life, sadder than friend forgot,
My grief,—who grieve not that I loved too well,
But that I loved her not.

An Autumn Romance, and other Poems. By Alice Maddock. (Elkin Mathews.)—Miss Maddock disarms criticism to a great extent in her preface, where she modestly disclaims any ambition to be classed as a phenomenon, remarking:—

I do but twitter where another sings.
A sparrow—but a sparrow born with wings.

Her twitterings are for the most part inoffensive, but in no way remarkable. Here and there we come across stanzas of merit, and even of music; but Miss Maddock has been unable to resist the wiles of the compound word—both noun and adjective—against which Coleridge so earnestly warned young poets, and we find such expressions as "God-thrill," "wonder-store," "glimpse-seen," and "soul-repose." Nor can the sense of music be adequately developed which is content with lines like:—

Till on the walls her hand, which nought forgets,
Spring pastures paints me, far from city frets.

Withal, we would add that, while in 'Victoria R. and I' there is charm of a simple sort, it is scarcely sufficient to justify the appearance in book form of trifles such as these.

TWO IRISH DICTIONARIES.

An Irish-English Dictionary. By Rev. Patrick S. Dineen. (Irish Texts Society; Nutt.)—The remark of Johnson that "dictionaries are like watches, the worst is better than none, and the best cannot be expected to go quite true," may have often occurred to students of Irish as they have used the lexicons hitherto at their disposal. Some have been less tolerant than the old lexicographer, and have spoken with censure of works which have rendered them great service. The Irish-English dictionary hitherto most used is that of Edward O'Reilly, a work full of faults, but also full of useful information, which, with O'Donovan's supplement, has proved a faithful friend to every editor of Irish texts, German as well as English. Edward O'Reilly did not acquire Irish till middle life, but his book is an astonishing feat of literature, far superior to the dictionary of O'Brien which preceded it. The 'Wörterbuch' appended to the 'Irische Texte' of Windisch has a more scientific arrangement than O'Reilly's book, but is of less value as a storehouse of words. The Rev. Patrick Dineen's dictionary, published by the Irish Texts Society, is by far the most useful modern Irish dictionary which has been published, and for method, fulness, and accuracy deserves the highest praise. The preceding dictionary to which it is most indebted is the unprinted manuscript of Peter O'Connell, a schoolmaster of Thomond, who died in 1826, at the age of eighty, and after working at his dictionary for forty years. The original manuscript is in the British Museum. Peter O'Connell received no reward, and earned a bare sustenance during a long life of laborious learning, ending his days upon his brother's farm, and leaving a manuscript full of information, which has been much used by editors of Irish texts, but never printed. Another source is the dictionary, also in manuscript, of Tadhg O'Neachtain, O'Naughton, or Norton, a Dublin schoolmaster who flourished in the reign of George II. The printed dictionaries or glossaries of O'Begly and MacCuirtin, of O'Brien, of Thaddeus Connellan, of O'Reilly, and of Coney are the other lexicographic sources. Keating's history and his 'Three Shafts of Death,' Donlevy's 'Irish Catechism,' a few eighteenth and seventeenth century poets, and a few tales such as 'The Tragedy of Clan Uisnech' and 'The Chase of Diarmait and Grainne' are the chief literary sources. They are not so numerous as they might have been, and hence the dictionary must be regarded as a useful work for students, rather than a complete exposition of the Irish language. On the title-page it is described as 'A Thesaurus of the Words, Phrases, and Idioms of the Modern Irish Language: with Explanations in English,' and this promise it fulfils.

There are, of course, a few omissions and a few imperfect definitions. Thus, under lan, "the full of," the expression thug se lan an leabhar, "he swore," is not given. Asair is defined as "litter" and "bedding for cattle," while it is also used for sheaves as laid out for thrashing. Under feoil, "meat," should be added feoil ghort, "salt meat"; under fear, "man," fear gorm, "a negro"; under gaoth, "wind," gaoth dearg, "the east wind"; and under fiacail, "tooth," clár-shiacail, "an incisor," and fiacail phartain, "a crab's claw," an object often used as a coral for a teething infant. Darbhdad is not "a long black chafer," but "a devil's coach-horse" (Staphylinus), that is stamped upon with the exclamation, "Peacaidhe mosheachtmhaine ort" ("The sins of my week upon thee"), an attempt at the transference of penalty which is supposed to be successful in the unattainable contingency of crushing the insect before it raises its terminal segments. Realt is correctly given as "a star," but Realt-eolais, "the polestar," is omitted. Fóidín mearaidhe is rendered "a cause of confusion." It is a little sod on which, if a man tread, it turns him wrong, so that he has to walk up and down till the moon rises. If, however, the man turns his coat inside out it does away with the spell. Muirean, of which an imperfect description is given, is the Donegal name for the guillemot. Puca is a slug (Limax) as well as the sprite mentioned by children when they see a flock of rooks on the wing, and call out, "Go mbeiridh an púca ar an gceann deiridh" ("May the puca catch the last one"). The omissions are, however, of slight importance, and very few are to be found in this admirable dictionary, of which, we hope, many successive editions will appear. Mr. Dineen deserves the highest credit for the plan he has followed, and the thoroughness with which he has carried it out.

English-Irish Dictionary. By T. O'Neill Lane. (Dublin, Sealy; London, Nutt.)—The first printed English-Irish dictionary is that of Conchobar O'Beaglaioich and Aodh Buidhe MacCuirtin, printed at Paris in 1732. This interesting book gives phrases as well as words, and so many English examples of both unknown to modern use are to be found in its pages, that a knowledge of Irish is essential to interpret much of the English. What modern reader knows what "halsong," or "hall-days," or "tongue-pad" means? But the Irish lexicographer says of the first: "Píolóir, áit ann a geurthar coiriocha ag fághail peannuinde agus naire"—the pillory, a place where evildoers are put for punishment and shame—while hall-days are rendered "Laethe eúirte," Court days (i.e., Sessions), and a tongue-pad is "bean eullóideach"—a scolding woman. This delightful book contains many pleasant sentences illustrative of idioms, which sometimes, in addition, throw light on old uses of words, as in "The age of man is not so long as the age of a crow" ("Ni bhuil aois dhuine comhfhad le haois fionnóige"), where the crow ("fionnóg") is the grey-backed or hooded crow, a bird which in Irish tales often occupies a place elsewhere given to the raven.

About 1815 Thaddeus Connellan, a learned schoolmaster from Sligo, printed an English-Irish dictionary, which was little more than a glossary; and in 1855 Daniel Foley, Professor of Irish in Trinity College, Dublin, a native of Kerry, published an English-Irish dictionary of greater pretensions, but based upon that of Thaddeus Connellan. It is, however, a work of no authority or scholarship, and contains artificial renderings, such as "beagchrúinne" (little globe) for microcosm, and "fuam-ainm" (sound-name) for onomatopoeia.

Mr. O'Neill Lane's work is a more scholarly production than Foley's. He gives a list of authorities, and acknowledges the help of several living native scholars, such as Tadhg O'Donnchadha, Prof. J. P. Craig, and the Rev. M. Farragher, of the Isles of Aran. The book is printed in excellent type, English and Irish, and a few proverbs and verses are given in illustration. The genitive case and the gender of nouns are sometimes, but not always, added. A good many names of birds and plants are inserted, but these would be more valuable if the locality or authority for each were supplied. The northern name for the puffin ("albanach") is omitted. It has been suggested that this word, which means Scotchman, is due to the red and blue of the bird's beak, like a Highland tartan; but others maintain that the name recalls the bird's solemn expression and the black gown on its shoulders, which make it look like a Protestant minister; and this seems more probable, as bright-coloured tartans are never seen in Ulster, while if a native, acquainted with much Irish and little English, is asked what "albanach" means he always replies "Protestant." The article on "crow" is unsatisfactory, and the simple word fiach, "a raven," as well as the form fiach dubh, "a carrion crow," are omitted. Sometimes well-known modern literary words are omitted, as sub voce "Farthing, feóir-linn," where "chionog ruadh" ought to be added, as in the delightful passage in the dedication of the 'Lochrann na gCreidmheach' of Francis O'Molloy to Cardinal Palutius Alterius, "Ni mó sgiling on Righ no an chionog ruadh on mbocht labain" ("Not more is a shilling to a king than a farthing to a poor labourer"). "Comog dearg," the common expression for the temporal artery, is omitted under "artery," and comlésc under "appetite." The crowing of a cock is not mentioned, yet "tá an coileach a glaoch" ("the cock is crowing") is a common phrase. Neither under "moon" nor under "potato" is given the expression geallach, for the hard centre in a partially boiled potato. It is very easy in the first edition of a work like this dictionary to point out omissions, and the few we have mentioned detract little from the merit of what may justly be described as the best English-Irish dictionary which has yet appeared.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MR. JOHN MURRAY publishes With Russian, Japanese, and Chunchusc, by Mr. Ernest Brindle, a Daily Mail correspondent. The book may be commended, for, although part of it is reprinted from articles, there is a great deal which is of considerable interest and fresh, and mostly, we think, trustworthy, even where the information is unexpected. Mr. Brindle puts the attitude of the Russian towards the Japanese on the day of the outbreak of war (which the author spent at Port Arthur) better than we had seen it stated, describing the "utter inability to appreciate the difference between them and the Chinese, whom he had overawed into a state of abject fear." It seems, from Mr. Brindle's account of "the memorable February 8th," that there was a Japanese official in Port Arthur in uniform all day, taking off his civilian fellow-countrymen to a steamer. This Japanese officer lunched with Admiral Alexieff, the Viceroy. There may be some haziness in the story as to where he was during the night attack by the torpedo boats upon the Russian fleet; but, apparently, his steamer sailed in the afternoon from Port Arthur to Dalny, spent the night at Dalny, and sailed again for Chifu in the morning, meeting the Japanese fleet in the middle of the day on the 9th. On the 8th also the mobilization order had been issued at Port Arthur, and the author states that the Russian fleet was sailing the next morning. These facts all go to increase the amazement felt by naval men at the fashion in which Russian officers spent the night ashore. It appears that a cruiser was patrolling outside the harbour, and that the Japanese torpedo boats in their attack passed near enough for conversation by megaphone, the Japanese officers answering the hail from the cruiser in perfect Russian. It appears also that Admiral Togo had sailed on the 6th, and that Japanese transports were crossing in considerable numbers to Korea on the 7th. The first rule of navies in such a case is to be "at sea" in the actual, not in the metaphorical sense; and attack was not only to be anticipated, but even, in the circumstances, was certain.

In the chapter on the Anglo-Japanese alliance the author is a little less sure of his ground. After boasting of the reorganization of our defences, in which he includes the military situation at Hong Kong, which has in fact been altered in the opposite sense, Mr. Brindle declares that, if we do not renew the alliance, "Japan will form one with another country." This assertion is frequently made; but it is by no means clear that it will bear investigation. Mr. Brindle suggests Germany and Russia. But Japan wants to get rid of them from the Pacific, not to guarantee them in her neighbourhood. Alliance would mean the latter course, and there is at least a possibility of the former policy being open to Japan. Moreover, it is by no means clear in favour of what policy such alliance could lead the probable parties to agree. Again, Japan can never afford to quarrel with the Power possessing the strongest fleet. Her position in Korea, which is the essential, could never be secure for a moment if she were the ally of Russia and of Germany in a policy directed against Great Britain. The whole matter is evidently chaotic in Mr. Brindle's mind. The policy of our alliance is a different matter. But it is certain that Lord Lansdowne will not be driven into repeating or strengthening the alliance by threats of a transfer of affections. There are a few mistakes which go to show that the author's French is limited. He uses "ménage" for mennu, and by three times using the word chansonnette in an eccentric fashion forces us to tell him that it means a little song, not a little singing-lady. We admit that very recent slang authority may be quoted for a similar word; but in the present case there is confusion with a real word of the French language.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON publish a history of events in China, 1898-1904, by Mr. Michael McCarthy, under the title The Coming Power. It is well executed, and only when the author deals with persons and with the future does he reveal the fact that his acquaintance with the subject is superficial. In the historic part he raises a point of some interest. Why did we occupy Wei-hai-Wei? "Lord Salisbury was endeavouring to secure some advantages for this country," we are told. It is certain that no adviser of the Government, naval or commercial, thought the place of value, but it is not certain whether the motive was a childish attempt to "save face," or a wise notion that we should show that we did not acquiesce in the position taken up by Russia and by Germany. That the reasons given at the time were unsound was shown at once by Lord Charles Beresford. The account of the Anglo-Japanese alliance is able, but is so written as to justify the Russian contention that the alliance caused the war. Sir Robert Hart is called an Irishman, and we hear much of his "Irish ancestors." But, surely, though born in Ulster, and not without Ulster blood, he is one of the many great men to be credited to the Jews of the United Kingdom. The title "the deputy" will be read by many as suggesting that there are members of Parliament in Siberia.

English Past and Present. By R. C. Trench. Edited by A. Smythe Palmer. (Routledge.)—These lectures on the English language are in some respects superior to the author's admirable treatise 'On the Study of Words.' Although popular, they are models of scientific method and of freedom from the malign influence of besetting theories. They ought to be studied by all who wish to learn the history and character of the English language, so that their republication is a boon to English scholars, and the volume with Dr. Smythe Palmer's excellent emendations, made necessary by lapse of time and philological progress, ought to prove a good advertisement for the 'New English Dictionary,' that monumental work to the foundation of which the learned archbishop so signally contributed. In one instance at least we think the editor might have called in question a general statement made by his author. In chap. iii. p. 113, we find:—

"It is certain that all languages must, or at least all languages do, in the end perish.....they have their youth, their manhood, their old age, their decrepitude, their final dissolution."

There is no sound reason to expect that English, French, Italian, German, or Russian will perish while the world remains habitable by man, still less that all will perish. The diffusion of literature and education has made literary languages infinitely more stable since the supposed death of Latin. Classical Latin is, of course, dead; but did Latin as a spoken language ever come to a definite end? Did it not rather change gradually, until its identity with its earlier self became unrecognizable? The same questions may be asked as to Sanskrit and Zend. A language only dies upon the extermination of the race which speaks it or the absorption of the race by a more vigorous or more civilized people, as was the case, for example, with the Lombards in Italy and the Celts in Cornwall. Ruskin is credited with the introduction of "ornamentation," and the 'New English Dictionary' leaves this an open question by quoting other authors from 1851 to 1879. To illustrate fluctuation in the use and disuse of words, "unwisdom" is cited as obsolete. This is interesting, as it is now again current. The editor might have told us that "deceivableness" is archaic, and "mature" not in Chaucer, but in 'Chaucer's Dream,' dated about 1500; that "paysan" is not "from pagensis," but from "pays," which is from pagensis. The Greek words are hardly revised enough, as we note ἦθος, πολυθεισμος and ἐνορχοεῖ; but the editor has very seldom laid himself open to criticism, and has performed a task which cannot have been light with care, tact, and skill.

Highways and Byways of the South. By Clifton Johnson. (New York, the Macmillan Company.)—Mr. Clifton Johnson wandered through many out-of-the-way regions of the Southern States of the North American Union regions, "where life probably has a more picturesque interest than anywhere else in our country," and the heavily bound volume we have just perused contains an account of what he saw and heard. Most of these wanderings were first described in magazine articles, and are now presented to the world in book form. The articles were probably fairly successful in whiling away many a sleepy half-hour, but the more imposing book is disappointing and rather wearisome. The author's rambles began in Florida, were extended through several Southern States, and confined within fields and woodlands, so that little or nothing is said of town life or the activities of centres of population. The "picturesque interest" of the scenes is by no means prominent in the narrative, which, in our judgment, exhibits little that is not sordid, and will make the reader congratulate himself that he was not Mr. Clifton Johnson's travelling companion.

Keen anthropologists may learn from these pages much concerning the characteristics, often unlovely, of negroes and whites, between whom racial antipathy is now strong, and apparently permanent:—

"If anything would make me kill my children, declared one woman, it would be the possibility that niggers might sometime eat at the same table and associate with them as equals."

Students, too, of the decay of language may find some interest in the excruciating and cacophonous idiom used by the men and women Mr. Clifton Johnson met in his travels. But general readers, whether in search of information about the South or of mere entertainment, will find the volume unsatisfying; it is, however, very clearly and distinctly printed and liberally and well illustrated.

The Rhymer's Lexicon. Compiled and edited by Andrew Loring. With an Introduction by George Saintsbury. (Routledge.)—We cannot believe that the obligation of English poetry to rhyming dictionaries has been, or ever will be, great, nor that they can ever come to be regarded seriously as aids to poetry. The inevitable conditions which attend their compilation are, in themselves, unfavourable. The grotesque juxtaposition of words, the all-pervading incongruity, must surely tend to upset the poet's gravity, and quench for a while, at least, the faint fire of inspiration which he essays to kindle.

Let us suppose, for example, that at a time when the divine flame is burning very low—a time which comes to all poets now and again—he turns, as a last hope, to 'The Rhymer's Lexicon' in search of a rhyme for, let us say, "milk." He is at once confronted with a motley crew of words, including "bilk," "ilk," and "wilk"; or, should he seek a suitable rhyme for "sweetest," he will find, among other helpful suggestions, "beatest," "ill-trearest," and "over-eatest." But this cannot be avoided, so long as the book is designed to aid all, without distinction of aim, who make use of rhyme as a means of expression. It is conceivable that separate volumes for serious poets, song-writers, and humorous versifiers might be of more service, though even this we are inclined to doubt. 'The Rhymer's Lexicon,' which is an excellent specimen of its class, contains an introduction by Prof. Saintsbury, dealing comprehensively with English versification. It is written with some aggressiveness and considerable laxity of style, with, here and there, an inclination to verbiage, as in the following: "The central knot, the crux, the battlefield, the bone of contention—a hundred other phrases may be applied to it"; and, moreover, Prof. Saintsbury seems to us, despite his protestations to the contrary, to attribute to English prosody a rigidity which is foreign to it.

Mr. Loring, in his preface, explains the principle—to wit, the grouping of words according to the accented vowel sound—which he has adopted in compiling his lexicon, and there can be no doubt of the infinite pains that have gone to the making of it. Yet with some of his conclusions it is impossible to agree; as, for instance, that the vowel sound in "Jew" and "new," or in "blue" and "dew," are the same. But these are small matters. It only remains to be said that if indeed there be poets nowadays who rely on such adventitious aids to inspiration, they will probably find what they seek in this book; and after all it is styled 'The Rhymer's Lexicon,' not 'A Guide to Parnassus.'

The Trial of Jesus. By Giovanni Rosadi. Translated from the Third Italian Edition. Edited with a Preface by Dr. Emil Reich. (Hutchinson & Co.)—We are not told that Dr. Reich is responsible for the translation, but he is for the preface. The use and abuse of the preface might well be the subject of a chapter in a new volume of 'Curiosities of Literature'; and whatever be that use, it seems obvious that there should be some connexion between the preface and the book to which it is attached. Dr. Reich's contribution to this volume consists of some general remarks on the need of a 'Life of Christ' for each generation, strong assertions in regard to Higher Criticism, and a few words on the way in which Signor Rosadi has approached his subject. The strong assertions, however, give the tone to the preface. It appears that

"the study of the New Testament has in the last seventy to eighty years fallen into the hands of the so-called 'higher critics,' in whose criticism there is nothing high, and in whose heights there is nothing critical."

Dr. Reich, not satisfied with the achievement of this aphorism, poses as a judge. The higher critics "are philologists, and that alone condemns them as historians generally, and places them absolutely out of court as historians of Christianity." He may, of course, cherish the opinion that it is high time to proclaim that Higher Criticism "has proved an amazing blunder"; but surely prejudice rather than accuracy is responsible for the assertion that the "too numerous German, Dutch, French, and English scholars" have covered themselves with ridicule,

"who, with an appearance of systematic precision, have invaded every syllable of the New Testament, and who, after driving out from each dwelling-place of the text whatever spiritual or human element there is in it, solemnly declare that the New Testament is a mere story-book, Christ a myth, and Christianity a fraud."

Higher Criticism, which is a method, and not a system, has suffered at the hands of some who have employed it; but it cannot be injured by those who, through prejudice, wantonly misrepresent it.

Signor Rosadi himself might with advantage indulge in some historic criticism. It is enough to say that he quotes as authentic, but without comment or suggestion, the well-known interpolation into the text of Josephus of the passage regarding the death and resurrection of Christ. The title of Signor Rosadi's book might be 'The Life of Jesus,' since so much space is given to the incidents of the sacred narrative. These incidents, in the judgment of the author, are recounted in order that there may be a clear understanding of the accusations brought against Jesus. "Every act of the life of Jesus," Signor Rosadi explains, "is noted or omitted according as it may or may not come within the fixed domain of contemporary penal justice." The acts thus chosen are, however, narrated with such diffuseness of explanation and commentary that the reader almost forgets that he is contemplating the trial of Jesus. The same diffuseness is apparent in the treatment of the legal questions involved in the trial of Jesus. Thus, for instance, six pages are devoted to a description of the death of Savonarola in order to find in the varying moods of the Florentines a parallel to the feelings of those Jews who passed from hosannas to cries of "Crucify him!" The conclusion of the author regarding the trial is thus expressed: "Jesus of Nazareth was not condemned, but He was slain. His martyrdom was no miscarriage of justice, it was a murder." Jurists as well as doctors differ. Mr. Taylor Innes in his well-known book, 'The Trial of Jesus Christ,' says:—

"When Pilate ultimately sent Jesus to the cross, it was as claiming to be a king, and on the original charge of acting adversus majestatem populi Romani. The judgment was legal, though the unjust judge did not believe in it."

Readers of Signor Rosadi's volume may not be able to accept his conclusion regarding the trial, or they may be in perplexity, when the legal opinion of Mr. Taylor Innes is before them; but by a perusal of the Italian writer's book they will obtain a great deal of curious information which, though not always strictly relevant to the subject of the work, is at least interesting.

FOLLOWING closely on the celebrations at Norwich and at Manchester College, Oxford, of the centenary of the birth of Dr. Martineau, appropriately comes the volume James Martineau, Theologian and Teacher, by J. Estlin Carpenter (Green). The book necessarily goes over much of the ground already covered by the 'Life,' in two volumes, by Principal Drummond and Mr. Upton; but it is interesting to have from three of Martineau's former pupils—men who have taught in the College where he himself laboured—an appreciation of his life and thought. There are many letters, both in the body of the work and in foot-notes, and some glimpses into family life, showing the father with his book poised against the sugar-basin, reading Dickens or Scott to his children. The two portraits may be mentioned as giving to those who knew Martineau a pleasing reminder of a singularly sweet and strong personality.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S new edition, at half-a-crown, of Tolstoy's Resurrection, translated by Louise Maude, is certainly very cheap for the money, for it includes thirty-three striking illustrations by Pasternak. The text represents a complete and final revision.

WE are glad to get from Messrs. Blackwood new and cheaper editions of John Splendid and Burton's History of Scotland, vol. i., both attractive volumes in their different ways.

WE have on our table Joseph Joachim, by J. A. Fuller-Maitland (Lane),—The Early Haunts of Oliver Goldsmith, by J. J. Kelly (Dublin, Sealy, Bryers & Walker),—The Return of the Jews to England, being a Chapter in the History of English Law, by H. S. Q. Henriques (Macmillan),—The Classics and Modern Training, by S. G. Ashmore (Putnam),—Italian Architecture, by J. Wood Brown (Siegle),—The Battle of Trafalgar, by Robert Southey, Introductory Note by A. C. Curtis (The Astolat Press),—Extracts from the Writings of Clement of Alexandria (Theosophical Publishing Society),—Already in Troy, by G. B. W. (Boston, U.S., the Merrymount Press),—Mr. Punch's Diary, by W. Emmanuel (Bradbury & Agnew),—A Handbook of Freestanding Gymnastics, by E. Adair Roberts (Sherratt & Hughes),—Ju-Jitsu, by Apollo (Office 'Apollo's Magazine'),—Wild Ducks: how to Rear and Shoot Them, by Capt. W. C. Oates (Longmans),—The Ritual of Temperance and State Hygiene, by H. C. Pattin (Norwich, Goose),—Character, by R. W. Emerson (The Astolat Press),—Lucie and I, by H. Corkran (Fisher Unwin),—Mr. Watch, Pawnbroker, by G. H. R. Dabbs, M.D. (Partridge & Cooper),—The Sunless City, by J. E. Preston Muddock (White),—George Eastmout: Wanderer, by J. Law (Burns & Oates),—Catherine Douglas, by R. Willard (Jarrold),—Evered Fitzroy, by E. E. Hill (Drane),—Out of the Depths, by Pitt Bonarjee (Thacker),—Zelia, by E. B. Bennett (Jarrold),—The Lode-star, by S. R. Kennedy (Macmillan),—A Cheque for Three Thousand, by A. H. Vesey (Bristol, Arrowsmith),—The Secret Passage, by Fergus Hume (J. Long),—The Spurs of Gold, by J. B. Morgan and J. R. Freeman (Melrose),—Mine and Thine, by F. E. Coates (New York, Houghton & Co.),—The Haunted Temple, and other Poems, by E. Doyle (New York, the Knickerbocker Press),—The Cardinal Archbishop of Granada and the Invincible Armada, 1588, a Spanish Legend, by Col. Columb (Eyre & Spottiswoode),—Search Light, by G. Houston Mowat (Paisley, Gardner),—Sunday Talks with Girls, by R. Jaegers (Brown & Langham),—The Founda- tion of a Happy Life, by the Rev. C. T. Ovenden, D.D. (S.P.C.K.), — Jesus Saith: Studies in some New Sayings of Christ, by J. Warschauer (Allenson), — Bible Characters, and other Addresses, by Henry Twells (Wells Gardner), — Old Testament History, by the Rev. T. Nicklin, Part III. (A. & C. Black), — The Holy Communion: its Institution, Purpose, and Privilege, by Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence (Bemrose), — The Lord's Supper, by C. R. Davey Biggs, D.D. (Mowbray), — Spokil, Langue Internationale, by Dr. A. Nicolas (Paris, Maloine), — and Variétés Littéraires, by F. Brunetière (Paris, Lévy).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Bowman (J. A.), Truth in Conflict with the Creeds, 3/6 net.
Churton (E. T.), The Use of Penitence, 8vo, 6/ net.
Davey (J. W.), The Fall of Torngak, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Gordon (T.), Creed and Civilisation, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Griggs (E. H.), A Book of Meditations, cr. 8vo, 7/ net.
Harris (C.), Pro Fide, extra crown 8vo, 10/6 net.
Hooper (H. T.), The Thomas Willshaw Theological Class, and the Story of its Founder, cr. 8vo, 2/6
Isaacson (C. S.), Our Brief against Rome, cr. 8vo, 2/6
Morris (J.), A New Natural Theology, 8vo, 6/
Stewart (A. M.), The Infancy and Youth of Jesus, 8vo, 6/
Tisdall (W. St. C.), The Original Sources of the Qur'an, 8/
Law.

Ridges (E. W.), Constitutional Law of England, 8vo, 12/6
Smith (P. V.), The Legal Position of the Clergy, 2/6 net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Addison (J.), Classic Myths in Art, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Book of Photography, edited by P. N. Hasluck, roy. 8vo, 10/6
Ganz (H. F. W.), Practical Hints on Painting, Composition, Landscape, and Etching, 8vo, sewed, 2/6 net.
Gardner (P.), A Grammar of Greek Art, cr. 8vo, 7/6
Great Pictures in Private Galleries, Vol. 1, folio, 12/
Gubbio, Past and Present, by L. McCracken, illustrated by K. McCracken, 12mo, 5/ net.
Lippi (Filippino), roy. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Nuremberg and its Art to the End of the Eighteenth Century, by P. J. Rée, translated by G. H. Palmer, roy. 8vo, limp, 4/ net.
Paris Salon, 1905, Illustrated Catalogue, 8vo, sewed, 3/
Rathgen (F.), The Preservation of Antiquities, translated by G. A. Auden and H. A. Auden, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
Royal Academy of Arts, by A. Graves: Vol. 1, Abbaye to Carrington, 4to, half-leather, 42/ net.
Titian (The Early Work of), roy. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Poetry and the Drama.

Brown (W. H.), Carthusian Memories, and other Verses of Leisure, 12mo, 5/ net.
Clifford (E.), Love's Journey, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Seymour (G. M.), Mister Dormouse, and other Verses, 4to, 2/6
Strong (A. T.), Sonnets and Songs, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Tennant (P.), Windlestraw, 16mo, 2/6 net.
Tobin (A.), The Flying Lesson; Ten Sonnets; Two Canzoni, &c., 4to, sewed, 7/6 net.

Music.

Joachim (Joseph), by J. A. F. Maitland, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Naylor (E. W.), An Elizabethan Virginal Book, 8vo, 6/ net.
Worship Song with Tunes, edited by W. G. Horder, cr. 8vo, No. 21, 4/ net; 22, 5/ net; 23, 6/6 net; 24, 8/6 net; 25, 12/6 net; 26, 15/ net.

Bibliography.

Jessel (F.), A Bibliography of Works in English on Playing Cards and Gaming, 8vo, 12/6 net.

Political Economy.

Fuchs (C. J.), The Trade Policy of Great Britain and her Colonies since 1800, translated by C. H. M. Archibald, extra cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.
Jevons (W. S.), The Principles of Economics, 8vo, 10/ net.

History and Biography.

Bain (R. N.), The First Romanovs, 1513-1725, 8vo, 12/6 net.
Furley (Sir J.), In Peace and War: Autobiographical Sketches, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Grew (E. S.), War in the Far East, Vol. 3, roy. 8vo, 7/6 net.
Kelly (J. J.), The Early Haunts of Oliver Goldsmith, 2/6
Lucy (H. W.), Later Peeps at Parliament, 8vo, 7/6 net.
McCarthy (M. J. F.), The Coming Power, extra cr. 8vo, 6/
Mantiarazzo (Francesco), Chronicles of the City of Perugia, 1492-1503, translated by E. S. Morgan, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Morrison (P.), Rambling Recollections, 8vo, 5/ net.
Sandys (J. E.), Harvard Lectures on the Revival of Learning, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
Schiller, after a Century, by J. G. Robertson, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.

Geography and Travel.

Edwards (Miss Betham-), Home Life in France, 8vo, 7/6 net.
Pilot's Guide for the Thames and the Straits of Dover, edited by J. C. Imray and W. R. Kettle, 8vo, 5/
Wason (J. C.), East Africa and Uganda, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Wilkinson (D.), Whaling in Many Seas and Cast Adrift in Siberia, cr. 8vo, 6/

Sports and Pastimes.

Bridge (A Book of), by Pontifex, 12mo, 5/ net.
Glasford (A. I. R.), Rifle and Romance in the Indian Jungle, 8vo, 16/ net.
Golf and How to Play It, by an Old Player, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Golfing Annual, 1904-5, edited by D. S. Duacan, cr. 8vo, 6/

Education.

Harper (W. R.), The Trend in Higher Education, 7/6 net.

Philology.

Graham (J.) and Oliver (G. A. S.), The Foreign Traders' Correspondence Handbook, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Lucas (F.), English-French and French-English Dictionary of the Motor Car, Cycle, and Boat, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

Melzi (B.), A New Italian-English and English-Italian Dictionary, 12mo, 6/ net.

Rutherford (W. G.), A Chapter in the History of Annotation, Scholia Aristophonica, Vol. 3, 8vo, 25/ net.

Science.

Baker (W. M.), A Key to Elementary Algebra, Part 2, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

Boxall (G. E.), The Evolution of the World and of Man, 5/
Chittenden (R. H.), Physiological Economy in Nutrition, 8vo, 14/ net.

Geikie (J.), Structural and Field Geology, 8vo, 12/6 net.

Infectious Diseases, edited by J. C. Wilson, 8vo, 25/ net.

Kummer's Quartic Surface, by R. W. H. T. Hudson, 8/ net.

Low (W. Stuart-), Mucous Membranes, Normal and Abnormal, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.

Lucke (C. E.), Gas-Engine Design, 8vo, 12/6 net.

Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society, Second Series, Vol. 2, roy. 8vo, 25/ net.

Wallace (J. S.), The Role of Modern Dietetics in the Causation of Disease, 8vo, 3/6 net.

Wright (A. H.), A Text-Book of Obstetrics, 8vo, 18/ net.

General Literature.

Alarcon (D. P. de), The Three-Cornered Hat, translated by Lady Goodenough, 12mo, 2/6

Barnett (E. A.), A Garden of Eden, 5/ net.

Bennett (E. B.), Zelia, cr. 8vo, 3/6

Betting and Gambling: a National Evil, edited by B. S. Rowntree, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

Bonarjee (P.), Out of the Depths, cr. 8vo, 6/

Calkins (E. E.) and Holden (R.), Modern Advertising, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.

Cobb (T.), The Friendships of Veronica, cr. 8vo, 6/

Deakin (D.), The Poet and the Pierrot, cr. 8vo, 3/6

Downey (E.), Dorothy Tuke, cr. 8vo, 6/

Dudeney (Mrs. H.), The Wise Woods, cr. 8vo, 6/

Fellows (C.), Mr. Chippendale of Port Welcome, cr. 8vo, 6/

Griggs (E. H.), The New Humanism, cr. 8vo, 7/ net.

Hayes (F. W.), A Prima Donna's Romance, cr. 8vo, 6/

Hill (Headon), Millions of Mischiefs, cr. 8vo, 6/

Hirsch (S. A.), A Book of Essays, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Hornung (E. W.), Stingaree, cr. 8vo, 6/

Jewell (J. St. A.), The Loss of the Malpasia, and other Stories, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Keith (M.), Duncan Polite, cr. 8vo, 6/

Kelly's Directory of the Watch and Clock Trades, &c., 1905, roy. 8vo, 20/

Lewis (A. H.), The Boss, and how he came to Rule in New York, cr. 8vo, 6/ net; The President, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.

Locke (W. J.), The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne, cr. 8vo, 6/

Maxims of War, collected by M. V. Brett, 16mo, 2/6 net.

Miln (L. J.), A Woman and her Talent, cr. 8vo, 6/

Miniken (B. M.), Marjorie's Mistake, cr. 8vo, 6/

Parrish (R.), My Lady of the North, cr. 8vo, 6/

Pemberton (M.), Signors of the Night, cr. 8vo, 3/6

Robins (E.), A Dark Lantern, cr. 8vo, 6/

Robinson (B. F.), The Chronicles of Addington Peace, 3/6

Sergeant (A.), The Missing Elizabeth, cr. 8vo, 6/

Vaughan (G. G.), O Goriannau y Defaid, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Batiffol (P.), Études d'Histoire et de Théologie Positive, Series 2, 3fr. 50.

Knopf (R.), Das nachapostolische Zeitalter, 9m.

Laessan (J. L. de), La Morale des Religions, 10fr.

Linsmayer (A.), Die Bekämpfung des Christentums durch den römischen Staat bis zum Tode des Kaisers Julian, 5m. 80.

Pfleiderer (O.), Die Entstehung des Christentums, 4m.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Klein (W.), Geschichte der griechischen Kunst, Vol. 2, 11m.

Verhaeren (E.), Rembrandt, 2fr. 50.

Winckler (H.), Altorientalische Forschungen, Part 3, Vol. 2, Section 2, 4m.

Poetry and the Drama.

Lewengard (P.), Les Fastes de Babylone, 3fr.

Payen (L.), Les Voiles Blanches, 3fr. 50.

History and Biography.

Glaser (P. E.), Le Mouvement Littéraire, 1904, 3fr. 50.

Kerbrech (Baron F. de), Mes Souvenirs: la Guerre contre l'Allemagne, 1870-1, 3fr. 50.

Lionnet (J.), L'Évolution des Idées chez quelques-uns de nos Contemporains, Series 2, 3fr. 50.

Meaux (Vicomte de), Souvenirs Politiques, 1871-7, 7fr. 50.

Monod (B.), Le Moine Guibert et son Temps, 1053-1124, 3fr. 50.

Geography and Travel.

Rosbach (E.) et Molinier (A.), Histoire Graphique de l'Ancienne Province de Languedoc, 50fr.

Philology.

Brandt (P.), Sappho, 2m. 50.

Science.

Huffel (G.), Économie Forestière, Vol. 2, 10fr.

General Literature.

Beauregard (G. de), L'Ami des Mauvais Jours, 3fr. 50.

Braz (A. Le), Contes du Soleil et de la Brume, 3fr. 50.

Edgy, La Servante, 3fr. 50.

Guinaudeau (B.), Le Maître du Peuple, 3fr. 50.

Lebiond (M. A.), Les Sortilèges, 3fr. 50.

Maël (P.), Femme d'Officier, 3fr. 50.

Querlon (P. de), Céline, Fille des Champs, 3fr. 50.

Ramuz (C. F.), Aline, 3fr. 50.

Strannik (I.), Les Nuages, 3fr. 50.

TWO IDENTIFICATIONS IN GRAY'S LETTERS.

Fiveways, Burnham, Bucks.

GRAY's letter to Dr. Wharton of April 22nd, 1760 (see Mr. Tovey's edition of 'Gray's Letters,' vol. ii. pp. 132-3), contains a story of the bold attempt of "my Lady Fr." to bring about a match between herself and the then

Duke of Cleveland. The identity of this lady seems to have baffled Gray's editors, and Mr. Tovey confesses himself unable to discover who she was. Gray's own reference a little further on to "Lady Fr." as "Sr. Ev. F.'s fine young widow" makes the identification a matter of no great difficulty. "Sr. Ev. F." was Sir Everard Fawkener, Knight, sometime Minister at Constantinople, secretary to William, Duke of Cumberland, and joint Postmaster-General. He was born in 1684, and married in 1747 Harriet, natural daughter of General Churchill. Sir Everard died in 1758, leaving his wife (the "Lady Fr." of Gray's letter) and family in such poor circumstances, that Lady Fawkener considered herself quite justified (as appears from Gray's report of her remarks) in her audacious attempt to secure the Duke of Cleveland as a husband. She was forced, however, to be content with a less aristocratic match, and married in 1765 Thomas Pownall, sometime Governor of Massachusetts.

In the letter of Gray to the Rev. James Brown of July, 1760 (see Mr. Tovey's edition, vol. ii. p. 157), some space is devoted to observations on the wife of the newly appointed Spanish Ambassador (the Count de Fuentes) and her family. In the course of these remarks (according to Mr. Tovey's text) a "Dr. Alren" is mentioned, "whom nobody ever liked," and who had advised the Fuentes family to be "disagreeable." Mitford conjectures that this individual was "the Catholic priest attending on the family." This name, "Dr. Alren," is undoubtedly a misreading for "D'Abreu," who was the predecessor of the Count de Fuentes as Spanish resident in England. It is clear from Gray's letter that D'Abreu had not been popular in England, and had tried to impress upon his successor the advisability of not mixing in English society.

D'Abreu is twice mentioned by Horace Walpole in his 'Letters' (see my edition of the 'Letters,' vol. iii. p. 433; vol. iv. p. 288). At the second reference Walpole speaks of him as "the pert Spanish minister," and relates a smart reply of Pitt to a malicious remark of D'Abreu to the Hessian minister.

HELEN TOYNBEE.

CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS.

Trinity College, Dublin, May 14th, 1905.

IN your issue of May 13th Mr. Dennehy cites from Prendergast and from others statements regarding the exportation of a crowd of Irish peasants from Galway to Jamaica by order of the Cromwellian Government. If he will look at S. R. Gardiner's careful history of the period ('History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate'), vol. iv. pp. 112-13 and 218-19, he will see the evidence discussed, and also the lack of evidence that the orders given were ever carried out.

J. P. MAHAFFY.

LAMB'S LETTERS.

6, Pump Court, Temple, May 15th, 1905.

As the law is at present, and as I submit, it is likely to remain, the property in a letter, but not in its contents, passes to the addressee, and in this opinion I am supported by the recorded decisions (Pope v. Curll, 1741; Thompson v. Stanhope, 1774; Granard v. Dunkin, 1809, &c.). So far as I am aware, the same view is taken by all other writers on copyright, including Mr. Scrutton, K.C., and Mr. Macgillivray. Dr. Copinger writes: "The law really is that the copyright in a private letter remains in the writer." This statement is inaccurate. Copyright is the creature of the statute, and, as I have stated on the first page of 'Copyright Law,' there is no copyright in any work before publication, and the rights which authors possess in such works are merely the Common Law incidents of property, and are altogether

Independent of the statute (Jefferies v. Boosey, 1854; Lytton v. Devey, 1884).

I should have thought that it was quite clear from the context of the extract which you quoted from my book that by "letter" I meant the material upon which the communication was written, since in the same sentence I stated that the writer of the letter had a right to restrain the publication of its contents. Dr. Copinger's statement that "the property in the copyright is the very foundation of the right to restrain publication" is erroneous. The right exists by virtue of the Common Law, and independently of statute. Again, according to Dr. Copinger, "the property in the paper on which it [the letter] is written is probably in the receiver." He probably means the addressee. It is certainly in the addressee, who may destroy the letter or retain possession of it, even against the writer, if he so please (Oliver v. Oliver).

HENRY A. HINKSON.

'DICTIONARY OF INDIAN BIOGRAPHY.'

May 5th, 1905.

By the courtesy of the Editor of The Athenæum, I have been permitted to publish the following list of names of the deceased persons (1-300) who have been provisionally selected for inclusion in the 'Dictionary of Indian Biography,' to be published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. in the autumn. This work is intended to contain biographical notices of about 2,000 to 2,500 persons, living or dead, Europeans or natives of India, connected with India since about the year 1750 A.D. Suggestions are invited, and it is hoped that readers of The Athenæum will bring any important omissions to my notice. Letters should be addressed to 61, Cornwall Gardens, S. Kensington, S.W.

C. E. BUCKLAND, Editor 'D.I.B.'

Abbott, Augustus, Major-General, 1801-67
 Abbott, Sir Frederick, Major-General, 1805-92
 Abbott, Sir James, General, 1807-96
 Abdul Hak, in the service of the Nizam, 1853-96
 Abdul Latif, Nawab Bahadur, of Calcutta, 1828-93
 Abel, Clarke, Physician and Naturalist, 1780-1826
 Abercromby, Sir John, Lieutenant-General, 1772-1817
 Abercromby, Sir Robert, General, 1740-1827
 Adam, Sir Frederick, Governor of Madras, 1853-1853
 Adam, John, Acting Governor-General, 1779-1825
 Adam, Right Hon. William Patrick, Governor of Madras, 1823-81
 Adams, Andrew Leith, Surgeon-Major and Naturalist, 1807-1882
 Adams, Rev. James Williams, V.C., Military Chaplain, 1840-1903
 Adams, Sir John Worthington, Major-General, 1764-1837
 Adye, Sir John Miller, General, 1819-1900
 Afghanistan, Abdur Rahman, Amir of, 1844-1901
 Afghanistan, Dost Muhammad Khan, Amir of, 1791-1863
 Aga Ali Shah, head of the Khojas, 1800-81
 Aga Khan, head of the Khojas, 1800-81
 Agnew, Patrick Alexander Vans, killed at Multan, 1822-48
 Agnew, Sir William Fischer, Recorder of Rangoon, 1847-1903
 Ahlia Bai, Ruler of Indore, 1795-1795
 Ahmad Khan, Sir Syad, of Aligarh, 1817-98
 Ainslie, Whitelaw, Medical Service and Author, 1766-1836
 Airey, Sir James Talbot, General, 1812-98
 Aitchison, Sir Charles Umpherston, Lieutenant-Governor of Punjab, 1832-96
 Aitken, Robert Hope Moncrieff, V.C., Colonel, 1887-1887
 Aiyar, Sir K. Sheshadri, Dewan of Mysore, 1815-1901
 Aiyar, Sir Tiruvur Mutuswamy, Judge of the High Court, Madras, 1832-95
 Ajudhya Nath Pandit, of Allahabad, 1840-92
 Akbar Khan, son of the Amir Dost Muhammad, 1819-1819
 Alexander, Sir James, General, 1807-1807
 Alexander, Sir James Edward, General, 1803-85
 Aliverdy Khan, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, 1676-1756
 Allardice, Alexander, Journalist and Novelist, 1841-96
 Allen, Sir George William, 1831-1900
 Alms, James, Naval Officer, 1728-91
 Amherst, William Pitt, first Earl, Governor-General, 1773-1857
 Amir Ali Khan, Nawab Bahadur, of Calcutta, 1810-79
 Amir Khan, leader of the Pindaris, 1834-1834
 Amir Khan, Wahabi leader, 1790?-after 1877
 Ames, Andrew, Legal Member of Council, 1791-1860
 Anderson, Sir George William, Acting Governor of Bombay, 1791-1857
 Anderson, Sir Henry Lacon, Bombay Civil Service, 1807-79
 Anderson, James, Medical Service, Madras, 1809-1809
 Anderson, John, Civil Service, Prince of Wales's Island, 1795-1815
 Anderson, Rev. John, Missionary, Educationist, Madras, 1805-55
 Anderson, John, M.D., Scientist, 1833-1900
 Anderson, Thomas, Botanist, 1832-70
 Andrew, Sir William Patrick, Promoter of Railways, 1807-87

Anquetil, Thomas John, Brigadier-General, 1781-1842
 Anquetil du Perron, Abraham Hyacinthe, Orientalist, 1731-1805
 Anson, Hon. Augustus Henry Archibald, V.C., 1835-77
 Anson, Hon. George, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1797-1837
 Anstey, Thomas Chisholm, Barrister-at-Law, 1816-73
 Anstruther, Sir Alexander, Recorder of Bombay, 1769-1819
 Anstruther, Sir John, Chief Justice of Bengal, 1753-1811
 Appa Sahib, Raja of Nagpur, 1810-1810
 Arbuthnot, Sir Charles George, Commander-in-Chief, Madras, 1821-99
 Arbuthnot, William Urquhart, Member of the Council of India, 1807-74
 Arcot, Azim Jah, Prince of, 1800-74
 Arcot, Sir Muhammad Munawwur Ali, Prince of, 1856-1903
 Argyll, George Douglas Campbell, eighth Duke of, Secretary of State for India, 1823-1900
 Arnold, Sir Edwin, Poet and Journalist, 1832-1904
 Arnold, William Delafield, Director of Public Instruction, Punjab, 1828-59
 Arnould, Sir Joseph, Judge, Bombay, 1814-86
 Arthur, Sir George, Baronet, Governor of Bombay, 1781-1851
 Ashburnham, Hon. Thomas, General, 1872-1872
 Asman Jah, Nawab Sir, Prime Minister, Hyderabad, 1839-1898
 Astell, Henry Godfrey, Indian Civil Service, 1816-1903
 Astell, William, Chairman of Directors E. I. Co., 1774-1847
 Atkinson, Edwin Felix Thomas, Indian Civil Service, 1880-1880
 Atkinson, James, Medical Service, Oriental Scholar, 1780-1852
 Auchmuty, Sir Samuel, Commander-in-Chief, Madras, 1756-1822
 Auckland, George Eden, Earl of, Governor-General, 1784-1819
 Austen, Charles John, Naval Commander-in-Chief, India, 1779-1852
 Austen, Sir Francis William, Admiral, 1774-1865
 Austin, Dr. Charles Sumner, Journalist, 1837-1903
 Awdry, Sir John Wither, Chief Justice, Bombay, 1795-1878
 Aylmer, Hon. Rose Whitworth, 1779-1800
 Baden-Powell, Baden Henry, Indian Civilian, Author, 1811-1901
 Badger, Rev. George Percy, Indian Chaplain, Author, 1815-88
 Bailey, Rev. Benjamin, Missionary, Linguist, Botanist, 1791-1871
 Baillie, John, Colonel, Professor and Political, 1833-1833
 Baird, Sir David, Baronet, General, 1757-1829
 Baker, Sir Thomas Durand, General, 1837-93
 Baker, Sir William Erskine, Colonel, Council of India, 1808-81
 Balfour, Edward Green, Surgeon-General, Madras, Author, 1813-89
 Balfour, Francis, Medical Service, Author, before 1769-after 1807
 Balfour, Sir George, General, Military Financier, 1809-94
 Ball, George, Colonel, Adjutant-General, Bengal, 1761-1811
 Ball, Valentine, Doctor, Geologist, 1895-1895
 Ballard, John Archibald, Lieutenant-General, Mint Master, Bombay, 1829-80
 Bandula, Mengyee Maha, Burmese General, 1825-1825
 Banerjee, Durgapati, Rai Bahadur, Bengal Provincial Service, 1838-1903
 Banerji, Rev. Krishna Mohan, Professor, Linguist, and Author, 1813-85
 Banks, John Sherbrooke, Major, Chief Commissioner in Oudh, 1811-57
 Bannatyne, James R., Orientalist and Librarian, 1813-61
 Barker, Sir George Robert, Brigadier-General, 1817-61
 Barker, Sir Robert, Commander-in-Chief, Bengal, 1729?-89
 Barlow, Sir George Hilary, Baronet, Governor of Madras, 1762-1817
 Barnard, Sir Henry William, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1799-1857
 Barnes, Sir Edward, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1776-1838
 Baroda, Malhar Rao, Maharaja Gaekwar of, 1882-1882
 Barrow, Lousada, Major-General, Chief Commissioner of Oudh, 1777-1777
 Bartolomeo, Fra Paolino de San, Vicar-General, Malabar Coast, 1718-1806
 Barwell, Richard, Member of Supreme Council, 1741-1804
 Basevi, James Palladis, Captain, Scientific Investigator, 1871-1871
 Bateman-Champain, Sir John Underwood, Colonel, Director Indo-European Telegraphs, 1835-87
 Bayley, Sir Edward Clive, Member of Supreme Council, 1821-84
 Bayley, William Butterworth, Acting Governor-General, 1782-1869
 Beadon, Sir Cecil, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, 1816-80
 Beames, John, Indian Civilian and Philologist, 1837-1902
 Beatson, George Stewart, Surgeon-General in India, 1817-1871
 Beatson, William Ferguson, General, 1804-72
 Beecher, Sir Arthur Mitford, Quarter-Master-General in India, 1816-87
 Beecher, John Reid, General, Commissioner in the Punjab, 1819-84
 Beck, Theodore, Principal of the Aligarh College, 1859-89
 Beckwith, Sir Thomas Sydney, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1772-1831
 Bell, Andrew, Educationist, 1753-1832
 Bell, Thomas Evans, Major, Political Writer, 1825-87
 Bellow, Henry Walter, Surgeon-General, Linguist, 1834-92
 Bellow, Rev. John Chippindall Montesquieu, Preacher and Lecturer, 1823-74
 Benares, Chait Singh, Raja of, 1810-1810
 Benares, Sir Ishri Persad Narayan Singh, Maharaja of, 1822-89
 Benfey, Theodor, Professor, Oriental Linguist, 1809-81
 Benfield, Paul, Indian Civil Service, 1810-1810
 Bengali, Sorabji Shapurji, Reformer and Philanthropist, Bombay, 1831-93
 Bentinck, Lord William Cavendish, Governor-General, 1774-1839

Beresford, Lord William Leslie de la Poer, Colonel, V.C., 1874-1900
 Bernadotte, John Baptiste Julius, King of Sweden and Norway, 1764-1844
 Bernard, Sir Charles Edward, Chief Commissioner of Burma, 1837-1901
 Best, —, Captain, Madras Engineers, 1851-1851
 Bethune, Sir Henry Lindesay, Baronet, Madras Artillery, Persia, 1787-1851
 Bethune, John Elliot Drinkwater, Member of Supreme Council, 1801-51
 Bhau Daji, Medical Practitioner, Sheriff of Bombay, 1821-74
 Bhide Gopalrao Hari, Social Reformer, Bombay, 1813-96
 Bhonsla, Raghoji, II., Raja of Berar, 1816-1816
 Bhonsla, Raghoji, III., Raja of Berar, 1808-53
 Bhopal, Nawab Shah Jehan, Begam of, 1838-1401
 Bhopal, Nawab Sikandar, Begam of, 1816-68
 Bicknell, Herman, Doctor, Traveller, Linguist, 1830-75
 Biddulph, Sir Michael Anthony Shrapnel, General, 1825-1904
 Bigandet, Right Rev. Paul Ambrose, Bishop, 1811-94
 Birch, Sir Richard James Holwell, Lieutenant-General, 1803-75
 Bird, Louis Saunders, Lieutenant-General, 1792-1874
 Bird, Robert Mertins, Indian Civil Service, 1788-1853
 Bird, William Wilberforce, Acting Governor-General, 1857-1857
 Bittleston, Sir Adam, Judge, Madras High Court, 1817-92
 Blackburne, Sir William, Major-General, Political, 1761-1839
 Blacker, Valentine, Lieutenant-Colonel, Military Historian, 1778-1823
 Blacklock, Ambrose, Medical Service, Madras, 1816-73
 Blackwood, Sir Henry, Baronet, Naval Commander-in-Chief, India, 1770-1832
 Blair, James, General, V.C., 1828-1905
 Blair, Sir Robert, Lieutenant-General, 1802-1802
 Blaney, Thomas, Doctor, Sheriff of Bombay, 1823-1903
 Blanford, Henry Francis, Professor, Meteorologist, 1831-93
 Blavatsky, Helena Petrovna, Traveller, Theosophist, Author, 1831-91
 Blochmann, Henry Ferdinand, Professor, Linguist, 1838-73
 Blosset, Sir Robert Henry, Chief Justice, Bengal, 1776-1823
 Blunt, Sir Charles William, Baronet, 1731-1802
 Blyth, Edward, Zoologist, Ornithologist, 1810-73
 Boden, Joseph, Lieutenant-Colonel, Bombay Army, 1811-1811
 Bogle, Sir Archibald, Major-General, Commissioner, Burma, 1805-70
 Bogle, George, Leader of Embassy to Tibet, 1746-81
 Böhlingk, Othon von, Linguist, 1815-1904
 Bolts, William, of E.I.Co.'s Civil Service, 1740?-1805
 Bopp, Francis, Professor and Linguist, 1791-1867
 Borton, Sir Arthur, General, 1814-93
 Boseawen, Hon. Edward, Naval Commander-in-Chief, India, 1711-61
 Bourchier, Sir George, Major-General, 1822-98
 Bourdillon, James Dewar, Madras Civil Service, 1811-53
 Boyd, Hugh, Journalist, Madras, 1746-94
 Braddon, Sir Edward, Civil Officer in India, Author, 1829-1901
 Bradford, Sir Thomas, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1777-1853
 Brasyer, Jeremiah, Colonel, commanded Sikh regiment, 1812-97
 Brecks, James Wilkinson, Indian Civil Service, Madras, 1830-72
 Briggs, John, Major-General, Author, 1785-1875
 Bright, Sir Robert Onesiphorus, Lieutenant-General, 1823-1896
 Brind, Sir James, General, 1808-88
 Broadfoot, George, Major, Agent to the Governor-General, 1807-45
 Broekhaus, Herman, Professor and Linguist, 1806-77
 Brooke, Sir George, General, 1793-1882
 Brooke, Sir James, Raja of Sarawak, 1803-68
 Brooke, John Cheape, General, Agent to the Governor-General for Rajputana, 1818-59
 Brooke, Robert, in the E.I.Co.'s Bengal Army, 1746?-1802?
 Broughton, Thomas Duer, Colonel and Author, 1778-1835
 Broughton de Gyfford, John Cam Hobhouse, Baron, 1786-1869
 Brown, Charles Philip, Indian Civil Service, Madras, Linguist, 1798-1884
 Brown, Rev. David, Chaplain, Bengal, 1763-1812
 Brown, Sir John Campbell, Surgeon-General, 1812-90
 Browne, Sir James, General, Chief Commissioner, British Beluchistan, 1837-96
 Browne, Sir Samuel, General, 1824-1901
 Browne, Sir Thomas Gore, Indian Army, 1807-87
 Bruce, Sir Henry Le Geyt, Lieutenant-General, 1824-99
 Bruce, John, Historiographer of the E.I.Co., 1715-1826
 Brutton, Nicholas, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1780-1843
 Bryant, Sir Jeremiah, Major-General, 1815-1815
 Brydges, Sir Harford Jones, Baronet, Envoy to Persia, 1764-1847
 Brydon, William, E.I.Co.'s Medical Service, 1811-73
 Buchanan, Rev. Dr. Claudius, Chaplain, Professor, Author, 1766-1815
 Buchanan-Hamilton, Francis, Doctor, Author, 1762-1829
 Buckingham, James Silk, Journalist, Traveller, Author, 1786-1855
 Buckingham and Chandos, Richard Plantagenet Campbell, third Duke of, Governor of Madras, 1823-89
 Buckinghamshire, Robert Hobart, fourth Earl of, Governor of Madras, 1760-1816
 Buckland, Charles Thomas, Indian Civil Service, Bengal, 1824-94
 Bühler, Johann Georg, Professor and Linguist, 1837-98
 Buist, George, Journalist, Scientific Writer, 1805-60
 Burdwan, Mahtab Chand Rai, Maharaja Adhiraj Bahadur of, 1820-1879
 Burke, William Augustus, Inspector-General of Hospitals, 1769-1837
 Burlton, Philip Bowles, Bengal Artillery, 1803-29
 Burnell, Arthur Coke, Indian Civil Service, Madras, Linguist and Author, 1840-82
 Burnes, Sir Alexander, Traveller and Political Agent at Kabul, 1805-41
 Burnes, James, Doctor and Author, 1801-62
 Burney, Henry, Captain, Resident at Ava, 1845-1845
 Burnout, Eugene, Professor and Linguist, 1801-52
 Burrell, Littellus, Major-General, 1753-1827

Burton, Sir Richard Francis, Traveller, Linguist, Author, 1821-90
 Bussy-Castelnau, Charles Joseph Patissier, Marquis de, 1718-85
 Butler, Thomas Adair, Major, V.C., 1835-1901
 Cadell, Jessie, Authoress, 1844-81
 Cadell, Sir Robert, General, 1825-97
 Caillaud, John, Brigadier-General, 1724-1812
 Caird, Sir James, Authority on Agriculture, 1816-92
 Caldwell, Sir Alexander, Major-General, 1763-1839
 Caldwell, Sir James Lillyman, General, 1770-1863
 Caldwell, the Right Rev. Robert, Bishop of Timmivelly, 1814-91
 Call, Sir John, Baronet, Member of Council, Madras, 1732-1801
 Calloft, Maria, Lady, Authoress, 1785-1842
 Cama, Pestonji Hormusji, Merchant, Philanthropist, 1850-93
 Camae, Jacob, Bengal Infantry, ?-?
 Cameron, Charles Hay, Member of Supreme Council, 1795-1880
 Cameron, George Powlett, Political and Author, 1806-82
 Cameron, John Alexander, Journalist and Correspondent, ?-1885
 Campbell, Sir Archibald, Baronet, Commander in Burmese War, 1769-1843
 Campbell, Charles Hay, Major and Author, ?-1832
 Campbell, Sir Colin, Major-General, 1776-1847
 Campbell, Donald, Traveller and Author, 1751-1801
 Campbell, Sir Edward Fitzgerald, Baronet, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1822-82
 Campbell, Sir George, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, 1824-92
 Campbell, Sir James Macnabb, Indian Civil Service, Bombay, 1817-1903
 Campbell, John, Lieutenant-Colonel, Defender of Mangalore, 1753-84
 Campbell, Sir John, Major-General, 1802-78
 Canning, Charles John, Earl, Viceroy and Governor-General, 1812-62
 Canning, Charlotte Elizabeth, Countess, 1817-61
 Capel, Hon. Sir Thomas Bladen, Naval Commander-in-Chief, India, 1776-1853
 Capon, Sir David, General, 1793-1869
 Carey, Eustace, Missionary, 1791-1855
 Carey, Felix, Missionary, 1782-1822
 Carey, Mary, Survivor of the Black Hole, 1741-1801
 Carey, Rev. Dr. William Carey, Missionary, 1761-1831
 Carmichael, David Fremantle, Member of Council, Madras, 1830-1903
 Carnae, John, Member of Council, Bombay, 1716-1800
 Carnatic, Azim-ud-daula, Nawab of the, 1775-1819
 Carnatic, Ghulam Muhammad Ghaus, last Nawab of the, 1824-55
 Carnatic, Muhammad Ali Khan, Walajah, Nawab of the, 1717-95
 Carnatic, Umdat-ul-Umra, Nawab of the, 1718-1801
 Carpenter, Mary, Philanthropic Reformer, 1807-77
 Carrington, Sir Codrington Edmund, Barrister, Calcutta, 1769-1849
 Cartier, John, Governor of Bengal, 1733-1802
 Casement, Sir William, Member of the Supreme Council, 1780-1844
 Cassels, Andrew, Member of Council of India, 1812-86
 Cautley, Sir Proby Thomas, Colonel, Member of Council of India, 1802-71
 Cavagnari, Sir Pierre Louis Napoleon, Resident at Kabul, 1841-79
 Cavenagh, Sir Orfeur, General, 1821-91
 Chalmers, Sir John M., Major-General, 1756-1818
 Chamberlain, Sir Crawford Trotter, General, 1821-1902
 Chamberlain, Sir Neville Bowles, Field-Marshal, 1820-1902
 Chambers, Sir Robert, Chief Justice, Bengal, 1737-1803
 Chamier, Henry, Member of Council, Madras, 1795-1867
 Champion, Alexander, Commander-in-Chief, Bengal, ?-?
 Chanda Sahib, proclaimed Nawab of the Carnatic, ?-1752
 Chandu Lal, Maharaja, Minister at Hyderabad, 1766-1845
 Chastenay, Henry, Bengal Civil Service, 1794-1822
 Chatterji, Bankim Chandra, Indian Novelist, 1838-94
 Chavasse, William, of the E.I.Co.'s Service, 1785-1814
 Cheape, Sir John, General, 1792-1875
 Chelmsford, Frederick Augustus Thesiger, second Baron, General, 1827-1905
 Cherry, George Frederic, Bengal Civil Service, 1761-99
 Chesney, Sir George Tomkyns, Member of the Supreme Council, 1830-95
 Chinnery, George, Artist, 1766 ?-1852
 Christie, John, Major-General, 1805-69
 Christie, S. T., Lieutenant-General, ?-1876
 Churchill, Lord Randolph Henry Spencer, Secretary of State for India, 1819-1894
 Clapperton, Andrew Balfour, Captain, Master-Attendant, 1791-1847
 Clare, John Fitzgibbon, second Earl of, 1792-1851
 Clarke, Sir Alured, Field-Marshal, 1745 ?-1832
 Clarke, Sir Andrew, Lieutenant-General, Member of the Supreme Council, 1824-1902
 Clarke, Tredway, General, 1761-1858
 Clark-Kennedy, John, Major-General, 1817-67
 Clavering, Sir John, Member of the Supreme Council, 1722-77
 Cleghorn, Hugh Francis Clarke, Inspector-General of Forests, 1820-95
 Clerk, Sir George Russell, Governor of Bombay, 1800-89
 Cleveland, Augustus, Bengal Civil Service, 1755-81
 Clinton, Charles Henry Rolle Trefusis, twentieth Baron, Under-Secretary of State for India, 1831-1901
 Clive, Robert, Baron, Governor of Bengal, 1725-71
 Close, Sir Barry, Baronet, Political, 1756-1813
 Clyde, Colin Campbell, Baron, Field-Marshal, 1792-1863
 Cockburn, Sir William, Baronet, Lieutenant-General, 1768-1835
 Cocks, Arthur Herbert, Indian Civil Service, 1819-81

In the Amsterdam edition of 1688 he gives the texts which he had consulted and collated with a MS. in Trinity College, Cambridge. The editions enumerated are Camotiana, Casauboniana, Oporiniana, Oxoniensis, Stephanica, and Sylburgiana. Might not the Oxoniensis be the edition of 1604? Unfortunately the notes do not help, for the Oxoniensis does not seem to be once mentioned as giving a variant reading. It is possible that Duport's 'Prælectiones' (1712) may contain a mention of the edition, but I have no opportunity of consulting it.

W. C. F. ANDERSON.

A NEW YORK LIBRARY.

THE report of the New York Society Library, which has just reached us, contains several interesting features. The library was founded in 1754, but has moved with the times, being, indeed, one of the most successful and enterprising institutions of the kind existing. During the year ending March, 1905, 23,188 persons used the library, of whom 8,253 were men. So women in the "first families," which it is the pride of the library to serve, read far more than men. Messengers carried 21,625 books without any charge for delivery, and visited 6,892 houses; 30,488 books were drawn altogether. The library has made a practice of circulating volumes which other institutions class as reference books, not permitting their removal. Entire freedom of access is allowed to books in the buildings, but no loss is reported in consequence. Orders are executed by telephone or letter, so that those who cannot attend personally are not debarred from getting books. As to the books most read it is noted:—

"There is a general impression current that there is a rage for new books, and that a book several weeks old is not worth reading, and the reports of most public libraries show that their circulation has been curtailed seriously by ephemeral concerns, which advertise to furnish new books only; but the experience of the Society Library has shown that old authors are not neglected, if provided in new editions, with the best paper and type procurable. New editions of Trollope, Scott, Dickens, Richardson, Thackeray, and Disraeli, purchased within a few years, have been called for nearly as often as the 'best sellers' in fiction."

This is pleasant hearing, for certainly herculean efforts are made to push the modern novel in America, and the "three-month immortals" are so wildly praised that one might take them all for classics. Two names in this list are of special interest—Trollope and Richardson. The former, though his work is commonly dismissed as machine-made, is having a revival in England too, for his books are being reissued by more than one publisher, and they show certain characteristic and lost aspects of English life more closely than any other author. The call for Richardson is gratifying, but surprising, in New York, for he is one of the longest of writers, and achieves his effect by a seemingly infinite amount of leisurely triviality which all works up to his purpose. But you have to read a dozen pages instead of one epigram. "Long, still books," Tennyson called Richardson's, yet New York society has time to read them, though it is fortunate that, being old books, they can be kept for three weeks instead of one without fines for extra time. One cannot imagine a decently occupied person making enough leisure in a week to enjoy that long-drawn-out, but most genuine tragedy 'Clarissa.'

We are sorry to notice the recent death of Mr. Charles B. Curtis, the chairman of the library, who had been a member of the board since 1892, and paid special attention to securing art books. Volumes of this sort are placed in the Green Alcoves, and were consulted in the past year by 307 men and 453 women, the latter in this special line, it will be noticed, not so far outnumbering the rival sex as in general reading. Recent accessions include seventy-eight volumes on Egyptology, presented through the sons of the late President Henry Morton, who, it is said, selected this library because it exercises a more liberal policy in the circulation of its books than other institutions. The library is in a flourishing condition, though it does not, it appears, advertise in the daily papers. The liberality it shows seems in no way misplaced, and it has the satisfaction of boasting both traditions and modern enlightenment. Long may it flourish, or, if we may quote Horace of an eighteenth-century institution, may it resemble the older books which its readers still favour in an age of "hustle," "et hunc in annum vivat et plures."

SALE.

MESSRS. HODGSON included in their sale last week the library of the late Mr. C. C. Massey and other properties, the following being some of the chief prices realized: Ackermann's Microcosm of London, 3 vols., old morocco, 21*l.* The Kelmscott Press Chaucer, 45*l.* The Wallace Collection, by Émile Molinier, 2 vols., 16*l.* 5*s.* French Historical Memoirs, complete set, 50 vols., 12*l.* Howell's State Trials, 32 vols., 10*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* Chetham Society's Publications, first series, 116 vols., 10*l.* Knox's Liturgie, Aberdene, E. Raban, 1633, 9*l.* Illustrated Library Edition of Dickens, 30 vols., 13*l.* The copy of Thackeray's Journey from Cornhill to Grand Cairo, mentioned in our issue of April 29th, realized 17*l.* 10*s.*

Literary Gossip.

IN The Cornhill Magazine for June the approach of middle age is the main theme of the series 'From a College Window.' Two subjects of timely interest are 'Special Police Courts for Children,' by the wife of Canon Barnett, and 'Some Causes of the Japanese Victories,' by Mr. F. H. E. Cunliffe; while Miss Blanche Lascelles contributes a poem on our Eastern allies, under the title of 'The Brotherhood of Valour.' 'A Glimpse of the Exiled Stewarts,' by the Rev. W. H. Hutton, is based upon an unpublished letter of Fanny Burney's "Daddy Crisp." 'A Few Characters in a Workhouse Ward' is an anonymous study of human nature. Mr. G. A. B. Dewar discusses 'Wild Animals as Parents'; while, in 'Gastronomic Divagations,' Mr. A. I. Shand writes from the twofold point of view of the sportsman and the epicure.

MR. FISHER UNWIN will publish in the autumn a translation, by the Misses Casey, of 'Streifzüge an der Riviera,' by Prof. Strasburger, of Bonn. The book is an account of the author's impressions of the Riviera during spring trips made in the course of ten years. It is especially concerned with the botany of the region, and deals to some extent with classical references to the plants which are a striking feature of the landscapes of Italy and Provence.

THE life of Sir William Harcourt, by Mr. Harcourt, M.P., to which the daily newspapers have alluded, like that of Lord Randolph Churchill by Mr. Churchill, M.P., though certain to appear some day, is not likely to make rapid progress. The bulk of the papers to be dealt with in each case is considerable, and much time will of necessity be needed.

THE Senate of the University of Cambridge has now passed the necessary Graces for the foundation of the Leslie Stephen Lectureship in the University, the endow-

AN UNKNOWN EDITION OF THEOPHRASTUS.

Burghfield, Mortimer, R.S.O., May 8th, 1905.

DR. GALE, Dean of York, included Theophrastus in his 'Opuscula Mythologica, Physica et Ethica, Græce et Latine.'

ment of which has been subscribed by the late Sir Leslie Stephen's friends. The main regulations adopted by the Senate provide that the lecturer be appointed biennially by the Vice-Chancellor, the Master of Trinity Hall, the Knightbridge Professor of Moral Philosophy, and the Regius Professor of Modern History; that the first appointment be made in Michaelmas Term, 1906; that the lecturer deliver one lecture in the Senate House, or some other University building, or Trinity Hall; and that it be on some literary subject, "including therein criticism, biography, and ethics."

MESSRS. SOTHEY'S sale on June 1st and two following days will include the nautical library, with his log-books, of the Duke of Clarence, afterwards William IV., some interesting autograph letters of Garrick, and some important Americana. A recently discovered portrait of Thackeray, done about 1840, by L. Poyet, and reproduced in the Dent edition of 'The Roundabout Papers,' is among the miscellaneous lots of interest. There are also a very fine perfect and clean copy of the Countess of Pembroke's translation of 'The Tragedie of Antonie,' 1595, of excessive rarity; and some valuable illuminated manuscripts, notably a book of Horæ, circa 1489, with twenty-two full-size richly painted and illuminated miniatures, and two miniature paintings of the Nativity and the Crucifixion, executed en grisaille, which recall Simon Bening, the Bruges miniaturist, who died in 1561.

In Chambers's Journal for June, besides the usual instalments of fiction, there will be an account of 'An Old-World Scottish Service Member,' by the Rev. Canon Tetley, based upon extracts from the diaries of Sir Andrew Leith-Hay, M.P. for the Elgin Burghs. In 'The Rural Exodus' the Rev. Reginald A. Gatty gives examples and anecdotes of the condition of rural England as seen in and around Rotherham. An article on 'The Railway Bookstall' traces the rise and development of the bookstall system under Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, Messrs. John Menzies & Co. in Scotland, and Messrs. Edson in Ireland. Mr. John B. Drayton presents some curious 'Experiences on Juries and in Law Courts.' In 'An Atlantic Oasis' the Bermudas are described. 'An Island Prison in the Forth' gives the story of the Bass Rock; while other articles are 'A Lady Tramp in India,' by Miss Margaret Innes Pollock, and 'Notes on Memory,' by J. Cater, M.D.

In Temple Bar for June Mr. Michael Barrington discusses 'The Philosophy of Aubrey de Vere,' and Mr. Benjamin Taylor 'The Housing Question.' Mrs. Choate Prince writes on 'Rooms that I have Loved' in her American homes; and Miss D. M. Jones, in 'A Saint at the Court of Charles II.,' gives a sketch of Margaret Godolphin and her friendship for John Evelyn.

By permission of the Dean and Chapter of St. Saviour's Cathedral, Southwark, the window designed and made by Mr. John La Farge, of New York, and presented to the cathedral by the American Ambassador as a memorial of John Harvard, founder of Harvard University, will be unveiled by the Ambassador and dedicated next Monday.

THE Librarian of Congress, in accordance with the suggestion in the recent report of the Senate Committee on Patents, is about to call a conference of those interested in copyright revision. The views thus obtained will be utilized in drafting a revised code of copyright law, which is much desired by other nations. The United States still holds aloof from the Berne Convention.

THE Royal Society of Canada is holding its meetings in Ottawa between May 22nd and 25th. Mr. Benjamin Shutte will deliver the Presidential address on the subject of the 'Transfer of Canada to England, 1760-3,' and the Hon. Sydney Fisher, M.P., will lecture on 'Our Western Neighbour, Japan.' An evening is to be devoted to 'The Songs of the Voyageurs on the Lakes and Rivers of Canada in Early Days,' while Abbé Camille Roy, in the French Literature Section, will submit a paper on 'Our Literature from 1800 to 1830.' Under English literature, one of the papers by Mr. R. C. Archibald will contain a 'Bibliography of the Life and Works of Simon Newcomb.'

MR. J. A. REID writes:—

"In your notice of the selection of letters entitled 'Do We Believe?' your reviewer writes: 'The better scientific agnostics did not intervene in this popular correspondence, so that it is not fair to compare the utterances of a trained thinker like the Dean of Westminster with most of those who wrote on the side of unbelief or doubt.' May I say that your reviewer's comment is hardly true? for I noticed that Mr. Edward Clodd wrote a temperately worded letter from the scientific agnostic point of view (his letter was not republished), and doubtless others intervened whose letters were not published. The question cannot be shirked much longer by public men."

We are glad to publish our correspondent's letter. No creed worth believing needs to be protected by the suppression of attack against it.

MANY influential members of the press have suggested that advantage should be taken of the Diamond Jubilee of 'The Newspaper Press Directory' to recognize Mr. Walter Wellsman's services, not only in connexion with the invaluable 'Directory,' but also on the many occasions in which his unique knowledge of matters connected with the newspaper world has been readily and freely communicated. To carry out the object, a meeting is to be held of those who wish to co-operate at Stationers' Hall on Tuesday next at three o'clock.

SIR HORACE BROOKS MARSHALL will preside at the anniversary festival of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution, to be held at De Keyser's Royal Hotel on Tuesday evening, October 24th.

A COMMITTEE of leading men in Düsseldorf, the native place of Heine, intend to raise a national memorial to him, said to be the first in Germany, which has treated her great man very cavalierly on account of his opinions.

HEINRICH NITSCHMANN, whose death took place recently in Elbing in his seventy-ninth year, was the author of several important works on Polish literature, and ranked high as a translator from that language.

THE June number of Macmillan's Magazine contains an article on 'Henry Hudson, Navigator,' by Mr. W. J. Fletcher; one on 'Cathedrals Old and New,' by Mr. H. B. Philpott; and a paper on 'The Barons of the Cinque Ports,' by Mr. M. F. Johnston. 'Hospitals and Medical Schools' are dealt with by Mr. E. J. Prior; Major Kennion writes on 'Sport in the Hindoo Koosh'; and S. G. Tallentyre's fourth article on 'The Fellow-Workers of Voltaire' takes Grimm as its subject.

THE Readers' Dinner went off very well last Saturday, and the subscription list reached 230*l.*, to go towards a fourth pension. Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins, who presided, thought that Mr. Collins, in his 'Author and Printer,' was too profuse in commas. Mr. Hawkins is, clearly, a pattern proof-reader, but the ordinary author often neglects such things, and simplifies punctuation by putting dashes everywhere, so that he needs instruction.

RECENT Parliamentary Papers include a Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission on the Manuscripts of Lady Du Cane (2*s.* 6*d.*); the Annual Report on the Finances of the University of Glasgow (3*d.*); and the Annual Report of Proceedings under Acts relating to Sea Fisheries, England and Wales, 1903 (8*d.*).

SCIENCE

AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY.

Publications of the Bureau of American Ethnology.—Twenty-First Annual Report to the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution for 1899-1900.—Twenty-Second Report for 1900-1901. Parts I. and II. (Washington, Government Printing Office.)—The "letter of transmittal" which heads the Twenty-First Report is signed "J. W. Powell," and is the last which will bear his signature. That of the Twenty-Second Report is signed "W. J. McGee, Acting Director," and, by a curious clerical error, is dated July 1st, 1899, instead of 1901.

The Twenty-First Report contains a map on which the progress made by the Bureau during the year to which it relates is indicated by colour. From Costa Rica for office work, and Jamaica and Porto Rico for field work, the Department extended its energies as far as Yukon river in the north, and from Washington State in the Pacific to Cape Breton in the Atlantic. Its zeal for ethnological work far transcended the bounds of the Union. The field operations mentioned in the Twenty-Second Report likewise extended into British Columbia and Ontario, as well as into several parts of Mexico.

The first of the accompanying papers to the Twenty-First Report is by Dr. J. W. Fewkes on certain supernatural beings of the Hopi Indian pantheon known as Katsinas. It is illustrated by sixty-two coloured plates, drawn by native artists, representing 250 of these beings. They show considerable ability in painting. The Katsinas represent gods or ancestral spirits, personated by dresses and masks, and are very numerous. Those figured are arranged in the order of the calendar adopted by the Hopis, which begins in our November with a new fire ceremony, and includes a great number of festivals, some of them lasting for nine days each. In each festival the ceremonies are performed by a society of priests. The first ceremony illustrated is a dance celebrated in our January, dramatizing the return of the sun. The sun-god has a horizontal dumb-bell-shaped design across a green face, a long protuberant snout, and symbols of rain-clouds attached to each side of the head. In this ceremony a number of other characters were personated, wearing masks and bearing other attributes, and performing dances and ritual observances. As to all these, and the proceedings at the other ceremonies of the Hopi year, Dr. Fewkes gives ample information, in part derived from his own observation, in part from the statements of native artists, which he took occasion to verify by questioning other natives.

The second accompanying paper to the Twenty-First Report is the first part of a treatise by Mr. J. N. B. Hewitt on Iroquoian cosmology, and contains a comparison of three texts of the legend: the first, an Onondaga version, obtained from John Buck, a chief of that tribe on the Grand River reservation, Canada; the second, a Seneca version, obtained from John Armstrong, of mixed blood, on the Cattaraugus reservation, State of New York; the third, a Mohawk version, obtained from Seth Newhouse, of that tribe, on the Grand River reservation in Canada. The three texts are alike in their main incidents. Man-beings dwell in the sky; they go to hunt, and visit a woman-being; some time afterwards it becomes manifest that she will give birth to a child. The man-being falls ill, dies, and is buried in a high place. The child of the woman visits the tomb, and is acknowledged by the deceased as his child. He tells her to marry a chief who lives in a lodge beside a tree, the blossoms of which make the light of the world. He prescribes to her tests of work and of endurance, which she fulfils, marries the chief, and, catching his breath, gives birth in her turn to a child. She and her child are pushed into the abyss, and arrive on earth, where the child is again born. This paper is illustrated by a portrait of John Buck, and by portraits of six Cayuga chiefs from Canada, including William Wedge, the head chief; William Henry Fishcarrier, aged eighty-eight; and William Sandy, born Fishcarrier, a warrior.

Dr. J. W. Fewkes is author also of the first paper in the Twenty-Second Report, in which he describes two summers' work in Pueblo ruins, in Arizona, in 1896 and 1897. In this State extensive native villages have been deserted and are in ruins, possibly from the inability of the Hopi people to defend them against hostile tribes, possibly from failure of the crops through want of rain, or from the prevalence of insect enemies. From these deserted villages and their cemeteries Dr. Fewkes and his companions collected nearly three thousand specimens. After his work on the ruins, he visited some of the existing settlements, and has already communicated to the Sixteenth and Nineteenth Reports of the Bureau his observations on the dances and ceremonies still performed there. His paper is illustrated by twenty photographic views of the scenery and ruins, and by fifty plates and one hundred and twenty figures representing the objects collected. Among these may be mentioned a beautifully worked figure of a frog in mosaic, a unique specimen, found at Chave's Pass, so called from a white man who was killed by Apaches close by. Other fine objects in mosaic work, such as earrings and gorgets in turquoise, were also found.

The pottery collected was of every variety of form and decoration, from the coarse unpolished ware upwards. It included several bird forms, such as are not often found in ancient ruins, and a few human figures, one vase being ornamented with a line of human footprints leading from a figure of which the head and arms alone are shown to one in which the legs and body alone are seen.

The second paper in Part I. of the Twenty-Second Report is by Dr. Cyrus Thomas, and is supplementary to his paper on the Mayan calendar systems published in the Nineteenth Report, bringing down the investigation there made to the present state of knowledge by the aid of Mr. A. P. Maudslay's great work, the 'Biologia Centrali-Americana,' in which are furnished for the first time drawings of the inscriptions at Quirigua. This paper is illustrated by coloured facsimiles of four plates from the Dresden codex, and Dr. Thomas suggests that the writer of that codex was of a mathematical turn of mind, and that many of the long series he has given are steps of calculation in finding the lapse of time between widely separated dates, for amusement or mystical purposes.

Part II. of the Twenty-Second Report is wholly occupied by a paper by Miss Alice C. Fletcher on the Hako, a Pawnee ceremony. The Bureau of Ethnology and Miss Fletcher are to be congratulated on the publication of this perfect record of a typical aboriginal ceremony. English students are familiar with her researches among the Omaha tribes, who used a similar ritual to that of the Pawnees; but the one man who knew all about it died, and further inquiry in that direction became useless. She accordingly sought to establish with the Pawnees the same excellent relations which she had so long held with the Omahas, and gained material assistance in that endeavour from Mr. James R. Murie, an educated member of the Pawnee tribe. By this means an absolutely full account of the ceremonies was obtained from the Kúrahus, or guardian of the sacred rites. This man, Tahirussawichi, who was about seventy years of age, had devoted his life to the study and practice of these ceremonies, and furnished Miss Fletcher, at intervals extending over four years, with a complete version of the songs and other observances, and with a full explanation of their symbolical meaning as understood by him. Gramophone records were taken of all the songs, and the music has been transcribed from the cylinders by Mr. Edwin H. Tracy, who has verified his transcription by obtaining an actual repetition of the songs from the Kúrahus. Miss Fletcher has added a rhythmical rendering of the songs.

The expression "hako" is used to describe the whole of the articles employed in the ceremony, which are two feathered stems of ash wood from which the pith is burnt out; an ear of white corn; three sticks of plane tree; owl and eagle feathers; the heads of two woodpeckers; the head, neck, and breast of two ducks; a wild cat skin; fat from a consecrated deer or buffalo; an oriole's nest; and other objects. These are figured in eight coloured plates, and the arrangement of the lodges during the various ritual observances in eleven diagrams.

The two feathered stems are treated by the tribe with great reverence, and always deposited on the wild cat skin when not in use. One symbolizes the sky, the other the earth. The ear of corn represents the fruitfulness of the earth, and is called "mother." This seems to indicate an origin for the ceremony among agricultural tribes, though it has been adopted by the hunting tribes. It does not appear, however, that the rites were performed at any stated time, or had any connexion with planting or harvesting. The Kúrahus explained that the hako is taken up in the spring when birds are mating, or in the summer when birds are nesting and caring for their young, or in the fall when birds are flocking, but not in the winter, when all things are asleep.

Miss Fletcher defines the purpose of the ceremony as "twofold: first, to benefit certain individuals by bringing to them the promise of children, long life, and plenty; second, to affect the social relations of those who took part in it, by establishing a bond between two distinct groups of persons, belonging to different clans, gentes, or tribes, which was to ensure between them friendship and peace."

The two feathered stems represent respectively the male and female elements, and the female takes the leading position. The proceedings begin with an invocation, in thirteen verses, of the abode of Tiráwa and of the powers subordinate to him, the father of all; then follows, at great length, the preparation of the stems, ear of corn, and other objects. The whole body of worshippers then form into procession for a journey, every incident of which is marked by its appropriate song. The journey ends in the village with which friendship is to be established, figuratively called the son.

Although the motive and method of the ceremonies relate to sex, the treatment of the theme is marvellously delicate and poetic. Unless the Kúrahus bowdlerized it for the sake of the lady, which we see no reason to suspect, there is not a trace of coarseness throughout the whole ritual. The birth of dawn is celebrated by a fine song, sung slowly and with reverent feeling, as befitting something which is very sacred, although that birth happens every day. The appearance of the morning star is welcomed with another song, and the approach of daylight with another, in which the glad shout "Day is here!" is repeated many times. A chant of welcome to "our father Sun, whose ray cometh over all the land, passeth in the lodge, us to touch and give us strength," follows. The proceedings culminate on the fourth night, which is that of the secret ceremonies, preceded by invocation of Tiráwa.

I know not if the voice of man can reach to the sky;
I know not if the mighty one will hear as I pray, &c.,

is followed by a note of triumph:—

I now know that the voice of man can reach to the sky;
I now know that the mighty one has heard as I prayed;
I now know that the gifts I ask have all been granted;
I now know that the word of old we truly have heard;
I now know that Tiráwa hearkens unto man's prayer;
I know that only good has come to you, my children.

The music is lively and appropriate.

Miss Fletcher's four years of work have been well spent in obtaining so complete an insight into the higher sentiments and ethical views of the red man. The closing words of the Kúrahus are:—

"My heart has gone out to you. I have done what has never been done before. I have given you all the songs of this ceremony and explained them to you. I never thought that I, of all my people, should be the one to give this ancient ceremony to be preserved, and I wonder over it as I sit here.....It must be that I have been preserved for this purpose, otherwise I should be lying back there among the dead."

ENGINEERING.

River, Road, and Rail: some Engineering Reminiscences. By Francis Fox. (Murray.)—An engineer whose reminiscences extend from the erection of the Great Exhibition of 1851, in Hyde Park, by his father, Sir Charles Fox, to the extension of the Rhodesia Railway by the construction of a steel arched cantilever bridge across a gorge of the Zambesi river, a short distance below the Victoria Falls, and who has had a varied experience in mining, railway construction, tunnelling, and bridge building, and gathered information from various sources and by visits to different countries, has naturally much of an interesting nature to record. His recollections, moreover, and descriptions of engineering works are related in a simple, chatty manner, and interspersed with anecdotes and incidents of travel, so that the technical information in various branches contained in the book is presented in an easy and attractive form. Being elucidated by numerous illustrations, it cannot fail to interest the general reader, who will at the same time almost unconsciously gain some insight into the mode of carrying out important public works. The book, indeed, deals more largely with the experiences of an engineer who, in pursuit of his professional avocations and recreation, has travelled in many lands, than with descriptions of engineering works, which, however, naturally come in for their fair share of notice with other events, especially in respect of the illustrations; but technical details are studiously avoided.

The chief works referred to are the Crystal Palace in Hyde Park, the Severn Tunnel, the Hawarden Bridge over the Dee, the Mersey and Simplon tunnels, and the Rhodesia Railway. The countries visited by Mr. Fox include the United States and Canada, South America, Spain, Turkey, Palestine, Egypt, and Rhodesia. The least-known and grandest feature referred to in the book is the Victoria Falls of the Zambesi, discovered by Dr. Livingstone in 1855, which are represented from different points of view in several illustrations. They have a sheer fall of 400 feet, and a width of overfall in flood time of about 4,000 feet, or two and a half times the drop of the Falls of Niagara, and double their width. Two plans of the Niagara and Victoria Falls are placed side by side for comparison, with their respective rivers and rapids for a short distance above and below, which show that though, owing to a peculiar conformation, the Victoria Falls are much the wider, the rapids above are very similar in width; whilst the Zambesi is much narrower below its Falls, and flows through a much longer gorge than the Niagara river. The map, however, of the Niagara Falls is somewhat out of date, and incorrect as regards the bridge spanning the river, just below the Falls, between Niagara Falls on the American side and Clifton on the Canadian side, for it is called on the map "Suspension Foot Bridge"; whereas the suspension bridge erected in 1868, and widened in 1886, was a roadway bridge with a footpath on each side, and was replaced in 1898 by a steel arched bridge with a span of 840 ft. The railway bridge at the Victoria Falls, built out from each side and recently successfully joined in the centre, forming a link in the proposed Cape to Cairo railway, though it crosses the narrow gorge with a span of only 500 ft., is at a much greater height above the river, and a more graceful structure than the Niagara Falls bridge, with its much larger span. The work which is described at greatest length in the book, with several illustrations, is the Simplon Tunnel, which, with a length of  $12\frac{1}{4}$  miles, is much the longest of the Alpine tunnels, and, penetrating to a depth of 7,005 ft. below the surface, has been exposed to a considerably greater internal heat in construction than even the St. Gothard Tunnel, which reaches a depth of 5,598 ft. below the surface, with a length of  $9\frac{1}{2}$  miles. The Simplon Tunnel is of special interest at the present time, on account of its exceptional length and the heat already noticed, necessitating the adoption of special means of ventilation and cooling at the faces during the work; the difficulties and delays experienced by the irruption of hot springs of large volume; and the recent successful junction of the two headings, carried forward from each end at a comparatively rapid rate, in spite of serious obstacles.

Life as an Engineer: its Lights, Shades, and Prospects. By J. W. C. Haldane. (New York, Spon & Chamberlain; London, E. & F. N. Spon.)—This book forms a fitting complement to the previous one; for whereas the first relates to constructive engineering, this one deals mainly with the author's practice and knowledge of mechanical engineering, though reference is made to general engineering works in the introductory chapter on 'Civil Engineering as It Was and Is,' and also in one of the final chapters on 'Varied Sketches of Engineering Life'; and two chapters in the middle of the book are devoted to the various stages in railway construction, as illustrated by the description of the making of a railway on an imaginary island in the Pacific, which has figured in a previous book of the author's. Mr. Haldane gives a graphic account of his experiences as an apprentice in engineering workshops, with brief descriptions of the machines in ordinary use; a sketch of his life on the staff of Messrs. Laird Bros., of Birkenhead, with references to the means of education for, and the methods of entering, the engineering profession; the difficulties attending his start in an independent position as a consulting engineer; and an account of his varied experiences in private practice. The very extensive workshops of the London and North-Western Railway Company at Crewe, in which all kinds of railway plant, machinery, and appliances are constructed and repaired, are described in considerable detail in five chapters, as furnishing a foremost instance of mechanical engineering practice; whilst the works of Sir Joseph Whitworth & Co. near Manchester, and of Sir W. G. Armstrong & Co. at Elswick, somewhat briefly referred to, are concerned with a different class of engineering manufactures, such as machine-tools, firearms, big guns, armour-plates, vessels of war, and hydraulic machinery. A chapter is devoted to a rapid sketch of the 'Rise and Progress of Steam Navigation,' from the first boat impelled by steam at five miles an hour on Dalswinton Loch in 1788, up to recently built torpedo-boats in the English navy, fitted with steam turbines, and attaining a speed of forty-two knots an hour; whilst another chapter refers to water-tube boilers, gas and oil engines, and electrical engineering. The book contains thirty illustrations of a great variety of machines, and views of three notable vessels, namely, the Comet, the first steamer launched on the Clyde in 1812; the Amazon, destroyed by fire on her first voyage in 1852; and the River Clyde turbine steamer Queen Alexandra. The style of the book is light and somewhat discursive, and the author avoids, for the most part, engineering technicalities, with the object of rendering the book acceptable to general readers. Though, however, Mr. Haldane keeps more closely to his subject than Mr. Fox, who diversifies his references to large public works by anecdotes and incidents which have nothing to do with engineering, it is probable that general readers, and even young men who contemplate becoming engineers, will find Mr. Fox's book the more attractive on account of its discursiveness, and its descriptions of works of more general interest. But the last chapter of Mr. Haldane's book will serve as a useful warning against entering, without due consideration, and in the absence of special aptitudes or advantages, an overcrowded profession in preference to embarking on a pioneer's life in an undeveloped colony, such as the western parts of Canada, with its healthy occupations, its freedom, and its good prospects of advancement and prosperity, which Mr. Haldane strongly advocates.

The Strategy of Great Railroads. By Frank H. Spearman. (Harper & Brothers.)—Under the above title Mr. Spearman describes the origin, extension, and management of the principal railroad systems of the United States, showing by the aid of maps the territory which they respectively serve with their various ramifications. Ten groups of lines are successively considered under their distinctive names, with the exception of the Wabash system, which is headed 'The Fight for Pittsburg'; and the book concludes with three general chapters on 'The Rebuilding of an American Railroad,' 'The First Trans-Continental Railroad,' and 'The Early Days in Railroad,' which last, from its title, would appear to be more appropriate for commencing than terminating the volume.

The Vanderbilt lines, or more strictly the New York Central lines, are placed first on account of their extent of 12,000 miles, combined with the very populous and thriving districts which they serve, containing more than half the people, and those the most energetic portion, of the United States; and they have hitherto been the only system with a terminal station in New York, which has been managed by carrying the line along the east side of the Hudson River, and thus avoiding the difficult problem of crossing it till it has narrowed considerably at Albany, where the line turns westward, after a branch line has diverged eastwards to Boston. The main lines passing by Buffalo and Cleveland extend westwards to Chicago, south-west to St. Louis on the Mississippi, and further south to Cairo at the confluence of the Ohio; whilst a regular network of lines serves the territory comprised between Detroit, Chicago, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, and Cleveland; and important branches run north to Montreal and to Mackinaw City at the junction of lakes Huron and Michigan, and south to Pittsburg and New Haven, to Wheeling, and to Louisville. The Pennsylvania system provides for the traffic of a somewhat similar district to the New York Central, lying between New York and Chicago and St. Louis, extending to lakes Ontario, Erie, and Michigan on the north, and the Ohio River on the south; but whilst reaching some of the same lake-shore towns as the New York Central, such as Buffalo, Erie, Cleveland, Toledo, and even Mackinaw City, its main line, instead of following the lake shore, starts from Jersey City, awaiting the completion of the Hudson River tunnel, and passes westwards through Trenton and Philadelphia, across the Alleghanies to Pittsburg, diverging somewhat northwards to Chicago, and southwards to St. Louis; whilst a western line goes direct to the Mississippi at Keokuk. Moreover, the Pennsylvania system serves quite a separate district to the south of New York, extending down to Washington and Cape Charles, with numerous ramifications; whilst, on the other hand, its network of lines in its western section is less extensive than that of the New York Central, and does not extend north of Toledo; and these two lines together dominate the north-eastern and chief industrial portion of the United States.

The Harriman lines, 17,000 miles in length, serve the territory west of the Mississippi, and extend to the Pacific; they comprise the Union or Central Pacific, running from a connexion with the Alton line at Omaha, on the Missouri, due west through Ogden, and across part of the Great Salt Lake to Sacramento and San Francisco, with a line from Kansas City passing through Denver and joining the main line at Cheyenne, and with a branch further on diverging northwards to Portland, near the Pacific coast; and also the Southern Pacific, going from New Orleans, with a branch from Galveston to Los Angeles, and skirting the Pacific coast to San Francisco; whilst a line extends north to Portland, and there are numerous branches to places off the main routes. The Hill lines, so called after their organizer, like the Vanderbilt, Harriman, and Gould lines, lie entirely to the west of Chicago, their starting-points being Duluth, at the head of Lake Superior, Chicago, and St. Louis; and they put each of these centres of trade in communication with ports on the Pacific by two different routes. Thus St. Louis and Chicago are connected with Denver by the Burlington Railroads, and thereby reach the Union Pacific with its terminus at San Francisco; and St. Louis is also joined to the Northern Pacific Railroad by the Burlington Railroad to Billings, and Chicago by the Mississippi Valley Railroad passing through St. Paul; whilst Duluth is connected with the Northern Pacific by the Northern Pacific Railroad, and also by the Great Northern Railroad further north, constructed by Mr. Hill, the first Pacific line made without Government assistance. The Wabash system, which runs from Buffalo along the north side of Lake Erie by Detroit to Chicago, and thence down to St. Louis and on to Kansas City, with northern branches to Des Moines and Omaha, and with a line going east by Toledo to Pittsburg, forms really a section of the Gould lines, but has been dealt with in a separate chapter, on account of the fierce struggle with the Pennsylvania system, about four years ago, to obtain a terminus in Pittsburg, so as to share its unrivalled trade. The Wabash system, indeed, forms merely the eastern portion of the Gould lines, which include a northern branch to Frankfort, and extend west to Salt Lake City and Ogden, south to New Orleans and Galveston, and south-west to Laredo and to El Paso, both on the Rio Grande, at the frontier of Mexico, with innumerable ramifications, especially in Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Arkansas, and Texas.

The four remaining groups of lines described all start westwards from Chicago. Two of them—namely, the Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul Railway, and the Chicago and North-Western Railway—provide for the territory to the west of Lake Michigan and up to Lake Superior; but whereas the first does not extend beyond the Missouri River, but goes south to Kansas City, the latter crosses the Missouri into Nebraska, and extends to Casper, in Wyoming, and to the north-west corner of South Dakota, but does not go much south of Omaha. The Rock Island system serves the districts lying to the south-west of Chicago; for, with the exception of northern lines to Minneapolis, and to Sioux Falls and Watertown in South Dakota, the lines stretch south to Evansville on the Ohio, and to St. Louis, Memphis, and Birmingham, south-west to Dallas and Brady in Texas, and more west to El Paso, and westwards to Denver and Pueblo. The fourth of these western lines from Chicago—namely, the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe system—though with fewer branches than the other three, except in Kansas, takes a much wider range, for it runs right across the Western States from Chicago to San Francisco, and to Los Angeles and San Diego; whilst branches stretch northwards to Denver, and southwards to El Paso and Galveston.

The New York Central and the Pennsylvania lines serve the eastern half of the United States; the Gould lines serve the central and southern portion, extending from Buffalo and Pittsburg to Ogden and to Galveston; and the remainder of the systems serve the eastern portion, some of them reaching the Pacific, and two of them also stretching south to Galveston; whilst all of them are in connexion with Chicago, owing to its unrivalled position at the head of the Great Lakes, and most of them with St. Louis, situated in the centre of the States, and on their greatest river waterway. Though the most important of these systems surpass not only the British railway systems, but also most of the continental lines, in their extent and the traffic they carry, the most marked feature in their development and control is the personal influence one or two men have exercised in each case on their fortunes, especially in the initial stages of amalgamation and reconstruction; and whilst Mr. Spearman refers to the great distances covered by these lines, and the bulk of the ever-increasing goods which they carry, he is evidently more interested in the wonderful energy and resource displayed by the creators of these systems as they at present exist, and the vigilance with which they watch the varying conditions of the traffic on their lines, and provide for its efficient conveyance by improvements. These are the special features of American railroad management, about which much information may be gathered from this book. Though the history of these railroad systems contains accounts of far-reaching amalgamations and extensions, no trans-continental line in the United States has hitherto been brought under a single control, as accomplished by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and as arranged to be effected by the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

M. SÉBILLOT has succeeded M. Deniker as President of the Society of Anthropology of Paris. The new president is distinguished in folk-lore. Dr. Pozzi, who was president in 1888, is to be presented with a medal on the occasion of his presiding over the Congress of Surgery, and being promoted to the rank of Commander of the Legion of Honour. The Broca Prize has been awarded to MM. Launois and Roy for their biological study of gigantism. Very honourable mention has been accorded to M. Demonet for a manuscript essay on the vital capacity in relation to sex and certain dimensions of the body.

M. Charles François has contributed to the Society an interesting paper on the Lo-lo of Kien-chang, an indigenous independent tribe occupying the mountainous country bordered by the river Kin-sha-Kiang, in the province of Sze-Chuan, Southern China. These people are ruled by their own chiefs, and differ materially from their Chinese neighbours—their features are more regular, their cheeks not prominent, their jaws not prognathous, their physique superior. They are exceedingly dirty in their habits, and never wash.

M. Zaborowski—in a paper on the races of primitive Egypt, according to Messrs. Flinders Petrie, J. Kollmann, and Chantre—maintains, against Herr Kollmann, the exclusively dolichocephalic character of the early Egyptian racial types, and repels the idea of a negro element. M. Zaborowski is responsible also for a paper on the Neolithic sepulchres of Chamblandes, in Switzerland, with contracted skeletons enclosed in stone, which he attributes to the later Neolithic period; and for an elaborate treatise on the origin of the Slavs.

Other important communications published by the same Society are by M. Francesco Cosentini on recent anthropological research and genetic sociology; by Dr. Guibert on mental evolution, its apogee and its laws; and by M. de la Mazelière on the evolution of the Japanese family, especially with regard to the customs and institutions which are maintained, and those of which the influence is still sensible. The author remarks that it is only with the aid of historical method that a social formation so complex as the Japanese family of the present day can be understood.

A Portuguese Folk-lore Society has been established for the study of popular traditions, and appeals to English folk-lore students for contributions to the library it proposes to form. The secretary is M. Alfredo F. de Faria, 199, Rua Formosa, Porto-Portugal. There can be no doubt that a society in Portugal will have a rich and unworked field of traditions to investigate, and we heartily wish the new society success.

The International Institute of Sociology, established at Paris, of which Prof. Gustav Schmoller, of Berlin, is the President, has accepted an invitation of the Sociological Society, supported by the University of London, to hold its next congress in London in July, 1906. The subject for discussion is social conflicts, to be studied under their biological, economical, political, mental, and other aspects.

The Anthropological Institute has issued as an occasional publication the important papers by Prof. D. J. Cunningham on 'The Alleged Physical Deterioration of the People,' by Mr. J. Gray on 'The Utility to Science and the State of an Anthropometric Survey,' and by Dr. Shrubsall on 'The Physical Characters of Hospital Patients compared with those of Healthy Individuals from the same Area,' read before the British Association at Cambridge, with a report of the discussion, in which the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, Sir John Gorst, Mrs. Watt Smyth, Dr. Ridolfo Livi, of Rome, and others took part.

SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—May 11.—Lord Avebury, President, in the chair.—The President announced that he had appointed Lord Dillon to be a Vice-President.—Sir John Evans exhibited a small salt-cellar of Lambeth ware, bearing the arms of the Company of Parish Clerks and the date 1644. This date, he showed, coincided with the sale of all the Company's silver plate, and it is conjectured that the salt exhibited was one of a number of cheap examples made to replace the metal salts.—Mr. A. Hartshorne read some notes on the lately discovered figure of Richard, Lord Grey of Ruthin, from the brass of Sir Hugh Hastings at Elsing, Norfolk. The figure itself was also exhibited, through the kindness of the Fitzwilliam Museum Syndicate.—Mr. Mill Stephenson read some notes on palimpsest brasses, with reference to a number of examples lately discovered.

STATISTICAL.—May 16.—Sir Francis Sharp Powell, President, in the chair.—A paper entitled 'The Effect, as shown by Statistics, of British Statutory Regulations directed to the Improvement of the Hygienic Conditions of Industrial Occupations' was read by Mr. Leonard Ward, H.M. Inspector of Factories.

ZOOLOGICAL.—May 2.—Dr. W. T. Blanford, V.P., in the chair.—The Secretary exhibited three large photographs, presented to the Society by Mr. Howard B. Turner, of hippopotamuses swimming in a river in their native haunts.—Mr. R. E. Holding exhibited and made remarks on a series of antlers, of the first year, of the roebuck, red-deer, fallow-deer, and wapiti.—Mr. R. I. Pocock exhibited and made remarks on a specimen of the Spanish tarantula, Lycosa hispanica, that had died in the Society's gardens.—Mr. W. Bateson exhibited a series of specimens of domestic chicks to illustrate peculiarities in the hereditary transmission of white plumage.—Mr. G. R. Alford communicated a paper by Prof. E. A. Minchin, entitled 'On Leucosolenia contorta (Bowerbank), Ascandra contorta, Haeckel, and Ascetta spinosa, Lendenfeld.' The author pointed out that the nomenclature of the Calcarea Homocœla was in a more tangled state than that of any other group of the animal kingdom, with, perhaps, the exception of the malarial parasites. Dr. Bowerbank, who founded the species, gave a diagnosis that would fit any Ascon, and his type specimens were jumbles of three or four species; consequently Prof. Minchin declared his name to be of no systematic value whatever. To Haeckel's name Ascandra contorta Prof. Minchin referred a sponge extremely abundant on the Mediterranean coasts of France. Haeckel also pointed out that Dr. Bowerbank's diagnosis was not definitive of the species, and diagnosed the species by details of spiculation. In this he was incorrect in saying the monaxons were possessed of lance-head distal ends, and that gastral rays of the quadriradiates "curved." Prof. Minchin preferred to name Ascandra contorta, H., as Clathrina contorta. He showed that the monaxon spicules were very variable—so much so as to explain the name Ascetta spinosa, Len. Having examined a slide labelled Ascetta spinosa in Lendenfeld's handwriting, and having found the triradiate systems exactly similar to those of the true contorta, he came to the conclusion that the Ascetta spinosa was only an age variation of Clathrina contorta, not yet possessing monaxon spicules.—Mr. F. E. Beddard read some notes on the anatomy of the ferret-badger (Helictis personata), based on a dissection of a specimen that had recently died in the Society's gardens.—Mr. W. P. Pycraft read a paper on the osteology of the Eurylæmidae, and briefly discussed the question of the systematic position of this group. The pterylography, osteology, and myology of the Eurylæmidae all tended to show that the nearest allies of these birds were the Cotingidae. Although undoubtedly primitive, the group, Mr. Pycraft pointed out, presented a number of specialized characters, which were most marked in the skull and muscles of the wing.

METEOROLOGICAL.—May 17.—Capt. D. Wilson-Barker, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. R. Strachan read a paper on 'The Measurement of Evaporation.' He pointed out that rainfall, evaporation, and percolation are related to each other, and that rainfall is commonly considered to form the sum of evaporation and percolation. If two of these quantities are found by experiment or observation, the other is assumed to be known. This, however, does not always hold good. A month may be very dry, and still evaporation will go on at the expense of previous percolation. A month may be excessively wet; then there may be another item to take into account, viz., overflow. As it is unfortunately not possible to make evaporation and percolation the subject of experiment, except at a very few observatories, the author thinks it is desirable to be able to estimate, even empirically, the probable amounts of each. By using the meteorological data published for the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, he has calculated the probable evaporation for the year 1898, which agrees very closely with the observed evaporation at Camden Square and also at Croydon.—A paper by Dr. John Ball, of Cairo, 'On a Logarithmic Slide-rule for reducing Readings of the Barometer to Sea-level,' was read by the Secretary. This has been devised for the purpose of saving the time and labour usually occupied in working out the corrections from the 'International Meteorological Tables.'

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—May 9.—Dr. A. C. Haddon, V.P., in the chair.—Lieut.-Col. C. Delmé-Radcliffe read a paper on 'Some Tribes of the Uganda Protectorate,' illustrated by numerous slides of the peoples, animals, and scenery, and a large and interesting collection of ethnographical specimens, including spears, shields, and other weapons. Col. Radcliffe described the customs of the natives with whom he came in contact, including the Kavirondo and other tribes on the shores of the Victoria Nyanza and the Acholi in the Nile Province.

MATHEMATICAL.—May 11.—Prof. A. R. Forsyth, President, in the chair.—Mr. W. M. Roberts was admitted into the Society.—The following papers were communicated:—'On the Intersections of two Conic Sections,' by Mr. J. A. H. Johnston,—and 'On a System of Conics yielding Operators which annihilate a Cubic and its Bearing on the Reduction of the Cubic to a Sum of Four Cubes,' by Mr. H. G. Dawson.—Informal communications were made as follows:—'High Pellian Factorizations,' by Lieut.-Col. A. Cunningham,—and 'The Stability of a Loaded Column,' by Prof. A. E. H. Love.

PHYSICAL.—May 12.—Dr. C. Chree, V.P., in the chair.—Dr. A. D. Denning described a simple method of determining the radiation constant, suitable for a laboratory experiment.—Prof. H. L. Callendar read a paper on 'A Bolometer for the Absolute Measurement of Radiation.'—Mr. W. H. Price read a paper on the results of experiments carried out at Crompton's works at Chelmsford, by Mr. C. H. Wright, on the possibility of using the resistance of a conductor heated by an alternating electric current as a measure of the current.

HELLENIC.—May 9.—Prof. C. Waldstein in the chair.—Prof. P. Gardner read a paper on 'The Apoxyomenos and Lysippos,' in which he maintained that the well-known 'Apoxyomenos' of the Vatican cannot, in the face of recent discoveries, and especially of the Agias statue at Delphi, be any longer regarded as a trustworthy indication of the style of Lysippos.—In the discussion which followed Dr. Waldstein and Prof. Ernest Gardner took part.

CHALLENGER.—May 10.—Prof. D'A. W. Thompson in the chair.—Mr. Stanley W. Kemp and Dr. W. T. Calman were elected Fellows.—Dr. Wolfenden exhibited and made remarks on a new species of Tuscarusa from the North Atlantic.—Dr. H. N. Dickson summarized the results of observations on the temperature and salinity of the water of the North Atlantic, made during two cruises of Dr. Wolfenden's yacht Silver Belle in the summers of 1903-4. In 1900-2 much valuable work had been done by Dr. Wolfenden in the Faeroe Channel, but as this area lay within the field of the International Council for the Study of the Sea he worked in 1903 further out in the Atlantic, to the west of Ireland, and at the entrance to the Faeroe Channel south of the Wyville-Thomson Ridge, the observations connecting directly with those of the International Council in the Channel itself and in the Norwegian Sea during the August cruises. The work in 1904 was more directly concerned with the general oceanic movements of Atlantic waters: a line of soundings was run from the south-west of Ireland to the Azores, thence into the Mediterranean through the Straits of Gibraltar, and thence to the English Channel. Dr. Dickson illustrated the observations by diagrams of temperature and salinity along the sections, and discussed the considerable light thrown on the behaviour of the Easterly Drift on reaching the shores of Europe, the exchange of waters between the Atlantic and the Mediterranean, the volume of current in the Straits, and the extension in the Atlantic of Mediterranean water of high temperature and salinity.—In the discussion ensuing Dr. Wolfenden was warmly congratulated on the considerable results attained by so small a craft as a yawl of 130 tons, and on the admirable example which he had set to other yacht owners.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- MON. Society of Arts, 8.—'The Uses of Electricity in Mines,' Lecture II. Mr. H. Willock Ravenshaw. (Cantor Lecture.)
TUES. Society of Arts, 4½.—'The Cape to Cairo Railway,' Sir C. H. T. Metcalfe.
— Royal Institution, 5.—'The Young Velazquez,' Rev. H. G. Woods.
WED. Linnean, 3.—Anniversary Meeting.
— British Numismatic, 8.
— Geological, 8.—'On the Igneous Rocks occurring between St. David's Head and Strumble Head, Pembrokeshire,' Mr. James Vincent Elsdon; 'The Rhaetic and Contiguous Deposits of Glamorganshire,' and 'On the Occurrence of Rhaetic Rocks at Berron Hill, near Tewkesbury, Gloucestershire,' Mr. Lindsay Richardson.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'Modern Lightning Conductors,' Mr. Killingsworth Hedges.
THURS. Royal, 4½.
— Royal Institution, 5.—'Electro-Magnetic Waves,' Prof. J. A. Fleming.
— Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—'Wireless Telegraphy Measurements,' Messrs. W. Duddell and J. E. Taylor.
— Antiquaries, 8½.—'Notes on the Austin Priory of St. Bartholomew, West Smithfield,' Mr. E. A. Webb; 'On Two so called Votive Hands lately discovered at Tusculum and Gaeta,' Mr. F. T. Elworthy.
FRI. Physical, 3½.—'The Specific Heat of Iron at High Temperatures,' Dr. Harker; 'The Measurement of Small Inductances,' Mr. Campbell; 'Two New Optical Benches,' Mr. Selby.
— Royal Institution, 9.—'The Development of Spectro-Chemistry,' Prof. J. W. Brühl.
SAT. Royal Institution, 3.—'The Evolution of the Kingship in Early Society,' Lecture II, Dr. J. G. Frazer.

Science Gossip.

We welcome the first number of The Country-Side, a penny weekly, edited by Mr. E. Kay Robinson. The photographs are admirable, and the contents afford much of curiosity and interest to all lovers of nature. Mr. W. Watson, Curator of Kew Gardens, is answering questions connected with the garden. Authors may have their natural history discussed, a field of research which seems to proffer some amusement and needed instruction. Can hollyhocks, for instance, be blue, red, and yellow at the same time?

MR. R. C. PUNNETT has prepared a little book on 'Mendelism,' which will be published on Tuesday by Messrs. Macmillan & Bowes, of Cambridge. Its object is to give a short outline of Mendel's work on heredity, with its more recent developments, and to indicate briefly some of the general consequences that seem to flow from his discovery.

PROF. OMORI, the great Japanese authority on earthquakes, is going to India to make a personal examination of the scenes of the late Indian earthquake, more especially in the Kangra Valley.

THE Council of the Society of Arts have decided not to proceed further with the proposed amalgamation with the London Institution.

A FINE group of spots has been passing over the sun's disc this week; it was first seen on the 11th inst., and is now about half way between the centre and the western limb. As respects these phenomena and their periodicity, the solar eclipse this year will be situated similarly to that of 1883, which could be observed only on Caroline Island in the Pacific.

PROF. HALE, having undertaken the directorship of the new solar observatory on Mount Wilson, California, has resigned that of the Yerkes Observatory; his successor there is Prof. E. B. Frost. Dr. Schlesinger has succeeded Prof. Wadsworth as Director of the Allegheny Observatory, and Dr. E. O. Lovett takes the place of Prof. C. A. Young (nominated Professor Emeritus) as Professor of Astronomy at Princeton, New Jersey.

We have received No. 3 of The Publications of the West Hendon House Observatory, Sunderland, in which Mr. Backhouse gives an account of the observations of variable stars obtained there in the years 1866-1904. The former year was remarkable as that of the discovery of T Coronæ, which has been kept under observation by Mr. Backhouse from a few days after its discovery almost to the present time. Altogether the volume adds much to our knowledge of stellar variation, now one of the most interesting in astronomy. In many of the cases here dealt with the amount of this is small. Except in the case of T Coronæ, the variable differs very much in colour from the comparison stars; this renders the probable error of the observations greater than in the cases of stars of the same colour, yet probably not very much greater, if care is taken that the star is far out of focus and observed in dark sky by indirect vision, each star being successively placed on the same part of the retina. When the stars are in a light sky, or in focus, ruddy stars usually appear relatively brighter than white or blue ones. Very great attention has been devoted to the subject of colour; and the author remarks that "it is very seldom that the colour of a star appears to me to be on the violet side of red." The stars are arranged in order of right ascension. Most of the observations were made at Sunderland; but some (specially stated) were obtained at other places, when the author was from home or travelling.

PROF. MAX WOLF announces a new variable in the constellation Lyra, to be called var. 59, 1905, Lyrae, which was registered on two plates taken with the Bruce telescope at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg, on the 13th ult.; it was of the tenth magnitude, and does not appear on any of the numerous plates of the region taken in previous years. Possibly it may be a Nova. Whilst searching for the small planet Velleda (No. 126), Prof. Wolf detected a small but very beautiful spiral nebula in the eastern part of the constellation Virgo. The approximate place is R.A. 13<sup>h</sup> 59<sup>m</sup>, N.P.D. 99° 40', and it is recommended that it be carefully observed with a large reflector and illumination of more than two hours. A small nebula of no special interest precedes it by a few seconds, with a declination about half a minute more southerly.

FINE ARTS

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

British Water-Colour Art as illustrated by Drawings presented to King Edward VII. by the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours. By Marcus B. Huish. (A. & C. Black.)—Mr. Huish tells again the story of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours, and of the two partially successful attempts which preceded the formation of the present Society. Naturally in doing so he has recourse to Roget's fuller work. This is succeeded by a short account of the present members of the Society, with lists of their more important works, accompanied by illustrations in the three-colour process, which are, on the whole, above the average. Of the art itself there is little to be said; it is uniformly of that prim, ladylike prettiness which never fails to attract the public. It is rarely vulgar; it is only insipid and unreal. The book ends with a complacent account of the so-called improvements in the technique of water colours, in which the contemporaries of Girtin and Cotman are praised for what they did in spite of the absence of Whatman paper. What would not a water-colour draughtsman of to-day, if we suppose him to have any perception of quality in wash-drawing, give for a sheet of Girtin's paper? We should like to know the authority for the statement that in 1783 there were only seven colours procurable for water-colour drawing. If that was so, it must have been due to a comparatively recent loss of knowledge, for from the early Middle Ages artists were perfectly well aware how to temper all their colours with a water medium.

A History of English Furniture: The Age of Oak. By Percy Macquoid, R.I. (Lawrence & Bullen.)—The completion of the first volume of Mr. Macquoid's ambitious history of English furniture renders possible a better appreciation of its scope and treatment than was practicable during its issue in parts. The design of the work may be said to be imposing. It is beautifully printed, superbly illustrated both from photographs and from coloured drawings by Mr. Shirley Slocombe, and the scale is such as to suggest a more searching and complete study than has been hitherto known.

Perhaps, by reason of the illustrations, a certain sacrifice in format has been necessary. The volume is cumbersome, and ill fits the library shelves; fits still worse the reader's knee. It is essentially a flat table book. But there are tastes which this fact will please, for Mr. Macquoid has frankly erred on the decorative side. His book is a livre de luxe, not a compendious or commodious handbook. As such it must be judged. We have pointed out before that there is some exception to be taken to the partition of the periods of furniture into the ages of oak, walnut, mahogany, and the composite age. But, roughly, this artificial separation may have its uses. The period treated in the present volume is from 1500 to 1660; which space of time is further divided into Gothic, Elizabethan, and Jacobean epochs. Furniture is practically an invention of modern times. The Middle Ages were content to get along with a minimum of domestic conveniences, and very little furniture has survived from those times. In 1480 a guild of cabinet-makers was formed, and with this revival furniture, as we know it, began to exist. Oak was the chief material. It is odd to read that deal was held in such esteem that Henry VIII. had a room panelled with it at Nonesuch, "by which he set great store." The oak chest, or coffer, is pretty much all that remains to us of the Middle Ages, except, of course, the screen-work and other work in the churches. Oak-work was then almost the exclusive produce of architecture, of which Mr. Macquoid gives us some very handsome examples. Still, the simplicity of the design on many of the oak chests in this Gothic age renders them extremely elegant. But with the destruction of feudalism and the dawn of Tudor domestic architecture furniture started on its evolutionary course. The changed circumstances of home life begot home furniture, and the progress from the days of Elizabeth was fairly rapid. Then, and for some time afterwards—indeed, we may say throughout all this age of oak—it was massive and inclined to awkwardness, if to solid dignity. Elegance had not been achieved, as a glance at this profusion of illustrations discovers. Mr. Macquoid has been fortunate enough to secure three examples of the famous Nonesuch chest, one of which he thus describes:—

"The chest is of oak, light in colour, and inlaid with two panels of marqueterie representing a building framed at the sides in narrow upright panels inlaid with small lantern-topped towers; above and below runs a frieze representing dormer windows; the whole is contained within a bead and reel inlaid border, repeated on the top and sides; the centre panel bears the initials I. C., with the date 1592. This same house in inlay work is found on many chests of this date, and represents the celebrated Palace of Nonesuch at Cheam, that Henry VIII. built for himself towards the end of his life, from the designs of the Italian painter and architect, Toto del Nuzziata, who lived over twenty years in this country."

It is melancholy to remember that this famous palace, which was inhabited later by Elizabeth, was presented by the reckless Charles II. to Barbara, Duchess of Cleveland, who outrageously pulled it to pieces "for the value of the materials." Old carved oak chests, Mr. Macquoid considers, "ceased to be made for the richer classes" about 1650, and,

"when replaced by lighter furniture, were probably sold or given away, in many instances to the servants attached to large houses on the occasion of their marriage, thus drifting into the cottages and farmhouses, where they were found constantly used as cornbins in Victorian times."

Certainly the chest erected itself in the course of development into a chest with drawers, and thus rose into greater importance.

Mr. Macquoid concludes:—

"With the Restoration the Age of Oak came to an end. The solidity and strange originality of beauty, which in so vivid and virile a manner pervaded the furniture and all art of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, gradually disappeared, giving way to more modern forms of thought, where in furniture the guiding principles consisted of constructional excellence, comfort, and, above all, what was suitable to gaiety and the joy of living. English oak furniture of Gothic, Elizabethan, and Jacobean times represented the temperament of those for whom it was made, and in endurance and solidity was typical of the people who lived in those ages."

Compton Wynyates, by the Marquis of Northampton (A. L. Humphreys), is a luxuriously printed and illustrated record of one of the finest old houses in England, which, on account of its secluded position, is still little known. It is strange to think that so exceptional a possession was in danger of being lost after 1768 as the result of the extravagance of Lord Northampton in "treating" voters in rivalry with Lord Spencer and Lord Halifax. The house was left empty, and only the zeal of an agent kept it from being pulled down. The present owner has very different ideas from his eighteenth-century ancestor, and his love and care for the old house and its surroundings are evident on every page. It could not be in better hands, and we wish we could say as much of other famous dwellings. The old brick of Compton Wynyates is one of its glories, and it is interesting to learn that an attempt was made to reproduce the colour of it, which is shown in a water-colour we own of 1858, with local clay, but without success. The house is Tudor in its main details, but the exact history of the additions since made, or, indeed, of the original plan, cannot now be recovered. The present owner has put, we think, very well all that can be said on the subject in his chapter on the 'Architecture.' Two other chapters give a short but highly interesting history of the Compton family, including an oft-printed letter of the London heiress who brought much money to her husband, an Elizabethan Lord Compton, and a good idea of herself. The owners of the house had a busy time in the Civil War, as those who know the district will guess.

The author's English is a little careless at times; otherwise his monograph is all that could be wished. We used to be shown a bloodstain; but we presume that this is not authentic. The admirable illustrations include two pictures of 'The Best Garden,' which was created some ten years ago on a plot of ground mentioned under that name by an old labourer, and a view "from the moat," which is the frontispiece. This might lead to the idea that the moat goes some way round the house, but its length is limited nowadays, and we might have been told the date at which water was reintroduced, since we learn (p. 20) that the moat was filled up in the time of Cromwell. Perhaps this phrase means partially filled up, or sufficiently filled up to prevent its being a means of defence.

Altogether, it is clear from this stately record that Compton Wynyates is more beautiful than it ever was. We should like to see it again, and hope that its use once more as a dwelling-place does not prevent a visit by properly accredited persons. The little church near by, dating from Restoration times, is worth a visit, too, and there has been no accession of railway or villa to disturb the peace and seclusion of the spot.

ENGLISH EMBROIDERY AT THE BURLINGTON FINE-ARTS CLUB.

THE exhibitions at the Club's gallery rarely fail to provoke a surprised delight at the unsuspected wealth of materials which they reveal; but we suspect that the present exhibition will arouse this feeling in an extraordinary degree. The subject is to most people an unfamiliar one, and the great rarity of specimens of "Opus Anglicanum," scattered here and there as they are in single examples, and not grouped, like most objets d'art, into more or less famous and often visited collections, has probably prevented any but a few special students from having any idea of the splendour and magnificence of English mediæval embroidery. Here at least was an art in which, by the consensus of European opinion, England held a supreme place, for the description "Opus Anglicanum," given to vestments in the cathedrals of Italy, France, and Spain, was not merely a mark of origin, but a note of admiration. From Col. Lyons's admirable introductory study in the Catalogue we gather that this pre-eminence dates from long before the Norman Conquest. Unfortunately, specimens of the earliest dates, notably St. Cuthbert's vestments, executed for Queen Ælfflæda at Durham, are not to be seen at the Burlington Club. And here we must remark, by the by, on the unfortunate comparison which must be drawn between the behaviour of our own cathedral authorities at Durham and Canterbury and the generous manner in which the appeal of the Club has been met by the authorities of Roman Catholic houses. While the vestments at Canterbury, whose beauties are rarely made known to visitors, were not allowed even for so admirable a purpose to be sent to London, St. Thomas's Abbey at Erdington actually allowed the amice apparel of St. Thomas, which is kept as a sacred relic, to be exhibited for its artistic importance, and with like courtesy the Archbishop of Westminster sent the mitre of St. Thomas to Savile Row.

These two relics are, in fact, among the earliest specimens of embroidery shown. Almost contemporary, and very similar in design, are the remains of vestments taken from bishops' tombs at Worcester.

To the latter half of the thirteenth century belongs a magnificent chasuble from the Victoria and Albert Museum (Case A, No. 1); as pure decoration, perhaps the noblest and most impressive design in the exhibition. But it is in the work of the end of this and the beginning of the succeeding century that the high-water mark is reached, both as regards perfection of workmanship and subtlety of design and colouring. And, fortunately, of this golden period of English design Col. Lyons has been able to secure quite a number of specimens, some of them scarcely at all known hitherto. First in magnificence and completeness comes Col. J. E. Butler Bowden's crimson velvet cope. On this superb ground there is worked a bold architectural design of compartments with figures, relieved in gold and silver thread, but with here and there notes of colour used with a preciousness and perfection of taste which leave one wondering what sort of people they were that had this exquisite refinement of sensibility. Indeed, what one feels throughout in looking at the work of this period is the intense refinement of feeling, the perfect civilization of its creators; and as one looks at the rapid degeneration of the art in the fourteenth century, and its almost barbaric crudity in the fifteenth, one cannot help wondering whether history has ever told us the whole truth about our ancestors.

Another work of supreme and imposing grandeur is the seated Christ (Case Q) lent by St. Dominic's Priory, Haverstock Hill. Here, as elsewhere, embroidery is used with no merely ornamental aim. The control of expressive design and the mastery of the technique are such that this panel has all the qualities of the noblest pictorial art. Nothing more moving, more touching to the feelings, can be imagined than this stately and resplendent figure with its hieratic severity of gesture, while the harmony of colour is as perfect as it is original and unexpected.

The remains of another great cope of the early fourteenth century are to be seen in a super-frontal and frontal from Steeple Aston (Cases O and U). Here the design, as usual in compartments, represents a number of scenes of martyrdom. These are rendered with extraordinary dramatic force and surprising realism. To the executioners are given negro faces of almost grotesque ferocity, though with no trace of clumsiness or real crudity of feeling. The whole tone of this work is of rare beauty, the figures and ornaments barely relieved in gold and silver, with occasional whites and delicious blues and purples upon a cream-coloured silk ground. It is stated that this ground was originally red—we hope and believe that it was nothing of the kind. We should be sorry to think that so supreme a harmony of blonde tones was the work of time and not the purposeful invention of a great unknown artist. An argument against assuming such a change of colour might perhaps be deduced from the fact that the strips of contemporary Lucchese brocade, of marvellous beauty, which are attached at either end, bear out the existing colour scheme to perfection, but would have appeared as blonde patches had the ground of the embroidery been red.

Belonging again to this great period of the art is a superb cope (Case B, No 1), generously lent by the Musée Royal, Brussels, of incredible minuteness and perfection of technique. Two small panels lent by Lady Gibson-Carmichael (Case AA) are also of the finest possible quality, and distinguished by great richness and brilliance of colour. The design of the Annunciation in these is of surpassing beauty, comparable to the finest Italian draughtsmanship of a slightly later period. Quite different in effect from the restrained and precious beauty of these religious designs is the flaunting magnificence of a chasuble made from a horse-trapping (Case I), lent by Prince Solms-Braunfels. Here the leopards of England are relieved in massive gold embroidery upon a crimson ground. There is some question as to whether this is of English workmanship or not, but the severe and yet sumptuous heraldic drawing of the leopards agrees with English traditions.

One is sometimes tempted, in view of our comparative insignificance in architecture and sculpture, even in the great periods of the Middle Ages, to wonder whether the English ever were an artistic race; but this exhibition shows that in certain of the minor arts our ancestors had a perfection of taste, a delicate sensibility to beauty, and an originality and freshness of invention that are beyond all praise. Every one must feel deeply indebted to the Club for the organization of this proof of our artistic lineage, and to Col. Croft Lyons for the energy and pertinacity he has devoted to the task of getting together so magnificent a display. We hope that when the time comes for making an illustrated catalogue, it will be possible to include reproductions of the most celebrated specimens of Opus Anglicanum in Italy and Spain, and thus make something like a complete monograph upon a fascinating subject.

MR. TONKS'S WATER-COLOURS AT CARFAX'S.

MR. TONKS'S work, as seen at the Carfax Gallery, has a very distinct quality. His extreme delicacy and refinement are what strike one first—the daintiness and subtlety of his touch, his love of a contour, followed with subtle indications throughout its variations of accent and effacement. We note, too, the refinement and reserve of his colour. But these qualities are not without an underlying strength, a real nervous force, and, above all, an admirable soundness of judgment which makes any hint of affectation abhorrent to him. For all their delicacy, no one would accuse these drawings of effeminacy.

Still, his feeling for nature being of the kind we have described, it is not surprising that Mr. Tonks succeeds much more remarkably in water colour than in oil. He lacks the power of grasping and realizing the sequence of planes which is necessary for oil painting, with the result that in his oils the design becomes jerky and inconsequent, whereas in the less exacting medium of water colour we have nowhere the same uncomfortable sense of the artist having lost his hold, and of having broken off from the want of anything particular to say. For it is the charm of water colour that in it one may say as little as one wants; there is no compulsion to round off a period or lead up to a point. It may be as abrupt and as unmodulated as one pleases, provided it is throughout exquisite—and exquisite nearly all Mr. Tonks's drawings are.

There is no very decided bias in Mr. Tonks's selection; he picks and chooses at random, simply lying in wait, like a sportsman, till something in the shifting kaleidoscope of nature adjusts itself sufficiently to take his fancy. There is therefore no particular prevailing mood in these studies. Sometimes, as in the very fine Distant View of Hawes (No. 13) or The Hay Barn, Hawes (35), they tend to the sombre and impressive; but for the most part the mood, so far as there is any, is gay and mildly lyrical; the shimmer of sunlight upon tall trees, the patterns of sparse shadowy foliage upon a sunlit background, gipsies and children in a chequered light and shade—such are the motives he selects, and they are rendered with a delicate restraint which agrees perfectly with the theme. His design is rarely massed, and he relies rather on the rapid and easy calligraphy of his brush-strokes for the decorative effect. The Encampment (41), The White Cloud (46), The White Horse in Sunlight (51), are all notable examples of this method. In colour these are almost always delightful, and though the scheme is generally only hinted at, never worked out to its fullest possibilities, Mr. Tonks has at least the merit of never risking a discord; his colour is gay and pure, and his quality fresh and untroubled.

We wish that sometimes Mr. Tonks would be more ambitious—would try a theme that demands a greater strain on the powers of expression, something that would exact a more rigorous design, a more thought-out scheme of chiaroscuro and colour, that he would not remain satisfied with improvisations, however felicitous; though it may seem ungracious to ask for more precisely because the work, so far as it goes, is so gracious and agreeable.

In the same gallery is to be seen a picture of a Deposition by Mr. Ricketts, which is, perhaps, the most remarkable he has yet shown. It is a striking and original composition, intensely dramatic in the main planning of the lines and in the general disposition of colour. The group of the Virgin and St. John is a real discovery both in design and colour, and the painting is everywhere masterly in the command of nicely calculated effects of varied quality.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL NOTES.

PARTS xviii. to xx. of 'Cuneiform Texts from Babylonian Tablets' have been issued by the British Museum, and contain 150 plates of texts from Assurbanipal's library at Nineveh. The first two parts are of great importance for the study of the ancient languages of Mesopotamia, and contain syllabaries, lists of synonyms and ideographs, and grammatical paradigms, with classified lists of verbal forms. Although the greater part are in Assyrian, and were evidently compiled in view of the great changes which the Semitic languages of Assurbanipal's empire were undergoing in his time, thereby rendering the reading of the earlier Semitic inscriptions a difficulty, there are among them several vocabularies and lists of Sumerian words, side by side with their Assyrian equivalents, which Dr. Budge argues, in his preface, can well be described as "Sumerian-Assyrian dictionaries." Part xx. consists entirely of omen-tablets of the three series known as 'Enuma Gir,' 'Enuma Gar-tab,' and 'Enuma Mul-ta-bil-tum' respectively, and comprises the whole of the two first named and all but two of the last. Among the 'Enuma Gir' are three plates with diagrams, which give some idea of how these forecasts were made. The "judgments" were evidently drawn from the geometrical figures assumed by small objects scattered haphazard, which may possibly have been the divination by arrows (rhabdomancy, or belomancy) mentioned more than once in the Old Testament. All the copies are from the pen of Mr. R. Campbell Thompson, assistant in the Assyrian Department of the Museum, and leave nothing to be desired, either in accuracy or legibility.

Within the last few days part xxi. of the same series has also been published. It contains fifty plates of historical inscriptions copied from bricks, cones, and other objects by Mr. Leonard W. King. One of these, from a mace-head which may be fitly compared to the limestone mace-heads discovered by Mr. Quibell some years ago at Hierakonpolis in Upper Egypt, informs us that "Sar-ga-ni, king of the city, king of Agade, dedicated this to Samas in Sippar." The king in question is, of course, the famous Sargon of Accad, whose date is now generally fixed, on the testimony of the Nabonidus inscription, at 3800-3750 B.C. The inscription shows the importance even then attached to the worship of the sun-god. Another, written upon an oval stone object for the benefit of Mu-ta-bil, governor of Dûr-ilu, describes him as "the smiter of the head of the hosts of Anshan, of Elam," and of some other country which is illegible. Mutabil's name does not appear to have been hitherto known to us, but the characters used are of archaic form, and do not seem to be much later in date than the last named, while it is curious to notice the hostility that even then prevailed between the Mesopotamian kingdoms and Elam, which was not finally conquered until the time of Assurbanipal. Very interesting, too, are the cones inscribed with the name of Libit-Ishtar, which record the building by him of a temple in honour of the goddess whose name forms part of his. He describes himself as "Shepherd of Nippur, governor of Ur, patron of Eridu, lord of Larsam, king of Isin, and king of Sumer and Accad," which leaves some doubt on one's mind as to whether the ruler in question was really supreme over more than the city of Isin—a town which has not yet been identified—or whether the protocol of these early kings was as mystical as that of the Egyptian Pharaohs. As is pointed out in the preface, these texts constitute our only authorities for the history of Babylonia for a period of nearly two thousand years, while a comparison of them illustrates the development of the plainly cuneiform script of later times from the semi-pictorial forms used by the Sumerian scribes.

Not less important is the discovery, of which the American papers have lately had much to say, of at least one temple and many small objects at Nippur bearing a marked resemblance to the forms of the early Greek art generally known as "Mycenaean." American archaeologists seem inclined to explain this by the theory of a Greek dynasty reigning in Mesopotamia in very early times; but it seems at first sight as if the derivation of the Mediterranean civilization from Babylonia would fit the facts nearly as well. The parallels drawn by its discoverers between the so-called Mycenaean temple at Nippur and that at Tiryns are not, so far as we have read them, convincing, though fuller publication must be awaited before any definite view can be formed. About the smaller objects there is less doubt, and the constant recurrence of two lions or other animals, grouped by a tree or pillar in the fashion of heraldic "supporters," leaves no room for question as to their connexion with Mycenaean art. These objects might, of course, have been imported as curios or exotics, but their number seems to negative this explanation.

From Egypt we hear further particulars of Mr. Theodor Davis's discoveries at Biban el-Meluk, which knock on the head various speculations in which Egyptologists have indulged with regard to the parentage of Amenophis III.'s celebrated Queen Thyi. The mother of the "heretic king" Khuenaten was not, as has hitherto been supposed by some, of Syrian or Asiatic blood, her father, Juua, being described beyond possibility of mistake as "Superintendent of the cattle of the god Min in Ekhnim," while her mother, Thuaa, was as plainly a priestess of Amen. We hear also of a brother of Thyi bearing the thoroughly Egyptian name of Aa-nen. These points, which confirm M. Maspero's views, will be made clear in Mr. Percy Newberry's forthcoming book upon the 'Tombs of Juua and Thuaa,' which was lately announced in another column (see The Athenæum of May 6th). Other Egyptian news is that Mr. Quibell has taken Mr. Howard Carter's place at Saqqarah, while Mr. Weigall has been appointed Inspector of the Monuments in Upper Egypt.

We believe that the annual exhibition of the antiquities discovered by the workers for the Egypt Exploration Fund will this year be divided into two parts, the objects from Deir el-Bahari obtained by the Fund's senior excavator, Dr. Naville, and Mr. H. R. Hall, being exhibited in the rooms of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, while Prof. Petrie's exhibits will be shown at University College, Gower Street.

Prof. Sayce has completed a study of some Lydian and Karian inscriptions discovered in Egypt, and lately published in a more or less revised form. Two new characters—one identical with the Cypriote to and the other with the apparent value of ü—are the chief features of these, and it should be noted that most of them are to be read boustrophedon. The paper will shortly be published in the Proceedings of the Society of which Prof. Sayce is the President, and with his former communications on the subject make up all the Karian and Lydian texts yet discovered. Most of them are of but a few lines each, and the Lydian and Karian alphabets seem to be the greatest acquisitions that they have yet yielded. It is a pity that those interested in the subject do not turn their attention to the Græco-Egyptian Magic Papyri, among the so-called "gibberish" incantations of which are several words ending in -anda, which may not improbably turn out to be Karian. The settlement of many Karian mercenaries in the Fayum and elsewhere must certainly have left traces in the literature of their adopted country, could we only hit upon them.

M. Salomon Reinach, who is seldom without some amusing theory to let loose upon us, has been examining Herodotus's story of Xerxes having caused the sea to be beaten with rods as a punishment for having destroyed his bridge over the Hellespont. In a communication lately made by him to the Académie des Inscriptions, he labours to show that this was a magical operation designed to conciliate rather than to punish the sea, and that the chains thrown into it on the same occasion were to be taken as symbolizing the great king's alliance with the ocean. In the same sense he would explain the throwing of his ring into the sea by Polycrates of Samos, which he holds to be the celebration of a marriage rite, like that yearly carried out by the Doges of Venice. Ben trovato!

SALE.

ON Saturday, the 13th inst., Messrs. Christie sold the following. Pictures: B. Barker, A Grand Landscape, with three peasants and a group of cattle at a stream, 194l. Sir W. Beechey, Princess Charlotte, 105l. Gainsborough, Mr. Mills, of Saxby, Geologist, 273l. Reynolds, The Lace-Makers, 682l. R. Westall, Portrait of the Artist's Wife as Sappho, 168l. N. Maes, Burgomaster Rysenburgh and his Family, 120l. Constable, A River Scene, with a road over an old bridge, a peasant-woman and cows in the foreground, 378l. J. C. Hook, Between Tides, 252l.; Watercress-Gatherers, 147l.; Seaside Ducks, 546l.; Market-Girls on a Fjord, 147l. Landseer and Millais, Found, 262l. J. Linnell, The Barley Harvest, 609l.; A Sultry Day, 220l.; The Happy Valley, 420l. Crossing the Bridge, 409l. C. Troyon, A Glade in the Forest, 315l. J. L. Gérôme, The State Barge on the Nile, 220l. H. Draper, The Sea-Maiden, 262l. C. Fielding, Carnarvon Castle, 787l. E. Verboeckhoven, A Peasant, with a cow, donkey, sheep, and goat, 199l. T. S. Cooper, Sheep in Canterbury Meadows, 183l.; Cattle and Sheep in a Landscape, 173l. H. W. B. Davis, The Moon is up, and it is not Night, 189l. J. M. Swan, The Syrens, 141l. C. Daubigny, A Meadow at the Edge of a Wood, 399l. H. Fantin-Latour, Roses Trémières, 315l.; Venus and Cupid, 325l. M. Fisher, Autumn Afternoon, 141l. A. Vollon, On the Seine, 136l. Drawings: C. Fielding, Loch Etive, 60l. Sir J. Gilbert, The Passage of the Boyne, 63l.; Ready, 63l.; Don Quixote and Sancho Panza, 57l. Carl Haag, Ready for Defence, 60l. W. Hunt, May-Blossom and Chaffinch's Nest, 136l. F. Taylor, The Keeper's Daughter, 78l. Birket Foster, The Return of the Life-Boat, 52l. T. Lloyd, A Pastoral, 53l.

Fine-Art Gossip.

FRIDAY was the press view at the Goupil Gallery of Lady Gray Hill's decorative panels of flowers and water-colour drawings of Syria and Egypt, and Mr. Robert Fowler's 'Royal Windsor' and series of pictures 'Beautiful Wales.'

AN exhibition of works left by the late G. H. Boughton, R.A., is being opened to-day at the Leicester Galleries. It includes oil paintings, pastels, and a collection of landscapes in water colours. The exhibition will remain open for one month.

DRAWINGS of the cathedral cities of England by Mr. W. W. Collins are on view at the same place.

TO-DAY, in Old Bond Street, Mr. W. B. Paterson opens an exhibition of oil paintings by Mr. W. L. Bruckman.

AT the Baillie Gallery on Monday an exhibition opens of water-colours and etchings by Mr. William Monk, and drawings and water-colours by Miss C. L. Allport.

A VOLUME on 'Sir William Beechey, R.A.,' will be included in Messrs. Duckworth's new 'Library of Art.' It is by Mr. W. Roberts, joint-author of the big work on Romney issued last year. As Beechey was exhibiting at the Royal Academy from 1776 to 1839, the period of his activity is one of the most interesting in the history of English art. The author will be glad of particulars (care of the publishers, 3, Henrietta Street) of unrecorded family portraits by this artist.

THE Whistler Exhibition at the École des Beaux-Arts was officially opened in Paris last week by the Minister of Public Instruction, in company with many distinguished artists, including the presidents of the two great Salons, MM. Tony Robert-Fleury and Roll. Perhaps the most interested visitor of all was M. Théodore Duret, whose portrait by Whistler was in the recent New Gallery exhibition. M. Duret was one of the earliest writers in France to insist upon Whistler's claims to be regarded as a serious force in modern art; he contributed an excellent article on Whistler to the Gazette des Beaux-Arts of April, 1881, and this paper is reprinted in the collection of essays, 'Critique d'Avant-Garde,' published in 1885. There has been a generous response on the part of owners, public and private, of Whistler's works, and many that were not on view at the New Gallery may be seen at the École des Beaux-Arts.

AN interesting Exposition Mariale has been opened in the Grande Salle of the St. Joseph Orphanage at Tours, and will not close until June 1st. The exhibition is of a comprehensive character, and includes every kind of article—pictures, engravings, statues, medals, enamels, faïences, and so forth, ancient and modern—in which the Virgin Mary is depicted. Devotional books also figure largely in this exhibition, which is well timed, seeing that it is held during "ce mois de Marie."

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Philharmonic Concert.

M. RAOUL PUGNO was pianist at the fourth Philharmonic Concert at Queen's Hall last Thursday week. He played the solo parts of César Franck's 'Symphonic Variations' and Saint-Saëns's 'Africa' Fantasia, both written for piano and orchestra, and both performed for the first time at these concerts. The difference in character between the two is very marked. Both are clever; but the former shows the glow of inspiration, the latter rather the glare of the footlights. M. Pugno played magnificently. The programme commenced with Mr. Edward German's well-scored, well-sounding 'Welsh Rhapsody,' produced at the last Cardiff Festival; it was given with all due effect under Dr. Cowen's direction. At the end came Tschaiikowsky's 'Pathétique,' first heard in London at the Philharmonic Concert, February 28th, 1894, under the direction of Dr. A. Mackenzie.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Miss Marie Hall's Recital.

MISS MARIE HALL's recital on Saturday afternoon at the Queen's Hall was well attended. There was some good playing in Beethoven's Sonata in c minor, Op. 30, No. 2, for violin and piano, but neither she nor the clever pianist, Mr. Egon Petri, seemed to feel the intensity of the opening and closing movements, or the restrained passion of the Adagio. Miss Hall's rendering, however, of a group of short solos by Leclair, Dvorák, Tschaiikowsky, &c., was most refined. Mr. Petri's playing of Weber's Rondo in e flat and Schumann's 'Abegg' Variations was excellent.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Miss Vivien Chartres's Violin Recital.

MISS VIVIEN CHARTRES, aged nine, made a first appearance in London at the Queen's Hall on Monday afternoon. This young lady, English by birth, has been studying with Prof. Sevcik. She is very clever, and plays with marked intelligence and refinement. She was heard in Max Bruch's Concerto in g minor, Vieuxtemps's 'Fantaisie-Appassionata,' and Paganini's 'Moïse' Fantasia on the fourth string, which gave her further opportunities of displaying her technique. She is three or four years younger than Elman—no direct comparison between the two can therefore be instituted. We cannot but wonder what will become of all these prodigies. Joachim, Néruda, Sarasate, Kreisler, to name only a few celebrities, certainly appeared in public at an early age, yet not one of them can have passed through the heavy ordeal of lengthened tours and long journeys to which some of the wonder children of the present day are now exposed.

BECHSTEIN HALL.—Piano and Song Recital
by Miss Zimmermann and Herr Zur-Muehlen.

MISS AGNES ZIMMERMANN and Herr R. von Zur-Muehlen gave an interesting piano and song recital at the Bechstein Hall on Tuesday afternoon. The pianist began with Schumann's 'Études Symphoniques,' played with intelligence and good taste, but she was heard to even better advantage in Brahms's beautiful Ballade in D (Op. 10, No. 2) and in his piquant Capriccio in B minor (Op. 76, No. 2). The quality of Herr Zur-Muehlen's voice may not be of the finest, but he is an accomplished artist, and his rendering of song-groups by Schumann and Tschaiikowsky was admirable. He was especially successful in the delicate 'Inmitten des Balles' and the noble, impassioned 'Die Seele,' by the latter composer. The programme was not only well selected, but also commendably short.

Musical Gossip.

MISCHA ELMAN gave a first recital at the Queen's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. His fine tone and perfect technique still create astonishment, but more wonderful were the individuality displayed in his reading of the solo part of Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole,' and his lovely phrasing of Gounod's melodies in the Wieniawski 'Faust' Fantasia. It would, however, have been interesting to hear him in some classical chamber music. Lalo's symphony without orchestra is by no means effective. Mr. Charlton Keith is an excellent accompanist.

MADAME MELBA made her reentrée at Covent Garden in Verdi's 'La Traviata' on Wednesday evening, an opera which certainly enables her to show off her fine voice and perfect vocalization. Her singing was admirable, and her reception, as usual, most enthusiastic. Without Melba 'Traviata' would indeed not draw. Signor Constantino, the new Alfredo, has a good, well-trained voice, but his acting was stiff. Signor Scotti sang the Germont music with his usual skill and fervour.

THE series of the Joachim Quartet Concerts has been most successful. The audiences have been large, and warm in their enthusiasm. Dr. Joachim and his associates have once again proved how thoroughly they can enter into the spirit of the various masters they interpret. Their playing has been remarkable for ensemble, intelligence, and deep feeling. Dr. Joachim and Mr. Leonard Borwick will give a Sonata Recital next Monday evening, also at the Bechstein Hall.

HERR HUBERMAN announces a violin recital at Queen's Hall on Saturday afternoon, May 27th, at popular prices. This is an excellent idea. If tickets for good concerts were cheaper, the audiences would be larger, so that reduced prices need not mean reduced receipts.

WE announced 'Cavalleria Rusticana' for the opening night (May 22nd) at the Waldorf Theatre; and on the same evening will also be given Paer's 'Maestro di Capella.' Mr. Henry Russell, the manager, is not attempting to rival Covent Garden, but to give performances of genuine comic opera. Of such works there is no lack, and the enterprise, if well carried out, will no doubt prosper. The repertory includes, by the way, Rossini's 'Barbiere' and Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale,' works recently given at Covent Garden; also unfamiliar operas by Paer, Pergolesi, Mascagni ('Zanetto'), and a new one-act opera entitled 'Fiorella,' by Mr. Amherst Webber. Among the artists engaged are Mesdames Calvé, Mary Garden, Alice Nielsen, Giulia Ravogli, and Agnes Jansen, and MM. de Lucia, A. Bonci, Ancona, Renaud, and Pini Corsi.

A SKETCH of a hitherto unknown libretto for an opera by Wagner was recently discovered by Oberregierungsrat Hubert Ermisch among the papers of Wagner's Dresden friend Röckel. It is entitled 'Die Bergwerke zu Falun,' and dated Paris, March 5th, 1842. Three acts are complete. Ula, daughter of Pehrson, mine-owner, is beloved by Joens, who has returned from a sea journey, and also by Elis, a miner, whose passion she reciprocates; and so far the story somewhat recalls 'The Flying Dutchman,' written about the same time. With the exception of a vague remark to Uhlig, Wagner never appears to have referred to this sketch. In letter xxxv., to his Dresden friend, he says: "Text für Dich von Hoffmann! Entsinn' ich mich nicht. Irrthum (etwa 'Die Bergwerke zu Falun'?—nicht der Mühe werth)."

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE recently delivered an interesting lecture at the Æolian Hall on 'Dibdin's Sea Songs and other Naval Ballads,' a subject, as the lecturer remarked, timely in this Nelson centenary year. The music, of course, included "Now farewell to you, ye fine Spanish ladies," and 'Tom Bowling.'

AN attempt is to be made to revive the Saturday orchestral concerts at the Crystal Palace. For November 4th and 25th and December 2nd the London Symphony Orchestra has been engaged, with Mr. Landon Ronald as conductor.

THE new orchestral work by Mr. Josef Holbrooke, to be produced at the Hillier Festival next month, consists of an Introduction and Variations on 'The Girl I Left Behind Me.'

THE performances of the Passion Play at Oberammergau are announced to take place in June, July, August, and September. There will be thirty-two singers, and an orchestra of forty members.

MAX BRUCH's 'Odysseus,' which was given by the Bach Choir under the composer's direction, March 8th, 1883, will be performed at the Handel Society's Concert on Tuesday, May 30th.

THE David Concert-room at Uppingham School will be inaugurated next Tuesday evening by Dr. Joachim.

IN No. 3 of Novello's Monthly Bulletin of new foreign music there is an elaborate and interesting list of operas, incidental music, overtures, &c., connected with Schiller's dramatic works. It is strange, however, that Dr. Joachim's 'Scene der Marfa' from 'Demetrius' is mentioned, but not his 'Demetrius' Overture.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

- SUN. Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
- Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.
- MON. Mr. Hamlin's Song Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.
- Dr. Joachim and Mr. Borwick's Sonata Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.
- Mr. Albert Garcia's Vocal Recital, 8, Æolian Hall.
- Yorkshire Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.
- Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
- Grand Opera, 8.45, Waldorf Theatre.
- TUES. Alma Mater Choir, 3, Bechstein Hall.
- Misses Schmidt and Moggeridge's Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.

- TUES. Mr. Sterliog Mackinlay's Concert, 3, Steinway Hall.
- Madame Rosa Bird's Orchestral Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.
- Miss Lillian Moreton's Concert, 8.45, Grafton Gallery.
- Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
- WED. Queen's Hall Orchestral Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
- Miss Isabel Hearne's Concert, 3.30, Steinway Hall.
- Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
- Grand Opera, 8.45, Waldorf Theatre.
- THURS. Grand Opera, 2.30, Waldorf Theatre.
- Mr. Percy Such's Violoncello Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.
- Philharmonic, 8, Queen's Hall.
- Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
- FRI. M. Maurel's Vocal Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
- Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
- Grand Opera, 8.45, Waldorf Theatre.
- SAT. Grand Opera, 2.30, Waldorf Theatre.
- Children's Concert, 3, Steinway Hall.
- Herr Huberman's Violin Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.
- Royal Opera, Covent Garden.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

HIS MAJESTY'S.—Business is Business: a Three-Act Play. Adapted by Sydney Grundy from 'Les Affaires sont les Affaires' by Octave Mirbeau.

EITHER because his cunning has failed him or because he has yielded to influences from without, Mr. Grundy's rendering of 'Les Affaires sont les Affaires' of M. Octave Mirbeau is unworthy of his reputation. He has rendered vulgarly contemptible the character of the hero, which in the original has some claim—slight, it must be owned—upon consideration; and he has, perhaps necessarily, with a view to the exigencies of an English public, weakened the mutiny of the financier's daughter against her father's rapacity and cruelty. In the mutiny which makes Germaine, the daughter of the financier, throw herself into the arms of a lover, not a husband, since she cannot marry without parental consent, lie the strength, the moral, and the motive of M. Mirbeau's work. We see the man at the close standing stript and bare. It is his daughter's defection that is responsible for his loneliness and defeat. The death of his son he himself counts the crowning calamity. From his point of view it is indeed such. This, however, is a simple result of accident, and might have happened had his own conduct been as exemplary as it is odious. In order to assign it significance, it should, like the death of Hippolytus (to compare great things with small), come in answer to unwise or impious solicitation of the gods, or, like that of the children of Niobe, be the result of overweening arrogance. His wife he has himself banished, and can and will soon recall. The resolute defiance and surrender by his child of her position, her luxuries, her modesty, her virtue, and her home might well give him pause. When for this is substituted a supposed mésalliance, which, beside being impossible, is such in conception only, the action loses all that is characteristic or of worth.

What remains is the character of the central figure, in French Isidore Lechat, in English Isidore Izard. In the rendering of Mr. Grundy this is not only the principal feature in the piece: it may virtually be regarded as the piece itself. Comparisons innumerable have been established between this personage and familiar characters in French drama. More hoarding in nature than the English, the French supply on their stage many more characters of misers and speculators, and a score individuals bearing more or less resemblance to that now presented may be traced beside the Turcaret of Lesage, the Mercadet of Balzac, the Poirier of M. Augier, and the Brassac of

M. Capus. A nearer parallel is, however, furnished by Tudor literature in the Sir Giles Overreach of Massinger. Plus the vulgarity and with allowance for the changes in custom wrought by three centuries of time, Isidore Lechat is Sir Giles Overreach. Both walk unflinching and remorselessly to the end amidst the cries or over the bodies of their victims, and each has a like contempt for the law he knows so well how to manipulate. The closing scenes in the two pieces might easily be the same. Mr. Tree adds an extra touch to the character of Izard by giving him the assertive familiarity of the Jew and intensifying to the utmost his contempt for social amenities and decencies. His treatment of his associates, subordinates, and guests is sublime in its insolence: he leaves them unseated while he reclines indulgently in an unpardonable deshabille, quits and rejoins them as the mood takes him, and besides bragging to them of his estates, his ports, and his havannahs, calls their attention to the value of his personal belongings, such as his watch. Nothing that is familiar and by all means vulgar is spared by Mr. Tree, whose insolence no less than his dishonesty almost justifies his daughter's unconcealed aversion. Not a redeeming feature is there in him, and we accept his sufferings, even when they are the worst, as an inadequate expiation of his offence. The chief objection to this is that our discontent with him is less moral than æsthetical, and we shrink from him less as a scoundrel than as a cad. The strongest point is reached when he has what is in fact a duel à mort with his daughter. In this both actors showed what is most powerful in their methods, and the scenes had much strength. Miss Tree's part loses, however, its value with its significance, and her offence seems pardonable and trivial. Her mother, as conceived by M. Mirbeau, is the best character in the piece. Appalled by the splendour around her, she becomes meekly perverse and unamiable, and contributes to her daughter's ruin, if such it is to be regarded. This part, admirably rendered by Mlle. Blanche Pierson, has little that is attractive, and loses in the hands of Mrs. Brooke most of the significance it possesses.

The lesson once more to be impressed upon Mr. Grundy is that to leave the action where it was originally placed is nine times out of ten not the best but the only course. In the present case the environment of the action seems unsuited to it, and all Mr. Tree's strenuous and unflagging exertions failed to render the work either pleasant or stimulating. It is but just to the adapter to say that the course we commend of leaving the scene and characters in France would not bring the work within the range of our sympathies. There is scarcely a character who fails to inspire either aversion or contempt.

Dramatic Gossip.

DURING the present week the Great Queen Street Theatre has attempted no novelty, but has contented itself with reproducing 'The Confederacy' of Vanbrugh on Monday and 'The Knight of the Burning Pestle' of Beaumont and Fletcher on Thursday, both of them given last autumn at the Royalty.

AN adaptation by Miss Rosina Filippi, produced on Monday afternoon at the Court Theatre, under the title of 'Belinda,' is not specially noteworthy, being at once crude and dull. Miss Irene Rooke gave a fairly competent rendering of the heroine, and Mr. William Farren, jun., presented the crabbed professor with a touch of caricature.

MR. LEWIS WALLER will produce on Saturday next, at the Imperial, a new play by Mr. James Bernard Fagan, in which he will appear, supported by Miss Evelyn Millard and Mr. H. V. Esmond.

It is now announced that Mr. Forbes Robertson will open at La Scala in September with a revival of 'Diplomacy.' So erroneous has been, as we have shown, previous information on Mr. Robertson's plans, that we give this statement with due reservation.

In the forthcoming revival by Sir Henry Irving at Drury Lane of 'The Merchant of Venice,' Miss Edith Wynne-Matthison will make her first appearance in London as Portia.

'CŒUR DE MOINEAU,' a four-act piece of M. Louis Artus, has been produced at the Théâtre de l'Athénée with so much success that its rights have been secured for both England and America.

'L'ADVERSAIRE' of M. Alfred Capus has been adapted for Mr. George Alexander, by whom it will, in its turn, be produced at the St. James's. In another long-promised adaptation of 'L'Enquête' of M. Henriot, entitled 'An Unspoken Verdict,' Mr. Alexander will present a piece belonging to the repertory of the Théâtre Antoine, with some points of resemblance to 'La Robe Rouge.'

'THE CABINET MINISTER' of Mr. Pinero, first given at the Court Theatre on the 23rd of April, 1890, will be revived at the Haymarket by Messrs. Maude and Harrison as the closing entertainment of their partnership in management. Mr. Maude will succeed Mr. Weedon Grossmith as Mr. Joseph Lebanon, and Miss Winifred Emery Mrs. John Wood as Lady Twombley. Mr. Eric Lewis and Miss Nancy Price will also appear.

'DU BARRI' (so called) has been withdrawn from the Savoy, and the house has passed into the hands of Miss Maxine Elliott, who purposes transferring there on Monday 'Her Own Way,' now running at the Lyric.

REHEARSALS have begun at the Duke of York's Theatre of 'Clarisse,' the new play to be given simultaneously in London and New York. Principal parts in London will be supported by Mr. Gillette, Mr. Gerald Du Maurier, and Miss Vane Featherston.

YET one more institution for combating the indifference to high-class dramatic productions advertises itself as the English Drama Society, and announces that it is formed as a "protest against modern over-staging, under-acting, and to reanimate the national drama." Among works a main object seems to be to produce pieces of Browning at the Bijou Theatre, Westbourne Grove; but the manager also announces a morality play of his own. The scene of production is too remote for the scheme to count on much support from the press.

TO CORRESPONDENTS—J. K. M.—H. J. E.—C. L. J.—received.

W. L. M.—(1) yes; (2) too late.

G. M. M.—Many thanks.

H. C. F.—Not suitable for us.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

THE ATHENÆUM,
PRICE THREEPENCE.

Is published every FRIDAY in time for the Afternoon Mails. Terms of Subscription, free by post to all parts of the United Kingdom: For Six Months, 7s. 8d.; for Twelve Months, 15s. 3d. For the Continent and all places within the Postal Union: For Six Months, 9s.; for Twelve Months, 18s., commencing from any date, payable in advance to JOHN C. FRANCIS.

Athenæum Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

FROM WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S LIST.

JUST READY, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. SCHOOL TEACHING AND SCHOOL REFORM.

A Course of Four Lectures on SCHOOL CURRICULA and METHODS, delivered to Secondary Teachers and Teachers in Training at Birmingham during February, 1905.

By SIR OLIVER LODGE,

Principal of the University of Birmingham.

"Let me commend this wise volume not only to teachers, but to all concerned in national education. And especially to the politician. Half an hour with Sir Oliver Lodge would make him realize that there are problems on the inner side of the school door not dreamt of in his philosophy—would make him feel that the more he knows of these the better will he be able wisely to handle those others about which he is glibly talking every day."

DR. MACNAMARA, M.P., in the Daily Chronicle.

JUST READY, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

EDUCATION:

Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.

By HERBERT SPENCER.

This is an entirely New Edition, the whole having been reset in a much improved style.

A POPULAR REISSUE.

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, 500 pp., 7s. 6d.

FIRST PRINCIPLES.

By HERBERT SPENCER.

"It is a shapely volume, in new type, soberly bound, fronted with a good photograph of the Onslow Ford bust, and published at three half-crowns. A complete reissue of the 'Synthetic Philosophy,' uniform with this volume now to hand, will form, with the recent autobiography, the best and most enduring monument to our modern philosopher."

Pall Mall Gazette.

WORKS BY HERBERT SPENCER.

A SYSTEM OF SYNTHETIC PHILOSOPHY

|   |       |
|---|-------|
| PRINCIPLES of BIOLOGY. 2 vols. Revised and Enlarged | s. d. |
| PRINCIPLES of PSYCHOLOGY. 2 vols.                   | 36 0  |
| PRINCIPLES of SOCIOLOGY. Vol. I.                    | 21 0  |
| Ditto Vol. II.                                      | 18 0  |
| Ditto Vol. III.                                     | 16 0  |
| PRINCIPLES of ETHICS. Vol. I.                       | 15 0  |
| Ditto Vol. II.                                      | 12 6  |
| JUSTICE. (Separately)                               | 6 0   |

OTHER WORKS.

|  |                        |
|--|------------------------|
| The STUDY of SOCIOLOGY                                   | 10 6                   |
| EDUCATION. Library Edition                               | 6 0                    |
| Ditto Cheap Edition                                      | 2 6                    |
| ESSAYS. 3 vols.  | 30s. or each vol. 10 0 |
| FACTS and COMMENTS                                       | 6 0                    |
| VARIOUS FRAGMENTS. Enlarged Edition                      | 6 0                    |
| SOCIAL STATICS and MAN v. STATE                          | 10 0                   |
| MAN v. STATE. (Separately)                               | 1 0                    |
| AGAINST the METRIC SYSTEM. Third Edition, with Additions | 3                      |

DESCRIPTIVE SOCIOLOGY. Compiled and Abstracted by Dr. DUNCAN, Dr. SCHEPPIG, and Mr. COLLIER. Folio, boards.

1. ENGLISH. 18s. 2. ANCIENT AMERICAN RACES, 16s. 3. LOWEST RACES, NEGRO, POLYNESIANS, 18s. 4. AFRICAN RACES, 16s. 5. ASIATIC RACES, 18s. 6. AMERICAN RACES, 18s. 7. HEBREWS and PHENICIANS, 21s. 8. FRENCH, 30s.

A complete List of Works, with complete List of Contents, post free upon application.

SECOND EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

With Coloured Plates and 100 Figures in Text.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

THE PRACTICAL STUDY OF MALARIA AND OTHER BLOOD PARASITES.

By J. W. W. STEPHENS, M.D. Cantab. D.P.H., and S. R. CHRISTOPHERS, M.B. Vict. I.M.S.

We are now the Sole Publishers for the University Press of Liverpool. A Complete List of Publications, with their prices, post free upon application.

JUST ISSUED, royal 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net; 13s. post free.

THE AMERICANS.

By HUGO MÜNSTERBERG,

Professor of Psychology at Harvard University.

Translated by EDWIN B. HOLT, Ph.D.,

Instructor at Harvard University.

"Prof. Münsterberg by no means professes to offer an exhaustive survey, and regards his facts and figures as purely illustrative. His selection has been so comprehensive that it may safely be asserted that an intelligent European is likely to ask few questions to which an answer, supported by authoritative information, cannot be provided out of the volume."—Manchester Guardian.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

DUCKWORTH & CO'S PUBLICATIONS.

TURGUÉNEFF, TOLSTOY, GORKY, AND OTHERS.

"BIOGRAPHICAL AS WELL AS CRITICAL."—Times.

IDEALS AND REALITIES IN RUSSIAN LITERATURE.

By PRINCE KROPOTKIN.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"Prince Kropotkin's book is admirable, and, so far, at any rate, as the later Russian literature is concerned, should supersede all other works of the kind in our language. The author not only knows the literature of which he writes, he also knows the life to which it relates, and out of which it has arisen. Consequently he writes with authority."—Times.

"This most interesting volume is the best book of its kind that has appeared in England within the last ten years. There is nobody in England who can speak with such authority and such feeling on Russian writers and their sufferings. His intense and noble sympathy enables him to interpret as nobody before him has done."—Daily Chronicle.

"PUSHKIN, LERMONTOFF, TURGUÉNEFF, TOLSTOY, DOSTOYEVSKY, GORKY, are a few of the masters whose works Prince Kropotkin discusses with sympathy and judgment."—Daily Mail.

METAPSYCHICAL PHENOMENA.

By Dr. JOSEPH MAXWELL.

With Prefaces by Sir OLIVER LODGE and Prof. CH. RICHET.

Large crown 8vo, 10s. net.

[Just out.

A most important contribution to the study of phenomena known as "spiritistic," "occult," or, to use the term now suggested, "metapsychical." It presents a kind of interim report on a series of experiments extending over several years, undertaken in a spirit of pure investigation. The author states his conclusions in favour of the existence of physical forces as yet unrecognized by official science.

CRITICAL STUDIES AND FRAGMENTS.

By the late S. ARTHUR STRONG, M.A.,

Librarian to the House of Lords, and to the Duke of Devonshire at Chatsworth.

With a Memoir by LORD BALCARRES, M.P.

4 Portraits and 23 other Illustrations, Photogravure Frontispiece.

Royal 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 16s. net.

"They show the range of his information, as well as the variety of his tastes. His artistic criticism is never pedantic, always luminous and fresh. He fully understood his subject, his watchword was 'Thorough,' and it is as a genuine student that he deserves to be remembered."—Times.

AUGUSTE RODIN.

By CAMILLE MAUCLAIR,

Author of 'The Great French Painters,' 'French Impressionists.'

With 40 Illustrations, Photogravure Frontispiece. Crown 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

"The most complete and authoritative account. M. Maclair has the advantage of being an intimate friend.....Many photographs of unusual excellence."—Daily Chronicle.

"The public interest in the Michael Angelo of our time is now more than ordinarily acute. We could have no better guide than M. Maclair.....giving us this illuminating study of a genius."—Daily News.

THE ITALIAN POETS SINCE DANTE.

By WILLIAM EVERETT. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

A study of the language and poetry of Italy, accompanied by a series of verse translations.

"It is a discriminating and intelligent handbook to the subject, and should find a place on the shelves of all 'Italianate Englishmen.'"—Daily Mail.

NEW BOOKS FOR READERS OF 'THE ROADMENDER.'

A MODERN MYSTIC'S WAY.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

MICHAEL FAIRLESS'S NEW BOOK.

THE GREY BRETHREN.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

"The soul of MARIE DURNFORD." "A story of human interest."

"A notable book."

"A book worth considering."

"MARIE DURNFORD is admirable to her finger-tips."

THE DISCIPLE'S WIFE.

By VINCENT BROWN,

Author of 'A MAGDALEN'S HUSBAND.' Crown 8vo, 6s.

TIMES.—"The story commands attention. There is power and intensity. You must read with admiration."

PUNCH.—"Mr. Vincent Brown's style commands attention, and the plot, originally conceived and well carried out, is essentially interesting. In toto the Baron commends and recommends."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Mrs. Durnford is an admirable study. She stands before us real flesh and blood.....The minor characters are nearly all delightful miniatures.....Handled with a lightness and skilled accuracy which are altogether good."

IT'S A WAY THEY HAVE IN THE ARMY.

By LADY HELEN FORBES.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

[Ready May 30.

THE HOUSE OF BARNKIRK.

By AMY McLAREN,

Author of 'From a Davos Balcony.' Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It has what we too seldom get and what is never without its charm—a picture of kindly well-bred people who talk and act in a perfectly natural manner."—Times.

"Miss McLaren is making a reputation."—Glasgow Herald.

"A very attractive story, full of incident and variety.....and interesting both in its incidents and character-drawing."—Scotsman.

By ELINOR GLYN, Author of 'THE VISITS OF ELIZABETH.'

"She is at this moment our leading novelist of modern manners."—Sphere.

THE VICISSITUDES OF EVANGELINE.

Coloured Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND LARGE IMPRESSION.

"An attitude to life which is actual, and has not hitherto discovered a mode of expression. A book like this must interest every one. The lightness, ease, and elasticity of style are quite distinctive. As a relief from the more conventional form of fiction Evangeline's method is most refreshing."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE LIBRARY OF ART.—New Volumes.

GIOTTO. By Basil de Sélincourt. 45 Illustrations. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

ALBERT DÜRER. By T. Sturge Moore. With 4 Copperplates and 50 Half-Tone Engravings. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

MEDIÆVAL ART, A.D. 312–1350. By W. R. LETHABY. With 60 Plates and many Original Drawings by the Author. Pott 4to, 8s. 6d. net.

VERROCCHIO. By Maud Cruttwell. 48 Illustrations. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

THE POPULAR LIBRARY OF ART.

Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net.

VELAZQUEZ. By Auguste Bréal, Author of 'Rembrandt.' With 50 Illustrations.

REMBRANDT.

LEONARDO.

WATTS.

ROSSETTI.

GAINSBOROUGH.

FRED WALKER.

DÜRER.

MILLET.

BOTTICELLI.

FRENCH IMPRESSIONISTS.

NOW READY.

Price 10s. 6d. net.

THE

NINTH SERIES

GENERAL INDEX

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Introduction by

JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publisher reserves the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

Free by post, 10s. 11d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office,
Bream's Buildings, E.C.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SEVENTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

TWELFTH EDITION JUST OUT, price Sixpence, cloth.

REMARKABLE COMETS:

A Brief Survey of the most interesting Facts in the History of Cometary Astronomy.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

THIRD EDITION, Revised to 1904, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

ASTRONOMY FOR THE YOUNG.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

THIS WEEK'S NUMBER CONTAINS—

NOTES:—Westminster Changes in 1904—"Capt. Thomas Stukeley"—The Rev. James Sterling—Horace Walpole's Letters—"Skunk"—"The Law List"—Reynolds's Group of Fane, Jones, and Blair—Hollicke or Holleck, co. Middlesex.

QUERIES:—Lincoln Civic Insignia: the Mayor's Ring—Chester Plea Rolls—C. Mason, Royalist Divine—Whitehall Matted Gallery—"Purdonium"—Lincoln Inventory—Ninths—"For a God Yow"—Vixens and Drunkenness—Major John Miller—Maxwell of Ardwell—Ralph Rabbards—"Blancs Chaperons" at Ghent—Robert Tidir.

REPLIES:—Danish Surnames—"Beating the Bounds"—Anchorites' Dens—Laurel Crowns at Olympia—Armorial Bearings—Amberskins: Chocolate Recipe—"D.N.B." Index—Jennings Arms—St. Julian's Pater Noster—"England," "English": their Pronunciation—Local 'Notes and Queries'—Bibliographies—Maiden Lane, Malden—Apothecaries' Act of 1815—Twins—Irish Soil Exported—Wooden Fonts—Mr. Moxhay, Leicester Square—Toastmaster—Governor Stephenson—Rogestvinsky—Theatre, Parkgate—Norman Inscriptions in Yorkshire—Picking up Scraps of Iron—Unmarried Lady's Coat of Arms—Navy Office Seal.

NOTES ON BOOKS:—Lang on John Knox—"Quarterly Review."

Booksellers' Catalogues.

Notices to Correspondents.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.
And of all Newsagents.

NOW READY, 1 vol. demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 16s. net.

RICHARD WAGNER TO MATHILDE WESENDONCK.

Letters and Leaves from a Diary.

With Portraits and Facsimiles.

Translated, Prefaced, and Annotated by WILLIAM ASHTON ELLIS.

The German original of this illuminating work has already reached its Twentieth Edition, in course of a year an experience quite phenomenal in Wagner literature.

"These letters are likely to create a sensation throughout the world. For the first time is one of the most remarkable chapters in Wagner's life, the genesis and completion of his 'Tristan,' laid bare in its inmost recesses. Without this glimpse the picture of Wagner's life is incomplete."—Kölnische Zeitung.

H. GREVEL &amp; CO., Publishers, 33, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

THE SURGICAL AID SOCIETY.

Chief Offices—SALISBURY SQUARE, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Telephone No.: 12282 CENTRAL.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

This Society was established in 1862 to supply Leg Instruments, Spinal Supports, Trusses, Elastic Stockings, Artificial Limbs, &c., and every other description of Mechanical Support, to the Poor.

OVER 400 PATIENTS ARE RELIEVED EVERY WEEK.

CONTRIBUTIONS EARNESTLY SOLICITED.

Annual Subscription of £0 10 6 } Entitles to Two Recommendations
Life Subscription of £5 5 0 } per Annum.

Bankers—Messrs. BARCLAY &amp; Co., Ltd., 54, Lombard Street.

RICHARD C. TRESIDDER, Secretary.

PHILIP GREEN'S NEW LIST.

JAMES MARTINEAU, THEOLOGIAN and TEACHER. A Study of his Life and Thought. By J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A. Large crown 8vo, pp. 596-xvi, with 2 Photogravure Portraits, 7s. 6d. net.

THE SOUL: ITS SORROWS and ITS ASPIRATIONS. By FRANCIS WILLIAM NEWMAN. With Memoir and Introduction by CHARLES B. UPTON, B.A. B.Sc. Crown 8vo, pp. 340, 2s. 6d. net; People's Edition, paper covers, 6d.

THE FIRST THREE GOSPELS: THEIR ORIGIN and RELATIONS. Third Edition. With a New Chapter on the Historical Value of the Gospels. By J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A. Crown 8vo, pp. 350-xvi, 3s. 6d. net; People's Edition, paper covers, 6d.

THE PASSING and the PERMANENT in RELIGION. Chapters on the Universe, Man, Bible, God, Christ, Worship, Prayer. By M. J. SAYAOE, D.D. Crown 8vo, pp. 163, People's Edition, paper covers, 6d.

A THEIST'S APOLOGY. A Reply to the Agnosticism of the present day. By WALTER LLOYD. Crown 8vo, pp. 96, 1s. net.

AGNOSTICISM and THEISM in the NINETEENTH CENTURY. An Historical Study of Religious Thought in England. Six Lectures. By RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., Author of 'God and the Soul,' &c. Crown 8vo, 200 pp., 2s. net. [Shortly.]

Philip Green, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Country Booksellers supplied by Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall &amp; Co.

TEACHERS' SCRIPTURAL LIBRARY.

Price Sixpence each net.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

- BIBLE CHRONOLOGY and DICTIONARY; or, the Principal Events recorded in the Holy Scriptures, arranged under their probable respective dates, with a Dictionary giving an account of the places named, an Appendix on English Translations of the Bible, and Six Maps.
- BRIEF LESSONS on the PARABLES and MIRACLES of OUR LORD. The First Part contains short explanations of the Parables, arranged according to Date; in the Second, the Miracles are treated under the heads of the Regions in which they were wrought. With Two Illustrations.
- EMINENT SCRIPTURE CHARACTERS: a Series of Biographical Studies in the Old and New Testaments. Illustrated by Six Views of Biblical Scenes, which will, it is hoped, be found useful to all who are interested in the study of the Holy Scriptures.

Published by Stoneman, 29, Paternoster Square, E.C.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN,
GOUT,

And INDIGESTION.
And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW LIST.

THE WORLD'S NAVIES IN THE BOXER REBELLION (CHINA, 1900).

By Lieut. C. C. DIX, R.N.

With numerous Photographs. 7s. 6d. net.

"The narrative of Lieut. Dix is exceptionally valuable, for in its major part it is a statement of first-hand evidence, the writer himself having been actively engaged in the campaign he describes. The lieutenant wields a vigorous and facile pen. Altogether the book makes an important contribution to the records of international policy."—Glasgow Herald.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

A VILLAGE CHRONICLE. By Katharine S. MACQUOID. With Illustrations by Forestier.

A GUARDSMAN JAPANESE. By Sadi GRANT, Author of 'A Japanese House Party,' &c.

A RAW PROBATIONER. By Ellis Dean, Author of 'A Strange Honeymoon,' &c.
"A strong and pathetic story."—Belfast Whig.
"A distinctly clever book."—Birmingham Post.
"A book which is charmingly written."—Yorkshire Herald.

THE DOLL'S DANCE. By C. Forestier-WALKER, Author of 'The Chameleon,' &c.
"The novel is so well written that from first to last the reader is left in suspense as to the ultimate issue."—Punch.

VIRGINIA. By L. T. Meade.

With 4 Full-Page Illustrations.
"An exciting novel."—Dundee Courier.
"A charming story."—Sheffield Independent.
"A stirring story."—Morning Advertiser.

FIRST in the FIELD. By Ellen Ada Smith.

Author of 'Fulfilling of the Law,' &c.
"A charming story."—Western Mercury.
"This charming story."—Sheffield Independent.
"A thoughtful story, worth reading."—Dundee Advertiser.

THE ADVENTURES of a NAVAL OFFICER.

By Capt. CHAS. HUNTER, R.N. Edited by Sir SPENSER ST. JOHN, O.C.M.G.
"Is delightful reading from beginning to end."—Morning Post.
"The book is thoroughly enjoyable."—Athenæum.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d. net.

THE DIVINA COMMEDIA of DANTE.

Translated into English Verse by C. POTTER.
"A translation to be read with pleasure and profit....From it one may obtain a view of the great creation of the poet by no means unworthy of one of the great poems of the world."—Aberdeen Press.

London: DIGBY, LONG & CO.
18, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street.

NOVELS BY W. J. LOCKE.

IDOLS. | DERELICTS.
THE USURPER. | WHERE LOVE IS.
THE WHITE DOVE.
A STUDY IN SHADOWS.
AT THE GATE OF SAMARIA.
THE DEMAGOGUE AND LADY PHAYRE.

THE MORALS OF
MARCUS ORDEYNE.
THE MORALS OF
MARCUS ORDEYNE.
THE MORALS OF
MARCUS ORDEYNE.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

MR. HAMILTON FYFE in the EVENING NEWS.—"I shall be surprised if in a few weeks' time everybody is not reading and laughing over 'The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne,' and telling all their friends to read it."

ATHENÆUM.—"It is clever throughout."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Mr. Locke succeeds, indeed, in every crisis of this most original story.....The book has great literary charm, and is full of humour and humanity."

LITERARY WORLD.—"Carlotta is 'the most remarkable heroine we remember to have encountered in recent fiction.'"

MR. JAMES DOUGLAS in the STAR.—"This fascinating romance..... Judith is a wonderful creation."

WILLIAM J. LOCKE'S NEW NOVEL.

WILLIAM J. LOCKE'S NEW NOVEL.

WILLIAM J. LOCKE'S NEW NOVEL.

Now ready at all Libraries, Booksellers', and Bookstalls.

"By Sports like these are all their cares beguiled."

GOLDSMITH.

RIFLE AND ROMANCE IN THE INDIAN JUNGLE.

Being the Record of Thirteen Years of Indian Jungle Life. By Captain A. I. R. GLASFURD (Indian Army). With 54 Illustrations by the Author and Reproductions from Photographs. Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

THE CREED OF CHRIST.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

The Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL (of the City Temple): "I should be glad to have written this book.....almost as remarkable in its way as was 'Ecce Homo' a generation or so ago."

LOVE'S JOURNEY, and other Poems.

By ETHEL CLIFFORD, Author of 'Songs of Dreams.'

Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

PEACE, and other Poems.

By A. C. BENSON. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"Whose game was empires, and whose stakes were thrones, Whose table earth—whose dice were human bones."

BYRON.

NAPOLEON: the First Phase.

Some Chapters on the Boyhood and Youth of Napoleon I.—1769-1793.

With Portraits.

By OSCAR BROWNING.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

A NEW NOVEL BY A NEW WRITER.

By C. S. WAYNE.

A PRINCE TO ORDER. A PRINCE TO ORDER.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

[Ready May 23.]

OTHER NOVELS AT SIX SHILLINGS.

WIDDICOMBE.

By M. P. WILLCOCKS. Crown 8vo.

A CHILD OF THE SHORE.

By MIDDLETON FOX. Crown 8vo.

JOHN LANE, London and New York.

MESSRS. BELL'S PUBLICATIONS.

CATALOGUE or PROSPECTUSES sent post free on application.

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO HIS MAJESTY EDWARD VII.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.

A Complete Dictionary of Contributors and their Work from its Foundation in 1769 to 1904.

By ALGERNON GRAVES, F.S.A.

To be completed in about 7 vols. 4to, 42s. net per volume.

[Vol. I. now ready.]

In 5 vols. 21s. net each; or in half-morocco, 31s. 6d. net each.

BRYAN'S DICTIONARY OF PAINTERS AND ENGRAVERS.

A NEW EDITION, Revised and Enlarged, under the Supervision of

G. C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D., Assisted by a Staff of Specialists.

With about 500 Illustrations, including 40 Photogravure Plates. Illustrated Prospectus on application.

* * This Edition contains upwards of 1,400 new biographies, and nearly 6,000 corrections have been made in articles that have been allowed to stand. In addition to this, 250 lives have been partly rewritten.

* * No one interested in the fine arts can afford to be without this comprehensive and indispensable dictionary."—Pall Mall Gazette.

SOWERBY'S ENGLISH BOTANY.

Containing a Description and a Hand-coloured Life-size Drawing of every British Plant.

Edited and Revised by T. BOSWELL (formerly SYME), LL.D. F.R.S., &c.; Assisted by Mr. N. E. BROWN.

THIRD EDITION, with Supplement. In 13 vols. imperial 8vo, Roxburgh, 21l. net.

* * * FULL PROSPECTUS POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE YORK LIBRARY.

A New Series of Reprints on thin paper, with Cover and End Papers designed by Mr. A. A. MARTIN, and Title-Pages by Mr. D. CLAYTON CALTHROP.

Small 8vo, 2s. net in cloth, and 3s. net in leather.

BURNEY'S EVELINA. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by ANNIE RAINE ELLIS.

BURNEY'S CECILIA. Edited by Annie Raine Ellis. 2 vols.

BURTON'S ANATOMY of MELANCHOLY. Edited by the Rev. A. R. SHILLETO, M.A., with Introduction by A. H. BULLEN. 3 vols.

CERVANTES' DON QUIXOTE. Motteux's Translation, Revised. With LOCKHART'S Life and Notes. 2 vols.

COLERIDGE'S AIDS to REFLECTION, and The Confessions of an Inquiring Spirit.

COLERIDGE'S FRIEND. A Series of Essays on Morals, Politics, and Religion.

COLERIDGE'S TABLE TALK and OMNIANA. Arranged and Edited by T. ASHIE, B.A.

DRAPER'S HISTORY of the INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT of EUROPE. 2 vols.

EMERSON'S WORKS. A New Edition in 5 vols., with the Text Edited and Collated by GEORGE SANPSON. [Vols. I.-IV. now ready.]

JAMESON'S SHAKESPEARE'S HEROINES. Characteristics of Women: Moral, Poetical, and Historical.

LAMB'S ESSAYS. Including the Essays of Elia, Last Essays of Elia, and Eliana.

MARCUS AURELIUS ANTONINUS, The THOUGHTS of. Translated by GEORGE LONG, M.A. With an Essay on Marcus Aurelius by MATTHEW ARNOLD.

MOTLEY'S RISE of the DUTCH REPUBLIC. With a Biographical Introduction by MONCURE D. CONWAY. 3 vols.

PASCAL'S THOUGHTS. Translated from the Text of M. Auguste MOLINIER by C. KEGAN PAUL. Third Edition.

BELL'S CATHEDRAL SERIES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

In specially designed cloth cover, crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net each.

NOW READY.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. An Itinerary and Description—BRISTOL—CANTERBURY—CARLISLE—CHESTER—CHICHESTER—DURHAM—ELY—EXETER—GLOUCESTER—HEREFORD—LICHFIELD—LINCOLN—MANCHESTER—NORWICH—OXFORD—PETERBOROUGH—RIPON—ROCHESTER—ST. ALBANS—ST. ASAPH—ST. DAVID'S—ST. PATRICK'S, DUBLIN—ST. PAUL'S—SALISBURY—SOUTHWELL—WELLS—WINCHESTER—WORCESTER—YORK.

Uniform with above Series. 1s. 6d. net each.

ST. MARTIN'S CHURCH, CANTERBURY—BEVERLEY MINSTER—WIMBORNE MINSTER and CHRISTCHURCH PRIORY—TEWKESBURY ABBEY and DEERHURST PRIORY—BATH ABBEY, MALMESBURY ABBEY, and BRADFORD-ON-AVON CHURCH—WESTMINSTER ABBEY—STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

BELL'S HANDBOOKS TO CONTINENTAL CHURCHES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net each.

CHARTRES: the Cathedral and other Churches. AMIENS: the Cathedral and other Churches. PARIS (NOTRE-DAME). MONT ST. MICHEL. ROUEN: the Cathedral and other Churches. BAYEUX.

WORKS BY COVENTRY PATMORE.

POEMS. Collective Edition in 2 vols. Fifth Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 9s. The ANGEL in the HOUSE. Eighth Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

* * A CHEAPER EDITION at 1s. (In the press.)

The UNKNOWN EROS, and other Poems. Fourth Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

FLORILEGIUM AMANTIS. Edited by Dr. R. Garnett. Roxburgh, 6s.

PRINCIPLE in ART, and other Essays. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

RELIGIO POETÆ, and other Essays. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 4s. The ROD, the ROOT, and the FLOWER. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY.

REVISED THROUGHOUT AND BROUGHT UP TO DATE.

2,348 PAGES. 5,000 ILLUSTRATIONS.

WEBSTER is the best practical Working Dictionary of the English Language. It is recognized as the Standard Authority throughout the English-speaking World. It is an indispensable Reference Book.

Send for Illustrated Pamphlet, with Hundreds of Testimonials, Specimen Pages, Prices, &c.

London: GEORGE BELL & SON, Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4048.

SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)
ALEXANDER PRIZE.

The following Subject has been proposed by the Council: 'The Rebellion of the Barons of Northumberland and Westmoreland in 1569.' Essays must be sent in before MARCH 31, 1906, to the Offices of the Society, 3, Old Serjeants' Inn, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

SEPTEMBER 10, 12, 13, 14, and 15, 1905.
Conductor—Mr IVOR ATKINS.

ALRANI, NICHOLLS, SOBRINO, FOSTER, THORNTON JONES, COATES, GREEN, BLACK, AUSTIN, BAKER, HIGLEY, PLUNKET ORENE.

'Gerontius' and 'Apostles' (Elgar), 'De Profundis' (Parry), 'Requiem' (Franck), 'Requiem' (Mozart), 'Tod und Verklärung' (Strauss), 'Messiah' (Elijah), &c.
Apply DEIGHTON'S or SPAKS, Worcester.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S

SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27, King Street, St. James's.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT

INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital 30,000l.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT
Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guinea (or its equivalent by Instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbots Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the free use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary, Mr. GEORGE LARNEA, 28 Paternoster Row E.C.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT and PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.

Funds exceed 25,000l.

Office: Memorial Hall Buildings, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron:

The Right Hon. the EARL of ROSERERY, K.G. K.T.

President:

The LORD GLENESK.

Treasurer:

The LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

A Donation of Ten Guineas constitutes a Vice-President and gives three votes for life at all elections. Each Donation of Three Guineas gives a vote at all elections for life. Every Annual Subscriber is entitled to one vote at all elections in respect of each Five Shillings so paid.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man and Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employed, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guineas for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuitants now number Thirty-six, the men receiving 25l. and the Women 20l. per annum each, and they include:—

The "Royal Victoria Pension Fund," which was established in 1887 and enlarged in 1897, 1901, and 1902, perpetually commemorates the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides Pensions of 20l. a year each for Six Widows of News-vendors.

The "Francis Fund" provides Pensions for One Man, 25l., and One Woman, 20l., and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing "Taxes on Knowledge," and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The "Horace Marshall Pension Fund" is the gift of the late Mr. Horace Brooks Marshall. The employees of that firm have primary right of election to its benefits, but this privilege not having been exercised until 1904, the General Pensions of the Institution have had the full benefit arising from the interest on this Investment from 1887 to 1903.

The "Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund" provides 25l. per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The "Hospital Pensions" consist of an annual contribution, whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20l. for One Year to a Man, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c. W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

THE HERBERT LLOYD PENSION FUND provides 25l. per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The "Hospital Pensions" consist of an annual contribution, whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20l. for One Year to a Man, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c. W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

THE HERBERT LLOYD PENSION FUND provides 25l. per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The "Hospital Pensions" consist of an annual contribution, whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20l. for One Year to a Man, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c. W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

THE HERBERT LLOYD PENSION FUND provides 25l. per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The "Hospital Pensions" consist of an annual contribution, whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20l. for One Year to a Man, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c. W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

THE HERBERT LLOYD PENSION FUND provides 25l. per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The "Hospital Pensions" consist of an annual contribution, whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20l. for One Year to a Man, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c. W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

THE HERBERT LLOYD PENSION FUND provides 25l. per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINA-

TION will be held on JUNE 28, 29, and 30 to FILL UP not less than EIGHT RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS, THREE NON-RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS, and SOME EXHIBITIONS.—For particulars apply to the HEAD MASTER, 19, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

MERCHANT TAYLORS' SCHOOL, Charterhouse

Square, E.C.—FIVE ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, for Boys under 14 years of age on June 11, 1905, will be competed for on JULY 3, 4, and 5 next. An ORDINARY ENTRANCE EXAMINATION will be held on WEDNESDAY, July 19, at 1.30 p.m.—For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN

(University of London),
YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, W.

A REID SCHOLARSHIP in ARTS, annual value 31l. 10s. First Year, 28l. 7s. Second and Third Years, and an ARNOTT SCHOLARSHIP in SCIENCE, annual value 48l., both tenable for Three Years, will be awarded on the results of an EXAMINATION to be held at the COLLEGE on JUNE 28 and 29.

For further information apply to the PRINCIPAL.

DEPARTMENT FOR PROFESSIONAL TRAINING IN TEACHING.

Students are admitted to the Training Course in OCTOBER and JANUARY.

TWO SCHOLARSHIPS, each of the value of 10l., will be AWARDED for the COURSE of SECONDARY TRAINING, beginning in OCTOBER, 1905.

Applications should reach the HEAD OF THE TRAINING DEPARTMENT not later than JULY 7, 1905.

LONDON INTER-COLLEGIATE

SCHOLARSHIP BOARD.

SCHOLARSHIPS AT UNIVERSITY, KINGS, AND EAST LONDON TECHNICAL COLLEGES.

Intending Candidates should apply at once to the SECRETARY OF THE BOARD, King's College, Strand.

Last day for entry, MAY 30.

THE VICTORIA

UNIVERSITY of MANCHESTER

AND

MANCHESTER ROYAL INFIRMARY.

ENTRANCE MEDICAL SCHOLARSHIPS.

TWO SCHOLARSHIPS will be offered, one for proficiency in Arts and one for proficiency in Science.

Each Scholarship is of the value of 100l. and the successful Candidates will be required to enter for the full Medical Curriculum, both in the University and in the Manchester Royal Infirmary.

The Scholarships will be awarded only to Candidates who give evidence of a high standard of proficiency in Arts and Science respectively.

Applications should be sent in on or before JULY 1, to the REGISTRAR, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

COUNTY of LONDON.

EDUCATION ACTS, 1870-1903.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the post of a PRINCIPAL ASSISTANT in the EXECUTIVE OFFICER'S BRANCH of the EDUCATION DEPARTMENT. The Officer appointed will be required to assist the Executive Officer in the work relating to Higher Education, especially in connexion with Secondary Education, Scholarships, and the Training of Teachers. Candidates must have had a University or other equivalent training; and experience in connexion with Secondary Schools and in Educational Administration is desirable.

The Salary attached to the position is 400l. per annum, rising by annual increments of 25l. to 600l. per annum.

The person appointed will be required to give his whole time to the duties of the Office, and will in other respects be subject to the usual conditions attaching to the Council's service, particulars of which are contained in the Form of Application.

Applications should be made on the official forms, to be obtained from the Clerk of the London County Council, at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W., or at the Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C.

The applications must be sent in not later than 10 a.m. on SATURDAY, June 3, 1905, addressed to the Clerk of the Council as above, and accompanied by copies of not more than three recent Testimonials.

Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for appointment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.

The County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W.,
May 11, 1905.

CITY of SHEFFIELD.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

TRAINING COLLEGE FOR TEACHERS.

THE SHEFFIELD EDUCATION COMMITTEE will require IN SEPTEMBER NEXT a TUTOR (MALE) for the NEW TRAINING COLLEGE FOR TEACHERS. His strong Subject should be Mathematics, with Geography as a Subsidiary Subject. (Salary, 200l. a year, non-resident.)

Applications are also invited for the following Posts, which will be open in SEPTEMBER NEXT:—

One LADY TUTOR, Resident, 100l.

One LADY TUTOR, Non-resident, 150l.

It is desired that one of the Lady Tutors should be strong in Mathematics and Science, and the other in French and English.

Forms of application may be had on application to

JNO. F. MOSS, Secretary.

Education Office, Sheffield, May 17, 1905.

ISLE of ELY COUNTY COUNCIL.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, MARCH.

The above COMMITTEE, having already established Secondary Schools for Girls at Wisbech and Ely, propose to open a third at MARCH, and therefore require the services of a HEAD MISTRESS, to commence duties about SEPTEMBER NEXT. Salary 150l., with 1l. Capitation on every Pupil beyond the first 10. In addition, an allowance will be made for Rooms until such time as a School house becomes available.

Forms of application and further particulars may be obtained on enclosing stamped addressed envelope to the SECRETARY, Education Offices, March.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, GENEVA, GOLFE-JUAN, HAVRE, HYÈRES, JUAN-LES-PINS, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, MONTE CARLO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS (Est, Nord, Lyon), PAU, ROUEN, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOULON, TOURS.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 248, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES

and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the Post of PROFESSOR of EDUCATION in the NORMAL DEPARTMENT (MEN) and in the DEPARTMENT for the TRAINING of MEN TEACHERS for SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials, should be sent, on or before SATURDAY, June 3, 1905.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.

May 6, 1905.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES

and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the post of ASSISTANT LECTURER in LATIN.

Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials (which need not be printed), must be sent on or before SATURDAY, June 3, 1905.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.

May 6, 1905.

UNIVERSITY of BIRMINGHAM.

LECTURESHIP IN GREEK.

The COUNCIL invite applications for a LECTURESHIP in GREEK LANGUAGE, LITERATURE, and ARCHEOLOGY (vacant by the appointment of Mr. J. H. Hopkinson, M.A. Oxon., to the Wardenship of Hulme Hall, Manchester), at a stipend of 200l. per annum, under the general direction of the Professor of Classics. Duties to begin OCTOBER 2, 1905.

Applications, with not less than twelve copies of Testimonials, should be sent before JUNE 5, 1905, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars can be obtained.

GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY of LEEDS.—DEPARTMENT

of ANCIENT and MODERN HISTORY.—A VACANCY will arise in the ASSISTANT LECTURESHIP on OCTOBER 1, 1905, and applications for the appointment will be received by the REGISTRAR up to JUNE 10. Salary 200l.—Further particulars on application.

ST. DAVID'S COLLEGE, LAMPETER.—

WANTED, MATHEMATICAL LECTURER (Honour and Pass), 150l. and Capitation Fees. Furnished Rooms in College.—Further particulars from the PRINCIPAL.

CITY of SHEFFIELD.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

KING EDWARD VII. SCHOOL AT SHEFFIELD.

ASSISTANT MASTERS REQUIRED.

The GOVERNORS of the FIRST-GRADE SECONDARY SCHOOL (Classical and Modern, with Preparatory Department attached), about to be established in the place of the Royal Grammar School and Wesley College, and to be called by command of His Majesty "King Edward VII. School at Sheffield," invite applications for the following appointments:—

FIVE MASTERS, Class A, at commencing salaries of from 220l. to 250l. per annum rising by annual increments of 10l. to 300l.

FIVE MASTERS, Class B, at commencing salaries of from 180l. to 200l. per annum, rising by annual increments of 10l. to 250l.

FIVE MASTERS, Class C, starting at 150l. per annum (or, in certain cases, more, according to qualifications and experience), and rising by annual increments of 10l. to 200l.

Forms of Application may be had from

JNO. F. MOSS, Secretary.

Education Office, Sheffield.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

GOLDSMITHS' COLLEGE, NEW CROSS.

DEPARTMENT FOR THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

In view of the opening of the above Department in the LATTER PART of SEPTEMBER NEXT, TEACHERS (MEN and WOMEN) of the various subjects included in the Scheme of Studies will shortly be appointed.

The Scheme includes both General Education and Professional Instruction.

The majority of the salaries will be between 150l. and 250l. a year, but higher or lower salaries may be paid in exceptional cases.

Applications must be received not later than SATURDAY, June 17, 1905.

Particulars may be obtained from the WARDEN, Goldsmiths' College, New Cross, S.E.

MANCHESTER HIGH SCHOOL for GIRLS.

WANTED for SEPTEMBER, an ASSISTANT MISTRESS with special qualification in History, more especially to prepare Girls for College Scholarships. Must be a College Woman.—Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

BRIDLINGTON HIGH SCHOOL for GIRLS.

WANTED, for SEPTEMBER, TWO ASSISTANT MISTRESSES. (1) SCIENCE and MATHEMATICS; (2) MODERN LANGUAGES. Degree or equivalent necessary. Training or experience desirable.—Apply Miss DRUMMOND, 27, Central Road, West Didsbury, Manchester.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES, ABERYSTWYTH.

TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
ASSISTANT MISTRESS OF METHOD.

The COUNCIL invite applications for the post of ASSISTANT MISTRESS OF METHOD and ASSISTANT LECTURER in EDUCATION in the TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENTS of the above COLLEGE.—Applications must reach the Acting Registrar, from whom full particulars may be obtained, not later than TUESDAY, June 13, 1905.

HIGH SCHOOL of DUNDEE.

The DIRECTORS are prepared to appoint a MASTER for the DEPARTMENT of MODERN LANGUAGES, who must be specially qualified to teach the French and German Languages and Literature. Salary to commence, 250l. per annum.—Applications, stating age, experience of teaching, with 24 copies of Testimonials, must be lodged, on or before JUNE 12, with the Secretary, JOHN L. SIMPSON, 40, Reform Street, Dundee.

TO PUBLISHERS.—COUNTRY TRAVELLER,

covering United Kingdom, desires ADDITIONAL COMMISSION. London could be included if desired. Many years' experience. First-class connexion and references.—TRAVELLER, care of Hart's Advertising Offices, Arundel Street, Strand, London, W.C.

YOUNG MAN (19) desires post as SECRETARY or LITERARY ASSISTANT. Well educated. German; French; Type-Writing; up-to-date acquaintance with Continental Literature.—Address M.D., Box 1010, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

LITERARY AGENCY.—INDEXING. Translations (French, German, Latin). Authors' MSS. carefully Revised and Placed. Terms moderate. Type-Writing 8d. per 1,000 words. References.—Miss A. HORSFIELD, 45, Church Street, Barnsley, Yorks.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LADY PROOF READER, of some experience,

wants SITUATION. In London preferred.—Apply, personally or by letter, J. B. F., Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL

WORK and INDEXING.—Apply Miss PETHERBRIDGE (Nat. Sci. Tripos), 52A, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

TYPIST (LADY) seeks SITUATION.

Experienced. Slight knowledge Shorthand. Can trace Architects' Plans. Salary required, 25s. to 30s. per week.—Apply M., 123, Peips Road, St. Catherine's Park, S.E.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated

Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVE-

LOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Rentington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING.—SERMONS, AUTHORS' MSS.,

&c., carefully and promptly executed. 8d. per 1,000 words, paper included.—Miss A. MASSIE, Strathairny, Southfleet Avenue, Longfield, Kent.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON

OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying Circulars, &c., duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established twelve years.—SIRKS & SIRKS, 229, Hammersmith Road, W. (Private Address: 13, Wolverton Gardens, Hammersmith.)

TYPE-WRITING.—Reviews, Novels, Plays, Poetry,

Scholastic Work, Letters, &c., TYPED, or from Dictation (Shorthand if desired). Ten years' experience. Duplicating. Cheap prices.—GRAHAM, 34, Strand, W.C. (Charing Cross).

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS,

ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. SQUIRE, Thirbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.

The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGESS, 34, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and

Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES

BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED,
And supplied with every requisite.

Write for 'THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST.'

The Imperial News Agency, 2 and 4, Tudor Street, London, E.C.
America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.
Australia: Holt's Chambers, 121, Pitt Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application.

Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.O.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD

FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Catalogues.*LEIGHTON'S*ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 Illustrations, price 2s. JUST ISSUED.
Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for

CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROSE & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

H. H. PEACH, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 11 contains Shakespeariana—Mary Queen of Scots Items—Scotch Broad-sides—Bindings, &c.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

CATALOGUE No. 43.—Etchings by Whistler

and Samuel Palmer.—Engravings after Turner—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Drawings of the Early English School—scarce illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR,

No. 140, containing a Special Article, entitled 'The RECENT DEVELOPMENT of ART BOOKS,' by Dr. O. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the New Edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters and Engravers,' &c. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

DISPERSAL OF A VALUABLE COLLECTION OF SCARCE BOOKS AT LOWEST PRICES.

OUR CATALOGUE No. 14, May-June, 1905, is just issued. It comprises a valuable Collection of Manuscripts, Black-Letter Bibles, Missals—Minor Poets of Eighteenth Century—Books on Natural History—Autograph Letters—Ex-Libris (Book-Plates)—wide range of Occult and Mystic Literature, &c. Our prices are very moderate. Please write for CATALOGUE, which will be sent post free.

THE ANTIQUARIAN BOOK CO., 123, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—Spink & Son, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12in. by 8in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

MARLBOROUGH.—TO BE SOLD, WITH

POSSESSION.—AXHOLME, on the London and Bath Road, within a mile of Marlborough College, with fine Views of the magnificently timbered Slopes of Savernake Forest, a DETACHED FREEHOLD RESIDENCE, with Six Bedrooms, Dressing Room, Three good Reception Rooms, and Domestic Offices. Stabling, Lodge, Gardener's Cottage, and other Out-buildings. Well-timbered Grounds, nearly Four Acres, bounded and intersected by the River Kennet.—Solicitors, Messrs. KAYS & JONES, 37, Norfolk Street, W.C. Particulars of Mr. MARK JEANS, Marlborough.

LADY ARTIST OFFERS BOARD RESIDENCE, with use of Studio, to Artist (or Writer). Bracing London Suburb, W. Easy access to City. 5l. Monthly.—Address ARTIST, care of 54, New Oxford Street, London.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—APARTMENTS. Com- fortably furnished Sitting-Room and One Bedroom. Pleasant and central. No others taken.—R. H., 66, Grove Hill Road, Tunbridge Wells.

Sales by Auction.

Rare and valuable Books, including Portion of the Library of the late F. R. DALDY, Esq., removed from Aldine House, Belvedere, Kent (by order of the Executors); also a Selection from an old Country Library.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by

AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, May 31, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, RARE and VALUABLE BOOKS, including the above LIBRARY, and other Properties, comprising Chamberlaine's Imitations of Original Drawings by Holbein—Houbraken and Vertue's Heads, 2 vols. old morocco—remarkable Copies of First Editions by Waller, Gay, Dryden, Pope, Addison, and others, in the original sewn uncut condition—Seventeenth and Eighteenth Century Newspapers, Preclamations, &c., unbound—contemporary Transcript of Leicester's Commonwealth and other early MS. Poetry, &c.—a beautiful Fifteenth-Century MS. Psalter on Vellum, with Illuminations—Black-Letter Books and Early Editions of the Works of Old English Authors—Books relating to America—Jenkins's Martial Achievements, and other Books with Coloured Plates—Facsimile Reproductions of the Third and Fourth Folio Shakespear—Frankau's Eighteenth-Century Colour Prints, Coloured Copy—fine Set of the Studio, 22 vols. half-morocco—the Art Journal 53 vols.—and an extensive Selection of Modern Fine-Art Books—Lady Guest's Mabington, 3 vols. Large Paper, morocco—Library Editions of Grote, Gibbon, Finlay, Ranke, Palgrave, &c.—fine Sets of Scott, Dickens, Thackeray, Ainsworth, and others, several in handsome bindings—First Editions of Esteemed Authors—a large Collection of Standard Modern Books of Travel, History, Biography, Poetry, &c.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

Curiosities.*MR. J. C. STEVENS'S NEXT SALE of CURIOS

will take place on TUESDAY, May 30 and will include a most interesting COLLECTION of ARMOUR, SWORDS and DAGGERS, MACES, VASES, MARBLE SLABS, and OIL PAINTINGS from PERSIA—a fine Assortment of Banners, Prayer Wheels, Trumpets, Metal Vases, Wood Carvings, &c., from Thibet—Native Curios from Northern Nigeria—Early Stone Implements from Denmark—Chinese and Japanese Porcelain, Cloisonné, Bronzes, &c., and Curios from all Parts. Also about 70 Lots of Coins from different sources.

On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale. Catalogues may be had on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Persian and Thibetan Curiosities.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., on TUESDAY, May 30, a most interesting COLLECTION of ARMOUR, Swords and Daggers, Macs, Vases, Marble Slabs, and Oil Paintings from Persia—a fine Assortment of Banners, Prayer Wheels, Trumpets, Metal Vases, Wood Carvings, &c., from Thibet.

On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Coins.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will include in his SALE on WEDNESDAY, May 31, about SEVENTY LOTS of GOLD, SILVER, and COPPER COINS from various Collections.

Tools—Photographic Apparatus—Scientific Instruments, &c.

FRIDAY, June 2, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms,

38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., TWO useful LATHES, with Accessories, Planing Machine, Hack Saw, Fan Forge, &c.—Photographic Cameras, Lenses—Microscopes—Field and other Binocular Glasses—Telescopes—Bicycles—Scientific Instruments—and Miscellaneous Property.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Collection of Natural History Specimens.

MR. J. C. STEVENS, of 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., will SELL by AUCTION, on TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, June 6 and 7, at half-past 12 o'clock each day, COLLECTIONS of BRITISH-TAKEN BIRDS' EGGS—fine Lots of Birds set up in Glass Cases, including many rare and curious Pied, White, and other Varieties—Heads and Horns of Animals from Uganda, South Africa, and other Countries—Fossils and Minerals, including some fine Leadhillites—Exotic Lepidoptera—Shells—Cabinets, &c.

On view day prior and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

The valuable Library of His Honour Judge PHILBRICK, K.C.*MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, May 29, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable LIBRARY of His Honour Judge PHILBRICK, K.C., including Specimens of the Presses of Aldus, Fyner, John of Westphalia, Jenson, Schoeffer, Valdarfer, and the Elzevirs—Bindings by Roger Payne, Boyerain, Padeloup, Derome, &c.—Collection of Editions of Walton and Cotton's Complete Angler, the Eikon Basilike, and the Works of La Fontaine—choice French illustrated Books—also valuable Books on Art, many in choice Bindings—Library Editions of Standard Works, including Books on Napoleon—Bateman's Orchidaceae of Mexico—Ravenscroft's Pinetum Britannicum—and a Coloured Copy of Griffith's Palma of British India—the Collection of Books on Philately.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

Valuable Books and Manuscripts.*MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 1, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS, Ancient and Modern, ILLUMINATED MANUSCRIPTS, HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS, and AUTOGRAPH LETTERS, including the Nautical Library (containing his Log-Books) of H.R.H. the Duke of Clarence (Prince William Henry, afterwards King William IV.)—fine illuminated Horae, Bibles, and Thirteenth-Century English Psalter, and other Service Books—Historical Documents of the Tudors and Stuarts—Two Miniature Paintings on Orisaille, attributed to Simon Bening and Albert Diirer—Autograph Letters of David Garrick, Robert Browning, C. Dickens, Jas. Boswell, Mrs. Piozzi, Lord Lovat, P. B. Shelley, Andrew Marvell, S. T. Coleridge, &c.—Autograph Journals of Thos. De Quincey, Mrs. Inchbald, and others—a Series of Sir Walter Scott's Works, chiefly First Editions, with numerous Sets of Illustrations—rare Tracts on America, including Roger Williams's Key to the Language of America, 1643—Keith's Tracts, &c.—Books from the Library of the Emperor Napoleon I. at St. Helena—the Countess of Pembroke's Tragedie of Antonie, 1585—Extra-illustrated Copies of Camden's Britannia and Pilkington's Dictionary of Painters—Scarce Works illustrated by Geo. Cruikshank, Rowlandson, and others—Issues of Private Presses, &c.; also Three important Works of William Blake, in fine condition, viz. Visions of the Daughters of Albion, The Book of Thel, and The Marriage of Heaven and Hell.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Greek and Roman Coins, the Property of the late HARLAN P. SMITH, Esq., New York.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE

will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 5, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of GREEK and ROMAN COINS in Gold, Silver, and Bronze, formed by the late HARLAN P. SMITH, Esq., of New York, U.S.A. (sold by order of his Executrix).

May be viewed two days prior. Illustrated Catalogues may be had.

Oriental, English, and Continental Porcelain and Old

English Pottery.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE

will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 5, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, WORKS of ART, comprising Oriental, English, and Continental Porcelain, Miniatures, Bijouterie, Old English Pottery, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Old Musical Instruments of the late

T. W. TAPHOUSE, Esq., M.A.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE

will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 7, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of OLD MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of the late T. W. TAPHOUSE, Esq., M.A. (by order of the Executors).

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

PALL MALL.—A Collection of Nelson and other Naval Relics formed by the late Lieut. W. RIVERS, R.N., A.D.C. to Lord Nelson at the Battle of Trafalgar, and subsequently Lieut.-Adjutant of Greenwich Hospital.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce for SALE by AUCTION (by direction of the Executors of the late Mrs. SOPHIA RIVERS), at the Gallery, 54 Pall Mall, on TUESDAY, June 20, at 1 o'clock precisely, this interesting COLLECTION of NELSON and other NAVAL RELICS, comprising Portions of Lord Nelson's Hair—a Shoe Buckle worn by him—the Figure-Head of the Funeral Car—the Union Jack that covered the Coffin, and the White Ensign hoisted at the Stern of the Car—Medals of the Battle of the Nile and Battle of Culloden—Seals—Stamps of Lady Hamilton, Lord Howe, and the Arms of Greenwich Hospital—a Pair of Pictures, the Battle of Trafalgar, by T. Butterworth—other pictures, Engravings, &c.

May be viewed Saturday and Monday, June 17 and 19, and morning of Sale. Catalogues will be forwarded on application.—54, Pall Mall.

The Library of the late Rev. H. CLEMENTI-SMITH, removed from Holland Park (by order of the Executors), and other Properties.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 7, and Following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS comprising the above Properties, and including Rare and Standard Editions of Works in all branches of Literature.

Autograph Letters and Documents.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their House, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 8, a COLLECTION of interesting AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and DOCUMENTS, including fine examples of Dickens, Thackeray, Nelson, Cowper, H.M. Queen Victoria (in German), the Original MSS. of several of Ainsworth's Novels, and other scarce items.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, May 29, the COLLECTION of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS of the late WALTER DUCKWORTH, Esq.

On MONDAY, May 29, and Three Following Days, the HAWKINS COLLECTION of UNSET PRECIOUS STONES.

On TUESDAY, May 30, ETCHINGS by WHISTLER, MERYON, and Others; ENGRAVINGS of the EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL.

On FRIDAY, June 2, PORCELAIN and OBJECTS of VERTU of his Grace the late DUKE of BUCKINGHAM and CHANDOS, and OLD CHINESE PORCELAIN, the Property of JOHN GABBITAS, Esq.

On SATURDAY, June 3, highly important PICTURES, the Property of the Right Hon. LORD TWEEDMOUTH; also a fine PORTRAIT of ROBERT BURNS, by Alexander Nasmyth, the Property of the Misses CATHCART, of Auchendrane, Ayr, N.B., which was purchased from the Artist by Mr. Elias Calheart, and is the only Authentic Portrait of Burns by A. Nasmyth which can ever come into the Market.

AT THE CONDUIT STREET AUCTION GALLERIES.

Rare Tibetan Books—Whistler Etchings—Porcelain, &c.

Two rare Tibetan Works on Buddhism, one being of unusually large dimensions, and comprising 569 leaves, each measuring 25½ in. by 7½ in.—a Collection of finely carved Old Japanese Ivory Netsukes, the Property of a Lady—Burmese Bronzes—a Chinese State Umbrella Cover, elaborately Embroidered—English and Continental Porcelain—Oriental China—a few choice Early Etchings by Whistler—Lithographic Portraits after Count D'Orsay—Baxter Prints—Oil Paintings—Curios—and Miscellanea, which Messrs.

K. KNIGHT, FRANK & RUTLEY will SELL by AUCTION at their Great Galleries, 9, Conduit Street, and 23, Maddox Street, W., on TUESDAY, June 6, at 1 o'clock precisely. May be viewed on Saturday (up to 2 o'clock) and Monday. Catalogues on application.

Executors, Solicitors and Owners may note that these Galleries are open daily to receive Jewellery, Silver, Pictures, Furniture, China, Books, Antiques, and other valuables for Sale by Public Auction.

LATER PEEPS at PARLIAMENT.

By H. W. LUCY

(Toby, M.P., of Punch).

Illustrated by F. CARRUTHERS GOULD.

With several Original Sketches

By the late Sir FRANK LOCKWOOD.

578 pages. 307 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

This volume forms a Sequel and Companion to the 'Peeps at Parliament' by the same Author and Artist, published about a year ago.

George Newnes, Limited,

3-12, Southampton Street, Strand, London, W.C.

LIGHTNING CONDUCTORS; Workmen's Compensation; Architecture at the Royal Academy (II); Notes and Sketches in Southern Italy (X); The Sherborne Commemoration; The Engineering Standards Committee; Annual Dinner of the Architectural Association; Types of Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column); Illustrations of New King's College Hospital; New Municipal Buildings, Seacombe; Proposed Clock Tower, St. George's Circus, &c. See the BUILDER of May 27 (4d., by post 4½d.). Through any Newsgent or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

W. C. BENNETT'S POEMS.

The GOLDEN LIBRARY.—Square 16mo, cloth, 2s.

SONGS FOR SAILORS.

Morning Post.—"Spirited, melodious, and vigorously graphic."

Daily News.—"Very spirited."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Really admirable."

Morning Advertiser.—"Sure of a wide popularity."

John Bull.—"Very successful."

Metropolitan.—"Instinct with patriotic fire."

Illustrated London News.—"Right well done."

News of the World.—"There is real poetry in these songs."

Mirror.—"With admirable felicity he embodies national sentiments and emotions which stir the hearts of the people."

Echo.—"These songs are literally written for sailors, and they are precisely the kind of songs that sailors most enjoy."

Nonconformist.—"These songs bear a true literary mark, and give out the genuine ring."

Leeds Mercury.—"There is no one nowadays who can compete with Dr. Bennett as a popular song-writer. In his volume of sea songs we find the qualities which must secure its success."

Liverpool Mail.—"Dr. Bennett has devoted his lyrical powers to a noble object in this comprehensive yet inexpensive work. This gem deserves to be patronized not only by our entire Royal Navy, but by all our Sailors' Homes and all our Mercantile Marine Associations."

Examiner.—"Full of incident and strongly expressed sentiment, and having a simple, dashing, musical roll and movement that reminds us of some songs that are favourable with all sailors, and the touches of humour he introduces are precisely of the kind that they will relish."

Chatto & Windus, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

THE HILL. 6s.

MR. HORACE A. VACHELL'S NEW NOVEL,

Author of 'BROTHERS' (Ninth Impression in the press), 6s., 'The SHADOWY THIRD,' &c.

"An inspiring book which should be read by all boys, whether they are Harrovians or not; by men who were at public schools and who would like to be taken back to their schooldays for several brief entrancing hours, and by those who can appreciate a story full of optimism, vivid portraiture, humour, tenderness, and a knowledge of the human boy that is quite remarkable."—World.

THE EXPERIENCES OF AN ENGLISHMAN DURING THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR.

WITH RUSSIAN, JAPANESE, AND CHUNCHUSE.

By ERNEST BRINDLE. With a Map. Large crown 8vo, 6s. net.

"Mr. Brindle has given us a picturesque, interesting, and thoughtful book."—Scotsman.

NEW WORK BY HENRY NEWBOLT.

THE YEAR OF TRAFALGAR.

Being an Account of the Battle and of the Events which led up to it, with a Collection of the Poems and Ballads written thereupon between 1805 and 1905. By HENRY NEWBOLT, Author of 'Admirals All,' 'The Sailing of the Longships,' &c. With Photogravure Portrait of Lord Nelson, Maps, and Plans. Large crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready next week.]

THE BOOK OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

By the late LADY DILKE. With a Memoir of the Author by the Right Hon. Sir CHARLES DILKE, Bart., M.P. With Portraits and Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

MEMORIES OF LIFE AT OXFORD,

And Experiences in Italy, Greece, Turkey, Germany, Spain, and Elsewhere. By FREDERICK MEYRICK, M.A., Prebendary of Lincoln and Rector of Blickling. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

BYGONE YEARS.

Personal Reminiscences. By the Hon. FREDERICK LEVESON-GOWER. With a Photogravure Portrait. Demy 8vo, 12s. net. [Ready next week.]

A HISTORY OF ANCIENT POTTERY.

Greek, Etruscan, and Roman. Based on Samuel Birch's Famous Work. By HENRY B. WALTERS, M.A., Assistant in the Department of Greek and Roman Antiquities, British Museum. With numerous Illustrations. 2 vols. medium 8vo, 3l. 3s. net.

RAILWAYS AND THEIR RATES.

With an Appendix on the British Canal Problem. By EDWIN A. PRATT, Author of 'The Organization of Agriculture,' 'Trade Unionism and British Industry,' &c. Large crown 8vo, 5s. net.

A TEXT-BOOK OF APOLOGETICS.

PRO FIDE. A Defence of Natural and Revealed Religion.

By CHARLES HARRIS, B.D., Lecturer in Theology and Parochialia in St. David's College, Lampeter. Large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"Well read in modern literature and rich in well-stocked bibliographical notes, and at once comprehensive and concise in its exposition, the book cannot but prove serviceable to all classes of religious controversialists."—Scotsman.

CHEAP EDITION.

KOREA AND HER NEIGHBOURS.

By Mrs. BISHOP (Isabella L. Bird). With Maps and Illustrations. 1 vol. 5s. net.

CHEAP EDITION.

DELHI: PAST AND PRESENT

By H. C. FANSHAWE, C.S.I., late Bengal Civil Service and Commissioner of the Delhi Division. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 8s. net.

A POPULAR EDITION OF

SAMUEL SMILES' WORKS.

Large crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 3s. 6d. each.

SELF-HELP. | MEN of INVENTION and INDUSTRY.

The LIFE of a SCOTCH NATURALIST, THOMAS EDWARD.

JAMES NASMYTH, ENGINEER. An Autobiography.

LIFE of ROBERT DICK, Baker, Geologist, and Botanist.

LIVES of the ENGINEERS. 5 vols.

A SCHOOL MANUAL OF ENGLISH GRAMMAR.

With Exercises and Examination Papers. By THEOPHILUS D. HALL, M.A. Third Edition, completely Revised and brought up to Date. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Just published.]

THE RUDIMENTS OF PRACTICAL MATHEMATICS.

By A. CONSTERDINE, M.A., and A. BARNES, M.A. With many Diagrams. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Just published.]

This book forms a companion volume to 'Practical Arithmetic,' by Messrs. Andrew and Consterdine, recently published by Mr. Murray. It is especially suitable for pupils who wish to make practical use of their knowledge in after life.

NOTES ON VOLUMETRIC ANALYSIS.

By J. B. RUSSELL, B.Sc.Lond., late Senior Science Master, Grammar School, Burley. Assisted by A. H. BELL, B.Sc.Vict., Science Master, Municipal Technical School, Birmingham. Revised and Enlarged Edition, with Diagrams and Index. Crown 8vo, 2s. [Just published.]

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

MESSRS. LONGMANS &amp; CO.'S LIST.

WITH A MEMOIR OF THE AUTHOR BY
Field-Marshal EARL ROBERTS, V.C.
THE SCIENCE OF WAR.

By Colonel G. F. R. HENDERSON.
Author of 'Stonewall Jackson and the American Civil War,' &c.

Edited by Capt. NEILL MALCOLM, D.S.O.
With Photogravure Portrait of the Author and 4 Maps.
8vo, 14s. net.

JOHN KNOX AND THE REFORMATION.

By ANDREW LANG.

With 2 Photogravure Plates and 3 other Illustrations,
8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

NOTES and QUERIES.—"To the literary craftsman it will specially recommend itself. We have to go back to the days of Gibbon to find a work written with so much earnestness of purpose, so much apparent persiflage, and so much scarcely veiled irony."

STRENGTH AND DIET.

A Practical Treatise with Special Regard to the Life of Nations.

By the Hon. R. RUSSELL.
8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION, WITH AN INTRODUCTORY NOTE
ON THE UNIT OF FAMILY HOLDING UNDER
EARLY TRIBAL CUSTOM.

The TRIBAL SYSTEM in WALES.

Being part of an Inquiry into the Structure and Methods of Tribal Society. By FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D.
(Edin.), Litt.D. (Camb.). With 3 Maps. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

HANDBOOKS FOR THE CLERGY.

Edited by the Rev. ARTHUR W. ROBINSON, D.D.,
Vicar of Allhallows Barking by the Tower.

The LEGAL POSITION of the CLERGY. By PHILIP VERNON SMITH, M.A. LL.D.,
Chancellor of the Diocese of Manchester. Crown 8vo,
2s. 6d. net.

The WESTMINSTER CONFES-

SION of FAITH and the THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. The Legal, Moral, and Religious Aspect of Subscription to them. By JAMES DONALDSON, M.A. LL.D., Principal of the University of St. Andrews. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

DORSET DEAR.

Idylls of Country Life.

By M. E. FRANCIS (Mrs. Francis Blundell).
Crown 8vo, 6s.

EVENING STANDARD.—"One of its author's fascinating collections of village tales. There is the scent of sweetbriar all through the book, delicate and dainty, and never sickly or cloying."

DORSET DEAR.

COURT JOURNAL.—"Mrs. Blundell has often disclosed an intimate acquaintance with Dorsetshire life and character, drawn for the most part from the labouring classes, and in this volume of short stories she is at her best."

DORSET DEAR.

COUNTRY LIFE.—"The book is one of the most delightful Mrs. Blundell has given us, full of spirit and go."

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

JUNE. Price SIXPENCE.

WILD WHEAT. By M. E. Francis (Mrs. Francis Blundell).
Chaps. 15-17.

A DISTINGUISHED LIBRARIAN. By M. E. Lowndes.

SELINA'S WEDDING GARMENT. By C. F. Marsh.

The GIRL who isn't THERE. By May Kendall.

QUARTERMASTER-SERGEANT PENHALL. By G. Stanley Ellis.

A TENANT FARMER'S DIARY of the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By W. M. Dunning.

NOT among the IMMORTALS. By Ellen Ada Smith.

The SOUTH-WEST WIND. By A. T. Johnson.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By Andrew Lang.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

H A R P E R S' MAGAZINE.

Features of the rich and varied Contents for JUNE (now ready):—

WHERE the TRAVELLER is STILL UNKNOWN. In an illustrated Article, 'Across the Highland of the World,' C. J. Post describes his journey from Titicaca across the Andes.

HOW WE RECOGNIZE our SENSATIONS. An interesting subject dealt with in Dr. Saleeby's Article 'The Problem of Consciousness.'

The MOORS CAPTURE an AMERICAN WAR-SHIP. The details of this event are fully reconstructed in C. W. Furlong's illustrated Article 'Finding the Frigate "Philadelphia".'

LONDON in SUMMERTIME. W. D. Howells's impressions, with many illustrations.

DO ANIMALS THINK? MR. RABBITSPEAKS. Some shrewd observations throwing light on an interesting subject.

The RIGHT and WRONG of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE. See Article entitled 'The Standard of Usage,' by Prof. Thos. R. Lounsbury.

The GARDENING of OUR ANCESTORS revealed in an illustrated Article 'Elizabethan Flower Gardens' by Edmund Gosse.

BOOTH TARKINGTON'S NEW SERIAL (illustrated) a Story of Indiana, opens in the JUNE Number.

ESPECIALLY RICH in ILLUSTRATIONS. This Number contains 25 Full-Page Illustrations and the usual profusion of smaller ones throughout the Text.

There is a fine WOOD ENGRAVING, 'The Lovers,' by Henry Wolf, from the original of Franz Hals.

PROMINENT WRITERS supply Eight Complete Stories and maintain the Magazine's reputation for Fiction of the highest order.

BY THE COLLABORATOR IN 'THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES.'

THE CHRONICLES OF ADDINGTON PEACE. 3s. 6d.

By B. FLETCHER ROBINSON,

Editor of Vanity Fair.

"The whole book is unusually excellent, difficult to put down until the last adventure is read."—Express.

THE CANDIDATE. 6s.

By JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER.

A thrilling romance woven round the person of a candidate for Presidential honours, and founded on the career of a famous public man.

THE TYRANNY OF THE DARK. 6s.

By HAMLIN GARLAND.

A striking departure. Mr. Garland has embodied in his latest novel an element new to current fiction—that of the occult.

THE ACCOMPLICE. 6s.

By FREDERICK TREVOR HILL.

A story of a hotly contested murder trial following on a most mysterious crime.

THE CLUB OF QUEER TRADES. 6s.

G. K. CHESTERTON.

MY TURKISH BRIDE. 6s.

ARTHUR CRAWSHAY.

THE FORTUNES OF FARTHING. 6s.

A. J. DAWSON.

THE SILENCE OF MRS. HARROLD. 6s.

S. M. GARDENHIRE.

LANGBARROW HALL. 6s.

THEODORA WILSON WILSON.

THE MARATHON MYSTERY. 6s.

B. E. STEVENSON.

HARPER & BROTHERS,
45, Albemarle Street, London, W.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW BOOKS.

Published in 4 vols. large 8vo size, printed in double columns, and bound in strong buckram.

Price Eight Guineas.

AUCTION PRICES OF BOOKS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

A Representative Record arranged in Alphabetical Order. From the commencement of the English Book-Prices Current in 1886, and the American Book-Prices Current in 1894 to 1904, and including some thousands of important Auction Quotations of Earlier Date.

Edited by LUTHER S. LIVINGSTON.

VOL. I. NOW READY.

* * A Prospectus will be sent on application.

A CHEAP EDITION OF MR. MALDEN'S INTERESTING HISTORY OF THE COUNTY OF SURREY.

In demy 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

A POPULAR HISTORY of SURREY.

By HENRY ELLIOT MALDEN.
"Mr. Malden, who is a diligent archaeologist, gives us a readable summary of all that is known about Surrey during the Roman occupation."—Daily News.

POPULAR EDITION.

Price 10s. 6d.

The MUNICIPAL PARKS,

GARDENS, and OPEN SPACES of LONDON. Their History and Associations. By Lieut.-Col. SEXBY, V.D., Professional Associate of the Surveyors' Institute. With numerous Illustrations from Drawings, Photographs, Plans, and Ancient Documents.

"A very interesting book. Diligent labour and abundant research are manifest throughout. To those interested either in central or suburban London the present volume is very acceptable, none the less so from the profusion of illustrations and the copious index with which it is provided."—Athenæum.

In crown 8vo, tastefully printed, and bound in cloth, gilt lettered, and illustrated, price 3s. net.

A HISTORY of PEMBROKE DOCK.

By Mrs. STUART PETERS.

A NEW NOVEL.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, illustrated, 6s.

The KNIGHT of the NEEDLE

ROCK and HIS DAYS, 1571-1606.

This is a story of Elizabethan times, the chief incidents taking place in the Isle of Wight, Guildford and London.

"An entirely new and original kind of fiction. The reader feels himself in real historical company."—Athenæum.

"Miss Wilson has compiled a remarkably interesting and informing book. In general interest and genuine romantic episodes it is worth half a score of ordinary novels, and gives evidence of great care, ability, and good taste."—Academy.

In square 8vo, appropriately bound in cloth, illustrated, 3s. 6d.

MY NEW ZEALAND

GARDEN. By A SUFFOLK LADY.

"Will be read with real interest by those who have a love of shrubs and flowers, and the illustrations are interesting as showing the excellence of the specimens which can be reared in New Zealand."—Record.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In square 8vo, printed on Hand-made Paper by the Chiswick Press, appropriately bound, 3s. 6d. net.

ZETETES, and other Poems.

By MAURICE BROWNE.

"Mr. Browne's poetry suggests the beauties with which the tired spirit may refresh itself. He leads us, to the accompaniment of Winchester bells, to 'radiant realms of dream'; he acclaims the sovran charm of music; he sings of the delights of fancy."—Dundee Advertiser.

In crown 8vo, appropriately bound, 3s. 6d.

The LOVE-SONG of TRISTRAM

and ISEULT. By CYRIL EMRA.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row,
London, E.C.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

IVORIES. By A. MASKELL. With about 80 Plates in Collotype and a Frontispiece in Photogravure. Wide royal 8vo, 25s. net.

[The Connoisseur's Library.]

Mr. Maskell's work on 'Ivories' is a comprehensive account of an interesting and important subject. It forms a review of the history of ivory carvings from the earliest periods, and shows not only how intimately it has been connected in a continuous manner with the history of art down to the present day, but also how it filled a void for many centuries when nearly every other art made complete default. Not the least interesting fact is the account of ivory carving since the renaissance and in our own times, concerning which very little has hitherto been published. The book is profusely illustrated. Mr. Maskell's father was admittedly the highest authority on ancient and mediæval ivories, and possessed perhaps the finest known collection, which is now in the British Museum.

MINIATURES. By DUDLEY HEATH. With 9 Plates in Colour, 15 in Collotype, and 15 in Photogravure. Wide royal 8vo, 25s. net.

[The Connoisseur's Library.]

This book is a history of the Art of Miniature Painting from its earliest origin and development in the Illuminated Manuscript under Byzantine, Carolingian, Celtic, and Saxon influences, and in the French, Flemish, and Italian Schools of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, showing the growth of realistic expression in the Miniature, and tracing its subsequent history as an independent art of portraiture "in little" down to the present day.

It is illustrated with many plates, containing considerably over one hundred reproductions in colour, photogravure, and collotype from unique originals in Illuminated Manuscripts and Portrait Miniatures in the possession of His Majesty the King, the Dukes of Buccleuch and Portland, and other distinguished collectors throughout England.

The COMPLETE GOLFER. By HARRY VARDON. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

A complete book on golf by Mr. Harry Vardon, who is, by general consent, the finest exponent of the game. Mr. Vardon is the only living player who has won the Open Championship four times, and the only British player who has won the American Championship. In this book he relates his own experiences at the game, how he learnt to play, his progress to championship form, and gives a bright account of his many interesting associations with such a fulness of golfing anecdote as no book on golf has yet contained. The second section of the book is devoted to detailed advice upon playing every different stroke in the game, from the drive from the tee to the putt on the green, each stroke illustrated by an instantaneous photograph of Mr. Vardon in the act of making it. There are some sixty of these photographs, all of which have been specially taken for the purposes of this work. There are also chapters on the choice of clubs, on the qualities of different links, match and competition play, playing under different conditions of wind and weather, ladies' golf, and many other features of the game, making it a thoroughly comprehensive and practical work for golfers of all classes and all degrees of skill.

WILLIAM BODHAM DONNE and his FRIENDS.

Edited by Mrs. BARHAM JOHNSON. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

W. B. Donne, cousin of the poet Cowper, was a man of letters; successively Librarian at the London Library and Licensor of Plays; better known as the intimate friend of Edward FitzGerald, Mrs. Kemble, John Mitchell Kemble, &c., letters from whom are included in this correspondence, besides others written to Archbishop Trench, Dean Blakesley, &c.

A number of letters from Bernard Barton, the Quaker Poet, give a pleasing glimpse of Edward FitzGerald.

HOME LIFE in FRANCE. By Miss BETHAM-EDWARDS. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

This book tells us what every one wants to know, and, strangely enough, what few hitherto have been at pains to put on paper. The work, the result of over twenty-five years' close acquaintance with all sorts and conditions of men over the water, informs us how our near neighbours and friends manage their households, incomes, holidays, children, recreations, and routine of daily existence, and what are the average standards and ideals of the great middle classes. The divergence between French and English social usages and etiquette, the glaring discrepancy between French fiction and French family life, the intellectuality underlying practical qualities oftentimes carried to exaggeration, the characteristics of a supremely gifted people whimsically prone to self-depreciation and self-eariarature—all these points are dwelt upon and illustrated by anecdotes and incidents that have come under the author's observation.

MR. ASQUITH. By J. P. ALDERSON. With Portraits and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

This biography is a comprehensive review of Mr. Asquith's career from his schooldays down to the present time, and it contains much hitherto unpublished matter. Dr. Abbott, Mr. Asquith's head-master at the old City of London School, has kindly furnished some reminiscences of his distinguished ex-pupil; and Professor Herbert H. Warren, the Principal of Magdalen College, Oxford, who was a contemporary student with Mr. Asquith, has contributed two exceedingly interesting chapters on the right hon. gentleman's university career. The book deals with Mr. Asquith's legal achievements, and with his activities as a Member of Parliament before his assumption of ministerial office.

IN A SYRIAN SADDLE. By A. GOODRICH-FREER. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

This book describes some journeys on horseback in company with certain archaeologists and other men of learning into Moab, Galilee, and Samaria. The party were the last who saw intact the famous palace of Mshatta, presented by the Sultan to the German Emperor, of which the façade, of the seventh century or earlier, has been bodily conveyed to Berlin. It has been seldom visited, and probably scarcely any European lady has made the journey before. Other features of the book are the descriptions of the German excavations at Taanak and Megiddo, and the journey down the west bank of the Jordan, very seldom undertaken, and never before described except, in part, by Tristram.

ARCHÆOLOGY and FALSE ANTIQUITIES. By R. MUNRO, LL.D. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

[The Antiquary's Books.]

The main object of this work is to show how modern methods of Comparative Archaeology may be utilized as a means of detecting erroneous conclusions whether founded on imperfect observations, false statements, or the actual forgery of objects. A brief account is given of a number of discoveries in various parts of the world which have become the subject of controversy, as well as of some notable forgeries. Then follows a criticism of the so-called "idols," "totems," "churingas," &c., recently found in the Clyde valley, which are still the subject of acute controversy. The concluding chapter deals with the lessons to be derived from the above narrative of the results of ignorance, fraud, and imposture.

The EARL of ELGIN. By GEORGE M. WRONG, Professor of History in the University of Toronto. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

Lord Elgin played an epoch-making part in Canada, in Japan, and in China, and he died while Viceroy of India. The only other narrative of his career was published more than thirty years ago, and this volume is based upon material much of which was not used by Lord Elgin's previous biographer, Mr. Walrond. There are vivid accounts of the troubled times in Canada in 1819, of Lord Elgin's diplomacy in making a Reciprocity Treaty with the United States, of the conclusion of his remarkable treaty with Japan, and of the stirring events which led to the burning of the Summer Palace at Peking in 1860.

The WORKS of CHARLES and MARY LAMB. Edited by E. V. LUCAS. With numerous Illustrations. In 7 vols. demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. each. Vols. VI. and VII. The LETTERS.

This edition contains a large number of new letters, and all the Letters have been collated afresh. Mr. E. V. Lucas, the editor, has attempted in the elaborate notes not only to show the relation of Lamb's writings to his life, but to account for all his quotations and allusions—an ideal of thoroughness far superior to any that previous editors have set before themselves.

WITH the RUSSIANS in MANCHURIA. By the Hon.

MAURICE BARING. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The notes and impressions of Mr. Baring, who, as war correspondent to the Morning Post, spent seven months with the Russian army in Manchuria. Mr. Baring was present at the battles of Ta-shi-chiao, Liaoyang, and Sha-ho; during the two latter battles he was attached to a horse battery. The book contains an account of a journey on the Trans-Siberian railway; notes and impressions of the Russian officers and soldiers, of the attitude of the Chinese, and descriptive sketches of life at the front, at Liaoyang, Mukden, and Kharbin.

AFTER-GLOW MEMORIES. By ANGLO-AUSTRALIAN. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The IMPERIAL DRUG TRADE. By JOSHUA ROWNTREE.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

'The Imperial Drug Trade' contains a sketch of the Indo-Chinese opium traffic, an examination of the procedure and findings of the Royal Commission on Opium as they bear on the trade, and a review of the present position in the light of recent developments in the East. The importance of a true understanding of the best Eastern thought is dwelt on, especially in view of the sudden rise of Japan and its growing influence over China.

REAL LIFE in LONDON; or, the Rambles and Adventures of Bob Tallyho, Esq., and his Cousin, the Hon. Tom Dashall. By an Amateur (PIERCE EGAN). With 31 Coloured Plates by ALKEN and ROWLANDSON, &c.

[The Illustrated Pocket Library.]

An ACADEMY for GROWN HORSEMEN: Containing the completest Instructions for Walking, Trotting, Cantering, Galloping, Stumbling, and Tumbling. Illustrated with 27 Coloured Plates, and adorned with a Portrait of the Author. By GEOFFREY GAMBADO, Esq. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

[The Illustrated Pocket Library.]

The HEBREW PROPHET. By LORING W. BATTEN, Ph.D.

S.T.D., Rector of St. Mark's Church, New York, sometime Professor in the Philadelphia Divinity School. 3s. 6d. net.

This book is a brief statement of the origin, development, and phenomena of Hebrew prophecy, a divine institution, established to foster the moral and spiritual growth of the people of Israel. The reader may confidently trust its conclusions, which are the fruit of modern scholarship, but at the same time the results are conservative and constructive. The author was for several years a professor of Old Testament literature, and has gathered into this volume the ripe harvest of a long period of diligent study.

REPOUSSE METAL WORK. By A. C. HORTH, Instructor of Metal Work to the London County Council. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

[Text-Books of Technology.]

A Handbook of Répoussé Metal Work designed for the use of teachers, students, and amateurs. It is suitable for use in Evening Continuation Schools as a form of Manual Training (Board of Education Syllabus), in Art Schools as an Applied Art subject, and amateurs will find it a fully illustrated guide to the art of working in Répoussé. The various tool operations and stages of work are carefully graduated and divided into complete lessons, so that the technical processes and necessary design in each stage form a separate exercise. The exercises are all useful articles of common use, and also form suggestions whereby students may make their own designs.

RAPHAEL. By A. R. DRYHURST. With 40 Illustrations. Demy 16mo, 2s. 6d. net.

[Little Books on Art.]

AN ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY for CHILDREN.

By MARY E. SHIPLEY. With a Preface by the BISHOP of GIBRALTAR, late Professor of Ecclesiastical History at King's College, London. With Maps and Illustrations. Part I. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

SHIPBUILDING. By DAVID POLLOCK. With 19 Full-Page

Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

[Books on Business.]

TRADE UNIONS. By G. DRAGE. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

[Books on Business.]

This book contains an introductory account of trade unionism before 1867, its development from 1867-89, and its history from 1889 to the present time. Subsequent chapters will deal with the constitution and functions of Trade Unions, as well as the larger organizations of Trade Unions Federations, Trades Councils, and the Trades Unions Congress.

CHESHIRE. By W. M. GALLICHAH. Illustrated by E.

HARTLEY. Small port 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net. [Little Guides.]

WHAT DO WE KNOW CONCERNING ELEC-

TRICITY? By ANTONIA ZIMMERN, B.Sc. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net.

The LITTLE QUARTO SHAKESPEARE. Edited with

Introduction and Notes by W. J. CRAIG. Port 16mo, leather, 1s. net each Volume. The following are the new Volumes:—HAMLET | KING LEAR.

METHUEN'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

Edited by SIDNEY LEE.

In SIXPENNY VOLUMES. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. net.

The new Volumes are:—

ON the IMITATION of CHRIST. By THOMAS A KEMPIS. (Canon BIGG'S Translation.)

The POEMS of JOHN MILTON. In 2 vols. Vol. I.—PARADISE LOST.

The POEMS and PLAYS of OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

LIFE, LETTERS, AND LITERARY REMAINS OF J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

Edited by his WIFE. In 2 vols. illustrated, extra crown 8vo, 17s. net.

VOL. III. NOW READY.

A CHAPTER IN THE HISTORY OF ANNOTATION,

Being SCHOLIA ARISTOPHANICA. Vol. III. By WILLIAM G. RUTHERFORD. 8vo, 25s. net.

* * Previously published, Vols. I. and II., 50s. net.

A GRAMMAR OF GREEK ART

By PERCY GARDNER, Litt.D., Lincoln and Merton Professor of Classical Archaeology in the University of Oxford. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Archæological Handbooks.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.

NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

THE PRINCIPLES OF ECONOMICS

A Fragment of a Treatise on the Industrial Mechanism of Society, and other Papers. By the late W. STANLEY JEVONS, LL.D. M.A. F.R.S. With a Preface by HENRY HIGGS. 8vo, 10s. net.

THE TRADE POLICY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND HER COLONIES SINCE 1860.

By CARL JOHANNES FUCHS, Professor of Political Economy in the University of Freiburg i. B. Translated by CONSTANCE H. M. ARCHIBALD. With a Preface by the Right Hon. J. PARKER SMITH, M.A. M.P. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

COMPATRIOTS' CLUB LECTURES.

First Series. Edited by the Committee of the Compatriots' Club. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

POCKET EDITIONS OF THE NOVELS OF SCOTT, DICKENS, & THACKERAY.

PRINTED ON INDIA PAPER.

Fcap. 8vo, limp cloth, gilt tops, 2s. net; limp leather, gilt tops, 3s. net each.

LATEST ADDITIONS.

The ANTIQUARY. With 10 Illustrations.
NICHOLAS NICKLEBY. With 44 Illustrations.

The NEWCOMES. With 167 Illustrations.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d. Annual Subscription, 16s.

The JUNE Number contains:—

The CHATEAUX of TOURAINE. III. Blois—Amboise—Cheverny. By RICHARD WHITEING, Author of 'No. 5 John Street,' &c. Pictures by Jules Guerin (1 in colour), André Castaigne.

A TRAGEDY of the SNOW. (Stories of Jules of the Great Heart. I.) By Lawrence Mott.

The PIERCING of the SIMPLON. The Longest Tunnel in the World. By Deshler Welch.

And numerous other Stories and Articles of general interest.

ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR CHILDREN.

ST. NICHOLAS.

Price 1s. Annual Subscription, 12s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

Messrs. HURST & BLACKETT beg to announce the publication next week of Mr. F. A. McKENZIE'S new work in 1 vol. demy 8vo, with Illustrations, Plans, and a Map, price 10s. 6d. net.

FROM TOKYO TO TIFLIS.

Uncensored Letters from the War. By F. A. McKENZIE, Special Correspondent of the 'Daily Mail.'

The Second Edition of Mr. PERCEVAL LONDON'S great work on Tibet, entitled LHASA, is now ready in 2 vols., with all the original Illustrations, and the new Official Survey of Lhasa and Neighbourhood, price 2l. 2s. net.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 5s.

The RUSSIAN NAVY in the RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR. By Capt. N. KLADO, of the Imperial Russian Navy.

"An interesting book, and proof of its author's astuteness and ability."—Standard.

VOLUME II. of FRIEDBERGER and FROHNER'S VETERINARY PATHOLOGY, Translated by Capt. HAYES and Edited by JOHN DUNSTAN, M.R.C.V.S., price 10s. 6d. net.

NEW NOVEL BY ALICE M. DIEHL.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

BREAD UPON the WATERS. By ALICE M. DIEHL, Author of 'The Garden of Eden,' &c. [Next week.

NEW NOVEL BY MADAME ALBANESI.

In 1 vol. 6s.

MARIAN SAX. By Madame Albanesi, Author of 'Capricious Caroline,' 'Susannah and One Elder,' &c.

"This well-written story."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"This novel, like everything from the same pen, is admirably written and instinct with dramatic feeling."

Dundee Advertiser.

"The story is gracefully written and constructed."

Scotsman.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

A GENDARME of the KING. Being the Experiences of the Laird of Lindourie with the Great Frederick in the Seven Years' War. By PHILIP L. STEVENSON.

"Narrated with plenty of movement and with a graphic picture of Frederick himself."—Times.

"Major Stevenson has managed to conjure up the real spirit of life in Frederick's Courts and camps."

Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW NOVEL BY EDMUND DOWNEY.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

DOROTHY TUKE: a Tale of the Sea. By EDMUND DOWNEY, Author of 'Through Green Glasses,' &c.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

DORRIEN of CRANSTON. By BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of 'The Induna's Wife,' &c.

NEW VOLUME OF

HURST & BLACKETT'S ATHLETIC SERIES.

DIVERSIONS DAY BY DAY. By E. F. BENSON and EUSTACE MILES. 1 vol. 4s.

NEW SIXPENNY EDITIONS.

In medium 8vo, illustrated covers.

GOD'S PRISONER. By JOHN OXENHAM.

A KING'S WOMAN. By KATHERINE TYNAN.

HER OWN PEOPLE. By B. M. CROKER.

THE MAN from DOWNING STREET. By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

The PROGRESS of HELLENISM in ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE. By JOHN PENTLAND MAHAFFY, D.D. Mus.Doc. Dublin, Hon. D.C.L.Oxon., sometime Professor of Ancient History in the University of Dublin. 5s. net. [Ready.

INTERNATIONAL LAW and the NORTH SEA CRISIS. By F. E. SMITH, B.C.L., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, and Vinerian Scholar in the University of Oxford, and N. W. SIBLEY, LL.M., Trin.H.Cant. Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo, cloth, 21s. net. [In preparation.

RUSSIA UNDER the GREAT SHADOW. By LUIGI VILLARI, Author of 'Giovanni Segantini,' 'Italian Life in Town and Country,' &c. With 60 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net. [In preparation.

The AGE of the EARTH, and other GEOLOGICAL STUDIES. By W. J. SOLLAS, LL.D. D.Sc. F.R.S., Professor of Geology in the University of Oxford. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. [In preparation.

MODEL FACTORIES and VILLAGES. Ideal Conditions of Labour and Housing. By BUDGETT MEAKIN, Lecturer on Industrial Betterment. With about 200 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [Ready.

In PERIL of CHANGE. Essays Written in Time of Tranquillity. By C. F. C. MASTERMAN, Author of 'From the Abyss,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready.
A volume of brilliant studies of contemporary literature and religious and social conditions.

MEDIÆVAL ENGLAND. By MARY BATESON. Fully illustrated. Large crown 8vo, 5s. [Second Impression.
"The best manual that can be found anywhere for the life of the Middle Ages in England."—Speaker.

The EVOLUTION of the WORLD and of MAN. By GEORGE E. BOXALL, Author of 'The Anglo-Saxon: a Study in Evolution.' Crown 8vo, 5s. [Ready.

WHAT I HAVE SEEN WHILE FISHING, and HOW I HAVE CAUGHT MY FISH. By PHILIP GEEN. With 73 Illustrations. Second Edition. 7s. 6d. net. [Ready.

NEW FICTION.

THE FLUTE OF PAN.

By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS. 6s. [June 5.

THE MEMOIRS OF CONSTANTINE DIX.

By BARRY PAIN. 3s. 6d. [Ready.

THE JUNE

INDEPENDENT REVIEW.

Price 2s. 6d. net. [June 1.

NOTES on CURRENT EVENTS.
MR. BALFOUR and the CONSTITUTION. J. A. Spender.
CHINESE LABOUR in the TRANSVAAL. Doris Birnbaum.

PUBLIC FEEDING of CHILDREN. Canon Barnett.
LONDON and the VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS. G. L. Bruce.
THE CALL of the EAST. A. M. Latter.
CATHOLICISM and MORALS. G. G. Conlton.
THE CRATER of SANTORIN. Eleanor Cropper.
LABOUR and POLITICS. A. Hook.
THE ETERNAL MOMENT (Chap. I.) E. M. Forster.
THE ENGLISH FARM LABOURER. Seebohm Rowntree.
OTHER REVIEWS.

T. FISHER UNWIN, London.

SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|  | PAGE    |
|--|---------|
| THE LITERATURE OF THE FRENCH RENAISSANCE ...   | 647     |
| SHAKESPEARE'S MARRIAGE ... ..  | 648     |
| HISTORIC DRESS IN AMERICA ... ..   | 649     |
| CONSTANTINE THE GREAT ... ..   | 649     |
| THE FIRST BISHOP OF SHERBORNE ... ..   | 650     |
| NEW NOVELS (The Rose of Life; A Dark Lantern; The Wise Woods; A Child of the Shore; The Error of her Ways; The Redding Strail; Cœurs d'Amoureux; Ring und Stab) ... ..   | 650-652 |
| THE CONSTITUTIONS OF NORWAY AND SWEDEN ...   | 652     |
| THE CHURCH ... ..  | 652     |
| WILLS AND OTHER RECORDS... ..  | 653     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Later Peeps at Parliament; Tracks of a Rolling Stone; Home Life in France; Health and Holiness; Some Feudal Mills; James Legge, Missionary and Scholar; Hurrell Froude; The Women of Shakespeare's Family; New Editions) ... .. | 653-657 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..   | 657     |
| THE FIRST MENTION OF CRICKET IN INDIA; CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS; 'DICTIONARY OF INDIAN BIOGRAPHY'; 'KING LEOPOLD II: HIS RULE IN BELGIUM AND THE CONGO'; SALES ...   | 657-659 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..   | 659     |
| SCIENCE—THE ELECTRICAL CONSTITUTION OF MATTER; RESEARCH NOTES; THE CONVERSAZIONE OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..  | 660-663 |
| FINE ARTS—THE GRAYTON GALLERY; M. LALIQUE'S JEWELLERY; THE LOUIS HUTH PICTURES; GOSSIP... ..   | 664-665 |
| MUSIC—TRISTAN; TANNHAUSER; LA BOHÈME; CARMEN; OLD FRENCH AND ENGLISH BALLADS; ALTMANN'S EDITION OF WAGNER'S LETTERS; JAPANESE FOLK-SONGS; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK... ..   | 665-667 |
| DRAMA—HAMLET; MAN AND SUPERMAN; RENAISSANCE; GOSSIP ... ..   | 667-668 |

LITERATURE

The Literature of the French Renaissance.
By Arthur Tilley. 2 vols. (Cambridge, University Press.)

THE influence of the Italian Renaissance on the literatures of France and of England is a subject which of recent years has been the object of much study, and Mr. Tilley's contribution to the history of the movement is one which merits a high place among its fellows. Its style is grave and severe, Teutonic rather than French; and if it seems uninspired, it is well to remember that there are two kinds of inspiration, that nothing can make up for the careful collection of materials and the serious and profound study of the books, the men, the history of the period, of which these volumes give constant evidence. Merits of this kind will give a book permanent value, however we may disagree with the opinions it expresses and the assumptions it involves.

When it was finally decided that Italy should not be German, its students and writers set themselves to pick up and join, after a thousand years, the broken links of time—to continue in the Rome of the Popes the traditions of the Rome of Augustus. But as they rejected mediæval thought and the foundations on which it was based, the Renaissance developed in two directions, paganism reasserted itself, and the pursuit of literary beauty of form led, gradually but surely, to abandonment of the substance. When Italy rejected the German, it finally sealed its severance from the Romantic, and rendered impossible any return, however slight, to mediævalism. The Renaissance was a real movement, affecting not a small coterie of writers and artists alone, but the whole national life.

Its spirit and the Italian mind were fitting counterparts.

In the case of northern countries, such as France or England, it is a tenable position that the movement ceased to be real, and became a fashion. Humanism, a leading factor in the Italian Renaissance, undoubtedly exercised an influence over a limited circle of literary men, though the Pleiad included the greatest poets of the day; but the great bulk of the nation remained entirely untouched by it. The French Renaissance (to use the term as generally understood) was not a great movement bridging over the interval between the mediæval and the modern, it was an efflorescence on the surface of Court literature—a fact to be noted, a phenomenon to be explained, but accidental rather than essential in character. The break-up of the Middle Ages and the emergence of the modern world are due not so much to this Renaissance, but rather to that economic, social, and religious movement which we, confining our attention to one side of it, call the Reformation. The shifting of trade from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic coasts of Europe, the alterations in the ordered mediæval society and the formation of new classes for which there was no room in its framework, the victory of individual opinion over general, the growth of nationality, are the true causes of the new spirit, which had little in common with the spirit of Naples, of Florence, or of Rome.

Western Europe being, then, mediæval and romantic, it was difficult for any one living in it to be entirely under Renaissance influence. However much Erasmus or Rabelais or any man of the transition period might sympathize with certain aspects of the Italian movement, his education had been mediæval, his friends, his surroundings were continually bringing him back to mediæval ways of thought. In a later generation a De Baïf, an Eyquem, can create a little peninsula of culture, where nothing but Latin is spoken, even by the servants, and the children brought up there may be surrounded from infancy by humanist influences; but if the system was successful the child became at best a Jean Antoine, a Gabriel Harvey; or, if he had the stuff of a Montaigne, it was due rather to training in the world outside than to hothouse education.

From this point of view, then, Mr. Tilley's title, like the thesis which lies at the back of his work, is misleading. He has given us a history of French literature before, during, and after the French Renaissance, if we use the term as connoting a relation with the Italian Renaissance, while his title has at least the fault of assuming a common quality which can only be shown to exist by minimizing it to the vanishing point. The common term between, for example, Rabelais, the 'Satire Ménippée,' De Baïf, and Du Bartas is little more than the power to write French. Let us examine Mr. Tilley's answer:—

"These, then, are the great qualities of French Renaissance literature—individuality, vividness, imagination.....It was the mighty, irresistible impulse of the Renaissance which gave the literature its vigour, its freshness, its spontaneity; it was the feeling of emancipation from mediæval swaddling-clothes which led men to give free utterance to whatever stirred their emotions or stimulated their intellect; it was the thirst for personal glory and posthumous fame which urged them to immortalize themselves in undying verse—or, at least, to leave for posterity a record of their own lives. It is this influence of a great spiritual and intellectual movement predominating over racial characteristics and political environment which justifies the claim of this literature to the distinctive name of the literature of the French Renaissance."

Let the reader think of a few representative writers of the Italian Renaissance—Ficino, Machiavelli, Ariosto, Valla, Pontanus, Poggio, Filelfo, Pico de Mirandola, Pulci. It will be seen at once that the word has not a single attribute in common when we speak of the French Renaissance and the Italian Renaissance. "Individuality, vividness, imagination," can be predicated of most good literature, they are as true of Villon or De la Sale as of Ronsard; it was not a literary Renaissance that "gave the literature its vigour," it was the world-movement which, beginning with the development of ocean and abandonment of mediæval trade routes, passed over into the development of individual thought in literature and religion, and died away in the French Revolution, that supplied the impetus for the outburst of literature, its new birth in Western Europe.

But while the great literature from Marot to Regnier, which Mr. Tilley so ably describes and summarizes, is not a part or a consequence of the Italian Renaissance, there is no doubt that some of its chief writers owe great debts to it, and if our author had been freed from the incubus of showing a dependence of them all, he could have brought out its real relations more clearly. Rabelais's connexion with Lyons explains nothing of his literary history, while it is all-important in the case of Pontus de Tyard, for example. Lyons was the advanced post of Italian culture in France, and, through such poets as Maurice Scève, was a great agent in popularizing it. The casual reader of Mr. Tilley's book will not realize the immense proportion of mere translation and imitation ("which allows you to omit what you cannot translate") in the work of the Pleiad. Even now the enumeration is not complete, but enough is known to prove the absolute identity of material between the school of Petrarch and the Pleiad. Yet their keen French spirit saved this latter circle from servility; what they took from the Italian they made their own, and thus Ronsard and Du Bellay are as French as Spenser and Sidney are English.

When we make a detailed examination of Mr. Tilley's work, our first impression is that Marot is treated a little more seriously than he deserves. Certainly he has been dealt rather hard measure by M. Brunetière lately, but glorified "ordinary Frenchman" as he is, it is difficult to think of him as a convinced Protestant. The chapter on Rabelais is excellent, with perhaps the exception that much in him is attributed to religious conviction that ought more properly to be considered political; Gallicanism is not Protestantism, and the statement that he represents "the whole Renaissance in its earlier, fresher, and healthier manifestations" needs another special definition of the term. Curiously enough, Mr. Tilley does not set so much value on Calvin's writing of French as M. Brunetière, who styles 'L'Institution Chrestienne'

"le premier de nos livres que l'on puisse appeler classiques. Elle l'est également et bien plus que le roman de Rabelais, ou son poème—par la sévérité de la composition, par la manière dont la conception de l'ensemble y détermine la nature et le choix des détails. Elle l'est—par cette intention de convaincre ou d'agir qui, comme elle en est la cause, en fait le mouvement intérieur, l'âme de son allure ou de son rythme oratoire. Elle l'est encore—par la gravité soutenue d'un style dont on a pu voir que la 'tristesse' n'est pas le seul caractère. Elle l'est enfin,—pour cette 'libéralité,' si je puis ainsi dire, toute nouvelle alors, avec laquelle Calvin y a mis à notre portée les matières qui ne s'agitaient jusqu'alors que dans les écoles des théologiens. Elle ne l'est pas moins pour le retentissement que la prose française en a reçu dans le monde."

A useful note at the end of Part I. "on the beginning of the year in France between 1515 and 1565" may help to solve several puzzles in bibliography—one in especial where the date on the first sheet of the book is a year later than that of the colophon printed last of all. The section dealing with the Pleiad is fully based on documents, but the "five years" of Ronsard's study in the College of Coqueret must be reduced to eighteen months at most, as has been lately shown. Du Bellay is the subject of a very sympathetic study, but the "lesser stars" receive rather summary treatment, and the subject of measured verse—which deeply concerned poets and critics in France and England—is dismissed with scant mention. The Lyons School is treated last of all, an arrangement we think faulty from the point of view of development as of chronology. There is no such illuminating touch in the section as M. Brunetière's remark that the Pleiad are the Alexandrian School of French literature; but the appropriate and obvious remark is usually made. The chapter dealing with the drama is open to a similar criticism; the facts are there, but the method on which they are dealt with forbids their becoming an organic whole. It is in the last part of the work that Mr. Tilley is at his best. Montaigne, the 'Satire Ménippée,' D'Aubigne, the Historians, and Regnier are all well and carefully studied. The fact is that France had now come to her own, and thrown off the influence of the Italian Renaissance, while she had absorbed and assimilated all that humanism could do for her.

We cannot conclude without a special word of praise for the apparatus with which Mr. Tilley has enriched his book. Bibliographies are becoming fairly common in works of reference, but few of them approach those in this book either in accuracy or wide range of subject. We miss the names of one or two works we have ourselves used, such as Pieri's 'Pétrarquisme,' but the art of a good bibliography is shown in its omissions. The index is hardly so full as might be desirable, since the value of the book rests on its accuracy of detail. Such a word as "Humanism," for example, is not included.

Shakespeare's Marriage, his Departure from Stratford, and other Incidents in his Life.
By Joseph William Gray. (Chapman & Hall.)

INCREASED interest in Shakspeare and his works has had one unfortunate effect in multiplying the publication of volumes containing repetitions of known facts or assertions concerning the poet, coloured by the compilers' prejudices or imaginations—volumes not helpful to scholars, and not pleasant for reviewers.

It is, therefore, all the more refreshing to find a book in which the author shows thorough acquaintance with the work of predecessors, frank recognition of debts due to them, and careful study and analysis of unworked manuscript authorities. Mr. J. W. Gray has spent years among the records preserved in the Worcester Diocesan Registry, and the registers of various Warwickshire and Worcestershire villages connected with these. He has compared his results by a similar study among the London marriage licences and allegations, and those of the episcopal registry in the province of Canterbury, and has thrown much light on the whole question by judicious inferences from the long series of examples he has selected. He is, therefore, entitled to speak on the points treated in this volume. He shows that a series of adverse criticisms, based on insufficient authority, began with Aubrey, and have been accepted down to these days, when many go beyond all authority in their efforts to discolour facts and discredit the poet. An appearance of truth has been given to unfounded hypotheses by the frequent repetitions of writers otherwise of good fame:—

"The errors of such men are difficult either to ignore or rectify, but in most of these cases, happily for the repute of those concerned, it can be shown that the imputations are based upon a misapprehension as to the reasons for obtaining a marriage licence or a misreading of the terms of the bond."

Mr. Gray has shown conclusively that Shakspeare's marriage bond was not unusual in any particular, as has been asserted by some writers, but that it followed the ordinary and commonplace lines of such documents; that it gives no support whatever to the hypothesis that John Shakspeare disapproved of his son's marriage, or that it was forced on him by the bride's friends. On the contrary, the licence would never have been granted without his father's consent; and Sandells and Richardson would never have risked signing the bond unless they had been aware of this. Before any licence could be granted at the time an application was necessary, giving a satisfactory reason for the dispensation, and an allegation or certificate of the consent of parents or guardians in all cases of minors. That condition having been already secured, the bond only ensured the consent of the bride's "friends," she being of full age, and having no father. It is by no means remarkable to any one who considers John Shakspeare's financial position at the time, that he should not have attempted to become surety for the bond. But Mr. Gray further informs us that of the 166 bonds executed during the years 1582 and 1583, only twenty-four have a surety of the same name as the bridegroom, and even among that small proportion there is no certainty that all of these were parents; they might have been uncles or other relatives. All that was necessary on the one hand was a surety financially satisfactory to the bishop, and, on the other hand, one that knew the preliminaries were all right, so that it was safe for him to sign, and it is suggested that the bishop might have encouraged the bride's friends to join in the bond, as an additional safeguard for her protection. The discredit which has been associated with the need of haste and secrecy implied by the application for a licence is rebutted by a thorough consideration of the customs of the age; and Mr. Gray illustrates, in a much fuller and more satisfactory way than was done by Elton, the difficulties raised by the "forbidden periods" for marriage. His opinion concerning the probable cause of haste is given later:—

"In any case, the view that something discreditable to Shakspeare or his wife is implied by the application for the licence is not sustained by the documentary evidence, or by a consideration of the known facts relating to the marriage."

The discrepancy between the statements of the marriage licence and the marriage bond is carefully discussed, the latter being considered to bear every possible proof of correctness as well as authenticity. Some late writers have emphatically asserted that the William Shaxpere who had a licence on the 27th to marry "Anne Whateley of Temple Grafton" must have been a different man from the William who on the following day had a bond signed for his marriage with "Anne Hathaway of Stratford," and that so serious an error cannot be believed possible. To those who have followed the careers of the contemporaries of the name, and who are aware of the frequent mistakes made by the register clerks, a clerical error seems by far the most probable solution of the difficulty. Mr. Gray believes in this explanation, and is the first to suggest a possible reason for this error, which may be due to a chain of associated ideas in the clerk's mind. In a record of the proceedings of a court held on that same day—November 27th, 1582—there is noted the suit of William Whateley, vicar of Crowle, against a parishioner for non-payment of tithes. It is just possible that the clerk had the one name in his head, and confused it with the other. Indeed, the vicar may have been present at the time when the licence was being drawn out, and may have said something in regard to the application. This reverend gentleman was, the very next year, the sole surety for the marriage bond of John Combes, of Stratford. The writer further points out that it would be strange indeed if on two successive days the licence of one William Shaxpere should have lost its bond and the bond of the other should have lost its licence.

Mr. Gray has taken praiseworthy pains in searching not only all surviving registers in which Shakspeare's marriage might have been entered, but also the registers which record the marriages of other contemporary couples whose bonds or licences have been preserved. He puts forward a suggestion, worthy of consideration, that the marriage may have been performed in Worcester at the same time in the church of St. Martin, the nearest to the registry, noting the curious fact that the page of the register containing the entries of marriages for that date has been deliberately cut out in comparatively recent times. While no one can contravene the writer's pronouncements concerning the hitherto debatable questions involved in the bond, there is still some doubt possible as to the "cause of haste" suggested by him. He is inclined to accept Aubrey's earliest statement, though it was but a "guess," and to believe that Shakspeare really hurried off to London at the age of eighteen, in consequence of some of the youthful escapades with which he has been credited—the taking of Lucy's deer, the breaking of his apprenticeship, or some urgent necessity for earning money—and that the marriage was suddenly decided upon, in order that his wife might not lose her dower or other privileges. After his marriage, according to Mr. Gray, the poet was engaged in a battle for fortune in London, with frequent visits to Stratford, until he finally settled there, beside his wife and children.

The writer further discusses the excommunication of Thomas Quiney on his marriage to Judith Shakspeare without a licence, just before the death of the poet, and shows its probable relation to the circumstances of his illness.

Classified lists of the real facts known and transcripts of deeds, quotations, and references are appended. The book is enriched by facsimile illustrations of the documents in question, and by an excellent index, and it may be commended to all Shakspearean students.

It is encouraging to workers to know that, beside the normal fruit of his long and faithful labours, Mr. Gray has gleaned an allusion to Shakspeare as a poet, in a new and surprising quarter, in the very Diocesan Registry at Worcester where his marriage bond lies. A certain "John Pryce" had in the year 1676 a rough quarto volume, in which he entered Consistory Court precedents, miscellaneous extracts from various authors, and what appear to be original verses. This John Pryce became afterwards chancellor of the diocese, and left his book in the office, where it has lain all these years unnoted, until Mr. Gray discovered in it some verses upon 'Ben Jonson and a Highwayman,' in which the phrase occurs:—

Robber. Art thou great Ben, or ye revived ghost
Of famous Shakspeare?

Dr. Plume's anecdote of John Shakspeare discovered by Dr. Andrew Clark concludes the volume.

Historic Dress in America. By Elisabeth McClellan. (Philadelphia, Jacobs.)

CONSIDERABLE attention has been paid of recent years in America to the costume of the colonial period, and more than one handsome and painstaking volume has treated of it. Mrs. McClellan's is the latest work on the subject, and it is by no means the least noteworthy. On the contrary, so far as illustrations go, it is certainly among the best. These are, for the most part, either reproductions from old prints, or drawings from garments actually in existence. In this latter respect the author has been so fortunate and so diligent as to collect a number of specimens of ancient clothing which have survived the waste of time. Moreover, Miss S. B. Steel has contributed many coloured plates, which, with the aid of the elaborate notes added by the author, enable the reader to gather the changing fashions of the centuries almost by cursorily turning the pages. Naturally the full history of this subject is cluttered up with a mass of detail, impossible to remember, and often bewildering to realize, for the colonies endeavoured to keep pace with the London changes. This was more specially true of Virginia and the Carolinas, with their aristocratic affinities. English then was the only wear, and the connexion was so strong that "not only were the manufactured articles pretty sure to have come from England, but everything else, to be saleable, must be labelled English, inasmuch that fanciers used to sell the songsters unknown to England, if they sang particularly well, as English mocking-birds."

In the New England colonies sumptuary laws were enacted, as might have been expected:—

"In 1634 the Massachusetts Court forbade the purchase of 'any apparell, either woollen, silke, or linnen, with any lace on it, silver, golde, silk or thread.' They shall not 'make or buy slashed clothes, other than one slash in each sleeve and another in the backe'; there shall be no 'cutt works, imbroid'd or needle work'd capps, bands and Rayles; no gold or silver girdles, hatt bands, belts, ruffs, beaver hatts.'"

No sumptuary laws existed in New York under the Dutch, and fashions there were very elaborate. It is curious to read that "the colours in the Dutch gowns were almost uniformly gay—in keen contrast to the sad-coloured garments of New England." But the Dutch were not always so sober in colour as they are reputed.

The eighteenth century, essentially worldly wise and giddy of head, brought an increasing devotion to clothes. Dressed dolls were sent from London to the colonies periodically, to give mantua-makers the fashion. Was it an English mantua-maker, one Selby, who actually invented the hoop in 1711? Here is the description of two misses at a Virginian ball in 1774. Miss Jenny Washington

"is about seventeen. She has not a handsome face, but is neat in her dress, of an agreeable size, well-proportioned, and has an easy winning manner. She is not forward to begin a conversation, yet when spoken to is extremely affable, without assuming any girlish affectation, or pretending to be overcharged with wit.....She appears to-day in a chintz cotton gown with an elegant blue stamp, a sky-blue silk quilt and spotted apron. Her hair is a light brown, it was craped up with two rolls at each side, and on the top was a small cap of beautiful gauze and rich lace, with an artificial flower interwoven.....Miss Hale is about fourteen.....She is dressed in a white Holland gown, cotton, quilted very fine, a lawn apron, has her hair craped up, and on it a small tuft of ribbon for a cap."

Incidentally, as will be seen from this extract, the book contains a good deal that is interesting in the social history and housewifery of America. For example, if any one would like to try a new (or rather old) recipe for potpourri, here is one from an aged manuscript:—

"Dry your violets in a sunny window. Have ready a quarter of a pound of finely powdered baysalt. When the roses are out, gather all kinds, and dry in the same way. Then add them to the violets, putting layers of salt between each layer. Gather a good deal of lavender, also the leaves of the verbenas, and, if possible, myrtle and orange blossoms. After all the flowers and salt have filled the jar, its contents should be constantly stirred for a month."

Constantine the Great: the Reorganisation of the Empire and the Triumph of the Church.
By John B. Firth. "Heroes of the Nations." (Putnam's Sons.)

THIS is distinctly one of the better monographs in the unequal series to which it belongs. The story of the career and work of Constantine does not lose its perennial interest in the well-arranged and well-balanced narrative of Mr. Firth. The biographer of the first Christian emperor is met by perplexing problems at every point. Whether we agree or not with the solutions of these difficulties which Mr. Firth prefers, we must acknowledge that he has always endeavoured to form an independent judgment for himself from the original authorities, and in all questions of importance he shows us how he arrives at his conclusions. Books like this are not intended to contribute additions to knowledge, and this volume does not exceed the programme of its kind. We may, however, fairly criticize the author for having taken no account of some recent investigations which ought not to be ignored.

We begin with a minor difficulty—the date of Constantine's birth. Mr. Firth assigns it definitely to 273 or 274. These dates rest respectively on Eusebius, 'Vita Constantini,' and Victor's 'Epitome.' But it has been shown that neither can be correct. Constantine was still a boy, as Eumenius tells us, when he was betrothed to Fausta—that is, he was not more than fourteen years old. The betrothal cannot have taken place before March 1st, 293, the date at which his father was created Cæsar. Hence 279 is the earliest possible year for his birth. Other considerations confirm this argument, which is due to Prof. Seeck.

Again, Mr. Firth accepts without hesitation the alleged relationship of Constantius Chlorus to the Emperor Claudius. The relationship assumes different forms in the historical sources, and the statement, which Mr. Firth adopts from the 'Historia Augusta,' that the mother of Constantius was a daughter of a brother of Claudius, is difficult to reconcile with chronology, and is distinctly at variance with the panegyrist's phrase "auita cognatio," describing the relation of Constantine to Claudius. The official view represented in inscriptions is that Constantine was the grandson of Claudius. It is impossible not to recognize that there is a serious difficulty in this Claudian affiliation, even if we do not accept Seeck's theory that it is entirely legendary.

Mr. Firth is perhaps at his best in treating such questions as that of the death of Maximian. He is certainly right in rejecting the sensational story of Lactantius, and he is probably right in his conclusion that Maximian committed suicide by the orders of his son-in-law. In any case, Constantine was not to blame. If Maximian could still be regarded as dangerous to peace, Constantine was fully justified, by the political morality of the time, in removing him. If he was not dangerous, then, as Seeck points out, there is no reason whatever for not regarding his death as a voluntary suicide, and giving credit to the words of the panegyrist: cum per te liceret ut uiuere.

The struggle of Constantine and Maxentius is related with spirit; but we think that Mr. Firth has failed to appreciate the design of Maxentius on the eve of Constantine's invasion of his dominion. "There is a curious reference," he says, "in one of the authorities to a plan formed by Maxentius of invading Gaul through Rætia." Zosimus, the authority to whom this observation relates, speaks of invading not Gaul, but Rætia. Mr. Firth does not seem alive to the fact that Rætia was not, as we might expect it to have been, along with Italy under the rule of Maxentius, but belonged to the dominion of Licinius. Bearing this in mind, we see that the object of Maxentius in posting an army in North-Eastern Italy was not merely, as Mr. Firth says, to be "on guard against Licinius," but also to invade that emperor's territory. Remembering the league of Maxentius with Maximin, we may infer that the strategic purpose of the invasion of Rætia was to engage Licinius in the north while Maximin should attack him from the south. The unexpectedly rapid movements of Constantine averted the invasion of Rætia; hence Maximin never moved, and Licinius had no fighting to do.

The account of the battle of the Milvian Bridge is not satisfactory, and suggests that Mr. Firth has not realized the difficulties which are involved. This battle engaged the interest of Moltke, who discussed it, but not convincingly, in his 'Wanderbüchlein.' Mr. Firth's narrative implies that Constantine drove his foes before him along the Flaminian Way. But Maxentius had occupied the pass of Saxa Rubra, and his army must have stretched in a long column from there to the city. A simple advance of Constantine's army in these conditions is unintelligible. How, and at what point, was the battle fought? There is a great deal to be said for the view of Seeck that Constantine, leaving a small force to prevent the enemy from debouching into the plain beyond the pass, marched across from the Flaminian to the Cassian Road, and attacked the rear of the hostile army on the flank near the Milvian Bridge.

Mr. Firth's discussion of the stories of the Vision of the Cross and Constantine's dream and conversion is marked by thoughtfulness and common sense; but these are problems, like the tragedy of Crispus and Fausta, on which critics will, perhaps, never reach a unanimous conclusion. As Mr. Firth suggests that the phrase instinctu diuinitatis, in the inscription of the Arch of Constantine, has a bearing on the emperor's religious attitude at the time of his victory over Maxentius, it would have been worth his while to observe that the dedication was drawn up by the Roman Senate, which consisted of pagans, and Constantine himself is not responsible for the phrase.

The important treatise 'De Mortibus Persecutorum' has been carefully studied by the author, but it would have been well if he had made up his mind whether its attribution to Lactantius is certain or doubtful. In one place he declares that the Lactantian authorship is "very doubtful"; elsewhere he definitely builds upon the assumption that it is certain. For our part, we cannot feel any hesitation in accepting the treatise as the genuine work of Lactantius. We may call attention to a consideration which deserves some weight, in addition to the main arguments which identify the writer with the rhetor of Nicomedia. The writer lived at Nicomedia; he relates as an eye-witness the events which he describes as occurring there. It seems in the highest degree improbable that at Nicomedia, of all places, there should have been at that time two men possessing such a command of Latin as the author of the 'De Mortibus' and Lactantius if they were two different persons.

We may finally refer to Mr. Firth's apparent ignorance of the grave doubts which have been cast upon the Edict of Milan in support of our suggestion that he is not wholly abreast of recent research. It is significant that in his account of Constantinople he depends largely on the unscholarly book of Mr. Grosvenor. He adopts the erroneous identification of the Bin Bir Derek with the Cistern of Philoxenus. The Bin Bir Derek dates from the time of Justinian. The Cistern of Philoxenus has not been discovered.

---

Life of St. Ealdhelm, First Bishop of Sherborne. By W. B. Wildman. (Chapman & Hall.)

THE year 705 is memorable in the annals of Sherborne, for in that year the Dorset town of considerable ecclesiastical repute obtained its first historical mention. The inhabitants this year are making no small stir about their twelve-hundredth anniversary, so that this small book by Mr. Wildman, who is already the author of 'A Short History of Sherborne,' is a timely contribution to the story of the early days when that place emerged from obscurity:—

"From 705 to 709 Sherborne is Ealdhelm's home, the centre of his wider work, the place where he built that wonderful church which William of Malmesbury had himself seen, that wonderful church which the Norman builders never touched till William's own day, when Roger of Caen, Bishop of Salisbury, and a foe to Malmesbury, rebuilt it in the Norman style."

One of the several good photographic illustrations of this book presents the exterior of a Saxon doorway in the north aisle of Sherborne Abbey church. It is styled 'Doorway of Ealdhelm's Cathedral, circa 705,' and the assignment of the work to that date is emphasized in the text. It is only natural that Mr. Wildman should desire, as a resident in Sherborne, to believe, and to cause others to believe, that this is a portion of the work of a great bishop, now being specially commemorated. But this is improbable. The "long-and-short" work of the jambs of this doorway, though undoubtedly earlier than the Conquest, is, we believe, at least two centuries later than the times of Ealdhelm.

Of Ealdhelm's birthplace and boyhood nothing is known; but it can be established that he was sent by his father to Canterbury to study under Hadrian, who became Abbot of St. Augustine's in 671. It is generally accepted that Ealdhelm succeeded Maildubh as chief of the Malmesbury brotherhood in 675.

Bishop Hædde succeeded to the bishopric of Wessex in 676, removing the centre of the see from its borders at Dorchester-on-Thames to Winchester. The addition of Dorset and districts further west to the diocese in 682 made the Wessex bishopric thoroughly unwieldy, and on Hædde's death in 705 the division of the West Saxon kingdom into two dioceses was at once carried out. It was arranged that Winchester should remain the see-town of the older Wessex, whilst Sherborne was the ecclesiastical centre for Dorset and the rest of the newer Wessex. The lovers of Mr. Hardy's inimitable novels are apt to regard Dorset as essentially the Wessex of our earlier history, whereas it was really a later excrecence of the original kingdom of the West Saxons. The bishop chosen to rule over the newer Wessex was Ealdhelm, at that time Abbot of Malmesbury.

Mr. Wildman proceeds to discuss, with some learning and acumen, the vexed question of the boundaries of the two dioceses. He is certainly right, as Freeman showed thirty years ago in the Transactions of the Somersetshire Archaeological Society, in repudiating the statements in this respect of William of Malmesbury. That chronicler, misled by the condition of things prevailing in his own days, supposed that, by an unfair arrangement, only Hampshire and Surrey were assigned to Winchester, whilst all the remainder of the west (including even Cornwall) was allotted to Sherborne. Mr. Wildman states concisely his reasons for believing that all Berkshire and all Wiltshire (except the wedge called the land of Malmesbury) pertained to Winchester in the days of Ealdhelm, and that the Sherborne diocese consisted of Dorset, Somerset, the land of the Exe, and the land of Malmesbury. 'The Saxon Chronicle' for 709 expressly states that Ealdhelm ruled over the parts west of Selwood, and the only real difficulty arises from the doubts as to the extent of the great woodland district of that name, at one time called Selwoodshire. This question is scarcely adequately discussed in these pages.

Ealdhelm was sixty-six years of age when called to the episcopate. Though frail in body, he worked for a brief time as an itinerant overseer of his large and scattered flock with unfailing energy. Death overtook him in the midst of a visitation journey in the little village of Doultling, in the midst of the Mendip Hills, on May 25th, 709. The end came suddenly; finding his strength failing, he begged his attendants to carry him into the little wooden church, and there he died, lying on a slab of stone which was to be seen in the days of William of Malmesbury. By a curious bit of slovenly editing, the year of his death is given as 705. The story goes that the saint appeared immediately after his death to Ecgwine, Bishop of Worcester, begging him to come to Douling. Ecgwine came with speed, and at once made arrangements for the conveyance of his friend's body to Malmesbury. It was carried on a bier amid sympathizers who lined the fifty miles of road. There were six nightly halting-places, at each of which a cross was set up, with a seventh at the end of the journey at Malmesbury Abbey. These crosses were standing uninjured in the days of William of Malmesbury, and were called, he says, "biscepstano."

Mr. Wildman deals sympathetically, but not too credulously, with the miracles attributed to St. Ealdhelm in his lifetime. The extent of the bishop's learning, which was most remarkable for the days in which he lived, and earned the warmest praise from the Venerable Bede, is set forth with much appreciation, and his various writings, letters, prose works, and poems are all named and aptly described. The most noteworthy of these is his letter on education to his old pupil Ealdfrith, the scholar-king of Northumbria, with a treatise on the number seven, on metres, on riddles, and on rules of metrical feet. The 'Ænigmatum Liber' consists of one hundred and four riddles in metre; they are no mere play on words, but are accounts in verse of the various attributes of some thing or substance, without mentioning its name. A dozen examples are here translated, describing such things as an organ, a file, pepper, a magnet, a cat, and a lighthouse.

Mr. Wildman's book possesses merits of its own, though he is much indebted (as he acknowledges) to the larger and more scholarly work of Dr. Browne, Bishop of Bristol ('St. Ealdhelm: his Life and Times'), which now and again he rather rashly criticizes. Those who have Dr. Browne's work will find this book in some places useful as an appendix; whilst those who are satisfied with a not very critical small book, destitute of references, may go to Mr. Wildman for pleasure and instruction. They must read, however, with the recollection that Mr. Wildman is a Sherborne enthusiast, whilst the bishop is a cool-headed scholar. Mr. Wildman has for some time done much credit to Sherborne School as one of its assistant masters. His zeal for that foundation is amusingly manifested when he gravely states, at the beginning of chap. viii., that if any one asked him "who was the first headmaster of Sherborne School, I should not hesitate to answer St. Ealdhelm." He thus asserts definitely as a fact what he himself shows is but, at the best, a vague possibility.

Occasionally these pages are enlivened by the display of a pretty wit, as at the close of chap. vi. :—

"One longs to think that Ealdhelm's body was not chopped up for relics; but I regret to mention that a bone of his left arm was given by Abbot Warin of Malmesbury to our own St. Osmund, the compiler of the Sarum Missal, the chief of Sherborne Abbey and school, who placed it in a silver coffer; here, however, it was instrumental in healing the infirmities of two archdeacons, so that we may say, after all, 'Sunt lacrumæ rerum et mentem mortalia tangunt.'"

NEW NOVELS.

The Rose of Life. By M. E. Braddon.
(Hutchinson & Co.)

THE mighty influence of the Zeitgeist is plainly discernible in this latest work of the veteran novelist. Thirty years ago it would have seemed unlikely that Miss Braddon would ever write a novel depending for interest less on plot than characterization, yet such is the enterprise which she has here, not unsuccessfully, achieved. The popular poet, with his attractive egotism, his ready, though chiefly vicarious philanthropy, and his genuine superiority to snobbishness and all its works, is well conceived, and so harmoniously developed that when he is detected in the act of swindling one of his best friends, the disclosure, though dramatically unexpected, does not strike us as inconsistent with what we already know of him. His simple-minded, devoted wife is also good in her way, and has the merit, rare in that particular type of woman, of conciliating sympathy rather than rousing irritation. The villains, male and female, the heroine and the titular hero are none of them of much account, and the device of the bigamous marriage scarcely appeals to us as it did in the days when it was a comparatively new thing in fiction.

A Dark Lantern. By Elizabeth Robins.
(Heinemann.)

THE "dark lantern," otherwise the "black-magic man," otherwise a doctor endowed with a marvellous gift of healing and a still more marvellous brutality of manner, appears to us an unusually successful embodiment of that ideal of the "masterful" hero which ever since Charlotte Brontë's time has been more or less in favour with women novelists. We must emphatically dissent from the heroine's description of him as "a man's man." No man, we are confident, would have endured him for five minutes; but it is not a slight testimony to the author's ability that we recognize the ruffian's overpowering fascination for the opposite sex, and even acknowledge a certain fundamental reality in at least the essential lines of his character. The story is practically a dialogue between him and a subjugated female patient, an attractive person on the whole, who has wasted many years in circumstances of some originality on a romantic passion for an unworthy foreign prince, discarded at last in favour of the "black-magic man," whose wife, after some far from edifying episodes, she ultimately becomes. It is a striking, though scarcely a satisfactory book, and widely remote in every respect from the ordinary machine-made novel of commerce.

The Wise Woods. By Mrs. Henry Dudeney.
(Heinemann.)

IN spite of many improbabilities and some absurdity, this is a curiously fascinating book, mainly, perhaps, on account of its sustained originality. The half-civilized, half-gipsy heroine, and the dilettante hero, a failure all along the line, with whom she is unequally yoked in marriage, are scarcely new figures in fiction; but when we find the first-named of these engaging in free fights with gentlemen of her own tribe, and the second developing into a blameless City clerk, and both (for a time) settling down contentedly in a Clapton villa, we have a pleasing sensation of novelty. This unexpectedness has, however, its disadvantageous side, since in the great catastrophe which shatters the gipsy's wedded happiness her husband displays qualities wholly at variance with his character as hitherto represented to us, and she herself permanently forfeits our sympathies by her extraordinary mode of action. The author to a great extent succeeds in making us realize, or imagine that we realize, the primitive charm of an existence in the "wise woods," but seems less at home in suburban life, which is depicted with sufficient good nature, but neither sympathetically nor accurately.

A Child of the Shore. By Middleton Fox.
(Lane.)

"THE story I am going to tell you was one of their [the minstrels'] most welcome 'drolls.'..... Then why shouldn't we—for an hour—be children again and make the very most of our luck? For I can promise that 'once on a time,' in the Duchy of the West, it really happened so!"

Why, indeed! except that, unfortunately, a love of the West Country, with its poetry and its humour, cannot alone teach the potent spell by which the reader sees and believes, for a space, whatever the writer desires. Neither do the infinite care and pains which the author has bestowed upon the matter suffice to open the gates to the enchanted land of illusion; for the key—that intangible combination of imagination, of sympathy, and of delicate handling—is in this case missing. So the reader is in danger of sitting chilly without, and of remaining a sceptical grown-up person, as he reads the legend of the little mermaid who travailed for a human soul, and whose unconvincing griefs and injuries are far too mortal for the perusal of a child. The book, however, is pleasingly written, and the descriptions of country life in Cornwall will appeal very strongly to any to whom it is as dear as it is familiar.

The Error of her Ways. By Frank Barrett.
(Chatto & Windus.)

ALL fiction is published nowadays in much the same form, and, so far as exterior goes, there is nothing to distinguish a book of this sort from a novel by Mr. Meredith. Yet the story belongs to the class which a few years ago never went beyond paper covers, or, at best, the yellow-back form. It is what is known in certain commercial circles as a serial of sensational domestic interest. In the way of literary criticism there is simply nothing to be said of such a book, unless that its writing is extraordinarily careless.

The Redding Straik. By Robert Aitken.
(Edinburgh, G. A. Morton; London, Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

THE author of 'Windfalls' may be congratulated on a second success. The subtitle of his present book is "an old-fashioned story," and in several respects it justifies the description. We are not bored with Americanisms, or fancy pictures of the so-called "smart set," or morbid psychology. There are no millionaires or sharpers prominent; and the fat sensualist, a topping draper, rides off in disappointment on a motor. One callow lordling expresses sinister designs on the heroine when she is compelled to take to the stage, but the vengeance promptly exacted by the gay young Irish sailor is as crushing as it is comic. There is nothing cryptic or tortured in the style. We find real characters and real life described in real English, and are duly thankful. The book opens with a chapter O.H.M.S., and there is an excellent description of a brush with black foemen in Africa, in which Archie Borthwick and his captain and intimate friend, the hero of the subsequent domestic drama, very nearly "lose the numbers of their mess." Thenceforward the scene changes to the West Highlands, described by one who knows not only the place, but also the people.

Cœurs d'Amoureuses. By Madame Hector Malot. (Paris, Flammarion.)

WE have much admiration for Madame Malot's books. Although we find in her new volume as much ability as in her previous novels, or even more, readers will perhaps like it less, for the reason that it is less pleasant. The author may reply with truth that life is not pleasant. The story is a study of a man who makes his way by means of women; and the "hero," so far as the novel has one, is an adventurer of a type hateful to all men and to all good women. The heroine dies of her affection for him, to which she will not surrender because he is

"celui qu'on peut aimer, qu'on aime, mais qui, si parfaitement régénéré soit-il, ne fait pas le mari,.....en communauté de morale, de conscience; à qui, en pleine liberté, la tête droite, on donne son mystère, l'espoir de ses maternités, tout l'avenir d'ici-bas et l'heure de la mort."

Madame Malot's power has never been more conspicuously displayed than in the somewhat thankless task of describing the professional "homme à femmes" and his more or less willing victims.

Ring und Stab: zwei Erzählungen. Von Ernst Heilborn. (Berlin, Gebrüder Paetel.)

IN these days of showy and affected writing it is pleasant to come across a quietly conscientious piece of work like this. The two tales which make up the volume offer no startling effects of situation or diction, but they are distinguished by a truth to life, a delicate characterization, and a thoughtful sympathy that lend them abundant charm and interest. The first of them tells how a man of that peculiar artistic temperament which is so often met with nowadays, which lacks all strong belief and is deficient not so much in energy as in motive power, becomes intimate with an earnest, independent girl, who has likewise been affected by modern influences, but who is none the less entirely pure and simple-hearted. The course of their relations, with its fluctuation of feelings and final reconciliation, is traced with subtle analysis. The second and longer story—it runs to nearly two hundred pages—deals with the inner development of a German pastor, whose strenuous, upright character, half Puritanical and half artistic, is admirably portrayed. The manner in which life gradually transforms his somewhat rigid personality, leading him continually to a greater breadth of outlook, a larger tolerance and a truer humanity, is finely indicated, and the whole study is convincing. The minor characters, too, are well drawn, and a word of special praise is due to the pastor's two sons, who are not only natural in themselves, but also skilfully illustrate their father's mental constitution.

THE CONSTITUTIONS OF NORWAY AND SWEDEN.

PROF. PONTUS FAHLBECK publishes, through Alphonse Picard of Paris, La Constitution Suédoise et le Parlementarisme Moderne, a small volume which interests us. The Swedish part of it, which is nearly half, is not important, but the portions which deal with English, French, Swiss, and American parliamentary constitutions contain many remarks of value, and some observation which is not to be found elsewhere. On the other hand, there are curious evidences of absence of practical acquaintance with the working of the institutions of some of the countries named, and ignorance even of the kind of information which is to be acquired from the perusal of published diaries and memoirs. The author, for example, believes that the immediate consent of the King of England is never refused to any proposed administrative act. Now no reader of the published letters and other writings of Queen Victoria or of the life of Gladstone, not to mention many other well-known works, can imagine this statement to be true. Neither do we recognize the accuracy of the observation with regard to England, by which is meant either Great Britain or the United Kingdom (we are not certain which), that "the vast majority of the English people remains entirely apart from the parties.....The proof is that the same 'people' which this day votes for the Liberals to-morrow votes for the Conservatives, and the day after for the Liberals again."

The fact is, as we know, that in the great majority of constituencies the fixed voting element outnumbers the floating element, and that general elections are turned in the main by a transfer of a mere 5 per cent. from one side to the other. Recent by-elections have, of course, shown a far larger transfer, but on many occasions in the lifetime of living men a 5 per cent. transfer in the electorate would have been sufficient to convert a steady majority on one side into a steady majority on the other. The author also tells us that in England the Upper House has lost all political importance. Many writers have gone to the opposite extreme in asserting recently that the House of Lords is infinitely more powerful than it was; but there can be no doubt that our Swedish professor minimizes the functions both of the King of England and of the House of Lords. He imagines, for example, that a marked difference between this country and Belgium is that in Belgium the King "directs the army," while in England similar attributions theoretically possessed by the King "have long since been covered by the dust of forgetfulness." The present King of England has undoubtedly had much influence in military affairs, while King Leopold has spent the whole of his life trying to obtain the adoption by the Belgian Parliament of a military system to which that Parliament has remained all along opposed; and his influence with his various ministries in military affairs has been nil. Our author thinks that the King in Belgium can "confer with his ministers taken one by one," and that this is a proceeding which gives him influence; and appears to imagine that the King of England does not take a similar course. He proves to his own satisfaction that our political system is better suited to a queen-regnant than to a king, inasmuch as women "easily accustom themselves to the task of idle kingship which the constitution has assigned" to our chief ruler. Again, a study of the life of Queen Victoria would have corrected this impression. The kings of England in this respect are contrasted by our author with presidents of the French Republic, supposed by him to be blessed with exceptional intelligence; and here again we should imagine that it is hardly British vanity which would find in King Edward the superior in intelligence of President Carnot or President Faure. While we make these criticisms, we recognize in our author a real understanding of the extent to which the French and American system of parliamentary committees paralyzes executive government, and it is in such considerations that lie the interest and importance of his book.

The Norwegian Constitution forms more exclusively the text of another little volume that has reached us than does the Swedish that of the previous book. The Constitution of Norway, by H. L. Brækstad (Nutt), has for probable cause of publication a desire to help the Norwegian side in the conflict which has broken out between the nations under the united Crown. The Norwegian Parliament, being elected on a wider franchise than the Swedish, and being free from an Upper House, as the country is without a nobility, is far more democratic than the Parliament of Sweden; but there is a curious limitation on the democracy contained in the Norwegian Constitution, by which only such as profess the public religion of the State can be members of the Privy Council and Ministers. The chief result of this provision hitherto has been the exclusion from office of the explorer Nansen, who, though often asked to become the leader of his party, has always refused to profess himself a member of the National Church.

THE CHURCH.

Christus in Ecclesia. By Hastings Rashdall. (Edinburgh, T. & T. Clark.)—The publication of these sermons is one of the most hopeful signs of the times that we are aware of. Less profound, less original, than Dr. Rashdall's early volume, 'Doctrine and Development,' they will, perhaps, serve a more useful purpose. They will bring home to the cultivated mind of the laity the fact that there are men in the ranks of the clergy who are intellectual, as well as moral, leaders, whose sense of spiritual things is deepened by wide and open-minded study, and who are not, above all, afraid of saying what they think. How widely different modern liberalism is from the earlier Broad Church movement is a fact we called attention to in noticing 'Contentio Veritatis,' for that book was essentially Christian in its inspiration, and constructive, not destructive, in its tendency. This volume shows how far modern "Liberals" are from the mere individualistic sentimentalism of an earlier day. Dr. Rashdall's thought is penetrated by the idea of the Church as the divine society, and his explanation of the true significance of the famous commission "to bind and loose" is one of the most illuminating things in the book. As he says: "The true corrective of an exaggerated or superstitious view of the Christian ministry is to take a very high view of the Christian Church." His sense of the great danger of the Church of England through the growth of a narrow professionalism is refreshing in days when blatant ignorance is masquerading as "sound Churchmanship," and conceit is the most conspicuous pillar of orthodoxy. Dr. Rashdall says, with excellent justice:—

"It is the professional spirit in the Church that is the great enemy of thought and progress..... Where once professional loyalty is identified with tenacious adherence to a dominant opinion, evidence makes no impression."

This is the work not merely of an erudite and lucid thinker, but also of a careful observer of men. No one who remarks the attitude of the majority of the clergy, especially those trained by certain theological colleges, will deny the applicability of this dictum, severe though it sounds.

In claiming, as he says, "liberty within these limits of discipline and obedience to constituted authority without which no organized community can live," Dr. Rashdall rightly adds, "The end is not liberty, but truth," and proceeds to a trenchant, but not unfair, description of contemporary feeling:—

"Amid all the controversies by which we are surrounded, the most distressing feature is the appalling indifference to truth which (I regret to say it) seems to be more and more prevalent among large sections of the clergy and their most zealous lay adherents. Far more alarming than any particular dogma is the prevalence of a spirit which condemns inquiry, which closes its ears to the results of sober thinking and historical investigation, which makes the most tremendous assertions, pronounces the most comprehensive anathemas, erects the most exclusive barriers against fellow-Christians, upon the basis of the most flimsy and unexamined assumptions; which makes it a point of professional honour to be too busy to read anything (that is, except the party newspaper); which is ever ready to denounce as disloyal to his Church and to his cloth any one whom study or reflection may have compelled to question some article of the fashionable shibboleth."

Can any one who is acquainted with the tone of clerical gatherings, or who reads the reports of diocesan conferences, assert that this is a false, or even an exaggerated, description?

This quotation is from a sort of manifesto of the Broad Church party. Most of the sermons in this book are, however, not so controversial nor so partisan (to use the only available word) as this one. The sermon on missions is perhaps the best, because the most rational apology for that much-abused object which we remember. Like all the volume, it is characterized by transparent lucidity and an unadorned simplicity of diction. We find no rhetoric or eloquence in these sermons. The emotional note with which they close is commonly no higher than that on which the discourse opens. We discover none of the supreme impression of spiritual vision given by men like Newman, little even of imagination. Yet as destined to show Christianity as a practical philosophy, and viewed by the light of the modern mind, the sermons are admirable.

On the Church of England. By H. E. Ryle, Bishop of Winchester. (Macmillan & Co.)—Now that a party in the Established Church is bent on denying all Selbständigkeit to the Church of England, it is not surprising that its wisest leaders should discourse under this title. This volume by the Bishop of Winchester contains much that is weighty and nothing that is partisan; it is written with a full appreciation of the appeal of an historic Church to all who value venerable traditions and continuous life. But, since it repudiates such practices as the introduction of the Litany of Loretto and Benediction, its wise counsels will, we fear, fall upon deaf ears.

There is something in the mere accent of wisdom and moderation, apart from its detailed utterance, which at once rouses the erudite irritation of those who seem to have one only object, to prevent their pupils from thinking. The most important and outspoken discourse, in a book by no means wanting in reticence, is the courageous utterance on the Athanasian Creed. As Dr. Ryle says, the cleric may know what the Creed implies of resistance to ancient heresies; but the layman does not—and he is not to be ignored:—

"He cannot loyally dissociate himself from the feeling of the laity to whom and for whom he ministers; he cannot truthfully assert that the use of the Creed is any pledge of Christian unity, or a Catholic symbol of primitive antiquity; he cannot think it wise or reasonable to expect large congregations of yokels in the country, of dockers, of miners, of the poor in our city slums, to join in the language which to them is completely unintelligible, and to expect them to regard its repetition as edifying, directing, and strengthening."

We trust that these words will have their effect at a moment when obscurantism is raising its voice with the pertinacity born of ignorance. It is curious that the party which is opposed to the Reformation in every aspect which led to freedom or light should cling to its one thoroughly evil legacy to the Church of England. But there is such a thing as a disinterested hostility to wisdom, merely because it is not folly. The supreme evil in the Church of England at this moment is the spirit of unsympathetic class conceit, which ignores and despises the feelings of the cultivated layman. He will find some comfort in the fact that this spirit is by no means represented in the most learned occupants of high place.

The Historic Martyrs of the Primitive Church. By Arthur James Mason. (Longmans & Co.)—Dr. Mason announces in a preface that this book "is not written for the learned world, but to introduce to the ordinary reader some of the most trustworthy of the records of the primitive martyrs and confessors."

The narratives are set forth in graphic form, and Dr. Mason has accomplished a most interesting task. There is no attempt to give the reader an account of the critical processes by which the stories have been framed; but there is the assurance that "no narrative has been inserted in this book which may not be considered historically true." If this assurance means that the writer guarantees the historical accuracy of every alleged fact in the stories of the martyrs, the conclusion is that his credulity is great. The writer states, for instance, that "at the precise hour when Polycarp was put to death at Smyrna, Irenæus (in Rome) heard a voice as of a trumpet saying, 'Polycarp has died a martyr's death.'"

A member of the Psychical Research Society might have no difficulty in accepting this narrative as historically true; but an historian, who, from the tendencies of his class or order, is not generally suitable for the membership of that society, is likely to suspect the truth of the account, and even the ordinary reader may indulge in doubt. There are statements made by Dr. Mason himself which, to say the least, require explanation. Thus, for instance, there is a lack of historical precision in the description of "the great St. Clement" as "the third Bishop of Rome." Was there a Bishop of Rome in the supposed period of Clement? and, if so, was he the bishop? Then, again, we are told "that all ancient tradition is agreed that the two great apostles whom St. Clement mentions perished at Rome during the reign of Nero."

The tradition regarding St. Peter, according to Prof. Harnack, was constant, but only from the beginning of the last quarter of the second century. Prof. Ramsay, in 'The Church in the Roman Empire,' has something to say on this point; and, if we take him as an authority, we may justify our complaint against Dr. Mason of want of historical precision. "The only early tradition," Prof. Ramsay asserts,

"with regard to St. Peter's later life, then, is that which was accepted by the Roman Church during the second century, and it is to the effect that St. Peter lived in Rome till long after the time of Nero. The tradition that he died under Nero is not a real tradition, but an historical theory."

Dr. Mason, as already noted, professes that the accounts in this book are historically true, and yet he states that St. Peter, in regard to the fate of his wife, "before his own death had the pain of witnessing what must have been worse than death to him." The authority for this story is Eusebius, who quotes the words of Clement of Alexandria, who opens his record with the phrase "They say" (Φασί γ' οὖν τὸν μακάριον Πέτρον).

WILLS AND OTHER RECORDS.

Wills in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, 1620. Edited by J. Henry Lea. (New England Historical and Genealogical Society, Boston, Massachusetts.)—The Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, nominally embraced all testators within the province who left bona notabilia exceeding 5*l.* in value in more than one diocese, and all estates of persons deceased in parts beyond the seas. It came about, however, as a matter of practice, that many executors of those whose goods all fell within one diocese found it more convenient to prove wills in the greater court than in the minor ones of local or diocesan limitation. The net result of this is that Somerset House possesses "the most wonderful mass of testamentary evidences in the world, and an inexhaustible mine of wealth for the investigator."

This vast storehouse of genealogical and historical facts has hitherto been drawn upon after a very limited fashion by painstaking genealogists, chiefly American, such as Col. Chester and Mr. H. F. Waters. Mr. Lea, who has devoted twenty years of his life to English genealogical research, wisely came to the conclusion that the most useful thing was to follow up everything for a given period, "not leaving even a straw in the gleaning field to perplex or delay the future searcher." Hence he formed the plan of printing fairly full abstracts of all the wills at Somerset House from 1620 to 1630, a period of peculiar value to American searchers. This volume, covering over 600 pages and giving abstracts of 1,366 wills proved in the one year 1620, is the first fruit of this scheme. The volume for 1621 is now in hand, but the continuance of the scheme depends on the reception given to the first issue by the scholarly public.

The index of wills in this court from 1383 to 1558, so well executed by Mr. J. Challenor Smith, and published by the British Record Society in 1893, has hitherto been the one book of first importance in connexion with the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. In many respects this volume is of far greater interest, though covering only a single year, for it throws much light on the general, social, and local life of the time.

Though the testators are chiefly drawn from among the knights, esquires, gentlemen, and clergy, there are those of every conceivable class and occupation. Among them, or mentioned in the wills, are attorney-generals, barber-surgeons, baronets, beadles, bishops, boatswains, a chirographer of the Cannon Bank, a clockmaker to the king, cordwainers and corvisers, a crier of the Court of Chancery, earls, fellmongers, girdlers, gunners, helliers, justices, keepers of Great Seal, a keeper of the lions in the Tower, knackers, letter-carriers, a maker of long-bow strings, mayors, notaries public, organists, pewterers, pursers, recorders, salters, scriveners, servants, skimmers, a tennis-court keeper, trumpeters, vintners, a viscount, and white-towers.

Several wills of prominent London citizens are noteworthy. Thus Alderman Richard Pyott, who was buried in the church of St. Lawrence, Jewry, among his very numerous bequests, left money to the porters, water-bearers, and carmen of Cheapside; a piece of plate with his arms and name to the Grocers' Company; and three cushions of green velvet with the letters R. M. and P., and a gold ring with a death's head and the letters W. B., to relatives. James Hodgson, citizen and vintner, mentions in his long will the "Katherine Wheele," Smithfield, the "Goulden Lyon," Holborn Bridge, the "Redd Lyon," the "Three Tonnes," Holborn Bridge, and the "Cock and Key," Holborn Conduit; he made special bequests of his swans "with my swanne marke." Sir William Smyth, Knight, freeman of London, bequeathed instruments and books of music, basins of silver with his arms, and Spanish and Italian books. Thomas Symonds, of St. Peter's, Cornhill, seems to mention all the London gaols, for he makes bequests to the "prisoners of Newgate, Ludgate, and compters in Wood Street and the Poltere, the Whitlyon, King's Bench, Marshalsea, Fleet, and Gate House." Elizabeth Feltham, of St. Thomas the Apostle, Southwark, also left money to the "poor prisoners of the 3 prisons in Southwark, viz., the King's Bench, Marshalsea, and the White Lyon."

A singular bequest, which occurs in the will of Walter Payne, alderman of the city of Oxford, is one to the mayor and city for constables' staves. He also left gifts to the poor prisoners in Bocardo, to the poor headsmen called Trinity men, to the almsmen of St. Bartholomew's, and to the companies of cordwainers, corvisers, and shoemakers in Oxford.

A will of special interest is that of Richard Connock, of Calstock, co. Cornwall. He ordered that an almshouse or hospital should be erected in the orchard of the late dissolved priory of Launceston for eight poor single women, of which the mayors of Launceston, Bodmin, and Liskeard were to be the overseers. Among the many bequests were "silver spoons with pictures and images at the end," and the "virginals, sometimes the virginal of the late Queen Elizabeth, made at Venice." Richard Connock acted as officer of the revenues to Prince Henry, eldest son of King James, up to the time of his death, and hence, doubtless, he came into possession of the virginals. Mr. Lea considers that this instrument of Queen Elizabeth's is the same that is now to be seen in the Victoria and Albert Museum.

Bequests at this date of gowns, cloaks, or bread to the poor, where a particular number is mentioned, seem always to indicate the age of the testator; in fact, the correspondence is sometimes expressly stated. Thus the interesting will of Nicholas Farrar, citizen and skinner of London, who left money for the "college in Virginia for conversion of infidel children," stipulated that the poor were to have "seventy-five gowns, which is my age."

It is curious to note how sometimes a single will throws a good deal of light on local topography of the past as it affects towns and their street nomenclature. Thus a single Derby will contains references to Beckett's Well, Campyon Croft, Cundet Close, Derby Close, Green Lane, Greves Croft, Newlands Croft, and St. Warburge; whilst one of a Northampton testator names the Lady Chapel of All Saints, Cow Lane, Dicker's Lane, Gould Street, Grope Lane, the Jail, Mercer's Row,

St. Edmund's End, St. Giles, St. Peter, St. Pulcher, and the Tabor and Pipe.

Wills made beyond the seas have their particular interest. In this year under the one letter B such wills occurred at Bantam (Java), Bavaria, Bergen op Zoom, Bergen St. Wynox, Bermuda, Bara Esperance Cape, Bramaputra, Brazil, and Bruges. The indexes of persons and of places are full and accurate; and the volume, representing an infinity of toil, is the best thing of its kind that has yet been attempted. The series certainly ought to meet with considerable support on this side of the Atlantic.

A Transcript of the Parish Register of Chesham, 1538-1636. By J. W. Garrett-Pegge. (Stock.)—The introduction here offered is a valuable contribution to the history of parish registers in general, whilst the particular features of life at Chesham in the times of Elizabeth and James, as illustrated by these four hundred pages of verbatim et literatim register reproduction, are discussed after an intelligent and interesting fashion. The editor also gives some valuable paragraphs on verbal forms and archaisms, and on pronunciation as denoted by the phonetic spelling. The appendixes and full index are so thorough that they make the work of the genealogist or name-student easy, whilst the exactness of the reproduction is a most agreeable contrast to much work of this nature. Any one contemplating the printing and editing of an old parish register would do well to take this book as his guide.

In former days, when population was much more evenly distributed, and means of locomotion were very limited, almost every parish had its own set of handicraftsmen and tradesmen. A useful appendix supplies the total of the occupations named in the early Chesham registers for the century over which they extend. Shoemakers, who number twenty-three, head the list; whilst glovers are seventeen and collar-makers six. Every village would certainly have its shoemaker, though the number here is exceptional; but the presence of so many glovers and of several collar-makers points to something unusual. When it is further noticed that there are twelve tanners and two curriers named, there can be no doubt that the leather trade flourished here in Elizabethan and Jacobean days, though the last tanyard disappeared from Chesham more than half a century ago. Tailors and weavers are each mentioned nineteen times; in those days a good deal more cloth was woven in Chesham than was required in the parish or immediate district, and Mr. Pegge surmises that tailors settled "where they could procure and make up on the spot the materials required for the supply of the London market." Woodenware was at that time in common household use; the poorer folk used trenchers or wooden platters, for pewter was beyond their means. There are also seven carpenters. The registers mention six turners, five shovel-makers, and a trencher-maker. The wheelers or wheelwrights are fifteen, a larger number than would have been required had the place been solely agricultural; the wheeler was usually also the builder of the bodies of the carts and wains. There is no need to be surprised that only four bakers and but one brewer occur; for in those days, and long subsequently, almost every one baked and brewed at home. The Chesham registers for this period name three cutlers, joiners, masons, and schoolmasters; two barbers, glaziers, painters, and ploughwrights; whilst among the occupations only once specified during the 100 years are haberdasher, ironmonger, mercer, pedlar, physician, ropemaker, and vintner.

Upward of 900 distinct family names are found in this volume. Birch, which has still many representatives in the district, is far the most common; of this family there are 786 entries; of Weedon, which comes next, there are 668. Mr. Pegge considers that the frequent occurrence of these names, as well as of several others whose entries amount to several hundreds, indicates the prevalence of local intermarriage, which has always been characteristic of the neighbourhood. The singular name of Puddephat, now common in the district, first presents itself as Pattifatt in 1617. There are some names of remarkable form, a few of which are of obvious and primitive derivation. Among such may be mentioned Carbockes, Copperwhite, Dominicke, Friday, Ghost, Horsnaile, Hyday, Lochremas, Peezie, Raakestrawe, Roughbeard, Sarvegood, Silfew, Sweetsir, Timberlake, and Watercaryer.

Among the more unusual Christian names the following occur, some of which are distinctly curious:—Masculine: Ahicham, Armyger, Bahanan, Elidad, Gabriel, Gershom, Gother, Haniell, Lazarus, Mordant, Rance, Thurstance, Triamour, and Zephaniah. Feminine: Annis, Avelin, Bersabe, Delice, Denis, Douglas, Embry, Emps, Frideswide, Gemini, Gillion, Godsgrace, Petronel, Philotheta, Sens, True, Wyborow, and Zippora.

There are not many families of note mentioned. Cavendish, however, now represented by Lord Chesham, makes its appearance in 1617, when Sir John Cavendish, "soone of the R.H. the Lord and La. Cavendish," was buried on January 20th. This youthful Knight of the Bath was not quite eleven years of age at the time of his death. A son of "Mr. D. Atslow of London, phisitian," was buried in May, 1575. Mr. Pegge is almost certainly right in identifying this physician with Dr. Edward Atslowe, who was twice imprisoned for alleged complicity in plots on behalf of Mary, Queen of Scots.

Among the burials a considerable number of "nurse-children" from London are mentioned. This bears witness to the practice, which was common enough in those days in England, and which is still found—though not so much as formerly—in France, of parents sending out their infant children to be nursed in the country.

Records of the Sheriff Court of Aberdeenshire. Edited by David Littlejohn.—Vol. I. Records prior to 1600. (Printed for the New Spalding Club.)—A work of no small antiquarian value has been issued by the New Spalding Club as the first of two volumes in which it is proposed to elucidate the Aberdeenshire Sheriff Court records. We have here the six surviving Diet Books of this court relating wholly to the sixteenth century, the first and second of which are the earliest known to exist in Scotland; and the editor, Mr. David Littlejohn, LL.D., conveys an excellent idea of each by the threefold method of introductory remarks, a table of contents, and illustrative examples. The fault is not his that this volume of the work fulfils so little of the promise suggested by its title. It was not to be expected that the administrative and military functions of the sheriff, as the local representative of the Crown, should appear at all fully in these records; but, with allowance for the large mass of business engrossed by the Consistory and Baronial Courts and the Justices Ayre, it is disappointing to find such slight traces of the very considerable judicial powers—for example, in cases of witchcraft and in certain cases of murder—possessed by the sheriff before the institution of the Court of Session in 1532. The editor, however, explains that the recording of minor offences is due to the necessity of recovering the fine—a necessity which, of course, did not exist where the delinquent was executed or banished. As the Diet Books are wanting from 1511 to 1557, no light is thrown on the process, resulting apparently from the fact that the Court of Session dispensed with a jury in civil cases, by which the sheriff mounted from the dignity of president to that of judge; but the change, however it came about, was probably as grievous to all the shires administered by territorial magnates as it certainly was to that of Aberdeen. There the Earls of Huntly, in whom the office became hereditary in 1541, dispensed much less than justice to their enemies, and a great deal more to their friends. Dr. Littlejohn has shown exemplary patience as well as skill in editing a volume which he admits "to contain very little of human living interest"; and not its least valuable feature is the notices which he has compiled of the early sheriffs and sheriffs-depute.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MR. H. W. LUCY is as amusing as usual in Later Peeps at Parliament, illustrated by Mr. F. C. Gould (Newnes). It would be possible to suggest a considerable number of points of doubt, but Mr. Lucy's account of Parliament does not profess to be The Times or Manchester Guardian account, and would not be so bright as it is if it were too strictly accurate. We do not know the amount of truth that there may be in the story, for example, of the clerical days of a Conservative metropolitan member now well known in the House itself. But we are given the suggestion that the dogs kept by him when rector of his parish increased to 300, and that there came on the top of this fact the unfortunate incident of his marrying the wrong man to the right lady at a wedding, after which "the best man went off with the bride." Of serious politics in the volume we remark the publication of a most interesting and very detailed account of the negotiations between Gladstone and Mr. Chamberlain for the alterations to be made in the Home Rule Bill of 1886, which were carried on, as is well known, through Mr. Labouchere. We must, however, note, as we have done on other volumes which reproduce the current belief on the earlier facts, that Gladstone's preparation of the general lines of his Home Rule measure was not a secret from his former colleagues up to "the middle of December, 1885," but perfectly well known to those who were in the confidence of the Duke of Devonshire and kept him informed. Mr. Morley's 'Life of Gladstone' has given both sides of the story, but not with the fulness with which it will be treated whenever the letters of Sir William Harcourt and others who were concerned come to be published. The later story—namely, that of the early months of 1886—is perfectly presented in Mr. Lucy's pages. Of smaller points we complain of St. Stephen's Hall being described by the words "the corridor leading to the Lobby of the House of Commons." It does not lead to the Lobby. It leads to the Central Hall, and it is, as a fact, more used by the Lords than by the Commons, as the latter have a choice of more convenient routes. The historical interest and importance of St. Stephen's Hall lie in the fact that it reproduces the architecture and proportions of the original chapel, which, both before and after the veiling of its shape by the woodwork of a conventicle, played so great a part in English history. It was the chapel shape which caused the party division into right and left of the Speaker's chair; and the choice of St. Stephen's Hall as the home of the statues of Pitt, Fox, and others alluded to in Mr. Lucy's pages, was a fit one. That fitness is obscured in the allusion to Pitt's statue as though it stood in a corridor of the Lobby.

The account of the picture of the House of Commons in Pitt's time, which is in the National Portrait Gallery, treats as noteworthy the fact that "with the exception of one or two members.....all are uncovered."

It would be a mistake to infer that such was the ordinary practice of the House. The recent pictures of the House taken for sale by subscription represent the members uncovered in the same fashion; but this is for purposes of light and of portraiture and recognition. There are, of course, occasions when the whole House uncovers, and the artist may be supposed to have chosen one of them. We know that in the Long Parliament the members almost invariably sat covered, and there are several allusions in the Journals, and at least one order among those still in force, tending to show that the practice of sitting covered has only gradually declined. Another point on which we have always felt that Mr. Lucy has a full knowledge of the House since the early seventies rather than so accurate a knowledge of its history as that which Sir William Harcourt, for example, possessed, concerns his allusions to the connexion between Tea and Below-the-Gangway organizations. In this volume he names tea meetings as popular with the Radicals at the time of Fawcett's action against Gladstone in 1873. The Tea Room Conspiracy belongs to the history of the 1865 Parliament, and "the Tea Room" was the Radical cave of 1867, and a forerunner of the Radical Club of 1870-1880. The "Tea Room" was, however, the wider organization. Another passage suggests that the days are gone when half-a-crown indirectly obtains admission to the gallery. It may be so; but the present Lord Chancellor tells a story of having received that sum from a well-known Radical, to whom his appearance was unknown, for obtaining admission, the money being given under the impression that Sir Hardinge Giffard was an usher of the House. In a later note it is suggested that there was something of prejudice in the action of Queen Victoria in sending for Lord Hartington in 1880. It is, however, the fact that Lord Hartington was the leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, that Gladstone had announced and had never withdrawn his demission from the councils of the party, while the colleagues of Lord Hartington on the Front Opposition Bench had prepared their Cabinet and given themselves places in precisely the fashion in which Cabinets have lately been suggested by the newspapers for the next Liberal Administration. Queen Victoria could not possibly have sent for Gladstone, direct, in the circumstances of the case, any more than the present King could send for Lord Rosebery as against Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman. We are told by Mr. Lucy that Lord Herschell raised a storm among the Radicals by his disinclination to make use of the County Bench for party purposes. The statement is literally true, and may be supported by references to the newspapers of the time; but it is hardly true in the spirit. Chancellors had not been in the habit of appointing to the bench over the heads of Lords-Lieutenant. The Lords-Lieutenant were mostly Tories, and the Radicals naturally suggested that Chancellors, having the power to appoint, should exercise it. Lord Herschell rightly asked that his departure from what had been for some time unbroken practice should be preceded by a resolution of the House of Commons. That resolution was carried by the Radicals, and immediately acted upon by Lord Herschell. Mr. Lucy seems to ascribe to a certain pedantry on the part of the present authorities the refusal to allow newspaper statements to be put forward as the avowed ground for questions in the House. It is, however, the fact that Mr. Gully only followed the direction of Sir Erskine May's book, and that if breaches of the rule can be discovered in the past, it has at least been rigidly adhered to whenever attention has been drawn to the matter. No doubt under the present Speaker and the present Clerks at the table, especially since the adoption of a limitation on the length of question-time, adherence to the rules which govern questions has been increasingly strict. It is, perhaps, kindness that prompts Mr. Lucy to say that Dr.—afterwards Sir Lyon, and then Lord—Playfair "did tolerably well" as Chairman of Committees. We should be inclined, on the contrary, to suggest that the notorious fact that this extraordinarily able man of science and practical statesman failed egregiously in the Chair, and that his intellectual inferior, Mr. Dodson, was the best occupant of the office ever yet discovered, goes to show that very special qualities are needed for the position, and that general ability is not the test.

We welcome Mr. Lucy's most entertaining volume, which also yields some of the most admirable of the caricatures of F. C. G. Two of very different kinds which face one another are among the best: one represents Mr. Parnell after "the split," sitting between Mr. Sexton and Mr. Healy, while the other shows "King Linseed" respectfully admiring his own Weymouth statue. The portrait of the Chancellor in his robes on a State occasion, with the coronet, will be recognized by those who have seen that powerful personage at the Coronation or at the opening or closing of Parliament as falling short of truth, while the general public will no doubt treat it as a most audacious example of the caricaturist's art. The comicality of the Earl of Halsbury's appearance only, however, enhances the amazement with which the stranger in the gallery of the Lords is brought to recognize the absolute mastery which this statesman, who, as Mr. Lucy shows, was nobody in the House of Commons, exercises over the Upper House.

Tracks of a Rolling Stone. By the Hon. Henry J. Coke. (Smith & Elder.)—It is not easy to withhold one's interest and attention from a book of reminiscences which includes the reception of the news of George IV.'s death, meetings with William IV. and his consort, and conversation with Lord Anglesey with regard to the leg he lost at Waterloo. Such a book is this, and seductive reading it makes. The author sat and listened while his father and Lord Lynedoch, over their port, rehearsed the siege of Mantua by the French in 1796. His father's town house was in Kensington, a little to the west of the present Natural History museum, and surrounded by meadows and hedge-bordered lanes. His school holidays were often spent at Holland House, when the great Lord Holland dined (owing to gout) in his bath-chair, and the greater Lady Holland, at the far end of the long table, gruffly ordered a groom of the chambers to "Go to my Lord. Take away his wine, and tell him, if he drinks any more, you have my orders to wheel him into the next room." This was before the guests at a great dinner party.

We may add that the writing of this volume, apart from its generous wealth of material, is pleasing. The author is apt at quotation, and has much of that genial humour as a raconteur which seems a lost art. Mention has been made of the author's school-days. He went first to Temple Grove preparatory school at East Sheen, then under the control of Dr. Pinkney, and "regarded as one of the most favoured of preparatory schools.....the atrium to Eton." What would the modern Eton boy say to a régime of this sort?—

"We began the day as at Dotheboys Hall with two large spoonfuls of sulphur and treacle. [Heaven knows the rest of the diet was not over-heating to the blood!] After an hour's lessons we breakfasted on one bowl of milk—'skyblue,' we called it—and one hunch of buttered bread, unbuttered at discretion. Our dinner began with pudding—generally rice—to save the butcher's bill. Then mutton—which was quite capable of taking care of itself. Our only other meal was a basin of 'skyblue' and bread as before. As to cleanliness, I never had a bath, never bathed (at the school) during the two years I was there. On Saturday nights, before bed, our feet were washed by the housemaids in tubs, round which half a dozen of us sat at a time. Woe to the last comers! for the water was never changed. How we survived the food, or rather the want of it, is a marvel."

To this school, described as one of the best of its kind of the period, came the sons of the nobility and of wealthy people from homes of pomp and luxury. Yet we can scarcely say that we turn out finer men to-day, as regards physique, than our forefathers who fought at Waterloo. Here is an opinion that may interest some of the critics of latter-day scholastic education:—

"Did we learn much at Temple Grove? Let others answer for themselves. Acquaintance with the classics was the staple of a liberal education in those times. Temple Grove was the atrium to Eton, and gerund-grinding was its raison d'être. Before I was nine years old I daresay I could repeat—parrot, that is—several hundred lines of the Æneid. This, and some elementary arithmetic, geography, and drawing, which last I took to kindly, were dearly paid for by many tears and by temporarily impaired health. It was due to my pallid cheeks that I was removed."

In 1838, when he was eleven years old, the author's uncle, Henry Keppel, the future Admiral of the Fleet, took him to the Naval Academy at Gosport. Here some very severe bullying was usual for the benefit of new boys, roasting and wounding to a very serious extent being among the horrors of the place. During the winter of 1839-40 the author joined his first ship, H.M.S. Blonde, and saw service on the China station. His naval reminiscences are most interesting, though he never went beyond the midshipman stage, but soon after his father's death gave up a sea life to enter Cambridge. He was not studious, however, and risked rustication by crossing to the Continent with William Grey, who had been suddenly recalled to his post in Vienna owing to the insurrections of 1848. Here he met some famous people, and passed through interesting experiences. On his return to England, the discovery of gold in California roused all the adventurous side of his character, and he set out for America by way of the West Indies. Some readers will remember the work in which he chronicled his 'Ride over the Rocky Mountains.' 'Tracks of a Rolling Stone' may be cordially commended as an excellent piece of autobiography.

Home Life in France. By Miss Betham-Edwards. (Methuen & Co.)—It was a happy idea, just at this moment, to reprint in book form a number of papers on France and the French, contributed by the author to various periodicals. Miss Betham-Edwards writes with knowledge on a subject she may be said to have made her own, and, what is more, she writes sympathetically. Her papers extend over a wide field, ranging from social usages, housekeeping, and family life, to agriculture, hospitals and the law, education for boys and girls, and current literature; but the very number of subjects dealt with does not allow any one of them to be treated adequately or with a due sense of proportion, which was, perhaps, inevitable, the papers not being intended originally to be printed together. Such as it is, the book will be read with interest and profit by all those who wish to make themselves acquainted with French home life, and to get an insight into many customs and habits of the French people. One of the most valuable chapters in this volume is that entitled 'Fiction and Firesides,' in which Miss Betham-Edwards very ably points out the mistake made by those who derive their knowledge of our neighbours' modes of thought and living from the works of their novelists and playwrights. It is a pity the chapter is so short, as it might easily and usefully be extended. In fact, a whole volume could be written on the subject, and no one would be more competent to undertake the task than the author. There is no doubt that the French have never been more cruelly libelled abroad than by their own authors whose works are read in foreign countries. In these times of entente cordiale it would be doing both countries a service to explain to the English reader the immense difference there is in France between 'Fiction and Firesides,' as it is aptly put. The illustrations, consisting of reproductions of paintings by French artists, or of photographs, are fairly good and interesting.

In Health and Holiness (Burns & Oates) Mr. Francis Thompson writes eloquently on that abuse of asceticism which does not recognize that the body is bound up with the soul, and that each has, if we may so phrase it, inextinguishable claims. The theme is hardly new to thinking persons. Carlyle, for instance, dwelt on it in connexion with the word "heilig," but Mr. Thompson throws some interesting side-lights on it, comparing Italy with the harsher North and the men of former times with the present race, which has less riotous animality and a plentiful supply of neurotic tendencies. Science has helped us here to good sense. We know, for instance, that some forms of penance practised by the devout in Puseyite days are a sure way to promote hysteria. It is pointed out that we have to foster the energies of the body, without forgetting to foster also the energies of the will. The late Archbishop Porter, S.J.,

"was wisely right. He was aware that men of sedentary habit and unshakably introspective temperament may endure spiritual torments for which a fortnight's walking-tour is more sovereign than the exercises of St. Ignatius."

Mr. Thompson notes that the saints of old, however severe their penances, did not reduce themselves to laziness or inactivity—in fact, they were great workers in the world. The Rev. George Tyrrell, who introduces the little volume, rightly calls attention to the admirable quality of its style.

Some Feudal Mills. By John Elton. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)—This is a useful book for the general antiquary or the writer on topographical subjects. It is in reality the fourth volume on the 'History of Corn Milling,' planned some years ago by the late Mr. Richard Bennett, a successful Liverpool miller, and chiefly carried out by Mr. Elton. To previous volumes on the history of this industry we gave favourable notice in these columns some years ago, and the last is as fully deserving of praise and of more general interest to those not connected with the trade. In these pages are set forth the actual operation of the various laws and customs of the milling soke of the superior lord in different districts. They show how the march of the times evoked such popular hostility to these seigniorial claims that they were at last overcome and extinguished. Here and again survivals of these milling customs lingered on down to our own days; for it must be remembered that as no general statute ever created milling soke, so no law at one stroke abolished it throughout the kingdom. Each district had to struggle for itself to obtain relief from what was once a valuable boon, but had become "an intolerable yoke on the people and an impolitic hindrance to industrial and commercial progress." The old feudal mills whose history is here told after such an interesting fashion are the Castle mills, Dublin; the Shrewsbury Abbey mills; the Dee mills, Chester; the King's mills, of the royal borough of Liverpool (at considerable length); and the Jedburgh Corporation mills. The value of the book is a good deal increased by the illustrations, which include a variety of plans, and an early picture of Dee mills from a sixteenth-century sketch in the Harleian MSS.

James Legge, Missionary and Scholar. By his Daughter, Helen Edith Legge. (Religious Tract Society.)—James Legge was born at Huntly, Aberdeenshire, on December 20th, 1815. In 1829 he entered the Grammar School of Aberdeen, where he acquired such readiness in Latin that it became as easy for him to write in that language as in English. He entered the University of Aberdeen in 1831 as First Bursar, and left it in 1836 as Huttonian Prizeman. The examination for this had lasted four days. Of this he has given the following account:—

"The three candidates were left until midnight in the care of the porter and sacristan, who procured for them six bottles of good old port 'for strengthening and stimulus during the competition.' On the last evening, when the clock struck twelve, and the porter removed the box containing their papers, he admitted three youths, friends of the three candidates, who had been invited by them to come and celebrate the close of the examination by helping them to finish off the bottles of port."

Legge had set his heart upon going out as a missionary to the Chinese, but China being then a sealed book to Europeans, he was sent out by the London Missionary Society in July, 1839, to Malacca, where an Anglo-Chinese college had been erected, the project of the first missionary to China, Dr. Robert Morrison. Of this Legge became Principal. He had under his charge forty-five Chinese boys, and it became his cherished conviction "that English missionaries should seek to train up Chinamen themselves to be teachers and evangelists to their countrymen." In 1843 the college was removed to the newly ceded island of Hong-Kong. Here he began his lifelong task. He studied the classical books of China, and the results of his toil were gradually given to the world in his edition of the Chinese Classics, in eight volumes; and in six volumes of the "Sacred Books of the East," edited by Max Müller.

In 1876 Dr. Legge settled in Oxford as Professor of Chinese, which position he held until his death on November 29th, 1897, in his eighty-second year. He was very happy at Oxford, which he regarded as being "next to Hong-Kong the most delightful place in the world." Miss Legge, in this tribute to her father's memory, has produced an interesting book and a valuable contribution to the history of Chinese missions. The book contains portraits and other illustrations.

Hurrell Froude. By Louise Imogen Guiney. (Methuen.)—That Hurrell Froude should become the victim of an aesthetic stylist is a fate harder than his early death, even though he was "the lost Pleiad of the Oxford Movement," known to history as "a sort of May-orchard coronal which the wind has no power to scatter, rather than by virtue of any personal innings in the complex game of life." This is not a promising start, but the rest is better than the first page leads us to expect. The author's style is not always unintelligible and precious, and by dint of a great deal of quotation we are brought fairly near to that strange inspirer of Newman. The author rightly describes Froude as one not so much born to lead, as to prompt those who are born to be leaders; as he put it himself, "Keble is my fire, and I am his poker." We think she thoroughly makes out the indebtedness of Newman to Froude, and shows the essential originality of the latter. Whether it was worth while to fill half a volume with reprints of other people's opinions, which readers of such a book as this may well know beforehand, we think very doubtful. What the appearance of this book suggests is the republication of the 'Remains'—or rather, about two-thirds of them; for though Miss Guiney tells a good deal that is interesting to those who know nothing of the subject, she only makes one more desirous of having the 'Remains' on one's shelves.

The Women of Shakespeare's Family, by Mary Rose (Lane), is an addition to the number of souvenirs of Shakespeare and of Stratford-on-Avon. There is nothing new in it except the words of the inscription affixed in 1902 by Mr. Stanley Cooper to the supposed tomb of Madame Elizabeth Barnard at Abingdon; yet it presents us with a few pleasantly written and daintily printed pages about the facts we know concerning Shakespeare's feminine relatives. Photo-lithographs of some of the homes they dwelt in, and the fancies that the writer bases upon probabilities, eke out the limited material for the text.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN send us the first volumes of their "Illustrated Pocket Scott," "Dickens," and "Thackeray," which are respectively Waverley, The Pickwick Papers, and Vanity Fair. We anticipate a great success for these editions, which the use of India paper reduces to a wonderfully compact form. The type is good, especially in 'Waverley,' which has Mr. Lang's essay and notes, and illustrations which became popular, we think, in the "Border" edition of the novels. 'Pickwick' is introduced by Charles Dickens, Jun., with the illustrations of the first edition; and 'Vanity Fair' has the author's characteristic drawings, which must always be the illustrations, whatever their technical demerits. The design on the binding of the volumes by Mr. A. A. Turbayne is in good taste.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Blue Book of Missions, 1905, edited by H. O. Dwight, 4/
Thorne (H.), Bible Readings on the Book of Genesis, 2 vols.
cr. 8vo, each 2/6
Walker (G. S.), The Pictures of the Divine Artist, 3/6 net.
Words of Help on Belief and Conduct, by Various Authors, edited by the Rev. A. R. Buckland, cr. 8vo, 2/6

Law.

- Copnall (H. H.), A Practical Guide to the Administration of Highway Law, 8vo, 15/ net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Macquoid (P.), A History of English Furniture, Part 6, folio, 7/6 net.
Munro (R.), Archaeology and False Antiquities, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Benson (A. C.), Peace, and other Poems, 12mo, 5/ net.
More Cricket Songs, by N. Gale, imp. 16mo, 2/ net.
Pinkerton (T.), A New Medea, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Stotsenburg (J. H.), An Impartial Study of the Shakespeare
Title, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Music.

- Schubert, by E. Duncan, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Philosophy.

- Long (F. P.), Outlines from Plato, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Maxwell (J.), Metapsychical Phenomena, 8vo, 10/ net.

History and Biography.

- Brandes (G.), Main Currents in Nineteenth-Century
Literature: Vol. 6, Naturalism in England, 1875, 8vo, 12 net.
Danvers (F. C.), "Israel Redivivus," cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Elgin (The Earl of), by G. M. Wrong, 8vo, 7/6 net.
Knox (John), by J. Glasse, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Napoleon: The First Phase, by O. Browning, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Sainborn (A. F.), Paris and the Social Revolution, 16/ net.
Upton Letters (The), by T. B., ex. cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.
Venice (A Short History of), by W. R. Thayer, 12mo, 6/6 net.
Wagner (Richard) to Mathilde Wesendonck, translated by
W. A. Ellis, 8vo, 16/ net.

Geography and Travel.

- Bahama Islands, by G. B. Shattuck, imp. 8vo, 42/ net.
Meyrick (F.), Memories of Life at Oxford, and Experiences in Italy, Greece, Turkey, Germany, Spain, and Elsewhere, 8vo, 12/ net.
Whiteley (D. E.) and Davis (C.), The Commission of H.M.S.
Bulwark, Mediterranean Station, 1902-5, cr. 8vo, 4/ net.

Sports and Pastimes.

- Golfer's Year-Book, 1905, edited by J. L. Low, cr. 8vo, 3/6

Education.

- Creasey (C. H.), Technical Education in Evening Schools, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Philology.

- Galdós (Benito Pérez), Trafalgar, edited by F. A. Kirkpatrick, 12mo, 4/

Science.

- Abbott (H. L.), Problems of the Panama Canal, 6/6 net.
Bethell (H. A.), Modern Guns and Gunnery, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Burnet (J.), Manual of Diseases of Children, cr. 8vo, 6/6 net.

- Friedberger and Fröhner's Veterinary Pathology, translated by M. H. Hayes, Vol. 2, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Jellett (H.), A Manual of Midwifery, 8vo, 21/ net.
Magnus (H.), Superstition in Medicine, cr. 8vo, 4/ net.
Metcalfe (H. W.), Elementary Steam Engineering, 7/6 net.
Powles (H. H. P.), Steam Boilers, their History and Development, imp. 8vo, 24/ net.
Sargent (C. S.), Manual of the Trees of North America (exclusive of Mexico), 8vo, 25/ net.
Stokes (Sir G. G.), Mathematical and Physical Papers,
Vol. 5, 8vo, 15/
Symes (J. O.), The Rheumatic Diseases, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

General Literature.

- Castarede (L. de), Money-Making by Ad.-Writing, 10/6 net.
Crockett (S. R.), Maid Margaret of Galloway, ex. cr. 8vo, 6/
Dilke (Lady), The Book of the Spiritual Life, with Memoir by Sir C. W. Dilke, M.P., 8vo, 10/6 net.
Elliott (M.), The Husband Hunter, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Erick (C. A. W.), A Bunch of Shamrocks, cr. 8vo, 2/6
Garland (H.), The Tyranny of the Dark, cr. 8vo, 6/
Gissing (A.), Baliol Garth, cr. 8vo, 6/
Gordon (A. C.), The Gift of the Morning Star, cr. 8vo, 6/
Hill (F. T.), The Accomplice, cr. 8vo, 6/
Magnay (Sir W.), A Prince of Lovers, cr. 8vo, 6/
Mathews (F. A.), The Marquise's Millions, cr. 8vo, 4/
Meakin (B.), Model Factories and Villages, extra cr. 8vo, 7/6
Merrick (H.), When a Girl's Engaged, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Modern Mystic's Way (A), 12mo, 2/6 net.
Rolfe (F.), Don Tarquinio, cr. 8vo, 6/
Rowntree (J.), The Imperial Drug Trade, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Whiting (L.), The Outlook Beautiful, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.

FOREIGN.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Collection Dutuit (La), 10 parts, 1,000fr.
France (A.), Histoire Comique, Compositions par E.
Chahine, 100fr.
Lanoe (G.), Histoire de l'École Française de Paysage depuis
Chintreuil jusqu'à 1900, 9fr.
Roger-Miles, Alfred Roll, 60fr.
Salember, Modèles de Dessins d'Orfèvrerie, 3 parts, 60fr.

History and Biography.

- Buffenoir (H.), La Comtesse d'Houdetot: sa Famille, ses Amis, 10fr.
Derrécaix (Général), Le Maréchal Berthier: Part 2,
1804-15, 7fr. 50.
Leger (L.), Souvenirs d'un Slavophile, 1863-97, 3fr. 50.
Ribot (M. A.), Quatre Années d'Opposition: Discours Politiques, 2 vols., 7fr.

Geography and Travel.

- Challaye (F.), Au Japon et en Extrême-Orient, 3fr. 50.
Colonies Françaises: Algérie, 5fr.
Famelart (H.), Vues des Champs de Bataille de Wissembourg et de Froeschwiller, 6fr.
Marin (Abbé), Algérie, Sahara, Soudan: Vie, Travaux, Voyages de Monsieur Hacquard, 18fr.

Sociology.

- Méline (J.), Le Retour à la Terre et la Surproduction Industrielle, 3fr. 50.
Niceforo (A.), Les Classes Pauvres, 8fr.

Philology.

- Cheneb (M. Ben), Proverbes Arabes de l'Algérie et du Maghreb, 12fr.

General Literature.

- Auriol (G.), L'Hôtellerie du Temps Perdu, 3fr. 50.
Bocquillon (E.), La Crise du Patriotisme à l'École, 3fr. 50.
Labran (J. de), Le Maroc Rouge, 3fr. 50.
Perin (G.), L'Expiation, 3fr. 50.
Rameau (J.), Brimborion, 3fr. 50.
Thelen (M.), A l'Aube, 3fr. 50.

THE FIRST MENTION OF CRICKET
IN INDIA.

13, Warwick Mansions, Cromwell Crescent, W.

IN a curious book, which in itself merits a brief description, I have found what I make bold to call the first mention of cricket played in India.

The title of the book is 'A Compendious History of the Indian Wars,' by Clement Downing (London, 1737). It does not seem to have been used by Sir Henry Yule when compiling his Anglo-Indian glossary, though it abounds with "Hobson-Jobsons" that would have been dear to his heart. Raja is always printed as "Rodger," Nawab as "Annabob," and Subahdar as "Subberdaw." The author was a sailor who took part in the sea-fights against the Maratha "pyrate" Angria; and consequently it is not unnatural that he should call all Marathas "Angrians."

However, to come to the point. When his boat was lying for a fortnight in some channel of the Gulf of Cambay, Clement Downing writes (p. 229):—

"Tho' all the Country round was inhabited by the Culeys, we every day diverted ourselves with playing at Cricket, and other Exercises, which they would come and be Spectators of. But we never ventured to recreate ourselves in this Method, without having Arms for ourselves, and guarded by some of our Soldiers, lest the Country should come down on us."

I may add that the 'New English Dictionary' quotes a reference for a similar game of "sailors' cricket," played at Aleppo as early as circa 1676. JAS. S. COTTON.

CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS.

WITH regard to Cromwell and the Irish prisoners alluded to by Mr. Dennehy in your issue of May 13th, I may observe that traditions remain in several Scottish families that their relatives who "were concerned" in the rising of 1745, and were too youthful to be hanged for high treason, were sold as slaves to West Indian and American planters. Two of these—Andrew Johnston and Fergus Grahame—lived to return to Scotland, where they died very old men. Certainly in Scotland, if not in England, convicts were carried free by the captains of ships, and sold for what they could get for them in the plantations during the reign of George II. I have also an extract from The New York Gazette, May 1st, 1774, advertising:—

"Servants just arrived from Scotland to be sold on board the Commerce, Capt. Fergusson, master, lying at the Ferry Stairs, among which are a number of weavers, tailors, blacksmiths, nailers, shoemakers, butchers, hatters, and spinsters, 14 to 35 years of age. For terms apply to Henry White or said Master on board."

It is affirmed that people were kidnapped and sold to merchant captains by impecunious lairds in the Highlands, and that the widow of the most notorious of these lairds was presented to George IV. when he visited Edinburgh.

C. L. JOHNSTONE,

Author of 'Historical Families of Dumfriesshire.'

23, Leeson Park, Dublin, May 21st, 1905.

WHILE grateful to Prof. Mahaffy for his kindly reference to the pages of S. R. Gardiner's 'History of the Commonwealth,' in which are set forth the conclusions of that writer as to the improbability of the orders given by the Cromwellian Government of Ireland for the transportation to Barbados of native prisoners ever having been carried out, I am compelled to remark that the question at issue is not what Gardiner's views were, but as to what degree of value is ascribable to the evidences which indicate that such transportation actually took place.

I have shown that the Order Books of the Parliamentary Commissioners, still preserved in Dublin Castle, prove that contracts were entered into for the purpose of carrying out the contemplated transportation. It must, however, be admitted that this is not sufficient to attest that the operation referred to was really carried out. It is therefore desirable to ascertain how the testimony on this point stands. For my part I prefer the evidence of Sir William Petty, given in his 'Political Anatomy of Ireland, 1672,' to that of Gardiner, recorded two hundred years later. Petty was an eyewitness of the facts he dealt with. He was one of the physicians to the Parliamentary army, and, as his services proved, was about the last man in the world to commit himself to baseless assertion. His wonderfully accurate 'Survey of Ireland,' carried out under tremendous difficulties, was alone sufficient to make his fame. In chap. iv. of the 'Political Anatomy' Petty says:—

"About 504,000 of the Irish perished, and were wasted by the sword, plague, famine, hardship, and banishment, between the 23rd of October, 1641, and the same day 1652."

Petty goes on to calculate the number of those who died from each of the various causes enumerated in the foregoing extract, and sums up as follows:—

"So, as subtracting 112,000, 500 dying of the plague, and 37 massacred English, it follows that 167,000 died in 11 years by the sword and famine, and other hardships. Which I think not incredible, for supposing half the number, viz., 87,000, died in 11 years of famine and cold, transportation to Spain and Barbados, etc., it is not hard to believe that the other 87,000 perished by the sword."

Clearly Petty knew that there had been a large transportation of Irish to the West Indies. Lingard, in his 'History of England,' vol. xi. p. 131 (third edition), quotes Petty as stating that 6,000 boys and women were sent away. He adds:—

"After the conquest of Jamaica in 1655 the Protector, that he might people it, resolved to transport a thousand Irish boys and a thousand Irish girls to the island. At first the young women only were demanded: to which it is replied: 'Although we must use force in taking them up, yet it being so much for their own good and likely to be of so great advantage to the public, it is not in the least doubted that you may have such number of them as you think fit' (Thurloe, iv. 23)."

Lingard also quotes Henry Cromwell to the same purport. It is, of course, easy to assert that the policy of transportation was never put into effect, but I fail to see how the evidence of Petty, who was a capable and trusted servant of the Parliamentary Commissioners, can possibly be disregarded.

I am endeavouring to ascertain if there are any records available in Barbados casting light on this most interesting question.

WILLIAM F. DENNEHY.

'DICTIONARY OF INDIAN BIOGRAPHY.'

(Second List.)

May 12th, 1905.

By the courtesy of the Editor of The Athenæum, I have been permitted to publish the following list of names of the deceased persons (301-600) who have been provisionally selected for inclusion in the 'Dictionary of Indian Biography,' to be published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. in the autumn. This work is intended to contain biographical notices of about 2,000 to 2,500 persons, living or dead, Europeans or natives of India, connected with India since about the year 1750 A.D. Suggestions are invited, and it is hoped that readers of The Athenæum will bring any important omissions to my notice. Letters should be addressed to 61, Cornwall Gardens, S. Kensington, S.W.

C. E. BUCKLAND, Editor 'D.I.B.'

Coffin, Sir Isaac Campbell, Lieutenant-General, 1800-72
 Coghlan, Sir William M., General, 1803-85
 Coke, Sir John, Major-General, 1806-97
 Cole, Sir Christopher, Captain R.N., 1770-1836
 Colebrooke, Henry Thomas, Member of the Supreme Council, 1765-1837
 Colebrooke, Sir Thomas Edward, Baronet, Author, 1813-90
 Collett, Sir Henry, Lieutenant-General, 1835-1901
 Colley, Sir George Pomeroy, Major-General, 1835-81
 Collins, John, Colonel, Political, ?-1807
 Colville, Sir James William, Chief Justice, Bengal, 1810-80
 Colville, Sir Charles, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1769-1813
 Colvin, John Russell, Lieutenant-Governor, N.W.P., 1807-1857
 Combermere, Stapleton Cotton, first Viscount, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1773-1865
 Compton, Sir Herbert Abingdon Draper, Chief Justice, Bombay, 1770-1816
 Comyn, Sir Robert Buckley, Chief Justice, Madras, 1792-1853
 Condamine, Robert Bourke, first Baron, Governor of Madras, 1827-1902
 Conolly, Arthur, Captain, murdered at Bokhara, 1807-42?
 Conolly, Edward Barry, Captain, killed in Afghanistan, 1806-19
 Conolly, Henry Valentine, Madras Civil Service, 1806-55
 Courau, Henry, Major, 1738-1819
 Conway, Thomas Henry Somerset, Brigadier-General, ?-1837
 Cooke, Edward, Captain R.N., 1772-99
 Cooper, Thomas Threlville, Traveller and Author, 1833-78
 Corbett, Sir Stuart, Brigadier-General, ?-1865
 Cordery, John Graham, Resident at Hyderabad, 1833-1900
 Cornish, William Robert, Surgeon-General, Madras, 1828-97
 Cornwallis, Charles, first Marquis, Governor-General, 1783-1805
 Cornwallis, Sir William, Naval Commander-in-Chief, 1774-1819
 Corrie, Right Rev. Daniel, Bishop of Madras, 1777-1837
 Cosby, Sir Henry Augustus Montagu, Lieutenant-General, 1713-1822
 Cotton, Sir Arthur Thomas, General, Irrigation Engineer, 1803-99
 Cotton, Sir George, Merchant, 1812-1905
 Cotton, Right Rev. George Edward Lynch, Bishop of Calcutta, 1813-66

Cotton, Joseph, Royal Navy and E. I. Co.'s Marine, 1745-1825
 Cotton, Sir Sydney, Lieutenant-General and Author, 1792-1874
 Cotton, Sir Willoughby, General, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1783-1860
 Courtin, Jacques Ignace, French Chief at Dacca, ?-?
 Cowasji, Framji, Merchant and Philanthropist, Bombay, 1768-1851
 Cowell, Edward Byles, Scholar and Orientalist, 1826-1903
 Cowley, Henry Wellesley, first Baron, Lieutenant-Governor in Oudh, 1773-1847
 Craig, Sir James Henry, General, 1748-1812
 Crawford, Sir Thomas, Director-General A.M.S., 1824-95
 Crawford, John, Authority on the Eastern Archipelago, 1783-1868
 Crealock, Henry Hope, Lieutenant-General and Artist, 1831-91
 Crommelin, Charles, Governor of Bombay, ?-?
 Cross, John Kynaston, Under-Secretary of State for India, 1832-87
 Crowe, Sir Joseph Archer, Journalist and Correspondent, 1825-96
 Csoma de Koros, Alexander, Traveller and Scholar, 1784-1842
 Cubbon, Sir Mark, Lieutenant-General, Commissioner of Mysore, 1785-1861
 Cubitt, William George, Colonel, V.C., 1835-1903
 Cunningham, Sir Alexander, Major-General, Archaeologist, Author, 1814-93
 Cunningham, Francis, Engineer and Editor, 1820-75
 Cunningham, Joseph Davey, Captain, Political and Author, 1812-51
 Cureton, Sir Charles, General, 1826-91
 Cureton, Charles Robert, Adjutant-General in India, 1789-1848
 Cureton, Edward Burgoyne, Lieutenant-General, 1822-94
 Currie, Bertram Wodehouse, Member of the Council of India, 1827-96
 Currie, Sir Frederick, Baronet, of the Supreme Council, 1799-1875
 Curwen, Henry, Journalist, 1845-92
 D'Aguilar, Sir George Charles, Lieutenant-General, 1784-1855
 Dalgleish, Andrew, Pioneer of Trade, ?-1888
 Dalhousie, George Ramsay, ninth Earl of, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1770-1838
 Dalhousie, James Andrew Brown-Ramsay, first Marquis of, Governor-General, 1812-60
 Dallas, Sir George, Baronet, Indian Civilian and Author, 1758-1833
 Dallas, Sir Thomas, ?-1839
 Dalrymple, Alexander, Hydrographer to the E.I.Co., 1737-1808
 Dalton, Edward Tuite, Major-General, Ethnologist, 1815-80
 Dalton, John, Captain, Defender of Trichinopoly, 1725-1811
 Daly, Sir Henry Dermot, General, Political, 1821-95
 Dalvell, Sir Robert Anstruther, Member of Council of India, 1831-90
 Damant, Guybon Henry, Indian Civilian, 1846-79
 Dance, Sir Nathaniel, E.I.Co.'s Naval Service, 1748-1827
 Daniell, Thomas, Artist, 1719-1849
 Daniell, William, Artist, ?-1837
 Danvers, Sir Juland, of the India Office, 1826-1902
 Darbhanga, Sir Lachmeswar Singh, Maharaja Bahadur of, 1856-98
 Darnesteter, James, Professor, Linguist, Author, 1849-94
 Daud Shah, Afghan Commander-in-Chief, ?-?
 Davidson, Cutlibert, Colonel, Political, 1810-62
 Davies, Sir Robert Henry, Lieutenant-Governor of Panjab, 1821-1902
 Davies, Sir William George, Major-General, 1828-98
 Davis, Samuel, Indian Civilian, 1760-1819
 Davison, Sir Henry, Chief Justice Bombay and Madras, ?-1860
 Day, Francis, Ichthyologist, 1829-89
 Deatry, Right Rev. Thomas, Bishop of Madras, 1796-1861
 De, Rev. Lal Bihari, Educationist and Author, 1826-91
 Deb, Raja Bahadur Kali Krishna, Leader among Hindus, 1808-71
 Deb, Maharaja Bahadur Sir Narendra Krishna, Member of Legislative Council, 1822-1903
 Deb, Sir Radha Kanta, Raja Bahadur, Leader and Author, 1781-1867
 De Boigne, Benoit, Count, 1751-1830
 Delafosse, Henry George, Major-General, 1835-1905
 Denison, Sir William Thomas, Colonel, Governor of Madras, 1804-71
 Dennie, William Henry, Lieutenant-Colonel, Author, 1785 ?-1842
 Derby, Edward Henry Stanley, fifteenth Earl of, Secretary of State for India, 1826-93
 Derozio, Henry Louis Vivian, Poet, Journalist, and Teacher, 1809-1831
 De Souza, Sir Walter Eugene, Philanthropist, 1846-97
 Devis, Arthur William, Artist, 1763-1822
 Dey, Raj Krishna, Doctor, ?-1840
 Dey, Ram Dulal, Bengali Millionaire, 1759-1825
 Dick, George, Governor of Bombay, 1739-1818
 Dick, Sir Robert Henry, Major-General, 1785-1846
 Dick-Cuningham, William Henry, Lieutenant-Colonel, V.C., 1851-1900
 Dickinson, John, Reformer, Author, 1815-76
 Digby, William, Journalist, Author, 1819-1904
 Dobson, George Edward, Doctor and Zoologist, 1848-95
 Dodgson, Sir David Scott, General, 1822-98
 Donkin, Sir Rufane Shaw, General, 1773-1841
 Doran, Sir John, Lieutenant-General, 1821-1903
 Dorin, Joseph Alexander, Member of the Supreme Council, 1802-72
 Dormer, Hon. Sir James Charlemagne, Commander-in-Chief, Madras, 1831-93
 Douglas, Right Rev. Henry Alexander, Bishop of Bombay, 1821-75
 Douglas, James, Sheriff of Bombay, Author, 1826-1901
 Douglas, Sir Thomas Monteath, General, 1787-1868
 Doveton, Sir John, Lieutenant-General, 1768-1817
 Doveton, Sir John, General, 1783-1857
 Doveton, John, Eurasian, Captain Commandant Nizam's Service, 1800 ?-53
 Dow, Alexander, Lieutenant-Colonel, Historian, ?-1779

Dowdeswell, George, Member of the Supreme Council 1765-1852
 Dowdeswell, William, Acting Commander-in-Chief in India, 1761-1828
 Dowson, John, Professor and Author, 1820-81
 D'Oyly, Sir Charles, Baronet, Indian Civilian, Artist, 1781-1845
 Draper, Elizabeth, wife of D. Draper, Member of Council, Bombay, 1744-78
 Draper, Sir William, Lieutenant-General, 1721-87
 Drew, Frederick, Governor of Ladak, Author, 1836-91
 Drummond, Hon. Sir Edmund, Lieutenant-Governor of the N.W.P., 1813-95
 Drysdale, Sir William, Lieutenant-General, 1819-1900
 Dubois, Jean A., Abbé, Missionary, Author, 1765-1848
 Duff, Rev. Dr. Alexander, Missionary, 1806-78
 Dufferin and Ava, Frederick Temple Hamilton Temple Blackwood, first Marquess of, Viceroy and Governor-General, 1826-1902
 Duncan, Jonathan, Governor of Bombay, 1756-1811
 Dundas, James, Captain, V.C., 1842-79
 Duplex, Marquis, Joseph Francis, Governor of Pondicherry, 1697-1764
 Durand, Sir Henry Marion, Major-General, Lieutenant-Governor of the Panjab, 1812-71
 Dutt, Michael Madhusudan, Barrister, Poet, 1824-73
 Dutt, Rajendra, Homoeopathic Doctor, 1818-89
 Dutt, Sasi Chandra, Rai Bahadur, Author, 1825-86
 Dutt, Toru, Poetess and Authoress, 1856-77
 Dyce-Sombre, David Ochterlony, 1808-51
 Earle, William, Major-General, 1833-85
 East, Sir Edward Hyde, Baronet, Chief Justice, Bengal, 1764-1817
 Eastwick, Edward Backhouse, Political and Linguist, 1814-83
 Eastwick, Robert William, Captain, E.I.Co.'s Marine Service, 1772-1865
 Eastwick, William Joseph, Captain, Member of the Council of India, 1808-89
 Eden, Hon. Sir Ashley, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, 1831-87
 Eden, Hon. Emily, Authoress, 1797-1869
 Edgar, Sir John Ware, Indian Civil Service, Bengal, 1839-1902
 Edmonstone, Sir George Frederick, Lieutenant-Governor of the N.W.P., 1813-61
 Edmonstone, Neil Benjamin, Member of the Supreme Council, 1765-1811
 Edwardes, Sir Herbert Benjamin, Major-General, Commissioner, Panjab, 1819-68
 Egerton, Charles Chandler, E.I.Co.'s Medical Service, 1798-1885
 Egerton, Philip Henry, Indian Civil Service, Panjab, 1824-93
 Elgin and Kincardine, James Bruce, eighth Earl of, Viceroy and Governor-General, 1811-63
 Elias, Ney, Political and Traveller, 1844-97
 Elliott, Sir Daniel, Member of Council, Madras, 1798-1872
 Ellenborough, Edward Law, first Earl of, Governor-General, 1790-1871
 Elles, Sir William Kidston, Lieutenant-General, 1837-96
 Elliot, Edward King, Lieutenant-Colonel, Agent to the Governor-General for Rajputana, 1811-65
 Elliot, Sir Henry Miers, Foreign Secretary, India, and Author, 1808-53
 Elliot, Hugh, Governor of Madras, 1752-1830
 Elliot, Sir Walter, Member of Council, Madras, 1803-87
 Elliott, Sir William Henry, General, 1792-1874
 Ellis, Sir Barrow Hibelbert, Member of the Supreme Council, 1823-87
 Ellis, Francis Whyte, Indian Civil Service, Madras, Linguist, ?-1819
 Ellis, Robert Staunton, Member of the Council of India, 1825-77
 Elphinstone, George William Keith, Commander-in-Chief at Kabul, 1782-1842
 Elphinstone, John, thirteenth Baron, Governor of Bombay, 1807-60
 Elphinstone, Mountstuart, Governor of Bombay, 1779-1859
 Empson, William, Professor at Haileybury, 1791-1852
 England, Sir Richard, General, 1793-1883
 Erskine, Henry Napier Bruce, Indian Civil Service, Bombay, 1832-93
 Erskine, James Claudius, Member of Council, Bombay, 1821-93
 Erskine, William, Master in Equity, Bombay, and Author, 1773-1852
 Esdaile, James, E.I.Co.'s Medical Service, Mesmerist, 1808-59
 Evans, Sir Griffith Humphrey Pugh, Member of the Governor-General's Legislative Council, 1840-1902
 Evans, Sir William David, Recorder of Bombay, 1767-1821
 Everest, Sir George, Surveyor-General of India, 1790-1866
 Ewald, —, Professor, Oriental Linguist, and Author, 1803-75
 Exmouth, Edward Pellew, first Viscount, Naval Commander-in-Chief, India, 1757-1833
 Eyre, Sir Vincent, General, 1811-81
 Falconer, Hugh, Botanist, 1808-65
 Falkland, Lucius Bentinck Cary, tenth Viscount, Governor of Bombay, 1803-81
 Fallon, S. W., Educationist and Linguist, 1817-80
 Fane, Sir Henry, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1778-1840
 Fane, Walter, Major-General, 1828-85
 Farquhar, John, Superintendent of Gunpowder Factory 1751-1826
 Fay, Mrs., Authoress, ?-1817
 Feer, Henri Leon, Librarian and Linguist, 1830-1902
 Fenwick, G. R., Major, Journalist, ?-1904
 Fergusson, James, Student of Architecture, Writer, 1808-86
 Field, Sir John, Major-General, 1821-99
 Filose, Jean Baptiste, Colonel, served under Sindia, 1775-1816
 Filose, Michael, Colonel, Adventurer, ?-after 1797
 Firoz Shah, Leader of Mutineers, ?-?
 Fisher, Thomas, in the E.I. House, Biographical Writer, 1772-1836
 FitzClarence, Lord Frederick, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1799-1854
 FitzGerald, Sir William Robert Seymour Vesey, Governor of Bombay, 1818-85
 FitzGerald and Vesey, William Vesey, Lord, President of the Board of Control, 1783-1843

Fletcher, Sir Henry, Baronet, Chairman Court of Directors, 1727—1807
 Floyd, Sir John, Baronet, General, 1748—1818
 Forbes, Archibald, Correspondent, Author, 1838—1900
 Forbes, Sir Charles, Baronet, Merchant, Bombay, 1771—1849
 Forbes, David, Major-General, 1777?—1849
 Forbes, Duncan, Professor, Linguist, Author, 1798—1868
 Forbes, James, Indian Civilian, Author, 1719—1819
 Forchhammer, Emmanuel, Antiquary, Philologist, Burma, 1851—90
 Fordyce, Sir John, Lieutenant-General, ?—1877
 Forjett, Charles, Commissioner of Police, Bombay, ?—1890
 Forlong, James George Rorke, Major-General, 1824—1901
 Forrest, Thomas, E.I.Co.'s Marine Service, 1729?—1802?
 Forster, George, Traveller, Author, ?—1792
 Forster, Henry, Colonel, 1793—1862
 Forster, Henry Pitts, Master of the Mint, Calcutta, 1766?—1815
 Forsyth, James, Sportsman and Author, 1838—71
 Forsyth, Sir John, Inspector-General, Indian Medical Department, 1799—1883
 Fortescue, Thomas, Commissioner at Delhi, 1781—1872
 Fortescue, Robert, Botanist and Author, 1813—80
 Foster, Sir Charles John, Member of the Council of India, 1818—96
 Foulis, Sir Edward, Major-General, 1752—1830
 Fox, Henry Watson, Missionary, 1817—48
 Francis, Sir Philip, Member of the Supreme Council, 1740—1818
 Francklin, William, Lieutenant-Colonel, Author, 1763—1839
 Franks, Sir John, Judge, Calcutta, 1770—1852
 Franks, Sir Thomas Harte, Major-General, 1808—62
 Fraser, Alexander, General, 1824—98
 Fraser, Sir Charles Crawford, Major-General, 1829—95
 Fraser, Hugh, Colonel, Chief Commissioner, Agra, ?—1858
 Fraser, James Baillie, Political, Author, Artist, 1785—1856
 Fraser, James Stuart, General, Resident at Hyderabad, 1783—1869
 Fraser, William, Indian Civilian, Resident at Delhi, 1781—1835
 French, Right Rev. Thomas Valpy, Bishop of Lahore, 1823—91
 Frere, Sir Henry Bartle Edward, Baronet, Governor of Bombay, 1815—84
 Frere, William Edward, Member of Council, Bombay, 1811—89
 Fullerton, William, Colonel, 1754—1808
 Furdunji, Naoroji, Teacher, Reformer, 1817—85
 Fyres, Sir William Augustus, General, 1816—95
 Fyfe, Albert, Major-General, Chief Commissioner of British Burma, 1823—92
 Galloway, Sir Archibald, Chairman Court of Directors, 1780?—1850
 Gambier, Sir Edward John, Chief Justice, Madras, 1791—1879
 Garcin de Tassy, Joseph Heliodore, Professor and Linguist, 1794—1878
 Gardner, Alexander Haughton, Colonel, 1785—1877
 Gardner, William, V.C., 1821—97
 Gardner, William Linnaeus, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1770—1835
 Garnett, Arthur William, Colonel, 1829—61
 Garth, Sir Richard, Chief Justice, Bengal, 1820—1903
 Garvoek, Sir John, General, ?—1876
 Gawler, John Cox, Colonel, ?—1882
 Geary, Grattan, Journalist and Author, ?—1900
 Gell, Right Rev. Frederick, Bishop of Madras, 1810—1902
 Gerard, Alexander, Surveyor, Traveller, 1792—1839
 Gerard, James Gilbert, Medical Service, Traveller, 1795—1835
 Gerard, Patrick, Captain, Scientist, 1794—1818
 Ghose, Girish Chandra, Editor, Author, 1829—69
 Ghose, Hara Chandra, Small Cause Court Judge, Calcutta, 1808—68
 Ghose, Kasi Prasad, Critic and Author, 1808—73
 Ghose, Man Mohan, Barrister, Calcutta, 1841—96
 Ghose, Ram Gopal, Reformer and Patriot, 1815—68
 Ghulam Hassan Khan, Nawab Sir, Envoy at Kabul, ?—1881
 Ghulam Hossein Khan, Author, ?—?
 Gibbs, James, Member of the Supreme Council, 1825—86
 Gibbs, Sir Samuel, Major-General, ?—1815
 Gibson, Alexander, Conservator of Forests, Bombay, 1800—1867
 Gilbert, Sir Walter Raleigh, Baronet, Member of the Supreme Council, 1785—1853
 Gilchrist, John Borthwick, Principal, Professor, Linguist, 1759—1841
 Gillespie, Sir Robert Rollo, Major-General, 1766—1811
 Giraud, Herbert John, Bombay Medical Service, 1817—88
 Gladwin, Francis, Historian, Professor, Linguist, ?—1815?
 Gleig, Rev. George Robert, Chaplain-General, Historian, 1796—1888
 Glenelg, Charles Grant, Baron, President Board of Control, 1778—1866
 Goddard, Thomas, Brigadier-General, 1740?—83
 Godeheu, M., Governor-General of the French Settlements, ?—?
 Godwin, Sir Henry Thomas, Major-General, 1761—1853
 Goethals, Most Rev. Archbishop, 1833—1901
 Goldney, Philip, Brigadier-General, 1802—57
 Goldsmid, Henry Edward, Indian Civil Service, Bombay, 1812—55
 Goldstucker, Theodore, Professor, Orientalist, 1821—72
 Gomm, Sir William Maynard, Field-Marshal, 1781—1875
 Gopal, Madan, Rai Bahadur, Lawyer, ?—1901
 Gordon, Charles George, Major-General, 1833—85
 Gordon, Sir James Davidson, Chief Commissioner of Mysore, 1835—89
 Goreh, Rev. Nehemiah, Missionary, Writer on Religion, 1825—95
 Gorresio, Commendatore Gasparo, Sanskrit Philologist, 1808—91
 Gough, Hugh, first Viscount, 1779—1869
 Gough, Sir John Bloomfield, Q.M.G. in India, 1801—91
 Gourishankar Udayashankar, Joint Administrator of Bhaunagar, 1805—91
 Gover, Charles E., Literary and Scientific, ?—1872
 Gower, Sir Erasmus, Admiral, 1712—1811
 Graham, John, Botanist, 1805—39
 Grand, Noel Catherine, married to Talleyrand, 1762—1835

Grant, Sir Alexander, Baronet, Director of Public Instruction, Bombay, 1826—81
 Grant, Charles, Chairman Court of Directors, 1746—1823
 Grant, Sir Charles, Foreign Secretary, India, 1836—1903
 Grant, James Augustus, Lieutenant-Colonel, Traveller, 1827—92
 Grant, Sir James Hope, Commander-in-Chief, Madras, 1806—75
 Grant, James William, Astronomer and Scientist, 1788—1865
 Grant, Sir John Peter, Judge of Supreme Court, Calcutta, 1771—1818
 Grant, Sir John Peter, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, 1807—93
 Grant, Malcolm, Lieutenant-General, 1762—1831
 Grant, Sir Patrick, Field-Marshal, 1804—95
 Grant, Sir Robert, Governor of Bombay, 1779—1838
 Grant, Sir William Keir, Lieutenant-General, 1772—1852

'KING LEOPOLD II.: HIS RULE IN BELGIUM AND THE CONGO.'

May 17, 1905.

THE writer of the article on this work which appeared in The Athenæum of May 13th justifies, or, rather, seeks to justify, his strictures on it, by quoting the statement in the genealogical table which appears in the volume that

"two sons are assigned to King Leopold I. of Belgium besides the present Count of Flanders, one being 'Prince Leopold, Duke of Brabant,' the other 'Leopold II., King of the Belgians, Sovereign of the Independent State of the Congo.'"

He says:—

"This, of course, is merely a careless blunder, which, set right in the text, will deceive nobody, and may readily be excused. But it is indicative of the carelessness or worse of which there are numberless instances in the text."

Permit me to point out that it is nothing of the sort, but, "of course," a true statement of incontrovertible fact. If the writer of your article will consult any person who has any knowledge of the facts to which my book relates, he will find that King Leopold I. had three sons whose names and titles are those given in my table. Not having a bad case, I find no need of descending to bluster or abuse; but I cannot refrain from turning the words of the writer of the article on my book against him, and remarking that his characterization of my statement as a careless blunder is "indicative of the carelessness or worse of which there are numberless instances in the text"—of his article. It is within a reviewer's right to call a book which treats minutely and at length of the history and development of a nation, "a political pamphlet," if it amuses him to do so, but it is hardly within an English reviewer's right to betray such carelessness or ignorance of the parentage of King Edward VII. as to call him the nephew of King Leopold II. Yet your reviewer does this. Your reviewer accuses me of misrepresentation. I am willing to believe he does not intend to accuse me of intentional misrepresentation, and "of course" I hold there is no misrepresentation whatever in the work. He has advanced nothing in proof of his allegation. Of course I hold he could find nothing in the book to prove it; but, while on my part I readily acquit him of seeking intentionally to misrepresent me, I submit that proof of his misrepresentation is found, not only in the mixing of criticism of advertisements with a criticism of the book, but also in the delusive statement that "the genealogical table, 'showing the descent of King Leopold II., and his relation to King Edward VII.'.....is considered important enough to be mentioned on the title-page."

Undoubtedly the genealogical table is mentioned on the title-page, together with the illustrations and map, but not as the reviewer's words misleadingly suggest it is.

JOHN DE COURCY MACDONNELL.

* * We plead guilty to two of Mr. MacDonnell's charges. By a slip of the pen we called King Edward VII. a "nephew," instead of "first cousin once removed," of King Leopold. We also erred in overlooking the fact that, before the birth of the present King of the Belgians, his parents had a son who died at the age of nine months and three weeks. The name of this first-born is not given in Théodore Juste's authoritative memoir or any other trustworthy book accessible to us, and it may or may not have been Leopold; but he certainly does not live in history, as Mr. MacDonnell's genealogical table implies, as "Prince Leopold, Duke of Brabant." That title was conferred on Leopold I.'s second son in 1840, and borne by him until he ascended the throne. For the rest, we fail to see any "misleading suggestion" in our quotation of Mr. MacDonnell's own description of his genealogical table, and his objections to our strictures on his book would have had more weight had he attempted any reply to the definite charges and statements contained in them.

SALE.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE sold on the 22nd and 23rd inst. the following books from the library of Mr. John Gabbitt, &c.: Jon Bee's Fancy-Ana: a History of Pugilism, 1824, 6l. 7s. 6d. Cokayne's Complete Peerage, 8 vols., 1887-98, 27l. Dickens's Works, 30 vols., 1874, 9l. 17s. 6d. Egan's Picture of the Fancy going to a Fight at Moulsey-Hurst, 1819, 9l. 5s.; Egan's Boxiana, 5 vols., 1823-8, 15l.; The Fancy, being Memoirs of the Leading Pugilists, 1826, 9l. 10s. Punch, Vols. 1-93, 1841-87, 10l. 5s. Smith's British Mezzotint Portraits, 4 vols., 1878-83, 17l. 10s. Collection of Lottery Bills and Tickets, 1800-26 (Upcott Collection), 20l. 10s. Rogers's Italy and Poems, extra illustrations and autograph letter, 1834, 13l. 15s. Hakluyt's Early Voyages, 5 vols., 1809-12, 10l. 15s. Whitman's Masters of Mezzotint, large paper, 1898, 11l. George Borrow's Works, first editions (14), 1841-74, 16l. Lytton's Novels, édition de luxe, 32 vols., 7l. Cruikshank's Comic Almanack, 1835-53, 14l. J. J. Hissey's Works (8), 7l. 2s. 6d. Kipling's Works, 20 vols., 1897-1900, 11l. 10s. Lecky's Works, 12 vols., 1865-90, 11l. 1s. 6d. Lever's Novels, first editions, 16 vols., 9l. 10s. Prescott's Works, 11 vols., 1857-65, 8l. R. L. Stevenson's Works, 28 vols., Edinburgh, 1894-8, 33l. Surtees's Sporting Novels (5), first editions, 26l. 10s. Dickens's Works, édition de luxe, 30 vols., 1881, 11l. Sloane's Life of Napoleon I., extra illustrated, 1896, 15l. 10s. Jerrold's Life of Cruikshank, extra illustrated, 4 vols., 1880, 45l.

Literary Gossip.

MR. FREDERICK GREENWOOD contributes some reminiscences of Coventry Patmore to the June number of Blackwood, which also contains an article on 'Admiralty Policy Historically Examined,' by the author of 'A Retrograde Admiralty.' General E. F. Chapman, C.B., also makes some suggestions for the 'Reorganization of our Recruiting System on a National Basis,' and Chasseur, in his 'Study of the Russo-Japanese War,' deals with Rojdestvensky's armada. Other articles are 'Crocodile Fishing,' by Mr. George Maxwell, and 'A Fowler's Day in the Outer Isles,' by Capt. Aymer Maxwell, of the Grenadier Guards. Poetry is represented by 'Orpheus and Eurydice,' by Mr. Alfred Noyes; 'The Woman out of Scotland,' by Mr. Stephen Gwynn; and 'A Leader of Promise,' by J. K.

MR. FISHER UNWIN is shortly to publish a new novel by Mrs. Hamilton Synge, author of 'The Coming of Sonia.' It will be entitled 'A Supreme Moment,' and is a psychological study of the results of the advent of a new and exceptional personality into a circle of well-meaning, but somewhat commonplace folk.

A NEW novel from the pen of Mr. W. D. Howells will be published by Messrs. Harper in the course of the summer.

'DEMETER: A MASK,' by Mr. Robert Bridges, will be published immediately by the Oxford University Press. It was written in 1904 at the request of the ladies of Somerville College, Oxford, and was acted by them at the inauguration of their new building.

THE REV. J. P. MAHAFFY, C.V.O., D.C.L., has been elected an honorary member of the Archaeological Society of Athens.

MR. EDWARD F. CULVERWELL, Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, has been made Professor of Education in that University.

MR. MACKENZIE BELL is sojourning in Madeira to complete his restoration to health.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to say that those who are in close touch with Harrow School will be able to identify a good many of both the boys and the masters in Mr. Vachell's novel 'The Hill,' noticed by us last week. We are sorry to hear it, for close portraiture of the kind is both bad art and bad manners.

G. H. P. writes concerning the copyright of letters:—

"Let us be perfectly logical while we are about it. The statement (by Mr. Hinkson or any one else) that 'the writer of a letter has a right to restrain publication of its contents' does precisely not draw a distinction between the material and the communication, and should therefore, to serve its author's purpose, be remodelled. What a person writes, bad or good, is the communication, not 'the paper on which it is written,' but the ideas or information expressed."

THE last of the Jowett Lectures for 1905 has now been delivered by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter in the hall of the Passmore Edwards Settlement. Mr. Carpenter has given altogether ten lectures on 'The First Three Gospels' as an introduction to the study of the sources of the life of Jesus. At the first lecture there was an attendance of about two hundred people. A large proportion of the audience throughout consisted of men, many of whom had been among the hearers of Dr. Mactaggart's course on 'An Introduction to the Study of Philosophy' last year.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—

"Passing through Beaconsfield the other day, I went to see the tomb of Edmund Waller in the churchyard. It is not particularly beautiful, but it is conspicuous, being of some height, and the quaint Latin inscription is rather pretty to a scholar. The enclosure is railed in and paved with stones, between which nettles are springing in abundance. 'Grow, loathly weed,' seems an ill motto for the author of 'Go, lovely rose'; yet such seems to be the injunction of the church authorities. Now, if it had been a local magnate, all would be in order; but a mere English poet!"

A VACATION Term for Biblical Study is again announced this year at Girton College. It will last for three weeks, from July 31st to August 19th, and the lecturers include Dr. Chase, Canon Kennett, Dr. Jevons, Prof. Lavine, and Canon Foakes Jackson.

SIR W. P. TRELOAR presided at the meeting held at Stationers' Hall on Tuesday last in reference to the proposed testimonial to Mr. Walter Wellsman to commemorate the Diamond Jubilee of 'The Newspaper Press Directory.' A sub-committee was appointed, with Mr. Wilkie Jones as honorary secretary, who will be pleased to reply to communications addressed to him at 13, Bream's Buildings.

THE Académie Française announced on Thursday week the names of its fortunate "lauréats." The Prix Archon des Pérouses, of the value of 4,500 francs, for poetry, has been divided among seven poets, M. André Rivoire obtaining 1,000fr. for his volume 'Le Chemin de l'Oubli,' and M. F. Gregh a similar sum for 'Clartés Humaines.' The Prix Toirac, of the value of 4,000fr., which goes to the author of the best comedy in prose or verse produced at the Théâtre Français during the current year, was not awarded in 1904, and this year the two prizes go to M. Capus, for 'Notre Jeunesse,' and M. Marcel Prévost for 'La Plus Faible.' The Prix Émile Augier, a triennial one of 5,000fr., for the best piece in three acts produced either at the Théâtre Français or at the Odéon during the course of the preceding three years, has been divided between M. Henri Bataille for 'Résurrection,' M. Émile Fabre for 'La Rabouilleuse' (each of whom gets 2,000fr.), and M. G. Mitchell for 'L'Absent,' 1,000fr.

THE death is announced of Alphonse Tavan, who, with Frédéric Mistral and five other young poets, may be said to have inaugurated the renaissance of Provençal literature at a dinner held on May 21st, 1854, at Font-de-Ségune, near Châteauneuf-de-Gadagne (Vaucluse). Mistral, the greatest of all, is the only one left of the seven. It was at this dinner that the word "félibrige" was, if not coined, at all events adopted. Tavan was an employé on the railway, and his literary output consists of two volumes of verse, 'Amour et Plour' and 'Vivo Vidanto,' and a comedy in five acts, 'Le Masc,' which was produced for the first time during the Carnival of 1854 at Châteauneuf-de-Gadagne. Tavan was in his seventy-third year.

THE Bibliothèque Nationale is about to publish an "inventaire sommaire" of the most recent additions to the department of manuscripts, which number in all 752. Among these are the papers of Zola, the correspondence of Musset and George Sand, the letters of Madame de Staël to Fauriel, the Mariette papers, the Brantome manuscripts, the Champollion and Dufrique-Desgenettes, the correspondence of the Duc de Richelieu, Minister of Louis XVIII., a collection of autograph letters of members of the Institute, the collection of revolutionary songs made by G. Isambert, the manuscript of a voyage to the United States by the Duc de la Rochefoucauld-Liancourt, and the correspondence and papers of Thiers. All these, with the exception of a portion of the last (the gift of Mlle. Dosne), will be at once placed at the disposition of students.

THE Preussische Historische Institut has issued its report for 1904-5. The usefulness of the Institute has been considerably increased by the enlargement of its premises and the growth of its library. The reports of the Papal Nuncios, the Repertorium Germanicum, and the examination of the Italian archives are the most important subjects on which Prof. Kehr and his colleagues are at work.

WE have to announce the death of the Norwegian historian and Keeper of the State Archives at Christiania, H. J. Huitfeldt-Kaas, on the 18th inst., aged seventy-one.

THE Parliamentary Papers of the week likely to be of the most general interest to our readers (in addition to two named under 'Science Gossip') are Report of the Governors of Wellington College, 1904 (1d.); Report of the Royal University of Ireland, 1904 (1½d.); Report of the Board of Education on Administration of Schools under the Welsh Intermediate Education Act, 1889 (½d.); and Annual Report of the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland (1s. 11d.).

SCIENCE

THE ELECTRICAL CONSTITUTION OF MATTER.

I.

THE electronic theory is now nearly a decade old, and has received during that time the more or less thorough acquiescence of the leading physicists of the civilized world. Yet it has suffered, like other new theories, from the desire of its inventors to use it as a key which will open all locks, and it is extremely difficult for those who have not followed it from the beginning to distinguish the parts played by fact and inference in its foundation. This has, indeed, been done with admirable point and clearness by M. Pellat, the eminent Professor of Physics at the Sorbonne, in a lecture which he recently delivered to a popular audience in Paris under the auspices of the Revue Scientifique. This lecture was illustrated by experiments which, though perfectly familiar to those who have followed the subject, are not easily understood without description by those to whom it is fresh, and, to judge by the pseudo-scientific articles that from time to time appear in the general press, a good deal of confusion still exists as to the nature and extent of the theory. Hence some discussion of it may be useful.

Now the electronic theory asserts that matter, when analyzed into its ultimate components, consists of electricity, and that electricity is itself composed of atoms. If we take a glass tube, called from its inventor a "Crookes tube," exhausted to a very high degree of exhaustion, and pass through it an electric discharge of sufficient intensity, the tube appears to be filled with apple-green light. Regard it closely, and this is seen to be due, not, as was first imagined, to any light rays emitted by the discharge, but to a stream of particles proceeding from the cathode or negative pole, which strike upon the wall of the tube immediately opposing them and excite it to fluorescence. By interposing a small windmill with mica vanes in the path of this stream, we can show it possesses sufficient momentum to set the mill twirling, while the application of a magnet to the side of the tube causes it to be deflected from the rigidly straight line that it otherwise follows. By giving the cathode a concave form, the stream of particles can be concentrated, and a piece of platinum placed in the focus thus formed soon becomes heated to redness, while the shock caused by the sudden arrest of the stream by the glass wall of the tube sets up those vibrations in the ether or universal medium outside the tube which we have learnt to call the X or Röntgen rays. These phenomena seem only consistent with the conclusion that the particles of which the stream consists have a substantial existence, or, in other words, are what we are accustomed to call matter. But if they are matter, they can only have come from one source, and that is the small portion of air or other gas left in the tube when it was exhausted. Now, by a most ingenious experiment, which it would take too long to describe here, Prof. J. J. Thomson has succeeded in measuring the mass of one of these particles, and has ascertained it to be one thousand times less than that of the atom of hydrogen, which is the lightest gas known. Plainly, therefore, we have in these corpuscles or cathode particles matter in a far more minute form of subdivision than has otherwise been obtained. And what is still more extraordinary, we may replace the air left in the tube after exhaustion by hydrogen, nitrogen, or any other gas we please with the same result. The same general phenomena are exhibited, the mass of each particle remains one-thousandth part of the hydrogen atom, and the electric charge to be presently noted is unaltered. It seems that we have here not only matter in the minutest form of subdivision, but also something like a universal component of all matter.

This finely subdivided matter, however, is itself electrified. By inserting within the Crookes tube what is known as a "Faraday's cage" connected with an electroscope, M. Perrin has shown that the cathode stream is strongly charged with negative electricity, and Prof. J. J. Thomson, by taking advantage of the property possessed by an electric charge of condensing water vapour into drops, has measured the charge possessed by each particle. This has enabled Prof. Townsend, by a brilliant series of experiments, to decide that the charge borne by each particle is equivalent to the charge carried by each univalent ion in electrolysis, or, to put it more simply, by the wandering particle of an element like hydrogen or chlorine, which breaks away from its fellows when an electric current passes through the solution containing it. Moreover, the German Prof. Lenard has shown that a window cut in the Crookes tube and glazed, so to speak, with a thin plate of aluminium, will allow the cathode stream to pass into the outer air, when it displays all the characteristics of the stream coming from a point attached to the negative pole of an electric conductor in full work. This charge, together with the feebleness of their mass, accounts for the enormous speed with which the particles of the cathode stream travel, which has been ascertained to be some 100,000 kilometres per second, or one-third of the speed of light. Further experience has shown that this stream of negatively charged particles smaller than atoms is produced without employing an electric current, by many chemical processes, by different metals when exposed to ultra-violet light, and by the peculiar metals known as radio-active, of which they form the famous  $\beta$  rays. Experiments have been made with sub-atomic particles derived from one or other of these sources by a great number of physicists, such as Kaufman, Lenard, Simon, and Weichert in Germany, and Becquerel in France, with the result that Prof. Thomson's calculations as to the mass, charge, and speed of the moving particle, or, as we may now call it, the electron, have been independently and abundantly confirmed.

Heretofore we have been dealing with facts which have been too fully sifted, checked, and verified for us to regard them as otherwise than definitely acquired by science. But on leaving these we embark upon a sea of conjectures which take one very far indeed. It should be noticed that the dissociation or splitting up of the atom, by the separation from it of the negative electron, leaves a very considerable portion of it behind; and it is a law to which electricity has as yet presented no exception, that the separation of a negative charge argues the existence of an exactly similar positive charge somewhere else. Hence it follows that when the stream of negative electrons start out from the cathode of the Crookes tube, they must leave behind a certain number of positive electrons, and this can be shown by experiment to be what actually happens. But the positive electron has never been independently separated, and the mass of the atom remaining behind is diminished to so slight an extent by the loss of the negative electrons that it has been calculated it must be nearly a thousand times larger than its usual associate. Hence those who are inclined to push the electronic theory to its fullest extent—among whom one must mention the Dutch physicist Prof. Lorentz and the Secretary of the Royal Society, Dr. Larmor—see in the core of the atom nothing but a group of positive electrons, forming a body like our sun, round which their negative partners revolve at distances and in orbits corresponding not imperfectly to those of the planets. If this be accepted, each atom is a solar system in petto, and the difference of chemical and physical behaviour displayed by, for instance, an atom of hydrogen and another of iron is accounted for by supposing the planets of one to be either more numerous or to have different orbits from those of the other. This, too, is, in the main, the position of Prof. J. J. Thomson, although, as has lately been shown in The Athenæum (Nos. 4040 and 4041), he would prefer to liken the difference between the various chemical atoms to the varying geometrical figures formed by the grouping of floating magnets round the opposite pole of a larger magnet suspended above them.

It should be noticed that all these conjectures assume that the dissociated atom consists merely of positive and negative electrons or atoms, not of matter, but of electricity. This derives some colour from experiments that have been made by Profs. Max Abraham and Kaufman and others, which go to show that inertia and mass are not, as has been thought, intrinsic properties of matter, but, on the contrary, electro-magnetic phenomena. If this be the case, it might well be that matter in its last analysis has no other constituent than the positive and negative electrons, and we may come in time to regard these last as the "centres of intrinsic strain" in the ether that Dr. Larmor's theory has already foreshadowed. But electricity has not yet been found to exist independently of matter, and it may therefore also be that both positive and negative electrons contain extremely minute masses of matter as we have hitherto known it, to act as carriers to the electric charge. In this connexion it is worth mentioning that the  $\alpha$  particle expelled from radium, which has hitherto been looked upon as the nearest approach we could get to the separated positive electron, has been thought by Prof. Rutherford to consist of helium; and if this is the case with one gas, there seems no reason why we may not yet discover another sufficiently tenuous to act as a carrier to the negative charge. However this may be, it may be said that the electronic theory as it stands forms a working hypothesis capable of accounting for all the known phenomena of electricity. Its bearing upon those of magnetism and of gravitation we hope to discuss in a future article.

RESEARCH NOTES.

A DISCOVERY of great importance seems to have been made by M. Villard. By interposing a diaphragm with a small central opening in front of the cathode in a Crookes tube, and then placing the tube between the poles of a powerful electro-magnet, he produces a new kind of rays which he calls the magneto-cathodic. These are entirely magnetic in their nature, and prove, when separated by a Faraday's cage, not to be carriers of electricity, while they increase in light and length with the intensity of the magnetic field. They are deviated by an electric field of sufficient intensity, and tend to place themselves perpendicularly to it. Or the pencil of ordinary cathodic rays can be made by magnetic deviation to take the form of a helix, or corkscrew, when the magnetic rays will then figure as straight lines parallel to the axis of the helix. Moreover, M. Villard has been able to show that, given a magnetic field of sufficient intensity, the ordinary cathodic rays may be made to describe a perfect circle, thus returning to the cathode, while the magnetic-cathodic rays persist in their course through the length of the tube. It is, therefore, claimed that these last cannot arise from any transformation of electric energy, but have an actual independent existence of their own; and it is even argued that they must consist of streams of particles called, by analogy with those making up the cathode stream, magnetons. This may be premature, but we may certainly admit M. Villard's contention that these experiments for the first time demonstrate visibly an action of the electric field at right angles to its direction, and his experiments cannot fail to cast much light on the relations between electricity and magnetism.

M. A. Leduc has also made some magnetic experiments lately with bismuth, about the most diamagnetic of all metals. He finds that if fused bismuth be placed in a glass bulb and suspended between the poles of an electro-magnet with a field of not less than 5,000 units, on crystallization the crystals will so arrange themselves that their greatest permeability lies in the direction of the field. If we may argue from this to the behaviour of paramagnetic bodies, such as iron, we may expect the same thing to have happened with natural magnets, like the common magnetite or loadstone. On the other hand, it seems inconsistent with what happens in the case of cast steel, which, after crystallization, remains unmagnetized until magnetism is artificially communicated to it and remains in it. How are we to suppose that the crystals rearrange themselves in this case?

A new magnetic alloy, which is free from some of the disadvantages of those exhibited at the Cambridge meeting of the British Association, is announced by Herr Gumlich. It contains more than sixty per cent. of copper, twenty of manganese, ten of aluminium, and a trace of lead. It is said to be easily worked, and to have the coercive force of prime cast steel. Its maximum permeability equals that of cast iron, and increases considerably with age. Unfortunately it will not stand heating, and a temperature of 165° Centigrade permanently strips it of its magnetic properties. For the present, at any rate, these new magnetic metals do not seem likely to displace industrially the compounds of iron.

Dr. G. Schendell has revived with great effect the experiments of Rühlmann as to the result of magnetism upon solutions. By placing dissolved colouring matter on glass plates, and leaving them undisturbed for twenty-four hours, he naturally obtains an even deposit on the surface of the glass of the colouring substance. If, however, during this period, the glass is placed in an intense magnetic field, the particles of colouring matter accumulate in the region of maximum density of the flux of force, from which shoot out branches to the four points of the compass. At the same time, the less coloured portion of the solution does not go towards either pole, but is seen to be filled with particles of matter in rapid vibration. Although in a finer state of division than the rest of the solution, these last, when formed of compound colours, do not appear under the microscope to be resolved into their components.

The real nature of the phosphorescence of the sulphides, which has come into increased importance since the foundation of the study of radio-activity, has at length received adequate treatment in a joint memoir by Dr. Lenard and Dr. Klatt. They lay down that phosphorescence is the property of those substances which contain, beside the sulphide of an alkaline earth, a trace of copper, lead, silver, zinc, manganese, nickel, bismuth, or antimony. They further say that a mere mixture of any of these metals with the sulphide gives only very feeble phosphorescence, and that the full effect is not produced unless there is present some flux like sulphate of soda or fluoride of calcium, which, even in infinitesimal quantities, brings about a more perfect combination. The spectrum of the phosphorescence shows a succession of separate bands, each of which corresponds to one of the metals present, and therefore forms a most delicate test for their detection. Dr. Lenard is able to show from this that copper is much more universal in nature than was formerly supposed, sodium being the only element that surpasses it in this respect. The rays which excite phosphorescence all belong to the ultraviolet end of the scale, and the phenomenon itself is probably due to chemical action as the ultimate cause, and, proximately, to the return to their original trajectories of the negative electric charges taken from the atoms of the substance during the process of excitement.

Other researches into radio-active phenomena have been made by Dr. Graetz, whose experiments as to the photographic effect, and therefore the radio-activity, of peroxide of hydrogen have just been confirmed by Dr. Precht and his Japanese colleague Mr. Otsuki. The two last named hold to Dr. Graetz's former theory that the emanation is merely the vapour of the peroxide, but the original discoverer now contends that it consists of atoms of free oxygen. At the meeting of the Deutsche Physikalische Gesellschaft, before which his paper was read, suggestions were made that free electrons, or even some altogether unknown element, might be present. Before the Viennese Academy of Sciences a paper was also read by Herren H. Mache and St. Meyer on the radio-activity of the waters of the sulphur baths south of Vienna, such as Fischau, Vöslau, and Baden. Radium was said to be the active element in each case, this being shown by the rate of decrease in the emanation.

In connexion with the experiment proposed by Mr. Michelson with a view to discovering whether the ether does or does not move with the earth (as to which see The Athenæum of April 8th), it should be noted that M. Langevin still endeavours to prove by mathematical reasoning that, if the earth takes the ether along with it, the fact could never be verified by any person on the globe. F. L.

THE CONVERSAZIONE OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

WHILE no new instrument of research in physics or chemistry was manifest at Burlington House last Wednesday week, there were the usual evidences of progress and effort. The guests were received by the venerable President, Sir William Huggins, whose apparently undiminished vigour it was pleasant to note. Not since the day of Newton has there been, we believe, a president actually in office who has passed the age of eighty.

There was a good display of various pieces of apparatus exemplifying improvements or developments. Mr. E. A. Reeves, of the Royal Geographical Society, showed a 6-inch transit theodolite, fitted with his patent tangent-micrometer for reading the arc of the instrument. Its employment usefully serves to reduce the size of the theodolite of the usual pattern. Prof. Schuster demonstrated the special features of a large echelon spectroscope constructed by Messrs. Hilger. Mr. G. F. Herbert Smith exhibited a small hand-refractometer, embracing novelties in construction, and designed for the determination of the refractive indices of translucent substances, ordinary light being used for the purpose of estimations, or the monochromatic light of a volatilizing sodium-salt. The "Compasscope," an accessory to the microscope, is arranged for attachment at right angles to the body or optic axes of such instrument, enabling observation to be made of two objects brought into the field of view at the same time. It was shown by Mr. D. Finlayson.

The astronomical exhibits comprised Mr. T. E. Heath's stereoscopic views of the sun and stars, and Mr. Shackleton's lantern projections of the component phases in the phenomenon of a total solar eclipse.

In electricity Prof. Fleming's direct-reading cymometer or wave-meter, for measuring the length of the waves used in wireless telegraphy, absorbed attention. Some interesting high-temperature tubular electric furnaces, constructed of rare earths such as are used in the filaments of Nernst lamps, came from the National Physical Laboratory, the operations of which were demonstrated by Dr. J. A. Harker, whose skill and research have contributed largely to the principles and applications involved. The furnaces are available for temperatures between 800° and 2,000° C.

Mr. R. S. Hutton's new patterns of laboratory electric furnaces—not, however, shown in action—also demand notice. The essential feature consists of a carbon tube, rod, or plate, and the method employed for conveying the electric current to the carbon by soldering water-jacketed sleeves to the electro-coppered ends of the carbon forms a novel plan of arrangement. In connexion, samples of refractory oxides, as fused, were placed on view. Messrs. Isenthal's resonance induction coil and high-potential apparatus, together with Mr. Russell Wright's high-tension resonance transformer for high-frequency and X-ray work, marked substantial advances in mechanical efficiency.

In metallurgy the exhibits, although few in number, denoted valuable current work. Chiefly apparent were Mr. Hadfield's samples of iron and steel alloys tested in the Royal Institution laboratory at the temperature of liquid air (−182°C.) in collaboration with Sir James Dewar, descriptive of the extraordinary changes in quality induced at the low temperature. Mr. J. E. Stead showed in a complete and effective manner his method of preparation of slices of metals for examination under the microscope, an electric motor being used to actuate an ingeniously contrived series of mechanical appliances; and Mr. W. Rosenhain the appearance and significance of "slip-bands" in metallic fractures.

In a darkened recess Sir William Ramsay showed the peculiar action of the substance actinium, called so by Debiere, but by Giesel emanium, and separable from the mineral pitchblende. It gives off an emanation whose period of activity is very short, apparently but a few seconds, and when this emanation impinges on a sensitive zinc sulphide screen, the latter becomes luminous, but the patch of brightness can be blown away—to use the exhibitor's expression—and in a second or two reappears. Sir W. Crookes brought specimens illustrating coloration effects in glass produced by light and radium. Samples were also lent for a like purpose by Prof. Judd, Prof. McLeod, and Mr. Beilby. The last-named showed the phosphorescence of calc spar and other substances during exposure to the  $\beta$  rays of radium, after removal from that agent, and revival by heat after secondary phosphorescence has died down. The presence of Prof. E. F. Nichols, of Columbia University, was a welcome recognition of the activities of American science. He exhibited the torsion balance used by himself and Prof. G. F. Hull to measure radiation pressure, as well as a vacuum tube, exemplifying in action, as nearly as possible, some of the conditions believed to exist in comets' tails. Prof. J. Milne sent seismograms of the recent Indian earthquake as recorded at Shide, Isle of Wight, and Edinburgh, Paisley, Beirut, and Toronto.

In the meeting-room experimental expositions were given by Sir Oliver Lodge, Dr. E. A. Wilson, and Mr. Perceval Landon. The first-named dealt with the use of electric valves for the production of high-tension continuous current. The familiar story of the National Antarctic Expedition was pleasantly recapitulated by Dr. Wilson, who used the admirable series of photographs taken by Engineer Lieut. Skelton as lantern-slides. Of fresher interest, however, were the views thrown upon the screen by Mr. Perceval Landon, illustrating 'The Road to Lhasa.'

In biology Col. Leishman's microscopic slides and accompanying sketches illustrated the protozoal organism characteristic of the Oriental malady "Kala-azar," or black sickness. By similar means Prof. Farmer and his colleagues, Mr. Moore and Mr. Walker, showed the peculiarities of those vesicular structures, known as "Plimmer's bodies," which are found in many cancerous growths. They have been identified recently by these observers as being also present in normal reproductive tissues. Bacteriological plates of preparations by Mr. H. S. Willson were sent, with the object of showing the usefulness of an alum precipitate as an isolating agent in the examination of infected water for the detection of B. typhosus. Another microscopic and pretty exhibit was that of Prof. E. A. Minchin and Mr. Woodland, illustrating the development of calcareous spicules in various invertebrate animals. Dr. Holland, of the Pittsburg Museum, had an exhibit relating to the Jurassic dinosaur Diplodocus, which needs here only this brief mention, in view of the ample descriptions of this fossil reptile that have appeared. Interesting comparative measurements of the hands of two giants—referring to Machnow, the living Russian, and to the skeletal hand of O'Brien—whose complete skeleton, obtained by Hunter, is in the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons—were supplied in the X-ray photographs shown by Mr. S. G. Shattock. The Daniels Ethnographical Expedition, through Mr. Seligmann, one of its members, exhibited objects of anthropological interest; and the Marine Biological Association contributed a number of living animals illustrating the Plymouth marine fauna.

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—May 10.—Mr. R. S. Herries, V.P., in the Chair.—Mr. N. Samwell was elected a Fellow.—The Chairman announced that the Council had resolved to award the proceeds of the Daniel Pidgeon Fund for 1905 to Mr. T. Vipond Barker, who proposes to investigate the deposition of crystals of minerals and other substances in regular position on each other, with special reference to such groups as those of calcite, barytes, aragonite, &c.—The following communications were read:—'The Geology of Dunedin, New Zealand,' by Mr. Patrick Marshall, and 'The Carboniferous Limestone of the Weston-super-Mare District,' by Mr. T. Franklin Sibly.

BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.—May 17.—Dr. W. de Gray Birch in the chair.—Mr. Selley exhibited, through the Rev. Dr. Astley, some fine specimens of Palæolithic flint implements, consisting of arrowheads (some barbed, others leaf-shaped), scrapers, some fragments of rough black pottery, and a worked piece of lead, probably Roman, all of which he had recently found at Failand and Shirehampton. Failand is six miles from Bristol and two miles from Cadbury camp.—Mr. Emanuel Green exhibited a coach glass, so called, a rare and curious example of a wineglass formerly used by travellers, or when on the grand tour with the usual English travelling coach or chariot. It has no foot or base, so that it cannot stand upright, but the stem terminates in a ball, in this case beautifully cut. The use would seem to have been to pack in a provision basket, and for such purpose it is well suited, being unusually strong and heavy. Some instances of preparations for a start were given, in which every conceivable necessary seemed to have been carried; especially was a basket filled with provisions and some of the best wine sufficient for three days. The date of origin of these glasses would probably be the time of the Regency, as after an official announcement of July 12th, 1815, that intercourse with the Continent was re-established, travelling began briskly, from trips to the field of Waterloo to the longer tour to Italy.—A paper on 'The Church and Parish of Chesham, Bucks, otherwise Chesham Leicester and Woburn,' was read by the Rev. C. H. Evelyn-White, who said the Chess valley, surrounded by thickly wooded hills and plantations, was full of interest. Chesham largely partakes of the diversified character of the Chiltern district, and in very early times was the home of a branch of the great Celtic family. Just enough is known of Roman occupation to establish it. Referring to the place-names, Mr. Evelyn-White was disinclined to accept a suggested derivation from the non-navigable stream the Chess, preferring to take its etymon from cestor, as indicating a Romano-British stronghold, and gave instances of like use. Chesham at the Domesday period, its several manors and lords, its tenures, the chief families, and the hamlets (particularly Isel-hampstead or Latimers), were severally dealt with. The early village life, as reflected in the open-field system, and seen in the hillside "balks" or "terrairs," was traced. The church of St. Mary, restored under Sir Gilbert Scott (a fine cruciform building, mainly of thirteenth and fifteenth century date), was fully described, and the numerous interesting features (including a stoup in the porch having a crucifix above, low-side windows, wall paintings, &c.) commented upon. The tombs and mural monuments are particularly noteworthy, while the remains of Norman work are important. The abbey of Leicester and Woburn held the medieties of the church, the vicars officiating probably at their respective altars, and at a later time by turns. There may in early days have been two churches, but this is purely a matter of conjecture. Mr. Evelyn-White also remarked on the mediæval church life of Chesham, the days of religious persecution and civil war, witchcraft, epidemics, holy wells, mills, old inns, trades, names, odd characters, and fanatics, but lack of time obliged him to omit reference to the parish registers and the Bowles MSS. The paper was illustrated by many lantern-slides taken by Miss Keating, of Chesham.

ROYAL NUMISMATIC.—May 18.—Sir John Evans, President, in the chair.—Mr. Albert R. Frey and Dr. Sidney Nathan were elected Fellows.—The President exhibited a series of gold and silver coins of Henry IV. in connexion with the paper which followed by Mr. F. A. Walters. This exhibition consisted of two nobles and a half and a quarter noble of the heavy coinage; two nobles and three half-nobles of the light coinage, and also a groat and a penny.—Mr. T. Bliss showed a proof shilling of Charles I. with mint-mark a rose and pellets, a pattern shilling by Briot, and a pattern broad of the same reign, and also a coronation medal struck in 1628 and the work of Briot.—Mr. F. A. Walters read the remaining portion of his paper on 'The Coinage of Henry IV.,' dealing with the light coinage. Attention was drawn to the comparatively large coinage of 1412, which, according to the Mint accounts, exceeded in amount the whole of the coinages of Richard II. and the earlier issues of Henry IV. combined. It was suggested that this fact establishes strong grounds for assuming that a considerable number of coins, hitherto assigned to early issues of Henry V., really formed part of the last coinage of Henry IV., and that the great variety of types was due to the number of special die-engravers who are recorded to have been engaged on the work of the new coinage, and who, as it proceeded, introduced a type of the king's bust which has hitherto been considered to represent that of Henry V. Evidence was also adduced from Wylie's 'History of England under Henry IV.' and other sources to prove the correctness of the old chronicles as to the date of issue of the light coinage.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—May 3.—Mr. F. Merrifield, President, in the chair.—Mr. J. Butterworth was elected a Fellow.—Mr. M. Jacoby exhibited a series of Xenarthra cericornis, Baly, from Ceylon, and drew attention to the curious complicated structure of the antennæ of the male.—Mr. G. T. Porritt exhibited specimens of Tephrosia consociaria ab nigra, and melanic examples of Boarmia consociaria, all secured from a wood in West Kent by Mr. E. Goodwin. These forms were exactly on the same lines as the melanism in West Yorkshire, and it is curious they should occur in such widely separate localities. The two genera, however, are evidently prone to melanism, as Mr. Porritt has now seen black or almost black specimens of all the British species except Tephrosia punctulata.—Commander J. J. Walker exhibited (1) two specimens of the very rare Staphylinid, Medon castaneus, Grav., taken in the Oxford district during the last week of April, 1905; (2) several examples of both sexes of the giant flea Hystriopsylla talpe, Curtis, from field-mouse nests in the same district; and (3) the type-specimen of the Bostrichid beetle Dinoderus ocellaris, Steph. (taken by the late Prof. Westwood at Little Chelsea previous to 1830), from the Hope Collection at Oxford; and with reference to this exhibit he contributed a note.—Prof. E. B. Penton read a note on 'Heliotropism in Parage and Pyrameis,' communicated by Dr. G. B. Longstaff.—Prof. L. C. Miall communicated a paper on 'The Structure and Life-History of Psychoda sexpunctata, Curtis,' by Mr. J. A. Dell.—Dr. D. H. Hutchinson gave an address on 'The Three-Colour Process as applied to Insect Photography,' illustrated by lantern-slides of British and Indian Rhopalocera, the exhibits being a marked advance in excellence on anything yet shown at the Society's meetings.—The President heartily congratulated Dr. Hutchinson upon the results of his work.

HISTORICAL.—May 18.—The Rev. W. Hunt, President, in the chair.—The Bishop of Bristol, the Lady Amherst of Hackney, and Mr. C. E. H. Chadwyck-Healey were elected Fellows. The Library of the House of the Resurrection, Mirfield, was admitted as a subscribing library.—A paper was read by the Rev. J. Neville Figgis on 'Bartolus and the Development of European Political Ideas.'—The Right Rev. F. A. Gasquet and the President spoke upon the subject of the paper.—The Council have awarded the Alexander Medal to Mr. W. A. Parker Mason for an essay on 'The Beginnings of the Cistercian Order.'

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- MON. Surveyors' Institution, 3.—Annual Meeting.
TUES. Royal Institution, 5.—'Velazquez: II. The Court Portrait Painter,' Rev. H. G. Woods.
THURS. Royal Institution, 5.—'Electro-Magnetic Waves,' Lecture II., Prof. J. A. Fleming. (Tyndall Lectures.)
— Chemical 8.—'The Constituents of the Seeds of Hydnocarpus wightiana and of Hydnocarpus anthelmintica: Isolation of a Homologue of Chaulmoogric Acid,' and 'The Constituents of the Seeds of Gynocardia odorata,' Messrs. F. B. Power and M. Barrowcliff; 'The Isolation of Ammonium to the Alkali Metals,' Mr. A. E. H. Tutton; 'Camphorylazoinide,' Messrs. M. O. Forster and H. E. Pierz; 'Influence of Substitution on the Formation of Diazamines and Aminoazo Compounds,' Part III., Messrs. G. T. Morgan and W. O. Wootton; 'Diazoderivatives of Mono-acetylated Aromatic Para-diamines,' Mr. G. T. Morgan and Miss F. M. G. Micklethwait; and eight other Papers.
— Linnean, 8.
FRI. Philological, 8.—'Notes on Old English Words,' Prof. A. S. Napier.
— Royal Institution, 9.—'Personal Recollections of Johannes Brahms,' Mr. G. Henschel.
SAT. Royal Institution, 3.—'Exploration in the Philippines,' Lecture I., Mr. A. H. Savage Lander.

Science Gossip.

AN Optical Convention, under the presidency of Dr. R. T. Glazebrook, is to be held from next Tuesday till the end of the week. A large number of papers are announced, dealing with the spectroscope, ophthalmometer, and other instruments, including two called the "interferometer" and "extensometer," which do not figure, we think, in any dictionary.

THE Naturwissenschaftliche Verein at Karlsruhe has, thanks to a considerable legacy, been placed in a position to establish two new stations for seismic observations, the one in an underground passage at Turmberg, near Durlach, the other in Freiburg.

THE sixth volume of the 'Scientific Results of the Norwegian North Polar Expedition of 1893-6' has been recently published (Longmans) by the Fridtjof Nansen Fund for the Advancement of Science, and contains an elaborate account of the important meteorological observations which were obtained in the course of the expedition. Dr. Nansen states in the preface that the volume is entirely the work of Prof. H. Mohn, who, at his request, took charge of the meteorological equipment of the expedition from the beginning. That department was carried out under the superintendence of Capt. Scott-Hansen, in accordance with the scheme of Prof. Mohn, who, after the return of the expedition, worked up the voluminous and important meteorological material collected during the three years it lasted, and the results are here laid before the scientific world. Their special interest lies in the little-known Arctic regions to which they relate, and their value is greatly enhanced by the careful manner in which they have been classified and investigated. It is just five years since the first volume of these 'Scientific Results' was published; the fifth, we may remark, containing three important special memoirs, is not quite finished, but will shortly appear. Dr. Nansen made a thorough examination of the geology and physical geography of Franz Josef's Land, which he found less extensive than had been supposed; it is almost entirely covered by ice interspersed with masses of basalt rock and resting on a seam of clay. The Arctic Ocean may be considered as a kind of lagoon, separated from the Atlantic by a submarine range of mountains, stretching from Spitzbergen to Greenland, a condition of things which has produced curious results. It is very satisfactory that these volumes are appearing in the English language.

WE note the appearance of the Fifteenth Report of the Astronomer Royal for Scotland ( $\frac{1}{2}$ d.), and of Correspondence relating to the Training of Forestry Students (8d.).

THE annual visitation of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, will be held on Saturday next, June 3rd.

THE sun will attain his greatest northern declination on the morning of the 22nd prox. The moon will be new on the morning of the 3rd, and full on that of the 17th. The planet Mercury will be visible in the early morning during the first week of next month, and in conjunction with Jupiter on the 2nd, situated in the constellation Taurus, to the south-west of the Pleiades; he will be at superior conjunction with the sun on the 24th. Venus will attain her greatest brilliancy as a morning star next week; she is now in the constellation Aries, but enters Taurus towards the end of next month. Mars (the only large planet visible in the evening) is near the boundary of Virgo and Libra; he will be in conjunction with the moon on the 13th prox. Jupiter is in Taurus, and will be near the moon on the morning of the 29th prox. Saturn is stationary about the middle of next month in the constellation Aquarius, and will be near the moon on the morning of the 22nd.

PROF. PERRINE gives the results of further photographic observations obtained with the Crossley reflector of the sixth and seventh satellites of Jupiter. The latter is much fainter than the former, and, so far as can be estimated by their amounts of light, the diameter of the sixth is less than a hundred, and that of the seventh less than forty miles. The orbits of both are inclined at large angles (probably not less than 30°) to the plane of the ecliptic, which suggests that they did not always belong to Jupiter's system, but may be captures. The mean distance of the sixth from the planet is about seven, and of the seventh about six millions of miles; their periods about two hundred and fifty and two hundred days respectively.

A NEW variable star has been detected in the constellation Ophiuchus by Dr. Anderson at Northrig, near Haddington. On March 28th of this year its magnitude was 9.8, but on the 4th inst. this was found to have diminished to 11.0. The editor of the Astronomische Nachrichten remarks that no trace of the star is to be found on a photographic chart taken at Toulouse on the 30th of June, 1900, which includes the region and registers stars down to the twelfth magnitude. Dr. Anderson's new object will be reckoned as var. 60, 1905, Ophiuchi.

FOUR new small planets have been registered at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg: two by Prof. Max Wolf on the 7th inst., and two, by Dr. Götz and Prof. Wolf respectively, on the 9.h.

MADAME CERASKI, whilst examining photographic plates taken by M. Blajko at the Moscow Observatory, has detected two new variables, which will be reckoned as var. 61, 1905, Persei, and var. 62, 1905, Aurigæ, respectively. The former seems to change from 9.5 to 11.0 magnitude, the latter from 10.0 to below the twelfth.

WE have received the fourth number of vol. xxxiv. of the Memorie della Società degli Spettroscopisti Italiani, which contains a paper by Dr. Viaro giving the places of one hundred and fifteen stars included in the Catania photographic zone; a series of spectroscopic images of the sun's limb as observed at Catania, Rome, Zürich, Kalocsa, and Odessa, during the months of March, April, and May, 1902; and some other tables and articles.

FINE ARTS

THE GRAFTON GALLERY.

IN view of the great reputation the late Mr. Staats Forbes enjoyed as a collector, the exhibition of his pictures at the Grafton Gallery is something of a disappointment. It is true that we have here only a selection, containing for the most part the works of the Early English School and of modern French and Dutch art, but it was precisely for the work of French Romanticists that Mr. Forbes's collection was celebrated. There are, of course, many fine examples, but the general level of the work is not high.

In the First Room are a number of Millet's drawings, of which The Plantation (No. 12), a study for the Winter, The Gleaners (13), The Woodcutters (17), and Women Haymaking (20) are all fine inventions and beautiful drawings. On the other hand, it is difficult to imagine how so distinguished and sensitive a man as Millet ever came to do anything so common alike in tone and colour as the pastel of The Angelus. Mauve's drawings, when seen together in a considerable number, as they are here, impress one with a sense of the extreme limitation of his vision. He repeats again and again, with slight variations, the same theme with the same facile and obvious colour harmony. Bosboom appears here to have more force and character.

In the Large Gallery are hung the numerous Corots, which are for the most part not particularly striking, being rather poor examples of the artist's stock-composition. There are, however, one or two early ones, The Pond of the Ville d'Array (161) and Corot's House at Ville d'Array (171), which are quite exquisite in colour. They have, too, a particular note of naïveté, which one wishes Corot had been able to keep throughout his development. The rendering of an effect of early morning mist on a hot summer's day is in these intimately and deeply felt; and the work has everywhere an intensity of purpose which one looks for in vain in such pictures as Arcadia. Another interesting Corot is The Mountain Milkmaid (169)—the title scarcely sounds original—in which the design is massed in an unusual and imposing manner.

But perhaps the most striking picture in this gallery is Rousseau's Valley of Bas Meudon (116). By choosing a particular momentary effect when the whole valley and hillside was deeply shadowed, and only the lower part of the sky and the river shone out with a pale, intense blue, Rousseau has made a literal record of nature into a splendid design. Near this hang two Courbets: one, The Silent Pool (112), impressive, in spite of the almost discordant notes of hard, cold blue and uncompromising greens; the other, In the Doubs (120), a poor example. In the same gallery are Millet's

L'Amour Vainqueur (142), a beautiful example of his early style, and an endless series of works by Diaz, which make one wonder how that artist ever came to have so big a reputation.

The Middle Gallery is devoted to examples of Mauve, Maris, Israëls, and Weissenbruch, and produces the peculiar sense of ennui which the capable mediocrity of these artists always inspires.

The Long Gallery at the end is more entertaining. First we come upon a most beautiful little drawing, The Forest Glade, by Rousseau (265), a work which almost reminds one in its free and positive touch of the drawings of Alexander Cousins; then a pretty Boudin (277), and a heavy, but powerful Courbet, The Wash-houses (284); and finally we reach the paintings of the Early English School. These are calculated to surprise and instruct by their extraordinary diversity, for we have here, jumbled together and hung with amazing indiscretion, some very beautiful and genuine pieces and a number of imitations of all degrees of badness. Crome fares the worst. In the first place, the compilers of the Catalogue appear to think Crome—or, as they spell him, Chrome—is the name of a process, presumably connected with chromo-lithography, for they print the words "Old Chrome" after the title, and leave a blank where the artist's name should come. The so-called Norgate Crome (238) is a beautiful composition, and the tree-drawing has the master's authentic touch. Next to this hangs a remarkably good Stark (289), which shows how good an artist he was before he emancipated himself from Crome's influence. Another good Crome is The Village (297), unfortunately skied. The Village Scene near Norwich (294) was a favourite composition of Crome's atelier, and numerous examples of it exist. This one, while clearly executed in Crome's studio, and having here and there evidences of the master's hand, is mainly the work of J. B. Crome.

The New Mills, Norwich (329), is a charming composition, and fine in chiaroscuro, but here, though the invention is probably Crome's, the execution is very inferior. A Landscape at Heigham (334) is genuine, but the Windmill (335) is not even a contemporary work, while The Path through the Wood (302) is by Crome's pupil Stark.

An Autumn Evening (301) is a fine composition, rather indifferently painted. The attribution to Bonington is impossible, and, in spite of its obvious defects, the composition and lighting are so entirely in Turner's early middle manner that it is probably by him, though by no means a good example.

Of the Constables very few make even a decent pretence to authenticity. The Loch [sic] between Beccles and Bungay (313), which is recognizably Dedham Mill, is the most ambitious, but has only the most superficial resemblance to the master's manner. Nor are A Cloudy Day (312) and Highgate Church (315) better than clumsy imitations by some unknown later artist. The Dedham Vale (311), however, is a genuine and pleasing sketch. Even one of the Creswicks and the Richard Wilson belong to the category of imitations, so that the general impression of this part of the exhibition hardly increases one's idea of the collector's discrimination.

A charming late Cotman, Cottage at St. Albans (331), however, does something to raise the standard. The same can scarcely be said of the two examples of Millais, Portia (287) and The Orphans (339), which are lamentable proofs of the destructive effects of popularity. Another Rousseau (349) of a more ordinary kind than the 'Bas Meudon,' and a delightful Corot figure-piece (361), deserve notice.

It will be seen that the collection is full of interest, and, though it would be impossible to call it select, it bears witness to a genuine, though rather indiscriminate admiration for what is notable in the art of the nineteenth century.

M. LALIQUE'S JEWELLERY.

MESSRS. AGNEW'S GALLERY is not often devoted to any other form of art than painting, but at present an exception is made in favour of M. Lalique's jewellery. The whole room has been decorated in accordance with the artist's ideas, and, whatever one may think of his aims, there is no denying the completeness and unity of purpose of the whole scheme. We confess to some hesitation in expressing frankly the impression produced on us by M. Lalique's work, because in looking back on the history of modern art we find that whenever work has been condemned for its tendencies with the admission of its technical excellence, the verdict of a succeeding generation has always been in favour of the artist. It is, in short, dangerous to condemn on some high moral or abstract æsthetic grounds work of which the technical excellence is indisputable. And yet, if we are to be sincere, that is what we are inclined to do to M. Lalique's jewellery. To us its prettiness is exasperating—its extraordinary effectiveness, its too obvious and assertive charm, cloying. There is no denying the wealth of invention M. Lalique displays. There seems to be no natural form which he cannot press into his service. But when we reflect that he has so entirely loosened the bands of constructive and decorative design, our admiration for this is lessened. One great element in our enjoyment of applied design consists in our recognition of the ingenuity and taste with which an artist realizes at once a symbol of natural form and a geometrical unity. Such a harmony we rightly consider to be a genuine discovery and invention; but, as we say, M. Lalique makes the problem too easy. His geometry is so relaxed, his formula so vague, that scarcely any adjustment is necessary; the most diverse natural forms fit into his scheme without material change. We get, in short, an imitation of natural form, not a symbol suggesting it in other terms, translating it for us into a new language, and giving us, somewhat as a literary simile does, a new appreciation of the natural form itself. Nor is his rendering of natural forms really impressive; it lacks intimacy and intensity of feeling. Paradoxically enough, the very fact of having to find a symbol instead of a mere representation compels the artist to a closer investigation, compels him to search out something in the natural form that will lend itself to his severer rule, so that in a more restricted design we may actually come into closer touch with nature than in such a loose form as M. Lalique affects. And if the line is nowhere arrested, nowhere determined by architectural necessity, the colour schemes are equally vague and indeterminate. The pale mauves and greens of his stained horn allow of many combinations. Where therefore, as here, a discord is out of the question, no very intense or moving harmony can occur, the colour never rises to beauty, it remains obdurately and annoyingly pretty. Now and then we find M. Lalique accepting the older conventions of design, and then his astonishing skill gives one a sense of his real power. Such a piece is the little brooch of engraved crystal with four diamonds in Vitrine II., while in the pendant of honesty seeds in Vitrine No. IV. we willingly admit that he has hit on a real discovery of a form at once naturalistic and eminently decorative. But, for the most part, we hope that, in spite of M. Lalique's skill and efficiency, the attempt at such design will not be widely imitated, since it is, we think, an attempt to evade certain fundamental principles within which the decorative arts must be content to remain, though they leave room for infinite variations.

THE LOUIS HUTH PICTURES.

THE sale on Saturday at Messrs. Christie's of the late Mr. Louis Huth's collection was, so far, the most interesting one of the season. The general quality of the pictures was excellent, for Mr. Huth had a remarkable instinct for what was good in nearly every branch of the fine-arts. Endowed, also, with ample wealth, he could afford to confine himself to the purchase of the best things, and it is quite likely that his sale realized more than 50 per cent. profit. The 145 lots showed a total of 50,452l. 10s. For once in a way it was not Romney (who was not represented at all) who provided the sensation of the day, but Gainsborough, and, still more curiously, with a portrait not of a lady, but of a man, the elder of the Vestrises (father and son) whose dancing at the Opera caused so much sensation in the eighties of the eighteenth century; he called himself "Le Dieu de la Danse," and a malicious rumour was circulated in the newspapers of the time that Dr. Johnson was taking lessons of him in dancing! This portrait shows him in a pale blue coat with white vest and stock and powdered hair, and is referred to by Fulcher ('Life of T. Gainsborough,' 1856, p. 226), who quotes Mr. Christie, the artist's friend, as describing it as "one of the most elegant and life-like paintings" he ever saw. The portrait was then the property of Sir Robert Peel, who, or whose successor, may have disposed of it privately, directly or indirectly, to Mr. Huth, who lent it to the Grosvenor Gallery in 1885. The choice condition and quality of the picture and the charm of the subject render it one of the most attractive male portraits by Gainsborough which have ever come into the market; it realized 4,550 gs. The other two portraits (both also at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1885) represented elderly ladies. One, in white muslin dress trimmed with gold, with red cloak and pearl necklace and ornaments, with hair dressed high and powdered, fetched 2,900 gs.; the other, Mrs. Burroughs, dated 1769, in black cape, tied with black-and-white striped ribbons over a white dress, and black lace cap, 900 gs. The drawings included an unrecorded black-and-white chalk portrait by Gainsborough for the famous "stolen" Duchess of Devonshire, now in Mr. J. P. Morgan's collection; she is walking in a landscape with her daughter by her side. This, for which Mr. Huth is said to have given 15s., now realized 1,000 gs. It is one of four similar drawings: one is in the British Museum, a second is in Mr. G. Salting's collection (both reproduced in Armstrong's 'Gainsborough'), the third was in Mr. C. F. Huth's collection, sold last year. Gainsborough's portrait of a gentleman in claret-coloured coat and yellow vest fetched 300 gs. The Bullock-waggon, signed and dated 1787, brought 500 gs. at the Gillott sale of 1872, and now sold for 440 gs.; and a woody landscape realized 300 gs., as against 210 gs. paid for it at Col. H. Baillie's sale in 1858.

Mr. Huth's series of Morlands were of unusual interest, and indicate the great rise in the commercial value of this artist's works within the last half a century. The principal example was Morning, or Higglers preparing for Market, painted in 1791, and engraved by D. Orme, which brought 2,000 gs. This was originally in the fine collection of Morlands which was formed by a Mr. John Wigtown, of Trent Park, near Southgate, Middlesex, and dispersed in two sales in 1810-11; this picture then sold for 49 gs.; in 1861 it was bought by Mr. Huth for 55 gs., so that the investment has proved a very handsome one. The Country Stable was also painted in 1791, and was engraved by W. Ward in the year following; it agrees with a picture described in the catalogue of the above-mentioned sale, where it went for 31 gs.; it now sold for 1,000 gs. The other Morlands were: a wood scene with a path in the foreground, with peasants, children, and a woman hanging out clothes, 800 gs.; a woody landscape, with two cows and a boy near a pool, two peasants, and a woman hanging out clothes before a cottage, 580 gs.; a winter landscape with four figures, three donkeys and a dog standing near, 250 gs.; a winter scene with two boys snowballing an old woman, 480 gs. (at the Robert Benson sale in 1875 this brought 100 gs.). A pair on panel, The Lucky Sportsman, and The Unlucky Sportsman, the latter dated 1791, sold for 420 gs. and 400 gs. respectively (the two were acquired by Mr. Huth in 1840 for 115 gs.).

The most important of the Hogarths was Taste in High Life, painted in 1742 for Miss Edwardes, of Kensington, who desired "to revenge herself upon the unfriendly critics of her own emphatically original costume." For it the artist received 60 gs. The fantastic old beau is Lord Portmore (the title became extinct in 1835). The picture has been frequently engraved and reproduced in various ways; it now realized 1,250 gs., and may be identical with one of the same title which was sold at Christie's in 1889 for 215 gs. The Beggar's Opera, painted in 1729, is one of several versions, and it is not, as stated in the catalogue, the one engraved by William Blake in 1788, inasmuch as that engraving distinctly states it to have been done "from the original in the collection of his Grace the Duke of Leeds," and this picture, which is considerably larger, still belongs to the Duke of Leeds, according to Mr. Austin Dobson. Mr. John Murray has another example, also larger than Mr. Huth's, which now realized 1,000 gs. The picture with portraits of Dudley Woodbridge and Capt. Holland seated in a library, a servant bringing in a letter, 1730, passed from Lord Gwydyr's collection to that of the Hon. Edmund Phipps, at whose sale in 1859 it brought 235l.; it now sold for 450 gs.

The examples of Reynolds were not remarkable; the best was a study for, or a version of, The Age of Innocence, the head of a little girl in white dress, not Lady Amelia Spencer, or "a study for the large family picture at Blenheim," as stated in the catalogue, as Lady Amelia was not born when that picture was painted; it realized 880 gs. The original of the portrait of David Garrick in the character of Kitey is at Windsor; Mr. Huth's version sold for 150 gs. A portrait of the artist by himself, in grey coat, white vest and stock, fetched 330 gs. These three pictures were lent to the Grosvenor Gallery in 1883, and are admirably described by Mr. Stephens in his catalogue of that exhibition. Lawrence was represented by two portraits: one of Louisa Georgina Augusta Anne, only daughter of the Right Hon. General Sir George Murray, in white dress with pink sash and black bonnet, standing in a landscape, holding some flowers in the fold of her dress, 850 gs.; the other of Miss Maria Siddons, in white dress with buff scarf, 170 gs. The Early English School also included: J. C. Ibbetson, Skating on the Serpentine, on panel, 1781, 100 gs. T. Stothard, A Fête Champêtre, 130 gs. G. Stubbs, Gamekeepers, and Labourers, 1767, both engraved by H. Birche, 720 gs. and 520 gs. (at the W. K. Gratwicke sale, in 1868, these respectively realized 370 gs. and 230 gs.). The few old masters were not important, but two may be mentioned: M. Geerarts, Lady Arabella Stuart, in red-and-white brocade dress, 220 gs.; and M. Hondecoeter, Cocks Fighting, 380 gs.

Crome overshadowed the other modern English artists in the Huth collection, and his superb landscape which was at the Old Masters in 1871 brought the record price of 3,000 gs., which ten years ago would have been regarded as a high figure for a fine Hobbema. There were two other Cromes: A View of Norwich, 320 gs.; and A View on the River Yare, near Norwich, 200 gs. There were two Constables: Salisbury Cathedral, a sketch for the finished picture in the South Kensington Museum, 1,700 gs.; and Dedham Watermill, Suffolk, 500 gs. Other pictures included D. Cox, A Windy Day, 1850, 550 gs.; Driving the Flock, 1857, 180 gs.; Unloading Fish, 160 gs. (this realized 275 gs. at the Gillott sale in 1872). J. Holland, View of the Doge's Palace, Venice, with the Dogana on the right, on panel, 1882, 560 gs.; The Rialto, Venice, midday effect, 1854, 165 gs. J. C. Hook, Diamond Merchants, Cornwall (exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1881), 860 gs. J. F. Lewis, The Commentator of the Koran, 1869, painted for Sir William Bowman (at whose sale in 1893 it realized 2,550 gs.), 1,650 gs. J. Linnell, A Shepherd tending his Flock, 1860, 550 gs. H. Moore, The Clearness after Rain (Royal Academy, 1887), 410 gs. J. Ward, The Village Green, the Red Lion, Paddington, as it was in 1790, 160 gs.; Horse, Donkey, and Pigs near a Shed, 1809, 270 gs. G. F. Watts, Daphne, 1872 (lent to the Watts exhibition, Burlington House, 1905), 1,650 gs.; Galatea, 200 gs.; Sir Galahad in Armour, 600 gs.; Una and the Red Cross Knight, 660 gs. H. Woods, Venetian Cloisters, 1884, 155 gs.

The few pictures by artists of the modern continental schools included three important examples of Corot: a river scene with a cottage standing behind a row of trees on the left, a man in a punt, 2,650 gs.; a river scene with a man in a boat, a clump of trees on the further bank, 2,000 gs.; and a road scene with a castle seen through trees, on panel, 300 gs. H. Fantin-Latour, Gorse and Hawthorn on a Glass, 1882, 150 gs.; Roses in a Glass, 1886, 300 gs.; A Wood Nymph, 170 gs. M. Cazin, Village with Windmill, Evening, 160 gs. The water-colour drawings included an example by Turner, The Bass Rock, Moonlight, 380 gs.

Fine-Art Gossip.

YESTERDAY was the private view at Messrs. Colnaghi's of a collection of pictures of the Early English and other schools.

TO-DAY there is a private view at the Modern Gallery of Mr. T. Simpson's impressions and sketches of the Cinque Ports and neighbourhood. The series of about ninety water-colours includes drawings of Hastings, Sandwich, Dover, Romney, Hythe, Rye, and Winchelsea. The exhibition will be open to the public from Monday next to Saturday, June 17th.

TO-DAY, also, Messrs. T. Richardson & Co. invite us to the private view of water-colour drawings by Mr. Harold Swanwick and Mr. Frank H. Mason at 43, Piccadilly.

PICTURES and drawings of the Modern Dutch School are now on view at the Lefèvre Gallery in King Street, St. James's.

OIL paintings by Mr. W. L. Bruckman are on view at Mr. Paterson's Gallery at 5, Old Bond Street.

MISS SOPHIA BEALE is now showing at the Ryder Gallery, 47, Albemarle Street, some sketches of Biskra, Algiers, and Tunis.

NEXT Monday Messrs. Cassell are holding at the Cutlers' Hall, E.C., a private view of their Black-and-White Exhibition. Mr. Alfred East will speak on 'Illustrations in relation to Modern Life.'

MESSRS. FROST & REED have on view at Bristol an exhibition of water-colour drawings by Mr. J. MacWhirter, R.A., also a large oil painting he has produced this year.

LIEUT.-COL. CROFT LYONS writes:—

"In your issue of the 20th, under the heading of 'English Embroidery at the Burlington Fine-Arts Club,' you make the mistake of attributing the authorship of the introduction to the catalogue to myself, instead of to the well-known authority on the subject, Mr. A. F. Kendrick, whose name appears at the foot of the introduction, and who is also the author of the interesting book 'English Embroidery,' recently published by Messrs. Newnes."

To the June number of The Burlington Magazine Mr. Roger Fry contributes a short article on 'Tempera Painting,' the conclusion of which is that "nothing would be likely to have a more restraining and sobering influence on our art than the substitution of tempera for oils as the ordinary medium of artistic expression." Constantin Meunier is the subject of two articles, one by Prof. R. Petrucci, of Brussels, who gives his reminiscences as an intimate friend of the artist, and the other by Mr. Charles Ricketts on Meunier's aim and place in the art of the nineteenth century. Mr. Herbert Horne concludes his account of the life and works of Andrea dal Castagno, which contains a large amount of new information. Sir Edward Maunde Thompson writes on a French MS. of the fifteenth century in the Rothschild Collection at the British Museum, and publishes six of the miniatures; the book is Laurent de Premierfait's French translation of Boccaccio's 'De Casibus.' Mr. Claude Phillips publishes a miniature portrait of Madame de Pompadour, in the Wallace Collection, which he attributes to Boucher; the shutters of a triptych by Gerard David in the Kann Collection at Paris are reproduced with a note by Mr. James Weale; and Mr. Lionel Cust contributes a note on the rearrangement of the Verona Picture Gallery. Among the other short contributions are a note on Ver Meer's picture 'The Soldier and the Laughing Girl' (which forms the frontispiece of the number), a note by Sir J. C. Robinson on a painting by the Maître de Flemalle, and an interesting account of German art institutions in Italy. Mr. C. H. Wylde describes the early French 'Pâte Tendre' in Mr. FitzHenry's collection, and Mr. R. S. Clouston contributes another of his articles on 'Minor English Furniture Makers,' dealing in this case with Shearer. The subject of the editorial article is the 'Extinction of the Middle-Class Collector,' for which the writer holds that artists themselves are chiefly to blame.

The Antiquary for June will contain, among others, the following articles: 'The Other End of Watling Street,' concluded, by Mr. Francis Abell; 'The Chandos Portrait of Shakespeare,' illustrated, by Capt. J. R. P. Purchas; 'Revolutionary Ephemeral at Tiverton,' by Mr. F. J.

Snell; 'The Society of Apothecaries,' illustrated; and 'The London Signs and their Associations,' by Mr. J. H. MacMichael, continued.

THE most important sale in Paris of the last few days was that of the collection of objects of art of M. Boy, which M. Paul Chevallier dispersed at the Galerie Georges Petit. One day resulted in a total of 513,600fr., and another day 259,522fr. Some very high prices were paid for Limoges enamel: a triptych by N. Penicaud, sixteenth century, sold for 64,000fr.; a plaque by Jean Penicaud, with the subject 'Le Lavement des Pieds,' brought 20,000fr.; a plaque by Monvacin, late fifteenth century, 27,600fr.; and one of Léonard Limosin, sixteenth century, 25,500fr. The most important in the series of carved ivories was a French fourteenth-century group of the Virgin and Child, which found a purchaser at 62,500fr. A fifteenth-century Venetian glass aiguière, enamelled blue, brought 53,200fr.

THE French Minister of Public Instruction has allocated a sum of 30,000fr., which will be awarded in sums varying from 500fr. to 1,000fr. to young artists (the age limit is thirty-two) whose means are restricted, and whose work at either of the two Salons appears to be worthy of encouragement. This scheme will be excellent if it is carried out with tact and sympathy. The poverty which exists among many of the artists of the Latin Quarter is incredible except to those who have either experienced or witnessed it. The money, it may be added, is confined to young men of French nationality.

THE successor of Eugène Guillaume at the Académie des Beaux-Arts is M. Allar, a sculptor. He is a native of Toulouse, where he was born in 1845. He obtained a medal at the Salon of 1879 for a fine marble group, 'Adieux d'Alceste.' A number of his statues are at the new Sorbonne and at the Hôtel de Ville, Paris.

THE death in Paris is announced of Count André Mnischev at the age of eighty-four. The count belonged to the Polish aristocracy, and was both an ardent collector and a painter of no mean ability. His house in the Rue Boissière is full of pictures and objects of art.—M. A. A. Balouzet, the landscape painter, is also dead. He obtained medals at the Salons of 1893 and 1897. Two of his pictures are in the Salon of this year.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

COVENT GARDEN.—Tristan, Tannhäuser, La Bohème, Carmen.

'TRISTAN' was performed yesterday week at Covent Garden. The orchestral playing under Dr. Richter was magnificent; it was, indeed, the chief feature of the evening. Frau Wittich impersonated Isolde, but although her conception of the part was correct, the maiden's haughty, impassioned moods lacked strength; her voice, however, was not in the best order, and this naturally hampered her. Herr Burrian displayed artistic qualities, yet in his acting he proved a tame Tristan. Madame Kirkby Lunn was the Brangäne, and Herr van Rooy the Kurwenal.

There are very few composers whose early works will bear a hearing after their later ones. The earlier operas of Gluck, Gounod, Verdi, for instance, are known only by name. Yet after Wagner's 'Ring,' or his wonderful 'Tristan,' 'Tannhäuser,' which was given last Tuesday, is interesting. Other composers for the stage began in a conventional style; they wrote to earn money rather than to make a name. Only gradually did they display their individuality to the full. Wagner with his 'Rienzi' no doubt hoped to share the favour of the Parisian public with Meyerbeer, but already in 'The Flying Dutchman' he opened "new paths," which he followed to the last. 'Tannhäuser' is interesting in a double sense: it shows what a formidable rival Wagner would have been to contemporary composers had he not broken with the past; and, again, the music added to the first act of the opera during the 'Tristan' period illustrates the development of Wagner's genius. There is no uncomfortable clashing of styles—the added music is of the same kind as the original Venusberg music, only riper, stronger. The performance of the opera was impressive, although Frau Wittich's Elisabeth disappointed us. It was good, yet not convincing; the faults were negative. Herr Burrian sang well in the first act, and in the second he was quite at his best both as vocalist and actor. The concerted singing at the close of that act was most impressive. Frau Reinl as Venus deserves praise; but she displayed the tender rather than the proud nature of the goddess. Herr van Rooy was the Wolfram.

Monday evening was devoted to 'La Bohème,' and with Madame Melba and Signor Caruso both in splendid voice, and with an otherwise strong cast, success was a foregone conclusion. Great singing has always proved an attraction, and always will be.

'Carmen' was given on Wednesday evening. Fräulein Destinn is an accomplished artist, and last season in certain rôles created a strong impression. Her Carmen, however, was unsatisfactory. It was a well-studied impersonation, but there was no real life in it. M. Dalmores as Don José was excellent. Mr. Whitehill's rendering of the Toreador song was colourless; he sang, indeed, as if he were not in sympathy with the music. 'La Bohème' was given under the direction of Signor Mancinelli; 'Carmen' under that of M. Messenger.

Some Old French and English Ballads, edited by Robert Steele, have appeared in a charming little book printed at the Eragny Press. The issue is strictly limited to 200 copies, and those who possess a copy should think themselves fortunate. The ballads, of which both text and music are presented in the old-fashioned style of the sixteenth century, have secured national applause, and are beyond the reach of criticism. Their naïve charm is well expressed by the format of the present edition, which is just what it should be, and a good example of the careful, loving craftsmanship which Mr. Pissarro still keeps alive in a material age. Among the ballads are 'Le Convoi de Malbrough,' with its famous refrain; 'La Courte Paille,' 'Les Compagnons de la Marjolaine,' 'The Three Ravens,' 'Greensleeves,' and 'Barbara Allen,' on which we are sorely tempted to dilate. Mr. Steele's introduction is brief, but sufficient. An amateur of reasonable powers can make practical use of the little book at the piano while he admires the skilful rubrication of the pages which sets off the black. There has been no typography of late years more pleasing than that of this little Hammersmith establishment. It is, we believe, scarcely known to the general world, but cannot fail to appeal to the honourable minority who have taste.

Richard Wagner's Briefe nach Zeitfolge und Inhalt: ein Beitrag zur Lebensgeschichte des Meisters. Von Dr. Wilhelm Altmann. (Breitkopf & Härtel.)—Our author who compiled these letters remarks that Wagner's literary works were published years ago in a complete edition, but that his letters, of at least equal importance, still await similar treatment. In 1897 Emerich Kastner published a catalogue of letters of Wagner to his contemporaries, which showed where 1,470 were either published or preserved. Dr. Altmann now presents the essence of no fewer than 3,123 letters; also extracts, and often long ones, from the most important.

The letters begin in 1830, when Wagner, still in his teens, was trying to get Schott Sons, the firm now intimately connected with the composer's works, to accept an arrangement for pianoforte solo of the first movement of Beethoven's 'Choral' Symphony. In the following year we find him forwarding to Breitkopf & Härtel a similar arrangement of a Haydn symphony, and offering to do the same for all that master's symphonies. The letters to Schumann between the years 1836 and 1848 are remarkably interesting. In one he says: "Do not run down Meyerbeer so; I owe everything to the man, even my renown which is at hand." This was in 1840, when Meyerbeer had introduced him to M. Pillet, director of the Paris Opera, so that he thought he would achieve a speedy conquest. But, alas!—or perhaps we ought to say fortunately—the fates decreed otherwise. In 1843 he sends to Schumann an account of the enthusiastic reception given to his 'Flying Dutchman,' requesting him to insert it in his paper, and he adds:—

"Do not look on me as fishing for newspaper praise; but I am on the first rung of the ladder of fame, and since nowadays the press is of vital importance for our productions, I am bound not to neglect this support."

We could fill columns with interesting extracts from these letters. But space forbids, and the very name of Wagner will secure for it the attention which it deserves.

Dr. Altmann quotes from many letters addressed to Breitkopf & Härtel, but there are some in the British Museum of which he makes no mention. It is, indeed, strange that he should not have made inquiry in that quarter, Mr. Hughes-Hughes, the head of the Manuscript Department, being always ready to give information. Among various letters written by Wagner, there is one to Breitkopf & Härtel (January 24th, 1844), offering 'The Flying Dutchman' on most reasonable terms. The composer points out, as an advantage, the many numbers which could be sold separately, and winds up by requesting them to remember that it is a "deutsche Originaloper," these words being doubly underlined.

Shogaru Shoka: Japanese Folk-Songs. Edited by Isawa Shuji. (Same publishers.)—The melodies and text (German and also English) of this interesting collection are taken from the pamphlet by R. Lange, 'Songs from the Japanese National Schools,' in the Mitteilungen des Seminars für orientalische Sprachen zu Berlin, Year 3, Part I, 1900 (Imperial Press). The editor of the collection is the present director of the Higher Training College in Tokyo. The melodies include the 'National Hymn' and the 'New Year's Song.' All are given as simple melodies, and also arranged as characteristic pieces for the pianoforte by Georg Capellen, who in harmonizing the melodies has availed himself of the writings on Japanese music of L. Riemann and other authorities.

Musical Gossip.

MESSRS. SHUBERT'S Waldorf Theatre, Aldwych, was inaugurated on Monday evening. The bill included Ferdinando Paër's 'Maestro di Cappella.'

and 'I Pagliacci.' The first piece was originally produced at Paris, March 29th, 1821, at the Théâtre Feydeau, and in French, under the title 'Maître de Chapelle.' It was comprised in two acts, but reduced to one act. The music is bright, and the Maestro's part is certainly amusing. It was taken at the Waldorf by Signor Pini-Corsi—the right man in the right part. The piece, by the way, was last given in London, as mentioned in The Athenæum of February 20th, 1897, at the Prince of Wales's Theatre on February 16th, 1897, and in English.

MR. MARK HAMBOURG gave his only recital this season at the Queen's Hall last Saturday afternoon. His selection of an early Beethoven Sonata, Op. 26 in A flat, deserves commendation, for pianists who, like himself, are absolute masters of the key-board naturally prefer the later sonatas. But his conception of the work was decidedly anti classical. Schubert's 'Wanderer' Fantasia, however, was splendidly rendered. Only few players have the technical and physical strength necessary to cope with the serious difficulties of the music. At the end of his programme Mr. Hambourg played a group of solos by British composers, commencing with the 'Capriccio' by Frank Bridge, which recently won the prize offered by the concert-giver. There are life, character, and skill in the short composition. We may add that Mr. Hambourg intends to offer a similar prize every year.

MISS ISABELLA HEARNE gave a concert at the Steinway Hall on Wednesday afternoon, the interesting programme being devoted to Elizabethan music. She sang with becoming simplicity quaint songs by Campion, Danyel, and Rosseter, the lute accompaniments, transcribed by Miss Janet Dodge, being played on a harpsichord by Mr. N. P. Cummings, who also contributed pieces by Purcell and Handel. Miss Héiène Dolmetsch played with skill some delightful 'Divisions on a Ground' by Daniel Norcome. It is not unlikely that this composer, mentioned in Symphon's 'Division-Viol,' was the Daniel Norcome who was lay-clerk at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, at the beginning of the seventeenth century, and who contributed a madrigal to 'The Triumphes of Oriana,' 1601.

THE festival of the Allgemeiner Deutscher Verein opens at Graz on May 31st with a performance of Kienzl's opera 'Don Quixote.' On June 1st there will be an orchestral concert, the programme of which includes a symphonic poem by Paul Ertel, entitled 'Der Mensch.' On June 2nd there will be a chamber music concert, and in the evening a second orchestral concert: Otto Naumann's 'Der Tod und die Mutter,' Strauss's 'Heldenleben,' and Max Schillings's 'Dem Verklärten.' There will be no performances on the 3rd, but on the 4th a third orchestral concert, with works by Liszt, Siegmund v. Hausegger, J. Weisman, E. Boehe, Th. Streicher, and Wagner; on the 5th Strauss's 'Feuersnot' will be given, and on the 6th, the last day, a stage performance of Liszt's 'Legende von der hl. Elisabeth.'

THE second Hay number of Die Musik, published by the Schuster & Loeffler firm at Berlin and Leipzig, contains articles by Henry T. Finch ('Bedeutende amerikanische Komponisten'), Arthur Laser ('Musikleben in Amerika'), Felix Weingartner ('Eine zwanglose Plauderei'), and Dr. Martin Darkow ('Stephen C. Foster und das amerikanische Volkslied'). In Weingartner's "free-and-easy chat" there are some interesting remarks concerning Conried and the 'Parsifal' performances at New York.

Le Ménestrel of the 21st inst., in referring to the two interesting performances of 'Don Giovanni' which are to be given at the Vienna Opera—one according to the original Prague production, the other according to the Vienna version—prints the contents of an original bill announcing the first performance at Prague, and on it is the following: "Il 4 di novembre 1787 per la prima volta." The writer of the paragraph remarks that October 27th and 29th, 1787, have been named as the date of the first night, but he adds that if the bill be correct those earlier dates must be rejected. Dr. Otto Jahn, however, in his 'W. A. Mozart' (vol. ii. p. 354), gives a letter from Mozart to his friend Jacquin, dated November 4th, 1787, in which he says: "Den 29 Oct. ging meine Opera D. Giovanni in scena," and in the next sentence he states that it was given yesterday (i.e., November 3rd) for the fourth time.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |  |
|--------|--|
| SUN.   | Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.  |
| SUN.   | Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.  |
| MON.   | Herr Kreisler's Violin Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.   |
| —      | Miss Teresa del Riego's Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.  |
| —      | Miss Maggie Stirling's Vocal Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.                                     |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| TUES.  | Miss Susan Strong's Vocal Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.  |
| —      | Mr. Harold Bauer's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Eolian Hall.                                       |
| —      | Mr. Frederic Warren's Concert, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.   |
| —      | Handel Society's Concert, 8.30, Queen's Hall.  |
| —      | Miss Myrtle Meggy's Pianoforte Recital, 8.30, Eolian Hall.                                   |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| —      | Grand Opera, 8.45, Waldorf Theatre.  |
| WED.   | Grand Opera, 2.30, Waldorf Theatre.  |
| —      | Madame Blanche Marchesi's Vocal Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.                                    |
| —      | M. Edmond Hertz's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.                                     |
| —      | Miss Edith Clegg and Mr. Dezső Kordy's Vocal and 'Cello Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.       |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| THURS. | Grand Opera, 2.30 and 8.45, Waldorf Theatre.   |
| —      | Wagner Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.   |
| —      | Patti Concert, 8, Albert Hall.   |
| —      | Musical Festival, 8.30, Queen's Hall.  |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| FRI.   | Countess Valda Gleichen and Signor Antonietti's Vocal and Violin Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall. |
| —      | Miss Minna Fischer's Concert, 8, Bechstein Hall.   |
| —      | Musical Festival, 8.30, Queen's Hall.  |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| SAT.   | Mr. Bennu Schonberger's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.                               |
| —      | Musical Festival, 3.15, Queen's Hall.  |
| —      | Schiller Festival, 8, Queen's Hall.  |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| —      | Grand Opera, 8.45, Waldorf Theatre.  |

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

LYRIC. — Hamlet.

SUCCESSIVE stage Hamlets contribute little to our knowledge of the character. The task of interpretation, to use the word in its highest sense, can scarcely be said to belong to the actor. This will not be a popular view among members of what, not only in banter, is called "the profession." What is said is not, moreover, advanced in disparagement. It is a French euphemism, which we have to a certain extent localized, to speak of an actor as "creating" a rôle. A juster or apter term would be manufacturing or composing. What Shakspeare did for Taylor or Burbage, whichever was the first Hamlet, will now never be known. It is, however, certain that Molière stamped upon some of his characters an individuality that has since been maintained. In that case, in which a man was at once writer and interpreter, and perhaps in some other instances in which an actor of merit, even of genius, inspires an author to supply him with a character something more than the outlines of which he himself suggests, the use of the term "creates" is possibly justified. In pieces such as 'Charles I.' and 'Becket' it is easy to credit Sir Henry Irving with the lion's share in the conception as in the execution. In 'Hamlet,' however, it is not easy to mention any actor who has flooded the character with new light, or added much to the conceptions formed by Coleridge, Hazlitt, Lessing, and Goethe, to go no further afield. No influence stronger than that of Fechter has been felt in England; but this was, as we have recently stated, expurgatory of error rather than illuminative. The Hamlet of Irving was imaginative as well as great, and had such intellectual flashes as we repudiate in the case of Garrick, and hesitate to accept in that of Kean. Without going further into the question, and vindicating—as we perhaps ought—the faith that is within us, we may say that with the new Hamlets, of which there has been of late a glut, the amount of gain to us comes rather from the histrionic capacity than the intellectual acumen of the interpreter. The poetic distinction of a Forbes Robertson, the meditative depth of a Tree, the general resourcefulness and breadth of style of a younger Irving, are helpful, and justify the enthusiasm of their respective admirers, but take us little further. We learn no more of Hamlet, nor are we likely to learn more. What are called new readings move us no more than the changes in pattern wrought by a turn of the kaleidoscope. For some reason which we do not seek, one man will restore the scenes that bring on Fortinbras, and another will suppress that which shows the ineffectual supplication of Claudius. Of such innovations, if innovations they be, Mr. Martin Harvey is prodigal. He does, indeed, excise the speech of Hamlet when he comes upon the King at his impotent devotions, and soliloquizes, "Now might I do it pat." He determines that Hamlet shall not see the King and Polonius spying him from behind the arras during the interview with Ophelia, and he acquits Ophelia of any share in her father's treachery. So convinced of her innocence is he, that even at the moment when he bids her betake herself to a nunnery he clasps her head with a tenderness and a familiarity for which in his accost we are unprepared. These things signify little, and may be altered almost, if not quite, ad libitum. The only excuse for making the King after the play scene return to the deserted hall and cast himself at the foot of the seat he previously occupied—an action not at all to be commended for repetition—is that it saves the trouble of setting another scene. For the rest, the new Hamlet is slim, youthful, courteous, as a rule agreeable in method, and free from any tendency to rant. He is neither fateful nor tragic, nor specially significant. Mr. Stephen Phillips's Ghost is impressive, and Claudius and Gertrude find good exponents. The mounting is excellent.

COURT.—Man and Superman. In Three Acts. By Bernard Shaw.

IN that epistle dedicatory to Mr. Walkley which in the printed edition opens out his 'Man and Superman,' and is neither less brilliant, less perverse, nor less overpoweringly long than the play itself, Mr. Shaw speaks freely concerning his own work. Of 'Man and Superman' he says that it is "a perfectly modern three-act play," into which he has thrust "a totally extraneous act." In this his hero has a dream, in which his Mozartian ancestor (Don Juan Tenorio) appears, and "philosophizes at great length in a Shavio-Socratic dialogue with the lady, the statue, and the devil." A little later he speaks of his work as containing "a trumpery story of modern London life." In producing it on the stage he has, with his own hand, cut out the redundant act and the "Shavio-Socratic dialogue," reducing thus the piece to what he has called it. With so much humour and paradox has he, however, enlivened it, and with so much wit does he expound his theories concerning woman as the huntress—a not particularly chaste Diana—and man as quarry, that the “trumperiness” is forgotten, and the whole proves actable and entertaining. In dealing with this most intractable of plays Mr. Shaw has established an indefeasible right to be counted among our acting dramatists of the humorous school. The interpretation was adequate, though of no special brilliancy, and the piece may be seen with the certainty of amusement.

SHAFTESBURY. — Renaissance: a Romantic Comedy in Three Acts By F. von Schoen-than and Koppel Ellfeld. Translated by Miss Alix. Greeven.

FIRST produced at the Berliner Theater in 1896, ‘Renaissance’ was introduced to London some six or seven years later by the German actors holding possession of the Comedy. It has a picturesque environment and a sentimental plot, and is a fair specimen of the class of work produced by Teutonic dramatists before they had yielded to Scandinavian influence. It is scarcely suited to English tastes, however, and is not likely to maintain a strong hold on the public. The action, which passes towards the close of the sixteenth century among the Sabine Hills, is supported by Miss Tita Brand, Miss Marie Brema, Mr. Hubert Carter, and Mr. Barnes. As in the original, much of the piece is in verse, which is, however, of no special merit.

Dramatic Gossip.

‘THE MERCHANT OF VENICE’ was substituted at Drury Lane on Monday for ‘Hamlet,’ Sir Henry repeating his eminently poetical rendering of the apotheosized Shylock. Miss Edith Wynne Matthison made an imaginative Portia, and Mr. Gerald Lawrence a gallant Bassanio. Other features in the revival were the Jessica of Mrs. Cecil Raleigh, the Nerissa of Miss Cicely Richards, the Antonio of Mr. James Hearn, the Lorenzo of Mr. Vincent Sternroyd, and the Launcelot Gobbo of Mr. Charles Dodsworth.

NEITHER of the novelties produced at the Haymarket on the 18th inst. for the Conway benefit quite fulfilled expectation. ‘Shakespeare v. Shaw,’ by Mr. J. B. Fagan, was droller in conception than in execution, and was chiefly welcome on account of the presentation of Shakspeare by Mr. Cyril Maude and Mr. Shaw by Mr. Maurice. The piece, which is of the nature of a revue, and has some resemblance to ‘Trial by Jury,’ deals with a supposed process for libel brought against the dramatist of to-day by the Bard of Avon. ‘His First Love,’ by Miss Annie Hughes, depicts, after the fashion of Dryden and others, a hero who has never seen a woman.

‘MRS. L’ESTRANGE,’ a three-act play by Mr. F. Kinsey Peile, produced for a benefit at the Shaftesbury on Monday afternoon, is a sketch of modern life with little plot or originality. It was well played by Miss Dorothy Grimston, Miss Muriel Wylford, Mr. Dawson Milward, Mr. C. M. Hallard, and Mr. Sam Sothern, and obtained a favourable reception.

THE first appearance this season of Signora Duse took place on Tuesday at the new Waldorf in the Italian version of ‘The Second Mrs. Tanqueray.’ This has been followed by ‘Magda’ and ‘La Dame aux Camélias,’ no novelty being as yet announced.

MR. GILBERT’S ‘Palace of Truth’ was revived on Tuesday at the Great Queen Street Theatre, and was then seen for the first time for many years. It was fairly acted by Mrs. Theodore Wright, Miss Margaret Bussé, and other actors, preserved much freshness, and obtained a very warm reception.

MR. G. B. SHAW’S ‘Candida’ was revived at the Court on Monday. A further revival of ‘You Never Can Tell’ is fixed for June.

ON Wednesday at the Lyric Mr. Martin Harvey revived ‘The Only Way’ for Wednesday evening and Saturday afternoon performances.

So compressed has now been ‘Business is Business’ at His Majesty’s that room has been found for ‘The Ballad-Monger,’ with Mr. Tree as Gringoire and Miss Lillah McCarthy as Loyse. Mr. Tree’s performance of Isidore Izard has gained in closeness, and may now count as one of the most original and powerful of those character-parts in which in public estimation the actor is seen at his best.

ON Monday Miss Maxine Elliott and her company appeared at the Savoy in ‘Her Own Way,’ transferred from the Lyric to make room for Mr. Harvey’s ‘Hamlet.’

ARRANGEMENTS are in progress for the revival by Mr. Forbes Robertson in September at La Scala of ‘Diplomacy,’ with Sir Squire and Lady Bancroft and so many of the early cast as can be obtained. It will be curious to witness a fresh performance of that popular piece on the scene of its first production.

THEATRICAL dovescotes are fluttered by the announcement of the engagement of Mr. George Alexander to play at Drury Lane the Prodigal Son in Mr. Hall Caine’s piece so named. His engagement for the part seems judicious. We have already announced the forthcoming re-appearance of Mrs. John Wood. Others who will take part in the presentation are Miss Mary Rorke, Miss Nancy Price, Miss Hall Caine, Mr. Henry Neville, and Mr. Frank Cooper.

‘THE MAN OF THE MOMENT’ is the title of Mr. H. Melville’s rendering of ‘L’Adversaire’ of MM. Alfred Capus and Emmanuel Arène which is to be the next novelty at the St. James’s. In this the part of the heroine, created at the Renaissance on October 23rd, 1903, by Mlle. Marthe Brandès, will be played in English by Madame Le Bargy, Mr. Alexander replacing M. Guitry as Maurice Darlay.

TERRY’S THEATRE will be opened on June 5th by Madame Réjane, who will appear in her latest novelty ‘L’Age d’Aimer’ of M. Pierre Wolff. She will be seen also in ‘L’Hirondelle,’ a three-act comedy of M. Nicodemi, produced last year at the Lyric Theatre in New York. In her travelling repertory are ‘La Petite Marquise,’ ‘Madame Sans-Gêne,’ ‘Heureuse,’ ‘La Passerelle,’ and a rendering of ‘La Locandiera.’ As Marguerite Gauthier in ‘La Dame aux Camélias’ she will be seen for the first time in London.

ON June 7th M. Coquelin, supported by M. Jean Coquelin, M. Coquelin cadet, and Mlle. Marguerite Moréno, will appear at the Shaftesbury. His stay is for four days only, and his repertory will consist of ‘L’Abbé Constantin,’ ‘Les Romanesques,’ ‘Les Précieuses Ridicules,’ and ‘Notre Jeunesse.’ Monologues will also be recited by M. Coquelin cadet.

‘HAWTHORNE, U.S.A.’ is the title of Mr. Fagan’s new play of modern life forthcoming this evening at the Imperial.

‘LA RACE,’ a three-act comedy of M. Jean Thorel, produced at the Théâtre Antoine, is a curious study of ancestral pride. Le Marquis de Thémiste, sooner than see his race expire, brings into his house and adopts the bastard offspring of his illegitimate daughter.

TO CORRESPONDENTS—G. F. T. S.—D. Y. C.—W. M.—J. P. N.—received. W. T.—Many thanks.
J. A. O’N.—No vacancy. H. O.—Too late for use.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL’S LIST.

Catalogue sent post free on application.

In 5 vols. 21s. net each; or in half-morocco, 31s. 6d. net each.

BRYAN’S DICTIONARY of

PAINTERS and ENGRAVERS. A NEW EDITION, Revised and Enlarged, under the Supervision of G. C. WILLIAMSON, Litt. D., assisted by a staff of Specialists. With about 500 Illustrations, including 40 Photogravure Plates. Illustrated Prospectus on application.
*.* This Edition contains upwards of 1,400 new biographies, and nearly 6,000 corrections have been made in articles that have been allowed to stand. In addition to this, 250 lives have been partly rewritten.
“No one interested in the fine arts can afford to be without this comprehensive and indispensable dictionary.”
Pall Mall Gazette.

BELL’S CATHEDRAL SERIES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

In specially designed cloth cover, crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net each.
“The series bids fair to become an indispensable companion to the cathedral tourist in England.”—Times.

NOW READY.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. An Itinerary and Descriptive—BRISTOL—CANTERBURY—CARLISLE—CHESTER—CHICHESTER—DURHAM—ELY—EXETER—GLOUCESTER—HEREFORD—LICHFIELD—LINCOLN—MANCHESTER—NORWICH—OXFORD—PETERBOROUGH—RIPON—ROCHESTER—ST. ALBANS—ST. ASAPH—ST. DAVID’S—ST. PATRICK’S, DUBLIN—ST. PAUL’S—SALISBURY—SOUTHWELL—WELLS—WINCHESTER—WORCESTER—YORK.

Uniform with above Series. 1s. 6d. net each.

ST. MARTIN’S CHURCH, CANTERBURY—BEVERLEY MINSTER—WIMBORNE MINSTER and CHRISTCHURCH PRIORY—TEWKESBURY ABBEY and DEERHURST PRIORY—BATH ABBEY, MALMESBURY ABBEY, and BRADFORD-ON-AVON CHURCH—WESTMINSTER ABBEY—STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

BELL’S HANDBOOKS TO CONTINENTAL CHURCHES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net each.

CHARTRES: the Cathedral and other Churches—ROUEN: the Cathedral and other Churches—AMIENS: the Cathedral and other Churches—PARIS (NOTRE-DAME)—MONT ST. MICHEL—BAYEUX.

NEW EDITION, REVISED, crown 8vo, 5s. net.

CITIES and SIGHTS of SPAIN. A

Handbook for Travellers. By Mrs. A. LE BLOND (Mrs. Main). With numerous Illustrations and Maps. With a Note by Mr. G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S., on the COMING TOTAL ECLIPSE of the SUN.

Pott 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 1s. net; or in limp leather, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. net.

MILTON. By G. C. Williamson.

Litt. D. [Bell’s Miniature Series of Musicians.]

A BOOK FOR SKETCHERS FROM NATURE.

LIGHT and WATER. An Essay on

Reflexion and Colour in River, Lake, and Sea. By Sir MONTAGU POLLOCK, Bart. With 39 Photographic Illustrations and numerous Diagrams. Small 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

NAPOLEONIC HISTORY.

LIFE of NAPOLEON I. By J. Holland

ROSE, Litt. D. With numerous Illustrations, Maps, and Plans. 2 vols. large post 8vo, 18s. net.
Also a CHEAPER EDITION, without the Illustrations. 2 vols. post 8vo, 10s. net.

NAPOLEONIC STUDIES. By J.

HOLLAND ROSE, Litt. D. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

NAPOLEON and ENGLAND, 1803-

1813: a Study from Unprinted Documents. By P. COQUELLE. Translated from the French by GORDON D. KNOX. Post 8vo, 5s. net.

NAPOLEON’S CAPTIVITY in RELATION to SIR HUDSON LOWE. By R. C. SEATON, M.A. Crown 8vo, with Map, 5s. net.

The FOUNDATIONS of MODERN

EUROPE. Twelve Lectures. By EMIL REICH, Doctor Juris. Large post 8vo, 5s. net.

CARLYLE’S FRENCH REVOLU-

TION. With Introduction, Notes, &c., by J. HOLLAND ROSE, Litt. D. 3 vols. small post 8vo, 5s. each.

Also LIBRARY EDITION. Post 8vo, gilt, 3 vols. 21s. net.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
Portugal Street, Lincoln’s Inn, W.C.

SOME STRIKING BOOKS JUST PUBLISHED BY CHAPMAN & HALL.

MR. H. G. WELLS'S

IMAGINATIVE AND PICTURESQUE SOCIOLOGICAL STUDY.

A MODERN UTOPIA.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Illustrated by EDMUND J. SULLIVAN.

The ATHENÆUM says:—

"THERE HAS BEEN NO WORK OF THIS IMPORTANCE PUBLISHED FOR THE LAST THIRTY YEARS.

"IT IS AN AMAZINGLY ABLE CONSTITUTION, AND ONE WONDERS THAT IT SHOULD BE THE OUTCOME OF A SINGLE MIND.

"THIS ASTONISHING BOOK IS A PIECE OF WORK WHICH EMBODIES IMAGINATIVE SCIENCE AT ITS HIGHEST."

With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

RUSSIA IN REVOLUTION.

By G. H. PERRIS.

"A fascinating book."—Daily Chronicle.

"A thrilling story."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A book of blood and tears."

Evening Standard and St. James's Gazette.

"A valuable political essay and an intensely moving human document."—Morning Leader.

READY MONDAY, MAY 29.

MR. BENNET BURLEIGH'S NEW BOOK.

JAPAN AND RUSSIA AT WAR.

With many Illustrations and Maps. 6s.

EMPIRE OF THE EAST.

Japan and Russia at War, 1904-5.

By BENNET BURLEIGH.

In this spirited and vividly written volume Mr. Bennet Burleigh, special war correspondent to the Daily Telegraph, gives a full record of his experiences at the front in the Russo-Japanese War; a study of the combatants, illustrated by a host of anecdotes; and an estimate of the probable effects of the War upon the rest of the civilized world. Mr. Bennet Burleigh had especial opportunities for seeing behind the scenes, and his opinion is always based upon authoritative information, and expressed with singular force and directness. This will be the book upon its subject.

ASK AT YOUR LIBRARY FOR THE FOLLOWING NEW NOVELS.

MR. KEBLE HOWARD'S NEW BOOK WILL BE READY
ON WEDNESDAY, MAY 31.

LOVE IN JUNE.

By KEBLE HOWARD,

Author of 'The God in the Garden,' 'Love and a Cottage,' &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s. Illustrated by FRANK REYNOLDS, R.I.

LOVE IN JUNE.

By KEBLE HOWARD.

AT ALL LIBRARIES. WEDNESDAY, MAY 31.

MR. HARRY FURNISS'S FIRST WORK OF FICTION WILL BE PUBLISHED ON FRIDAY, JUNE 2.

POVERTY BAY. A Nondescript Novel.

Illustrated by HARRY FURNISS, and Written by the Artist.

This is the first novel of the famous artist and caricaturist, and is bound to create no little interest and attention. It has for its central theme the sale of a ghost, and presents throughout a series of characters and types original and distinctive.

The series of illustrations by Mr. Furniss are in his best vein, and add wonderfully to the value of the book.

POVERTY BAY. A Nondescript Novel.

By HARRY FURNISS.

Illustrated by the Author. Square crown, 6s.

MISS NETTA SYRETT'S NEW NOVEL WILL BE READY
ON FRIDAY, JUNE 2.

THE DAYS' JOURNEY.

By NETTA SYRETT.

This is a novel of temperament, revealing the effect of disillusionment after marriage, and the gradual working towards reconciliation which ultimately is effected. The novel has a real human interest, and is admirably written.

THE BROODING WILD. A Mountain Tragedy.

By RIDGWELL CULLUM,

Author of 'The Devil's Keg,' 'The Hound from the North,' &c.

"A tragic vivid tale of the weird, strenuous, solitary North-West."—Times.

"Wonderfully vivid and striking pictures of Nature in the lonely wilderness of the Canadian Rockies."—Daily Telegraph.

A CHINESE STORY.

C H' U N K W A N G.

A Tale of Chinese Love and Tragedy.

By OLIVER G. READY, Author of 'Life and Sport in China.'

With 12 Illustrations by a Chinese Artist of repute.

"This pleasantly written tale will give European readers a better insight into Chinese life and society than many more pretentious works. We are thoroughly interested in the romance."—Saturday Review.

"A very simple, straightforward, and pretty tale."—Times.

"An exceptionally remarkable study of immemorial civilization of the Chinese people."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"This is a really delightful book, and Mr. Ready deserves the thanks of English readers for the charming love tale of Far Cathay.....Fascinating and delightful throughout."—Daily Telegraph.

A FINE HISTORICAL ROMANCE.

THE SILVER KEY.

By NELLIE K. BLISSETT, Author of 'Bindweed,' &c.

"The reader with a taste for a rattling, spirited, historical romance may be confidently commended to Miss Blissett's latest novel, for he will find there all the qualities that make for his enjoyment.....Miss Blissett's ingenuity is equal to every demand of a rather exigent situation. The hero is blithe and gallant, the heroine is winsome, beautiful, and bewitching."—Daily Telegraph.

"The story is well conceived, moves briskly, is full of incident, and follows the windings of an excellent mystery."—Globe.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

GENERAL INDEXES.

THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

|                                      | £. | s. | d. |
|--------------------------------------|----|----|----|
| GENERAL INDEX,FOURTH SERIES ...  | 3  | 3  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,SIXTH SERIES ...   | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,SEVENTH SERIES ... | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,EIGHTH SERIES ...  | 0  | 6  | 0  |

For Copies by post an additional Three-pence is charged.

JOHN C. FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office,
11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,
ACCIDENT AND DISEASE
(SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID, DIPHTHERIA,
APPENDICITIS, &c.)
BURGLARY AND FIDELITY INSURANCE.
RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.
Established 1849. CLAIMS PAID £4,800,000
64, CORNHILL, LONDON. A. VIAN, Secretary.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT
INSTITUTION
[1835.]
FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

Accumulated Fund over ... £6,000,000
Paid in Claims more than ... £12,400,000

PROFITS.

These are divided every five years solely amongst the Assured. At the 1902 Division a Cash Profit of £761,602 was apportioned amongst the members, being considerably more than one-third of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years.

ENDOWMENT-ASSURANCE

Policies are issued, combining Life Assurance at minimum cost with provision for old age, and are singularly advantageous.

L. F. HOVIL,

Actuary and Secretary.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.
The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, GOUT,
And INDIGESTION.
And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.
DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

NOW READY, price 10s. 6d. net.

THE NINTH SERIES
GENERAL INDEX

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Introduction by JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publisher reserves the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

Free by post, 10s. 11d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.

THE NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

COPIES OF

NOTES AND QUERIES

FOR JUNE 30, 1900,

Can still be had, containing an account of the Flag, with Coloured Illustration according to scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

NOW READY, 1 vol. demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 16s. net.

RICHARD WAGNER TO MATHILDE WESENDONCK.

Letters and Leaves from a Diary.

With Portraits and Facsimiles.

Translated, Prefaced, and Annotated by WILLIAM ASHTON ELLIS.

The German original of this illuminating work has already reached its Twentieth Edition, in course of a year an experience quite phenomenal in Wagner literature.

"These letters are likely to create a sensation throughout the world. For the first time is one of the most remarkable chapters in Wagner's life, the genesis and completion of his 'Tristan,' laid bare in its inmost recesses. Without this glimpse the picture of Wagner's life is incomplete."—Kölnische Zeitung.

H. GREVEL &amp; CO., Publishers, 33, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1824.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Assets over FOUR MILLIONS Sterling.

BONUS DIVIDED 1902, £597,415.

TO SHARE IN NEXT BONUS

APPLY NOW OR BEFORE JUNE 30 TO

CHIEF OFFICE: 15, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SEVENTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

TWELFTH EDITION JUST OUT, price Sixpence, cloth.

REMARKABLE COMETS:

A Brief Survey of the most interesting Facts in the History of Cometary Astronomy.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

THIRD EDITION, Revised to 1904, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

ASTRONOMY FOR THE YOUNG.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

MR. HEINEMANN'S LIST. NATURALISM IN ENGLAND.

Post 8vo, 12s. net.

Being the Fourth Volume of 'Main Currents of Nineteenth-Century Literature.'

By Dr. GEORGE BRANDES.

The Volumes already published are:—

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| I. THE EMIGRANT LITERATURE. 6s. net.         | III. THE REACTION IN FRANCE. 9s. net.       |
| II. THE ROMANTIC SCHOOL IN GERMANY. 9s. net. | V. THE ROMANTIC SCHOOL IN FRANCE. 12s. net. |

The MANCHESTER COURIER says:—"In the splendid series of volumes by Dr. Brandes dealing with European literature in the last century this is one of the most scholarly, and is certainly the most picturesque. To English readers it will also be the most valuable and interesting."

BRET HARTE.

By HENRY W. BOYNTON. "CONTEMPORARY MEN OF LETTERS SERIES." Fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d. net. Uniform with 'WALTER PATTER' and 'WM. BUTLER YEATS'.

THE PLAYS OF RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN.

3 vols. 'THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL'; 'THE RIVALS'; 'THE CRITIC.' With an Introduction by EDMUND GOSSE. "HEINEMANN'S FAVORITE CLASSICS SERIES." Fcap. 8vo, 6d. a vol. 1s. net.

INDIAN BASKETRY.

By OTIS TUFFON MASON. With numerous illustrations, including 46 Plates in Colour. 2 vols. super-royal 8vo. Three Guineas net.

A DARK LANTERN.

MISS ELIZABETH ROBINS' NEW NOVEL. 6s.

The TIMES says the portrait of Katharine Dereham is "undeniably a brilliant piece of work," and that the book "sustains the writer's reputation for competent craftsmanship."

The COURT JOURNAL describes it as "one of the greatest novels of our time."

The STANDARD predicts that it will be "the Talk of the Town."

THE WISE WOODS. By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY. 6s.

TOLLA THE COURTESAN. By E. RODOCANACHI. 6s.

CONFESSIONS OF AN AMBITIOUS MOTHER. 3s. 6d. net.

DUKE'S SON. By COSMO HAMILTON. 6s.

THE MACDONNELLS. By Lady SYKES. 6s.

THE STIGMA. By JESSIE L. HERBERTSON. 6s.

AMANDA OF THE MILL. By MARIE VAN VORST. 6s.

CUT LAURELS. By M. HAMILTON. 6s.

NANCY STAIR. By ELINOR MACARTNEY LANE. 6s.

PAM. By Baroness VON HUTTEN. 6s.

London:

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

MR. CARNEGIE'S NEW BOOK.

NOW READY AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

JAMES WATT,

The INVENTOR of the STEAM-ENGINE.

By ANDREW CARNEGIE, LL.D.

Completing the "Famous Scots Series."

Art canvas, 1s. 6d. net; gilt top, 2s. net.

FIRST NOTICES.

Daily Chronicle.—"It is a cheering story. Mr. Carnegie tells it well, with a graphic touch, with dramatic force, and with a keen insight into character."

Daily Mail.—"The life of the inventor of the steam-engine is adequately and sympathetically treated."

Evening News.—"The book is extremely well written."

Scotsman.—"One of the most practically useful in a cheap and admirable series. It is an entertaining and readable volume."

THE "FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES."

"INDISPENSABLE TO A LIBRARY."—MR. CARNEGIE.

NOW COMPLETE in 42 VOLS.

In Oak Bookcase, 66s. net and 84s. net.

List on application.

DR. ALEX. WHYTE'S NEW BOOK

The WALK, CONVERSATION, and CHARACTER OF JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD. A Series of 104 courses on the Character of Our Lord. By the Rev. ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D., Author of 'Bible Characters,' 'Bunyan Characters,' &c. 6s.

The MISTY ISLE of SKYE. Its Scenery, its Story. By J. A. MACCULLOCH. With 20 Full-page Illustrations. 4s. net.

"A remarkably readable and interesting book"—Scotsman.

SECOND EDITION, WITH NEW PREFACE, OF

The FAITH of ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. By JOHN KELMAN, Jun., M.A. 6s. net, half-vellum cloth, gilt top.

"An attempt to figure the man forth in all his qualities. The attempt is astonishingly successful"—Athenæum.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
21, Paternoster Square, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

SIXTH IMPRESSION NOW ON SALE, 12s. net.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE LANTERN.

BY

Sir FREDERICK TREVES, Bart., G.C.V.O. C.B. LL.D., &c.

"The book has colour, atmosphere, imagination, and a charm of language."—Daily Mail.

"The book is instinct with human sympathies."—Daily Telegraph.

"Unmistakably vivid."—Pall Mall Gazette.

CANADA AS IT IS.

By JOHN FOSTER FRASER.

With 47 Full-Page Illustrations. 6s.

GREAT PICTURES IN PRIVATE GALLERIES.

A Selection of the most Famous Modern Pictures in the Private Galleries of Great Britain reproduced in Colours.

Vol. I., containing 48 Pictures, mounted on specially selected art paper.

Cloth, 12s.; half-leather, 15s.

THE BOOK OF PHOTOGRAPHY:

PRACTICAL, THEORETIC, AND APPLIED.

Edited by PAUL N. HASLUCK.

With numerous Illustrations and Working Drawings. 10s. 6d.

FRENCH PORCELAIN.

By E. S. AUSCHER, formerly Chef de Fabrication at Sèvres.

Translated and Edited by WILLIAM BURTON, Author of 'English Earthenware,' &c.

Containing 24 Plates in Colours, and 48 in Black and White, with numerous reproductions of the various Marks.

Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, 30s. net.

This Edition is limited to 1,250 Copies.

CASSELL'S POPULAR GARDENING.

Edited by WALTER P. WRIGHT.

With 24 Coloured Plates and numerous Illustrations. 2 vols. in half-leather, 30s. net the set.

THE BRITISH ISLES.

Depicted by Pen and Camera.

With a Series of Coloured Plates reproduced from Pictures by celebrated Artists, and a profusion of Illustrations from Photographs expressly taken for the Work.

Complete in 3 vols., each containing about 400 Illustrations and 13 Coloured Plates. 21s. net each.

CASSELL'S

FAMOUS SIXPENNY EDITIONS.

NEW VOLUMES.

THE ADVENTURES OF HARRY REVEL.

By A. T. QUILLER-COUCH.

UNDER THE WHITE COCKADE.

By HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE.

BY A HAIR'S BREADTH.

By HEADON HILL.

THE ROGUE'S MARCH.

By E. W. HORNUNG.

BURNABY'S RIDE TO KHIVA.

"The most perfect representation of the Academy ever placed within reach of the public."—Westminster Gazette.

In One Handsome Volume, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL ACADEMY PICTURES, 1905.

This Work includes FOUR REMBRANDT PHOTOGRAVURES of Notable Pictures in this year's Academy.

NOTICE :—The NEW and ENLARGED EDITION of Sir D. MACKENZIE WALLACE'S GREAT WORK on RUSSIA, Reset, and in great part Re-Written, will be READY SHORTLY, price 24s. net.

CASSELL & CO., LIMITED, London, and all Booksellers.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4049.

SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

A. HENRY SAVAGE LANDOR, Esq., will THIS DAY (SATURDAY), June 3, at 3 o'clock, begin a Course of TWO LECTURES on 'Exploration in the Philippines.' I. The Exploration of Mindanao's Island and Discovery of a White Tribe. II. Among the Head Hunters of North Luzon. Subscription to this Course, Half-a-Guinea.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S
SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27, King Street, St. James's.

PICTURES WAREHOUSED in a fine, light, dry Warehouse.—Apply to THOMAS McLEAN, 7, Haymarket, London. Terms moderate.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital 30,000L.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT
Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guinea (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbots Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the free use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary, Mr. GEORGE LARNER, 28, Paternoster Row E.C.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT and PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.

Funds exceed 25,000L.

Office: Memorial Hall Buildings, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron:

The Right Hon. the EARL of ROSEBURY, K. G. K. T.

President:

The LORD GLENESK.

Treasurer:

The LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

A Donation of Ten Guinea constitutes a Vice-President and gives three votes for life at all elections. Each Donation of Three Guinea gives a vote at all elections for life. Every Annual Subscriber is entitled to one vote at all elections in respect of each Five Shillings so paid.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man and Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employed, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guinea for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuitants now number thirty-six, the men receiving 25L and the Women 20L per annum each, and they include:—

The "Royal Victoria Pension Fund," which was established in 1887 and enlarged in 1897, 1901, and 1902, perpetually commemorates the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides Pensions of 20L a year each for Six Widows of News-vendors.

The "Francis Fund" provides Pensions for One Man, 25L, and One Woman, 20L, and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing "Taxes on Knowledge," and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The "Horace Marshall Pension Fund" is the gift of the late Mr. Horace Brooks Marshall. The employees of that firm have primary right of election to its benefits, but this privilege not having been exercised until 1904, the General Pensions of the Institution have had the full benefit arising from the interest on this investment from 1887 to 1903.

The "Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund" provides 25L per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The "Hospital Pensions" consist of an annual contribution, whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20L for One Year to a Man, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c. W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION

will be held on JUNE 28, 29, and 30 to FILL UP not less than EIGHT RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS, THREE NON-RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS, and SOME EXHIBITIONS.—For particulars apply to the HEAD MASTER, 19, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN

(University of London).

YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, W.

A REID SCHOLARSHIP in ARTS, annual value 31L 10s. First Year, 28L 7s. Second and Third Years, and an ABBOTT SCHOLARSHIP in SCIENCE, annual value 48L, both tenable for Three Years, will be awarded on the results of an EXAMINATION to be held at the COLLEGE on JUNE 28 and 29.

For further information apply to the PRINCIPAL.

DEPARTMENT FOR PROFESSIONAL TRAINING IN TEACHING.

Students are admitted to the Training Course in OCTOBER and JANUARY.

TWO SCHOLARSHIPS, each of the value of 10L, will be AWARDED for the COURSE of SECONDARY TRAINING, beginning in OCTOBER, 1905.

Applications should reach the HEAD of the TRAINING DEPARTMENT not later than JULY 7, 1905.

MERCHANT TAYLORS' SCHOOL, Charterhouse Square, E.C.

FIVE ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, for Boys under 14 years of age on June 11, 1905, will be competed for on JULY 3, 4, and 5 next. An ORDINARY ENTRANCE EXAMINATION will be held on WEDNESDAY, July 19, at 1.30 P.M.—For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

THE BUSHEY SCHOOL of PAINTING BUSHEY, HERTS.

For the Study of the Human Figure and Animal Painting from the Living Model.

Principal.—Miss LUCY KEMP-WELCH, R.R.A.

Assistant Master.—HOWLAND WHEELWRIGHT.

Master of the Life-Class.—J. W. WHITELEY.

For Prospectus, apply to the SECRETARY.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORs in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GARBITAS, THRING & CO.,

who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 86, Sackville Street, London, W.

COUNTY of LONDON.

THE GROCERS' SCHOOL, HACKNEY DOWNS, N.E.

APPOINTMENT OF HEAD MASTER.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the appointment of HEAD MASTER of the GROCERS' SECONDARY DAY SCHOOL for BOYS, Hackney Downs, N.E.

The person to be appointed must be a Graduate of a University in the United Kingdom or the British Possessions, and his Name must be on the Teachers' Register.

The appointment will be subject to six months' written notice on either side for its termination at any time, and to any conditions which may be inserted by the Board of Education in the Scheme governing the Foundation which is at present in course of preparation.

The person appointed will be required to give his whole time to the duties of the Office, and will in other respects be subject to the usual conditions attaching to appointments in the Council's service, particulars of which are contained in the Form of Application.

The Salary will be not less than 700L a year.

Applications should be made on the official form, to be obtained from the Clerk of the London County Council at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W., or at the Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C. The applications must be sent in so as to be received not later than 10 A.M. on THURSDAY, June 15, 1905, must be addressed to the Clerk of the Council, Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C., and must be accompanied by copies of not more than six recent Testimonials.

Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for appointment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.
L.C.C. Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C.,
May 26, 1905.

WOLVERHAMPTON GRAMMAR SCHOOL. AMENDED NOTICE.

Applications are invited for the HEAD-MASTERSHIP of this SCHOOL, which will be vacant at the end of the forthcoming Summer Term.

The School is a First-Grade Secondary School, and is regulated by a Scheme of the Charity Commissioners.

The School is beautifully situated on the rural (or Shropshire) side of the Town, and the site of the Buildings, with the Head Master's House, Grounds, Playgrounds, and Cricket Field, occupy a site of about twelve acres. The number of Boys on the School Register averages about 200.

The Head Master must be a Graduate of some University within the British Empire. The Annual Stipend will be either a fixed sum of 400L, together with Head Money calculated on a scale of not less than 1L nor more than 30s. for each Boy in the School, or entirely a fixed sum, as may be agreed upon by the Governors. The Head Master will be expected to take in Boarders. There is accommodation for thirty (present number about twenty), and he will be required to reside in the Private Residence attached to the School.

Applications, with six copies thereof and six copies of not more than four recent Testimonials, must be sent in not later than JUNE 14, together with the names of four persons from whom personal application may be made.

Original Testimonials are not to be sent until asked for. Personal canvass of the Governors will disqualify.

Copies of the Scheme, Prospectus, and such further particulars as applicants may desire, may be obtained from

NEVE, CRESSWELL & SPARROW, Solicitors,
Wolverhampton. Clerks to the Governors.

MERIONETH EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

DOLORELLEY COUNTY INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL.

WANTED, a HEAD MASTER for the above School, who must have taken a Degree in the United Kingdom, preference (all other things being equal) being given to those who have had training and experience in teaching. Salary 150L, with a Capitation Grant of 1L 10s. per Scholar.

Applications, together with thirty-six copies of not more than six Testimonials, to be sent to the undersigned on or before WEDNESDAY, June 28.

H. HAYDN JONES.
Education Office, Towy (Merioneth), June 1, 1905.

HARRIS INSTITUTE, PRESTON.

The COUNCIL require a HEAD ART MASTER, whose duty will be, with competent Assistants, to undertake the General Work and Management of the School of Art. He will also advise with the Director of Education for the Borough on the Art Instruction in the Elementary Day Schools, and possibly supervise such instruction, and also arrange and conduct Art Classes for the Instruction of Teachers. Salary 250L per annum. Candidates must be qualified as Art Masters according to the rules and regulations of the Board of Education, and must have had experience in teaching Design and Modelling. The Gentleman appointed will enter upon his duties in SEPTEMBER NEXT.—Applications before JUNE 26. Form of Application may be obtained from T. R. JOLLY, Secretary and Registrar.

ST. DAVID'S COLLEGE, LAMPETER.

THEOLOGICAL LECTURER WANTED. 200L and Capitation Fees. Rooms.—Particulars from the Principal.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, GENEVA, GOLFE-JUAN, HAVRE, HYÈRES, JUAN-LES-PINS, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, MONTE CARLO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS (Est, Nord, Lyon), PAU, ROUEN, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOULON, TOURS.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 248, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 234, Rue de Rivoli.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CAIRDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the Post of PROFESSOR of EDUCATION in the NORMAL DEPARTMENT (MEN) and in the DEPARTMENT for the TRAINING of MEN TEACHERS for SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials, should be sent, on or before SATURDAY, June 3, 1905.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.

May 6, 1905.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CAIRDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the post of ASSISTANT LECTURER in LATIN.

Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials (which need not be printed), must be sent on or before SATURDAY, June 3, 1905.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.

May 6, 1905.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.

The COUNCIL invite applications for the post of LECTURER in BOTANY. Salary 120L per annum.—Applications, and three copies of three recent Testimonials, to be sent in by JUNE 16 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

JAMES RAFFER, Registrar and Secretary.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

ASSISTANT WANTED. Salary 70L, rising by three annual instalments to 100L. University Man, with some Library experience, preferred.—Applications, &c., to be addressed to the Public Librarian, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

WEST-END PUBLISHER requires a YOUNG MAN as JUNIOR in the TRADE DEPARTMENT.—Apply, giving full particulars and salary required, to R. A., Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

AN AUTHOR desires WORK as REGULAR CONTRIBUTOR or CORRESPONDENT to LONDON or PROVINCIAL PRESS. Could supply Short Stories, Comments on Topics of General Interest, Athletic Notes.—H. B., Box 1011, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

EDWARD NORTH, formerly of Brighton, desires EMPLOYMENT in PUBLISHING, BOOKSELLING, or LIBRARY (in or near London preferred). Energetic and experienced. Salary moderate, according to requirements.—63, Otfield Road, Stoke Newington, N.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. R., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL WORK and INDEXING.—Apply Miss PHILLIPS (Nat. Sci. Tripos), 52A, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 9d. per 1,000 Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., SCIENTIFIC, and of all Descriptions, COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Dictation Rooms (Shorthand or Type-writing). Usual Terms.—Misses E. B. and I. FARRAN, Donington House, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, London.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS. Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Circulars, &c. duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established twelve years.—SIXES & SIXES, 279, Rammersmith Road, W. Private Address: 13, Weylinton Gardens, Rammersmith.

TYPEWRITER.—Miss E. M. TIGAR, 64, Maitland Park Road, Haverstock Hill, N.W. PLAYS and MSS. of every description. Carbon and other Duplicate or Manifold Copies. Established 1884.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.
The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers. Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGESS, 34, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision. — 28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES
BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED,
And supplied with every requisite.
Write for 'THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST.'

The Imperial News Agency, 2 and 4, Tudor Street, London, E.C.
America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.
Australia: Holt's Chambers, 121, Pitt Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application.
Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.O.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.O.

Catalogues.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROSE & SONS, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

H. H. PEACH, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 11 contains Shakespeareana—Mary Queen of Scots Items—Scotch Broadside—Bindings, &c.

CATALOGUE No. 43.—Etchings by Whistler and Samuel Palmer—Engravings after Turner—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Drawings of the Early English School—scarce illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence.—Wm. WARR, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 140, containing a Special Article, entitled 'The RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS,' by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the New Edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters and Engravers,' &c. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORRIS, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

LEIGHTON'S

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 illustrations, price 2s. JUST ISSUED.
Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

BERTRAM DOBEL, SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER, and PUBLISHER,
77, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.

A large Stock of Old and Rare Books in English Literature, including Poetry and the Drama—Shakespeareana—First Editions of Famous Authors—Manuscripts—Illustrated Books, &c. CATALOGUES free on application.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES.—The JUNE CATALOGUE of valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW REMAINDERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, is now ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SONS, Library Department, 186, Strand, London, W.C.

DAY'S LIBRARY, LIMITED
(Founded 1776).

96, MOUNT STREET, GROSVENOR SQUARE, LONDON, W.
Subscriptions for short periods available. Terms on application.
SPECIAL CLEARANCE LIST of BOOKS at REDUCED PRICES for JUNE ONLY is NOW READY.

BOOK-PLATES.
Medieval and Modern Styles Designed and Engraved.

Write for ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET free.

THOMAS MORING, Engraver, Stationer, Printer, &c.,
257, High Holborn, W.C.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—Spink & Son, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

MARLBOROUGH.—TO BE SOLD, WITH POSSESSION.—AXHOLME, on the London and Bath Road, within a mile of Marlborough College, with fine Views of the magnificently timbered Slopes of Savernake Forest, a DETACHED FREDERICK RESIDENCE, with six Bedrooms, Dressing Room, Three good Reception Rooms, and Domestic Offices. Stabling, Lodge, Gardener's Cottage, and other Out-buildings. Well-timbered Grounds, nearly Four Acres, bounded and intersected by the River Kennet.—Bellocutors, Messrs. KAYS & JONES, 37, Norfolk Street, W.C. Particulars of Mr. MARK JEANS, Marlborough.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—APARTMENTS. Comfortably furnished Sitting-Room and One Bedroom. Pleasant and central. No others taken.—Lt. H., 66, Grove Hill Road, Tunbridge Wells.

Sales by Auction.

Oriental, English, and Continental Porcelain and Old English Pottery.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 5, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, WORKS of ART, comprising Oriental, English, and Continental Porcelain, Miniatures, Bijouterie, Old English Pottery, &c.
May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Greek and Roman Coins, the Property of the late HARLAN P. SMITH, Esq., New York.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 5, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of GREEK and ROMAN COINS in Gold, Silver, and Bronze, formed by the late HARLAN P. SMITH, Esq., of New York, U.S.A. (sold by order of his Executrix).
May be viewed. Illustrated Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Old Musical Instruments of the late T. W. TAPHOUSE, Esq., M.A.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 7, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of OLD MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of the late T. W. TAPHOUSE, Esq., M.A. (by order of the Executors).
May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Books and Manuscripts, including the Library of the late Lieut.-Col. E. A. SHULDAM, that of the late FRANCIS POPHAM, Esq., and others.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 8, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including the Library of the late Lieut.-Col. E. A. SHULDAM, of Cookham, co. Cork, comprising the Bibliographical Works of Dibdin—French Illustrated Books—Historical Literature—the Writings of Scott, Thackeray, and other Contemporary Authors—White's Selborne, First Edition—Books of Prints—Burlington Fine-Arts Club, Exhibition of Book-bindings, &c. A PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late P. A. UNDERWICK, Esq., K.C., containing Howell and Cobbett's State Trials—Cockayne's Peerage—Dictionary of National Biography, a Set—Law Books—Rogers's History of Prices—the English Dialect Dictionary—Notes and Queries, a Set, with Indexes—Froissart, Croniques de France, 4 vols. Paris, 1530, &c. The LIBRARY of the late FRANCIS POPHAM, Esq., including Gould's Humming Birds, 5 vols., and other Works on Natural History—Sporting Books—Voyages—Travels—and General Literature. The LIBRARY of the late Major HENRY HALE, containing La Fontaine, Contes et Nouvelles, 1762—Westmacott's English Spy—Hutchinson's Dorset—Manning and Bray's Surrey—Clutterbuck's Hertfordshire—and other Works on Topography, &c. Other Properties, including Books of Prints—Architecture—Engravings—Scott's Novels—First Editions—Early Printed Books—Warner's Orchid Album—Select Orchidaceous Plants—Bateman's Odontoglossum, and other Works on Botany—Tracts, &c.
May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The THIRD PORTION of the valuable Library of JOSEPH KNIGHT, Esq., F.S.A., &c.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 5, and Five Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the THIRD PORTION of the valuable and interesting LIBRARY of JOSEPH KNIGHT, Esq., F.S.A., &c. (Editor of 'Notes and Queries'), consisting chiefly of Works by the best-known English and French Writers on Poetry, Literature, and the Drama of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Eighteenth, and Nineteenth Centuries, including Ancient and Rare Editions of the 'Conteurs' of the Period—a large number of Dramatic Pieces, Biographies, Anecdotes, &c., of the English Stage in the Eighteenth Century—Reprints and Private Limited Issues of very Rare Works—Series of Scarce Editions of Bacon, Boccaccio, Cervantes, Chaucer, Corneille, Dorat, Dryden, D'Urfey, Froissart, La Fontaine, Longus, Marguerite de Valois, Marat, Milton, Molière, Montaigne, Wm. Morris, Duchess of Newcastle, Rabelais, Récit de las Bretonne, Ronsard, D. G. Rossetti, Rousseau, Scarron, Shakespeare, Sheridan, Spenser, Suckling, Symonds, Tabourat, Uzanne, Voltaire, Wither—Works on Bibliography—a Series of Elzevir Editions—Theatrical Costumes—Out-of-Print Periodicals—a large number of Plays by various Writers—Publications of the Kilmiscott and other Presses, &c.
May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Valuable Law Books, including the Library of the late S. B. L. DRUCE, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn (sold by order of the Executors), Library and Office Furniture, &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on TUESDAY, June 6, at 1 o'clock, valuable LAW BOOKS, including the above Library and other Properties, comprising a Complete Set of the Law Reports to 1905—a Set of the Law Times Reports—the Revised Reports, 71 vols. half-calf—the English Reports, 20 vols.—Reports in the Privy Council, Admiralty, and Vice-Chancellor's Courts—Stock of the Old Bailey Sessions Papers—Encyclopedia of the Laws of England, 13 vols.—Campbell's Ruling Cases, 26 vols.—Chitty's Statutes, Fifth Edition, 11 vols.—a good Selection of Modern Text-Books—a Series of Hansard's Parliamentary Debates, 330 vols.; also Mahogany and Oak Bookcases and other Office Furniture—Oil Paintings—Mezzotint and other Engravings, &c.
To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 7, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS in all Classes of Literature, including Boydell's Scenery of the River Thames, Coloured Plates, 2 vols.—Westlake's History of Design in Painted Glass, 4 vols.—Eyton's Antiquities of Shropshire, a fine copy, 12 vols. in the Original Parts—Scrope's Art of Deer Stalking and Days of Salmon Fishing, First Editions, 2 vols. original cloth—Pagan's Real Life in London, Coloured Plates, 2 vols., and other First Editions—Richardson's Works, 19 vols.—Editions de Luxe of Shakespeare's Works—Froissart's Chronicles, 6 vols.—Tudor Translations—a few Black-Letter Books—Ninth Edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica—the Century Dictionary, &c.
To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

Rare and Valuable Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., DURING JUNE, rare and valuable BOOKS, including an interesting Copy of Anne Killgrew's Poems, with the rare Portrait—Ackermann's Microcosm of London, Original Edition, 3 vols.—White's Natural History of Selborne, First Edition—Heaton's Furniture and Decoration in England, 2 vols.—Modern Fine-Art and Illustrated Books—Brinkley's History of Japan, 11 vols.—Handsomely Bound Sets of Dickens, Whyte Melville, George Eliot, Conan Doyle, and others—a Collection of Works on Mathematics, &c.
Catalogues are preparing.

Collection of Natural History Specimens.

MR. J. C. STEVENS, of 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., will SELL by AUCTION, on TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, June 6 and 7, at half-past 12 o'clock each day, COLLECTIONS of BRITISH-TAKEN BIRDS' EGGS—fine Lots of Birds set up in Glass Cases, including many rare and curious Pied, White, and other Varieties—Heads and Horns of Animals from Uganda, South Africa, and other Countries—Fossils and Minerals, including some fine Leadhillites—Exotic Lepidoptera—Shells—Cabinets, &c.

On view day prior and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Fishing Tackle—Photographic Cameras, Lenses, &c.—Scientific Instruments.

FRIDAY, June 9, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., a QUANTITY of FISHING RODS and TACKLE of all kinds—Photographic Cameras, Lenses, &c.—Scientific Instruments and Apparatus—and a large quantity of valuable Miscellaneous Property.
On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Books.

WEDNESDAY, June 21, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by AUCTION, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., an important LIBRARY of WORKS on NATURAL HISTORY, comprising Meyer's Coloured Illustrations of British Birds and their Eggs, 7 vols.—Yarrell's History of British Birds, with Manuscript Additions—Lord Lilford's Birds of the British Islands, 7 vols.—British Museum Catalogue of Birds, 26 vols.—The Ibis, a Complete Set—Proceedings of the Zoological Society, 58 vols.—Dresser's Birds of Europe, 9 vols.—Gray's Genera of Birds, 3 vols.—Smith's Illustrations of the Zoology of South Africa, 5 vols.—a Set of Notes and Queries, &c.

Library of the late Rev. H. CLEMENTI-SMITH (by order of the Executors), and other Private Properties.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 7, and Following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS, including Holinshed's Chronicle, 1586—Eusebius, Chronicle, 1518—Parliamentary Debates, 196 vols.—Schreiber's Fairs, 2 vols.—Nash's Mansions, 4 vols.—Viollet-le-Duc, Dictionnaire d'Architecture, 10 vols.—Boydell's Thames, Coloured Plates—Wright's Essex, 2 vols.—Tuer's Bartolozzi, Large Paper—a fine Example of Fifteenth-Century Illuminated Work—First Editions of Tennyson, Byron, Dickens, Thackeray, and other Modern Authors—Works on Travel, Biography, Music, Theology, Science, &c.

Autograph Letters and Documents.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their House, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 8, valuable AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and DOCUMENTS, including some important Examples of Charles Dickens, Thomas Moore, W. H. Ainsworth, Wm. Cowper, Lord Nelson, Queen Victoria, Marie de Medicis, Henri Quatre, John of Saxony (the friend of Luther), Napoleon, Robespierre, Charles V., Charles IX. of France, Henry III. of France, Christina of Sweden, and other Foreign Celebrities—the Original MSS. of some of Ainsworth's Novels—Autographs of Eminent Actors, Divines, Scientists, &c.—a unique Collection relating to Daniel O'Connell—Autographs and Engravings connected with Lord Byron and Newstead Abbey—and other interesting Items.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, S.W.:—

On MONDAY, June 5, and TUESDAY, June 6, at 1 o'clock, OLD FRENCH SNUFF-BOXES and OLD SEVRES and ENGLISH PORCELAIN, the Property of C. H. T. HAWKINS, Esq., deceased.

On TUESDAY, June 6, at 1 o'clock, OLD SPORTING PRINTS and ENGRAVINGS of the EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL.

On WEDNESDAY, June 7, at 1 o'clock, OLD ENGLISH SILVER PLATE.

On WEDNESDAY, June 7, at 2 o'clock, upwards of SIX HUNDRED DOZENS of CHOICE CHAMPAGNES, the Property of the Great Northern Railway Company.

On THURSDAY, June 8, at 1 o'clock, PICTURES by OLD MASTERS.

On THURSDAY, June 8, at 2 o'clock, FINE CHAMPAGNES.

On THURSDAY, June 8, at 3 o'clock, FIFTEEN THOUSAND CIGARS, the Properties of REUBEN D. SASSOON, Esq., deceased, BRUCE DICK, Esq., and others.

THE ELIZABETHAN STAGE SOCIETY.

The Valuable and Artistic COLLECTION of ANTIQUE, HISTORICAL and ALLEGORICAL THEATRICAL COSTUMES of the above Society, designed and produced at great cost by William Poel, Esq., including many Costumes purchased at the Sale of M. Victor Barthe—Armour—Swords—small Library of Rare Books—Carved Oak Elizabethan Bedstead—Coffers—Cabinets—Refectory Table—and other Furniture.

Also

The unique FULL-SIZE MODEL of the OLD FORTUNE PLAYHOUSE, with its Furniture and Working Equipment.

BOREHAM & CO. (of Mowbray House, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.) will SELL EARLY in JULY, at the Atelier, No. 90, College Street, Chelsea, S.W.

Catalogues of the AUCTIONEERS.

AT THE CONDUIT STREET AUCTION GALLERIES.

Rare Tibetan Books—Whistler Etchings—Porcelain, &c.

Two rare Tibetan Works on Buddhism, one being of unusually large dimensions, and comprising 569 leaves, each measuring 25 in. by 7 1/2 in.—a Collection of Japanese Lacquered Ware, Bronzes, and finely carved old Ivory Netsukes and Curios, the Property of a Lady—Burmese Bronzes—a Chinese State Umbrella Cover, elaborately Embroidered—Old English and Continental Decorative Porcelain—Oriental China, Worcester and Spode Painted Dessert Services, an old Armorial Dinner Service and Punch Bowls—two Louis XVI. Clocks, one with horizontal revolving dials—a few choice Early Etchings by Whistler—Lithographic Portraits after Count D'Orsay—Oil Paintings and Miscellaneous, which Messrs.

KNIGHT, FRANK & RUTLEY will SELL by AUCTION at their Great Galleries, 9, Conduit Street, and 23, Maddox Street, W., on WEDNESDAY, June 7, at 1 o'clock precisely. On view two days prior. Catalogues free.

Executors, Solicitors, and Owners may note that these Galleries are open daily to receive Jewellery, Silver, Pictures, Furniture, China, Books, Antiques, and other valuables for Sale by Auction.

BLACKWOOD

For JUNE

CONTAINS

- ADMIRALTY POLICY HISTORICALLY EXAMINED. By the Author of 'A Retrograde Admiralty.'
- CROCODILE-FISHING. By George Maxwell.
- The WOMAN out of SCOTLAND. By Stephen Gwynn.
- A FOWLER'S DAY in the OUTER ISLES. By Capt. Aymer Maxwell.
- The VROUW GROBELAAR'S LEADING CASES. VII. TAGALASH. By Perceval Gibbon.
- ORPHEUS and EURYDICE. By Alfred Noyes.
- RICHARD HARTLEY, PROSPECTOR. By Douglas Blackburn.
- COVENTRY PATMORE. By Frederick Greenwood.
- A STUDY of the RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR. VI. ROJDESTVENSKY'S ARMADA. With Map. By Chasseur.
- MUSINGS WITHOUT METHOD.
- A LEADER of PROMISE. By J. K.
- 'The TIMES' HISTORY of the WAR in SOUTH AFRICA.
- The REORGANISATION of our RECRUITING SYSTEM on a NATIONAL BASIS. By General E. F. Chapman, C.B.

William Blackwood & Sons,
Edinburgh and London.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE

For JUNE.

Beautifully illustrated. 1s. net.

- A VISIT TO WASHINGTON ON THE EVE OF THE CIVIL WAR. By George P. Fisher.
- A DAY AMONG THE QUANTOCK HILLS. By Henry van Dyke. Illustrated.
- THE EVERETTS IN ENGLAND. Extracts from the Letters and Diaries of Edward Everett's Daughters during his Ministry, 1841-45.
- THE USE OF DOGS IN WAR. By Lieut. C. N. Barney. Illustrated.
- AND MANY SHORT STORIES.

London: Wm. Heinemann, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

NOW READY.

THE MONTHLY REVIEW.

Edited by

CHARLES HANBURY-WILLIAMS.

No. 57. JUNE, 1905. 2s. 6d. net.

- "EFFICIENCY." "Conservative."
- The GODDESS of WISDOM and LADY CAROLINE LAMB. R. E. Prothero, M.V.O.
- The LEPROUS LIKENESS. Perceval Gibbon.
- GIBRALTAR. Charles Bill, M.P.
- MEDIAEVAL GARDENS (with Illustrations). Mrs. Kemp-Welch.
- IDEALISM in PROTECTION. W. R. Malcolm.
- MEDICAL TREATMENT for the WORKING CLASSES. Helen G. Nussey, Almoner of Westminster Hospital.
- AN EMIGRATION EXPERIMENT. J. Hall Richardson.
- AN IDEAL CRAFTSMAN. Walter de la Mare.
- EDWARD DOWSON. Forrest Reid.
- QUAINT MEMORIES. Mrs. Hessey.
- The HOUSE of HOHENZOLLERN. Louis Elkind.
- PSYCHE. Sir Frank T. Marzials, C.B.
- BEAUJEU (Chapters XX.—XXIII). H. C. Bailey.

John Murray, Albemarle Street, W.

ANGLO-ROMAN PAPERS.

1. The ENGLISH PALACE in ROME.
  2. The ELDEST NATURAL SON of CHARLES II.
- MEMOIRS of CARDINAL ERSKINE, Papal Envoy to the Court of George III.

By W. MAZIERE BRADY.

Price 6s. post free

Copies of above may still be had of Alex. Gardner, Publisher, Paisley, or through any Bookseller.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY and AFTER.

JUNE.

- A POLITICAL FABIAN MAXIMUS. By Wilfrid Ward.
- IS PARLIAMENT a MERE CROWD? By Sir Martin Conway.
- The SCANDAL of UNIVERSITY EDUCATION in IRELAND. By Sir George T. Lambert, C.B.
- UGHT PUBLIC SCHOOLMASTERS to be TAUGHT to TEACH? By the Hon. and Rev. Canon Lyttelton, Head Master of Haileybury
- The FATE of OLIVER CROMWELL'S REMAINS. By the Right Rev. Bishop Welldon.
- The WHITE PERIL. By George Lynch.
- The ETHOLOGICAL SOCIETY and 'The REVIVAL of PHRENOLOGY.' By John Fyvie.
- SOME ROYAL LOVE-LETTERS. By Miss Charlotte Fortesene Yonge.
- ANGLICAN STARVATION and a LIBERAL DIEF. By the Rev. Hubert Handley.
- FESTUM STULTORUM. By Mrs. Villiers Hemming.
- The AUTOBIOGRAPHY of a WANDERING FRIAR. By G. G. Coulton.
- OFFICIAL POOR RELIEF in RUSSIA. By Miss Edith Sellers.
- The THREE K's. By Lady Grove.
- The DRINK MONOPOLY and the NATIONAL REVENUE. By Edmund Robertson, K.C. M.P.
- The POLITICAL SITUATION. By Herbert Paul.

London: Spottiswoode & Co., Ltd., 5, New Street Square.

2s. 6d.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW

For JUNE.

2s. 6d.

NOW READY, contains:—

- The REGENERATION of PARLIAMENTS. By the Right Hon. Leonard Courtney.—TEN YEARS' TORY RULE in IRELAND. By Thomas Lough, M.P.

VIVISECTION AND PROGRESS.

By GREVILLE MACDONALD, M.D.

- DOMINAE SCHOLAE. By Mrs. Alfred Earle.—GERMANY and her SUBJECTED RACES: a Struggle for the Soil. By Erik Givskov.—WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY? By Prof. S. McComb.

THE ARGUMENT FOR PROTECTION

By HILAIRE BELLOC.

RUSKIN'S VIEWS OF LITERATURE.

By R. WARWICK BOND.

- TITLED COLONIALS & TITLED AMERICANS. By Colonial.—FOREIGN AFFAIRS. By Dr. E. J. Dillon.—SOME RECENT BOOKS. By "A Reader."

London: Horace Marshall & Son.

WALL PAPERS by VARIOUS ARTISTS; The Competition Designs for King's College Hospital; Further Notes on Royal Academy Pictures; Exhibition of Italo-Byzantine Art; Questions of Quantity Surveying; Types of Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column); The Hall, Hengrave, Suffolk, as Restored; New Buildings for the London Salvage Corps, &c.—See the BUILDER of June 3 (4d.); by post, 4½d.).—Through any Newsagent; or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

NOTICE.—The REVELL COMPANY
will publish NEXT WEEK
CHARLES M. SHELDON'S Story of Christian Socialism, entitled,

MARK BURNS' MANUSCRIPT

or, the Heart of the World.

Price 3s. 6d. net (postage 4d.).

Nothing that the author has written since his remarkable little volume 'In His Steps,' has presented with such force and conviction—howbeit in story form—the great principles for which he stands to-day a recognized exponent. With a plot of intense interest, the author's purpose is only the more effectively gained.

DR. GULICK'S WORKS ON THE JAPANESE.
THE EVOLUTION OF THE JAPANESE.

A Study of their Characteristics. By SIDNEY L. GULICK, M.A. 7s. 6d. net (postage 5d.).

"Singularly opportune.....a very valuable book."

Guardian.

THE WHITE PERIL IN THE FAR EAST.

A Study of the Ethical and International Significance of the Russo-Japanese War. By SIDNEY L. GULICK, M.A. Price 3s. 6d. net (postage 4d.).

The conclusions presented were gained from extended intimate acquaintance and conversation with Japanese men of affairs, with whom the author was in daily contact.

NEW FORCES IN OLD CHINA.

By ARTHUR J. BROWN, Author of 'The New Era in the Philippines.' Illustrated. 5s. net (postage 4d.).

"Profoundly interesting. Will well repay careful study."

Spectator.

21, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.;
and 100, PRINCES STREET, EDINBURGH.

A LIST OF

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S STANDARD WORKS.

STUDIES in COLONIAL NATIONALISM. By RICHARD JEBB. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

The EAST AFRICA PROTECTORATE By Sir CHARLES ELIOT, K.C.M.G., late H.M. Commissioner for the Protectorate. With Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

TURKEY in EUROPE. By "Odysseus" (Sir CHARLES ELIOT, K.C.M.G.). Demy 8vo, 16s.

IMPERIUM et LIBERTAS: a History of the Growth of the Imperial Idea. By BERNARD HOLLAND. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

ECONOMIC METHOD and ECONOMIC FALLACIES. By W. W. CARLILE, M.A. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

STUDIES in VIRGIL. By T. R. GLOVER, Author of 'Life and Letters of the Fourth Century.' Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

The HOUSE of SELEUCUS. By E. R. BEVAN, M.A. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 30s. net.

STYLE. By Walter Raleigh, Professor of English Literature in the University of Oxford. Fifth Impression. Crown 8vo, 5s.

MILTON. By Walter Raleigh. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

WORDSWORTH. By Walter Raleigh. Crown 8vo, 6s.

OLD ENGLISH GLASSES. By A. HARTSHORNE, F.S.A. With Hundreds of Illustrations. Super-royal 4to, 3l. 3s. net.

ALESSANDRO SCARLATTI: His Life and Works. By E. J. DENT. Royal 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

ASTRONOMICAL DISCOVERY. By H. H. TURNER, D.Sc., Savilian Professor of Astronomy in the University of Oxford. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

An INTRODUCTION to the THEORY of OPTICS. By ARTHUR SCHUSTER, Ph.D. F.R.S., Professor of Physics, Manchester University. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

The BECQUEREL RAYS and the PROPERTIES of RADIUM. By the Hon. R. J. STRUTT. Demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

The CHEMICAL SYNTHESIS of VITAL PRODUCTS and the INTER-RELATIONS BETWEEN ORGANIC COMPOUNDS. By Prof. R. MELDOLA, F.R.S. Vol. I. Super-royal 8vo, 21s. net.

The BALANCING of ENGINES. By W. R. DALBY, M.A. B.Sc. M.Inst.C.E. M.I.M.E., Professor of Engineering, City and Guilds of London Central Technical College. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

ENGLISH ESTATE FORESTRY. By A. C. FORBES, Lecturer in Forestry, Armstrong College, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

The PRINCIPLES of LANDED ESTATE MANAGEMENT. By HENRY HERBERT SMITH, Agent to the Marquis of Lansdowne, K.G. Demy 8vo, 16s.

FOOD and the PRINCIPLES of DIETETICS. By ROBERT HUTCHISON, M.D. Edin. F.R.C.P. Sixth Edition. Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

The EVOLUTION THEORY. By AUGUST WEISMANN. Translated by Prof. J. ARTHUR THOMSON and MARGARET THOMSON. With numerous Illustrations and Coloured Plates. 2 vols. royal 8vo, 32s. net.

HABIT and INSTINCT. By C. Lloyd MORGAN, LL.D. F.R.S. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

The CHANCES of DEATH, and other Studies in Evolution. By KARL PEARSON, F.R.S. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 25s. net.

Kindly write for latest Catalogues.

London:

EDWARD ARNOLD, 41 and 43, Maddox Street, W.

LOVELL REEVE & CO'S

NEW AND STANDARD WORKS.

NEW SERIES (THE FOURTH), PART VI. 3s. 6d. net.

The BOTANICAL MAGAZINE. Hand-Coloured Figures with Descriptions, Structural and Historical, of New and Rare Plants, suitable for the Garden, Stove, or Conservatory. Edited by Sir WM. T. THISELTON-DYER, K.C.M.G. F.R.S., &c., Director of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew. Monthly, with 6 Hand-Coloured Plates, 3s. 6d. Annual Subscription, 42s. net.

NOW READY, NEW EDITION, REVISED AND MUCH ENLARGED.

FLORA of HAMPSHIRE, including the Isle of Wight. A List of the Flowering Plants and Ferns found in the County of Southampton, with Localities of the less common Species. By F. TOWNSEND, M.A. F.L.S. New Edition. With Enlarged Coloured Map mounted on linen, and 2 Plates, 1 Coloured. 21s. net.

The HEPATICÆ of the BRITISH ISLES: Figures and Descriptions of all known British Species. By W. H. PEARSON. 2 vols. 228 Plates, 7l. 10s. net Plain; 11l. 2s. 6d. net Coloured.

HANDBOOK of the BRITISH FLORA. By G. BENTHAM, F.R.S. Revised by Sir J. D. HOOKER, C.B. F.R.S. Eighth Edition. 9s. net.

ILLUSTRATIONS of the BRITISH FLORA. Drawn by W. H. FITCH, F.L.S., and W. G. SMITH, F.L.S. 1,315 Wood Engravings. Sixth Edition. 9s. net.

FLORA of TROPICAL AFRICA. By D. OLIVER, F.R.S. Vols. I. to III. 20s. each net. The CONTINUATION, Edited by Sir W. T. THISELTON-DYER, F.R.S. Vol. IV. Section I. 30s. net. Vol. V. 25s. 6d. net. Vol. VII. 27s. 6d. net. Vol. VIII. 25s. 6d. net. Published under the authority of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

VOL. IV. SECTION I. PART I. 8s.

FLORA CAPENSIS: a Systematic Description of the Plants of the Cape Colony, Caffraria, and Port Natal. Vols. I. to III., by W. H. HARVEY and O. W. SONDER, 20s. each net. The CONTINUATION, Edited by Sir W. T. THISELTON-DYER, F.R.S. Vol. IV. Section II. 24s. net. Vol. V. Part I. 9s. net. Vol. VI. 24s. net. Vol. VII. 33s. net. Published under the authority of the Government of the Cape of Good Hope and Natal.

FLORA of BRITISH INDIA. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, C.B. G.C.S.I. F.R.S., &c., assisted by various Botanists. 7 vols. 12l. net.

HANDBOOK of the NEW ZEALAND FLORA: a Systematic Description of the Native Plants of New Zealand and the Chatham, Kermadec's, Lord Auckland's, Campbell's, and Macquarrie's Islands. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, G.C.S.I. F.R.S. 42s. net.

FLORA AUSTRALIENSIS: a Description of the Plants of the Australian Territory. By GEORGE BENTHAM, F.R.S., assisted by FERDINAND MUELLER, F.R.S. 7 vols. 7l. 4s.

FLORA of the BRITISH WEST INDIAN ISLANDS. By Dr. GRISEBACH, F.L.S. 1 vol. 42s. net.

FLORA of WEST YORKSHIRE: with an Account of the Climatology and Lithology in connection therewith. By FREDERIC ARNOLD LEES, M.R.C.S. Eng. L.R.C.P. Lond. 8vo, with Coloured Map, 21s. net.

The NARCISSUS: its History and Culture. By F. W. BURBIDGE, F.L.S. With a Scientific Review of the Entire Genus by J. G. BAKER, F.R.S. F.L.S. With 48 beautifully Coloured Plates. 30s. net.

BRITISH FERNS. By M. PLUES. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

BRITISH GRASSES. By M. PLUES. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

HANDBOOK of BRITISH MOSSES. By the Rev. M. J. BERKELEY, M.A. F.L.S. Second Edition. 24 Coloured Plates. 21s. net.

SYNOPSIS of BRITISH MOSSES. By C. P. HOBKIRK, F.L.S. Revised Edition. 6s. 6d. net.

The BRITISH MOSS-FLORA. By R. BRAITHWAITE, M.D. F.L.S. Vol. I., with 15 finely executed Plates, 50s. Vol. II., with 39 Plates, 12s. 6d. Parts XVII. to XXII. each 6s. net. Part XXIII., completing the work, 9s. net. [Shortly.]

BRITISH FUNGI, PHYCOMYCETES, and USTILA- GINEÆ. By GEORGE NASSEE. 8 Plates. 6s. 6d. net.

PHYCOLOGIA BRITANNICA; or, History of British Seaweeds. By Dr. W. H. HARVEY, F.R.S. New Edition. Royal 8vo, 4 vols. 360 Coloured Plates. 7l. 10s. net.

PHYCOLOGIA AUSTRALICA: a History of Australian Seaweeds. By Dr. W. H. HARVEY, F.R.S. Royal 8vo, 5 vols. 300 Coloured Plates. 7l. 13s. net.

Complete in 1 vol. 4to, with 2 Structural and 60 Coloured Plates, cloth, gilt top, 6l. 15s. net.

MONOGRAPH of the MEMBRACIDÆ. By GEORGE BOWDLER BUCKTON, F.R.S. F.L.S. F.E.S., to which is added a Paper entitled 'Suggestions as to the Meaning of the Shapes and Colours of the Membracide in the Struggle for Existence,' by EDWARD B. POULTON, D.Sc. M.A. Hon.L.L.D. (Princeton), F.R.S., &c., Hope Professor of Zoology in the University of Oxford.

Part CXIV. 4 Coloured Plates, 5s. net.

The LEPIDOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By CHARLES G. BARRETT, F.E.S. Vols. I. to IX. each 12s.; Large Edition, Vol. I. with 40 Coloured Plates, 53s.; Vols. II. to IX. each, with 48 Coloured Plates, 63s. net.

LABELLING LIST of the BRITISH MACRO- LEPIDOPTERA, as arranged in 'Lepidoptera of the British Islands.' By CHARLES G. BARRETT, F.E.S. 1s. 6d. net.

Part LXX. 8 Coloured Plates, 15s.

LEPIDOPTERA INDICA. By F. MOORE, F.Z.S. F.E.S. Vols. I. to V. each, with 96 Coloured Plates, 9l. 5s. cloth; 9l. 15s. half-morocco. Parts LXI. to LXIX. each 15s. net.

The LEPIDOPTERA of CEYLON. By F. MOORE, F.Z.S. 3 vols. medium 4to, 215 Coloured Plates, cloth, gilt tops, 21l. 12s. net. Published under the auspices of the Government of Ceylon.

TERACOLUS: a Monograph of the Genus. By E. M. BOWDLER SHARPE. Parts I. to XI. 4to, each with 4 Coloured Plates, 7s. 6d. net.

The LARVÆ of the BRITISH LEPIDOPTERA and their FOOD PLANTS. By OWEN S. WILSON. With Life-Sized Figures Drawn and Coloured from Nature by ELEANORA WILSON. 40 Coloured Plates. 63s. net.

The HYMENOPTERA ACULEATA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Complete with 3 Plates, 16s. Large-Paper Edition, with 51 Coloured Plates, 68s. net.

The HEMIPTERA HETEROPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Complete, with a Structural Plate, 14s. Large Edition, with 31 Coloured Plates, 48s. net.

The HEMIPTERA HOMOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By JAMES EDWARDS, F.E.S. Complete, with 2 Structural Plates, 12s. Large Edition, with 28 Coloured Plates, 43s. net.

The COLEOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A. F.L.S. Complete in 5 vols., with 2 Structural Plates, 4l. Large Edition, with 180 Coloured Plates, 14l. net.

A CATALOGUE of the BRITISH COLEOPTERA. By D. SHARPE, M.A. F.R.S., and W. W. FOWLER, M.A., 1s. 6d.; or printed on one side for Labels, 2s. 6d. net.

The BUTTERFLIES of EUROPE. Described and Figured by H. C. LANG, M.D. F.L.S. With 82 Coloured Plates, containing upwards of 900 Figures. 2 vols. 3l. 18s. net.

BRITISH INSECTS. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 12s. net.

BRITISH BEETLES. By E. C. RYE. New Edition. Revised by the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A. F.L.S. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

BRITISH BEES. By W. E. SHUCKARD. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

BRITISH BUTTERFLIES and MOTHS. By H. T. STAINTON. Second Edition. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

BRITISH SPIDERS. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

FOREIGN FINCHES in CAPTIVITY. By ARTHUR G. BUTLER, Ph.D. F.L.S. F.Z.S. F.E.S. With 60 Plates, beautifully Coloured by Hand. Royal 4to, cloth, 4l. 14s. 6d. net.

BRITISH ZOOPHYTES. By A. S. PENNINGTON, F.L.S. 24 Plates. 9s. net.

ELEMENTS of CONCHOLOGY: an Introduction to the Natural History of Shells and of the Animals which Form Them. By LOVELL REEVE, F.L.S. 2 vols. 62 Coloured Plates. 2l. 16s. net.

CONCHOLOGIA ICONICA; or, Figures and Descriptions of the Shells of Mollusks, with Remarks on their Affinities, Synonymy, and Geographical Distribution. By LOVELL REEVE, F.L.S., and G. B. SOWERBY, F.L.S. Complete in 20 vols. 4to, with 2,727 Coloured Plates, half-calf, 178l. net.

A Detailed List of Monographs and Volumes may be had.

LOVELL REEVE & CO., LIMITED, Publishers to the Home, Colonial, and Indian Governments,
6, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

Messrs. CHATTO & WINDUS have pleasure in announcing that they will shortly commence the publication of

A COLLECTED EDITION OF MR. SWINBURNE'S TRAGEDIES

IN FIVE CROWN 8vo VOLUMES, price 6s. net each Volume, or 30s. net for the Five Volumes. Subscriptions can be accepted only for complete Sets. The First Volume, containing the Two Plays THE QUEEN-MOTHER and ROSAMOND, will be ready immediately. The Paper, Printing, and Binding of the Volumes will be uniform with those of the COLLECTED EDITION of the POETICAL WORKS. ONE HUNDRED LARGE-PAPER COPIES (demy 8vo) will be printed for sale at FIVE GUINEAS net the Set.

The Contents of the Volumes will be as follows:—

Vol. 1. THE QUEEN-MOTHER—ROSAMOND.
Vol. 2. CHASTELARD—BOTHWELL, Acts I. and II.
Vol. 3. BOTHWELL, Act III., IV., and V.

Vol. 4. MARY STUART—APPENDIX: I. Mary Queen of Scots; II. Her Character.
Vol. 5. LOCRINE—THE SISTERS—MARINO FALIERO—ROSAMUND, QUEEN OF THE LOMBARDS.

Messrs. CHATTO & WINDUS have also pleasure in announcing that they have in the press THREE NEW VOLUMES by

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

ENTITLED RESPECTIVELY

1. ESSAYS OF TRAVEL.
2. TALES AND FANTASIES.
3. ESSAYS IN THE ART OF WRITING.

Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s. each.

None of the contents of these three volumes have before been printed in book form, excepting in the EDINBURGH EDITION, of which only 1,000 copies were printed. Copies of this edition very rarely occur for sale, and then only at a greatly enhanced price.

The following is a list of the Essays and Stories to be included in the Volumes:—

ESSAYS OF TRAVEL.

The AMATEUR EMIGRANT: FROM the CLYDE to SANDY HOOK—COCKERMOUTH and KESWICK—AN AUTUMN EFFECT—A WINTER'S WALK in CARRICK and GALLOWAY—FOREST NOTES—A MOUNTAIN TOWN in FRANCE—RANDOM MEMORIES: ROSA QUO LOCORUM—The IDEAL HOUSE—DAVOS in WINTER—HEALTH and MOUNTAINS—ALPINE DIVERSIONS—The STIMULATION of the ALPS—ROADS—ON the ENJOYMENT of UNPLEASANT PLACES.

TALES AND FANTASIES.

The MISADVENTURES of JOHN NICHOLSON—The BODY-SNATCHER—The STORY of a LIE.

ESSAYS IN THE ART OF WRITING.

ON SOME TECHNICAL ELEMENTS of STYLE in LITERATURE—The MORALITY of the PROFESSION of LETTERS—BOOKS WHICH HAVE INFLUENCED ME—A NOTE on REALISM—MY FIRST BOOK: 'TREASURE ISLAND'—The GENESIS of 'The MASTER of BALLANTRAE'—PREFACE to 'The MASTER of BALLANTRAE.'

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

STINGAREE. By E. W. Hornung, Author of 'A Bride from the Bush.'

"An inspiring and vigorous piece of work, lively enough to gladden the reader, and written well enough to pacify the critic."—Morning Leader.

DON TARQUINIO. By F. R. Rolfe, Author of 'Hadrian the Seventh.'

"Quite a brilliant tour de force.....Quite bold at times, and has the irresponsible high spirits of the youth of the world.....This tale might have come out of Boccaccio."—Daily Mail.
"A novel of exceptional interest and dramatic power.....well worth reading. We all have had experience more or less of some crowded hour, but the story of this Roman patrician's 'fortunate day' has in all probability no equal. The reader partial to action and adventure will find 'Don Tarquinio' enthralling. A delightful love affair is deftly interwoven."—Birmingham Post.

BALIOI GARTH. By Algernon Gissing, Author of 'A Secret of the North Sea.'

"A story of no common skill in construction, and no ordinary intensity of interest. The book shows its writer at his best in a characteristic example of his talent, and will no doubt be widely read."—Scotsman.

THE MISSING ELIZABETH. By Adeline Sergeant, Author of 'The Story of a Penitent Soul.'

"Miss Sergeant certainly had an inexhaustibly fertile invention.....The two girls are both fresh and attractive.....Miss Sergeant's novels were always good, and this is no exception to the rule."—Daily Graphic.

THE ERROR OF HER WAYS. By Frank Barrett, Author of 'Fettered for Life.'

The PHANTOM TORPEDO-BOATS. By Allen Upward. The MILLIONAIRE BABY. By Anna Katharine Green.

The YOUNGEST MISS BROWN. By Florence Warden. A SPOILER of MEN. By Richard Marsh. [Second Impression.]

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS.

CLOCCLO. By Gyp. Translated by Nora M. Statham.

WHEN A GIRL'S ENGAGED. By Hope Merrick.

"An entertaining tale, with bright and amusing dialogue."—Times.

THE POET AND THE PIERROT. By Dorothea Deakin.

"Simply delightful.....The Pierrot is a prize."—World.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLAND.

By HERBERT PAUL. In 5 vols. Vol. III.—From the DEATH of LORD PALMERSTON in 1865 to 1876. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

* * Previously published, Vols. I. and II., 8s. 6d. net each.

LIFE, LETTERS, AND LITERARY REMAINS OF

J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

Edited by his WIFE. In 2 vols. illustrated, extra crown 8vo, 17s. net.

A CHAPTER IN THE HISTORY OF ANNOTATION,

Being SCHOLIA ARISTOPHANICA. Vol. III. By WILLIAM G. RUTHERFORD. 8vo, 25s. net.

* * Previously published, Vols. I. and II., 50s. net.

A GRAMMAR OF GREEK ART

By PERCY GARDNER, Litt.D., Lincoln and Merton Professor of Classical Archaeology in the University of Oxford. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

[Archæological Handbooks.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Professor Gardner writes from full knowledge in a bright and engaging style. One could not wish for a better introduction to the subject. The illustrations are numerous and excellent."

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.

NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

ITALIAN BACKGROUNDS.

By EDITH WHARTON. Illustrated by E. C. PEIXOTTO. Royal 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THE PRINCIPLES OF ECONOMICS

A Fragment of a Treatise on the Industrial Mechanism of Society, and other Papers. By the late W. STANLEY JEVONS, LL.D. M.A. F.R.S. With a Preface by HENRY HIGGS. 8vo, 10s. net.

COMPATRIOTS' CLUB LECTURES.

First Series. Edited by the Committee of the Compatriots' Club. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"The editions are a miracle of elegance and compactness."

POCKET EDITIONS

OF THE NOVELS OF

SCOTT, DICKENS, & THACKERAY.

PRINTED ON INDIA PAPER.

Feap. 8vo, limp cloth, gilt tops, 2s. net; limp leather, gilt tops, 3s. net each.

LATEST ADDITIONS.

ROB ROY. With 10 Illustrations.

MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT. With 41 Illustrations.

The HISTORY of HENRY ESMOND.

MENDELISM.

By R. C. PUNNETT, Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. 16mo, cloth, 2s. net.

A Brief Account of Mendel and his Experiments with Plant Hybridization, and his Discovery in Heredity.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

Messrs. HURST & BLACKETT beg to announce the publication of Mr. F. A. MCKENZIE'S new work in 1 vol. demy 8vo, with Illustrations, Plans, and a Map, price 10s. 6d. net.

FROM TOKYO TO TIFLIS.

Uncensored Letters from the War. By F. A. MCKENZIE, Special Correspondent of the 'Daily Mail.'

The Second Edition of Mr. PERCEVAL LANDON'S great work on Tibet, entitled LHASA, is now ready in 2 vols., with all the original Illustrations, and the new Official Survey of Lhasa and Neighbourhood, price 2l. 2s. net.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 5s.

The RUSSIAN NAVY in the RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR. By Capt. N. KLADO, of the Imperial Russian Navy.

"An interesting book, and proof of its author's astuteness and ability."—Standard.

VOLUME II. of FRIEDBERGER and FROHNER'S VETERINARY PATHOLOGY, Translated by Capt. HAYES and Edited by JOHN DUNSTAN, M.R.C.V.S., price 10s. 6d. net.

NEW NOVEL BY ALICE M. DIEHL.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

BREAD UPON the WATERS. By ALICE M. DIEHL, Author of 'The Garden of Eden,' &c.

NEW NOVEL BY MADAME ALBANESI.

In 1 vol. 6s.

MARIAN SAX. By Madame Albanesi, Author of 'Capricious Caroline,' 'Susannah and One Elder,' &c.

"This well-written story."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"This novel, like everything from the same pen, is admirably written and instinct with dramatic feeling."

Dundee Advertiser.

"The story is gracefully written and constructed."

Scotsman.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

A GENDARME of the KING. Being the Experiences of the Laird of Lindourle with the Great Frederick in the Seven Years' War. By PHILIP L. STEVENSON.

"Narrated with plenty of movement and with a graphic picture of Frederick himself."—Times.

"Major Stevenson has managed to conjure up the real spirit of life in Frederick's Courts and camps."

Fall Mall Gazette.

NEW NOVEL BY EDMUND DOWNEY.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

DOROTHY TUKE: a Tale of the Sea. By EDMUND DOWNEY, Author of 'Through Green Glasses,' &c.

"This novel makes admirable reading. It deserves to be very popular and I think it will be."—Daily Mail.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

DORRIEN of CRANSTON. By BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of 'The Induna's Wife,' &c.

NEW VOLUME OF

HURST & BLACKETT'S ATHLETIC SERIES.

DIVERSIONS DAY BY DAY. By E. F. BENSON and EUSTACE MILES. 1 vol. 4s.

NEW SIXPENNY EDITIONS.

In medium 8vo, illustrated covers.

GOD'S PRISONER. By JOHN OXENHAM.

A KING'S WOMAN. By KATHERINE TYNAN.

HER OWN PEOPLE. By B. M. CROKER.

The MAN from DOWNING STREET. By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

MR. JOHN LANE will publish on TUESDAY, June 6, Mr. G. K. CHESTERTON'S New Volume, entitled 'HERETICS,' among whom will be found Mr. GEORGE MOORE, Mr. GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, W. B. YEATS, RUDYARD KIPLING, OMAR KHAYYAM, &c.

HERETICS.
HERETICS.
HERETICS.

HERETICS.
HERETICS.
HERETICS.

By GILBERT K. CHESTERTON.

By GILBERT K. CHESTERTON.

By GILBERT K. CHESTERTON.

READY AT ALL LIBRARIES, BOOKSELLERS, AND RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS. 'HERETICS,' BY GILBERT K. CHESTERTON, AUTHOR OF 'THE NAPOLEON OF NOTTING HILL.' CROWN 8vo, PRICE 5s. NET.

NAPOLEON: THE FIRST PHASE.

Some Chapters on the Boyhood and Youth of Napoleon I. 1769-93. With Portraits. By OSCAR BROWNING. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

EVENING STANDARD.—"A wonderful story."

MEMOIRS OF A ROYAL CHAPLAIN, 1729-63.

The Correspondence of EDMUND PYLE, D.D., Chaplain in Ordinary to GEORGE II, with SAMUEL KERRICH, D.D., Vicar of Dersingham and Rector of Wolferton and West Newton. Annotated and Edited by ALBERT HARTSHORNE. Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A really remarkable series of family letters."

RIFLE AND ROMANCE IN THE INDIAN JUNGLE:

Being the Record of Thirteen Years of Indian Jungle Life. By Capt. A. I. R. GLASFURD (Indian Army). With 54 Illustrations by the Author and Reproductions from Photographs. Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

DAILY MAIL.—"Extremely interesting.....The narrative is fresh and engrossing."

THE CREED OF CHRIST.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

SPECTATOR.—"A really remarkable and original book."

PHASES OF MODERN MUSIC.

Strauss—MacDowell—Elgar—Loeffler—Mascagni—Grieg—Cornelius—Wagner. 'Parsifal' and its Significance. By LAWRENCE GILMAN. Small 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

WHAT IS PHILOSOPHY?

By EDMOND HOLMES, Author of 'The Silence of Love,' &c. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

MY GARDEN IN THE CITY OF GARDENS.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

LOVE'S JOURNEY AND OTHER POEMS.

By ETHEL CLIFFORD, Author of 'Songs of Dreams,' ONLOOKER.—"Delicately beautiful throughout."

PEACE AND OTHER POEMS.

By ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER BENSON. Uniform with 'Lord Vyet,' 'The Professor,' &c. Feap. 8vo, 5s. net.

GLOBE.—"There is real musical charm."

THE POEMS OF ERNEST DOWSON.

The Collected Edition of Dowson's Poems, containing a Memoir by ARTHUR SYMONS. Illustrations and Cover Design by AUBREY BEARDSLEY and Portrait by WILLIAM ROTHENSTEIN. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

MR. W. J. LOCKE'S NEW NOVEL.

THE MORALS OF MARCUS ORDEYNE.

MR. L. F. AUSTIN in the DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Mr. Locke succeeds, indeed, in every crisis of this most original story....The book has great literary charm, and is full of humour and humanity."

THE MORALS OF MARCUS ORDEYNE.

LITERARY WORLD.—"Carlotta, the most remarkable heroine we remember to have encountered in recent fiction."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Brightly written, clever and cynical."

THE MORALS OF MARCUS ORDEYNE.

MR. HAMILTON FYFE in the EVENING NEWS.—"I shall be surprised if in a few weeks' time everybody is not reading and laughing over 'The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne,' and telling all their friends to read it."

By WILLIAM J. LOCKE,

Author of 'Derelicts,' 'Where Love Is,' 'The Usurper,' &c.

Crown 8vo, price 6s.

WIDDICOMBE: a Novel.

By M. P. WILLCOCKS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A PRINCE TO ORDER: a Romance.

By C. S. WAYNE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

JOHN LANE, Publisher, London and New York.

SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|  | PAGE    |
|--|---------|
| THE BOOK OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE ... ..  | 679     |
| LETTERS OF THE LAMBS ... ..  | 680     |
| THE AUTHOR OF 'JOHN INGLESANT' ... ..  | 683     |
| NEW NOVELS (The Red Cravat; Sandy; The Tyranny of the Dark; A Prima Donna's Romance; The Silver Key; The Rose Brocade; Sins of the City; A Gendarme of the King; Dorothy Tuke; Mr. Chippendale of Port Welcome; Tolla the Courtesan; Les Nuages) ... ..  | 684-686 |
| SCHOOL-BOOKS ... ..  | 686     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (With the Russians in Manchuria; The Science of War; Political Progress of the Nineteenth Century; The Earl of Elgin; How Canada was Held for the Empire; La Question d'Egypte; The Memoirs of Constantine Dix; On the Hop; Railways and their Rates; The "Standard Library") ... .. | 687-689 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..   | 689     |
| THE HARVARD MEMORIAL WINDOW AT ST. SAVIOUR'S; TWO IDENTIFICATIONS IN GRAY'S LETTERS; 'THE FAIR JILT'; A LYKE-WAKE DIRGE; 'DICTIONARY OF INDIAN BIOGRAPHY'; CANNING; SALE OF SHAKSPEAREANA ... ..   | 690-692 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..   | 692     |
| SCIENCE—METAPSYCHICAL PHENOMENA; THE ELECTRIC CONSTITUTION OF MATTER; PETRARCH'S GEOGRAPHY; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..   | 693-695 |
| FINE ARTS—THE ROYAL ACADEMY AND ITS MEMBERS; TWO EXHIBITIONS; THE LOUIS HUTH ENGRAVINGS; SALES; GOSSIP ... ..  | 696-698 |
| MUSIC—TRISTAN; TANNHAUSER; RIGOLETTO; DIE MEISTERSINGER; L'AMICO FRITZ; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..  | 698-699 |
| DRAMA—HAWTHORNE, U.S.A.; BEATRICE; GOSSIP ... ..   | 699-700 |

LITERATURE

The Book of the Spiritual Life. By the late Lady Dilke. With a Memoir of the Author by the Right Hon. Sir Charles W. Dilke, Bart., M.P. (Murray.)

Taine, in the very interesting third volume of his correspondence, which his widow published a few days ago, relates how he spent the "Semaine Sanglante" of 1871 in England, whither he had gone to fulfil an engagement to lecture at Oxford. He had witnessed in Paris the first weeks of the Commune, and had only left Versailles on May 19th, just when the worst horrors of the insurrection had commenced. The prevailing note of his daily letters to his young wife is the contrast between the scenes of desolation and tumult he had left behind in France and the peaceful calm of the classic groves and ancient quadrangles of Oxford. Welcomed with sympathetic warmth by the leading members of the University as an honoured visitor from a land ravaged by war and torn by revolution, he seems to have found his chief consolation in the society of "une toute jeune femme, charmante, gracieuse, à visage frais et presque mutin, dans le plus joli nid de vieille architecture, avec lierre et grands arbres." It was the Rector's lodge at Lincoln College and its young mistress that the French philosopher so described, writing the day after he had heard the news of the burning of the Tuileries and the Hôtel de Ville. Again and again he returned to this quiet corner of old Oxford to converse with "cette jeune femme de vingt-six ans" (she was actually a few years older, but to the end she always looked younger than her age), "passionnée pour toutes les occupations d'esprit...très versée dans la peinture, connaît particulièrement la peinture française moderne, travaille huit ou dix heures par jour. Cette jolie jeune Mme. Pattison est le leading mind de la société féminine d'Oxford dans le domaine de la littérature et des arts"; and again, "Je la crois véritablement érudite sur les beaux arts de notre Renaissance."

If we have quoted these appreciations of Taine, which have just been given to the French public, it is for two reasons. In the first place, they have appeared opportunely to corroborate the highest tributes to the intellectual faculties of the subject of the memoir before us, paid in these pages by a hand which has no right to be impartial. They are the testimony of the most fastidious and the most austere critic France has produced for a century. Taine, unlike many of his learned compatriots, was incapable of flattering gallantry, and though he could not help recognizing the grace and charm of the lady, he would not have credited her with erudition, in matters wherein his own was profound, had she not deserved it. At that moment she had not reached the half-way house of her life; and when it is remembered that for thirty-three years more she continued to cultivate her always maturing powers by dint of labour which her biographer rightly calls "Benedictine," it is clear that the most appreciative pages of this memoir understate rather than exaggerate her lightly borne learning and her intellectual vigour.

In the second place, Taine's description of her as the "leading mind" of the feminine society of Oxford meant a great deal more in 1871 than it would mean now. Oxford was then in a transitional state, which lasted but a few years. The University Commission had done its iconoclastic work, but its results were as yet not obtrusively evident. Fellows were allowed to marry, but the collegiate life of the Common Room still flourished, purged of its grosser elements, and the resident graduates had not their domestic lives organized on the lines of those of connubial men of business inhabiting suburban villas. As a rule, the only married member of a college was its head. Hence the wives and daughters of certain professors, constituted the entire feminine society of the University, which contained not a few persons of wide cultivation or of social charm, such as the sister of Henry Smith, who is often mentioned in this memoir. Nowadays, what with the ever-multiplying progeny of college dons and its corollary, the invasion of Oxford by the higher education of women, "cultured" females are as plentiful there as are milliners in Paris, and the result is a society the "leading mind" of which would not have found favour in the eyes of a French philosopher who loved the calm tradition of ancient Oxford. But a generation ago, when for a woman to dwell within the sanctuary of the University was a rare privilege, such a one who succeeded in making of her academical drawing-room a salon had to be the intellectual equal not only of the best men whom Oxford produced at a period of richer productiveness than at present, but also of many of the keenest minds of Europe. For at that time a visit to Oxford was not merely a Sunday on the river for the commonplace Londoner or the enterprising American. The strangers who penetrated within the walls of the colleges were mostly men of renown in the higher spheres of human intelligence and action. The names which Taine records of the persons he met during his short sojourn at Oxford show how great a compliment he implied in giving the pre-eminence to the young and gracious lady who solaced his patriotic anguish with the knowledge she displayed of the imperishable glories of France.

It is true that Oxford society, even in its pre-revolutionary or transition days, had its limitations, and Mrs. Mark Pattison did not conceal how conscious she was of them, as is recorded both in this memoir and in Taine's correspondence. But the unique position she made for herself in that society, in circumstances not devoid of difficulty, shows how commanding were her intellectual gifts as well as her ethical and social qualities. They were recognized not only in the relatively limited horizon of Oxford. In each period of her life, and in all its phases, whether she was moving in the artistic circles of London and Paris, or taking an active part in English public affairs during the later years of her life, they were acknowledged by the most competent judges among her elders and contemporaries. In the pages before us her biographer, with judicious reserve, has generally refrained from recording his personal judgment. He has left the value of her qualities and of her work to be appraised by her correspondents, whom he cites, most of whom were her intimate friends—an illustrious company, including some of the foremost European names in art, literature, and politics of the second half of the nineteenth century. There was Ruskin, her master and guide in childhood, whose friendship continued until his faculties began to fail, long after her second marriage, though she had fallen away from his influence in matters of opinion much earlier in life. There was G. F. Watts, who was the chief adviser of her art studies while she was as yet a girl, and who later followed her progress as a critic with affectionate and admiring interest. There was her frequent correspondent George Eliot, who from her modelled the most attractive features of one of her most finely conceived heroines. There was Browning, whose familiar correspondence with her fills some of the most agreeable pages of this volume. Abroad there were Renan and his wife, who were specially drawn to her by their admiration for her mystical writings, from one series of which the volume before us takes its title. There were recognized chiefs of historical art criticism, such as the late Eugène Müntz and M. de Nolbac, who survives to regret the disappearance of one of the most skilled adepts in that science. There was a group of statesmen at Rome who had aided in the consolidation of Italian unity, and who had no greater pleasure than in discussing with her the European situation. The names of eminent persons found in the memoir—who admired her work and her character, and who gave her their sympathetic friendship—do not form an exhaustive list, as may be seen from the fact that Taine is not even mentioned. Moreover, her versatility of mind was as remarkable as its power of concentration, and in the most diverse spheres she was equally in her element. In the latter years of her life she was as much at home conversing with the Duc d'Aumale, the last grand seigneur of France, amid his treasures at Chantilly, as she was in attending the proceedings of a trade-union congress in a British industrial town.

The mention of Lady Dilke's connexion with the organization of women's labour, and the helpful interest she took in it, leads to a question which exercised the minds of some of her friends who knew and appreciated her best. Apart from any prejudice they may have had against the appearance of women on public platforms, a practice which has to be accepted in the twentieth century, some of them regretted that the author of the four noble volumes on 'French Art in the Eighteenth Century,' who by their achievement alone placed herself in the foremost rank of historical art critics of any age or country, should have devoted so much of her time and energy to a pursuit which diverted her from the work of which every page was a precious possession for students. They could not help thinking that, admirable as were her objects and admirably as she served them, there were scores of other women who were capable of dealing with the political aspects of women's trade-unionism, while she alone was competent to accomplish what in the future will be remembered as her life-work. But there are several considerations which should stay one from thinking that Lady Dilke in any sense "to party gave up what was meant for mankind." In the first place, her work in connexion with women's labour was done in what would have been the hours of relaxation in the life of an ordinary human being. Perhaps if she had rested in body and mind after the fatigues of literary work, her life might have been longer. Of that we cannot be certain; while it is certain that she gave as much time to writing and composing as has ever been given by the strongest man who has left behind work that endures. Moreover, she had a great love of public affairs, which was founded on a profound knowledge of political science such as is possessed by few statesmen. Her studies in art were not those of the mere admirer of the beautiful, as may be seen in her 'Art in the Modern State' and her 'Renaissance of Art in France.' Her studies of the past, in this connexion, taught her, as her biographer points out, that "the irresistible development of democracy is the keystone of the modern situation." She had seen that "the Renaissance had transferred art from the service of religion to that of the Prince—an idealized conception of man," and with the progress of modern civilization she recognized that in the future the democracy must inevitably fulfil the functions which had in turn been performed by the Church, the prince, and the aristocracy. Hence the democracy, holding the power, must be organized and instructed, so as to wield it beneficently. But meanwhile, before the democracy knew its own power and understood how to use it, great abuses were rife—notably, in the struggle between capital and labour, which caused bitter suffering to a large proportion of the "civilized" human race. Hence it was not merely as a scientific student of politics that she turned her public activity in this particular direction. The same fine nature which made her in private life one of the kindest-hearted and most unselfish women that ever breathed, moved her to compassion for the lot of the toiling poor of her own sex, and filled her with a desire, which she lived to see in a measure accomplished, to ameliorate their lot.

We have left ourselves no space to deal with the beautiful pages which give the chief title to this volume, although they comprise less than a quarter of the matter contained in it. Short as are these discourses or parables, which are called 'The Book of the Spiritual Life,' 'The Mirror of the Soul,' and 'The Last Hour,' they are well worth a separate review, and cannot be commented upon in the few lines we have at our disposal. Apart from their intrinsic value, they are of deep interest as revealing another phase of Lady Dilke's rare mental equipment. The unrivalled authority on art in its highest forms, the virile organizer of political association, the exemplar of womanly amenity in her hours of social recreation, had a mystical side to her manifold nature which found its expression in essays in imagination and philosophy such as form the sequel to her memoir. Many will find consolation in the thoughts of one who, endowed with the richest intellectual gifts, had known what it is to suffer. All will be charmed with the musical cadence of her prose, which seems to partake of the best qualities of the style of two of her closest friends—it is Pater without his preciosity and Ruskin without his exaggeration.

It is, however, the memoir which will attract the keenest interest, as the subject of it was a unique personality, whose place in the world can never be filled. In these days, when every prominent mediocrity has on departing this life two or three stout volumes erected to his memory, and when some of them do not wait for death before employing a complacent biographer, we are not surprised that her husband should have thought that the best tribute to Lady Dilke's memory was a concise record, recounting with eloquent brevity the annals of her well-filled life. Yet we cannot but regret that, for the sake of the example to workers, we are permitted to know so little of the organization of her daily round of fruitful occupation. Sir Charles Dilke himself expresses his regret that, owing to many of her writings having been scattered in reviews and periodicals, he is unable to furnish a bibliography of her work, which in itself would have been a remarkable memorial of what a woman could accomplish. But interesting as that would have been to the curious, it would have meant little for future generations. The bibliography of the late Lord Acton is extremely copious, yet he, with all his learning, may not be known to posterity except as a name repeated in contemporary memoirs, because he always hesitated to undertake "un travail de longue haleine." Lady Dilke, whose erudition may be compared with his, will be superior to him in this respect, as for many a year serious students of art, to complete their education, must have recourse to the volumes she has left behind.

Sir Charles Dilke, in writing the memoir, has accomplished his difficult task with tact and dignity. He seems to have underrated the importance of his work by appending to it an 'Index of Names,' which we think inadequate, considering the conciseness of his narrative and the vast amount of matter contained in it.

The eight or nine illustrations in the volume are so interesting that its readers will be sorry that they are not more numerous. It was Lady Dilke's pleasant habit to decorate her letters with pictures, and the few which are here reproduced make one wish to have more of them. There is, for example, a marvellous little sketch of her bonne à tout faire which adorned a letter to her sister from Nice, while a pen-and-ink drawing of her garden and terrace at Draguignan, which formed the heading of a letter to Mrs. Earle, is so excellent in form that one can almost see in it the colouring of the Southern vegetation and landscape. Only three of her portraits are included: one from a photograph of 1861, showing how supremely interesting was her aspect in maidenhood; another, not less attractive, from a painting by Pauline, Lady Trevelyan, of 1864; and a third from her last photograph, taken less than twelve months ago. Unfortunately there are no likenesses to recall her features in the intervening forty years, and those who remember the sunny serenity of her face in its early maturity will regret the omission.

---

The Works of Charles and Mary Lamb.—Vols. VI., VII. Letters. Edited by E. V. Lucas. (Methuen & Co.)

THE law of copyright bears hard on the editor of Lamb's correspondence; hardest of all, as it seems to us, on Mr. Lucas. His edition boasts of 74 new letters, 13 of them Mary's; yet, despite this numerically strong accession, it cannot compare in literary value with that of Ainger. Mr. Lucas is debarred—so untowardly do things fall out—from using the fine series, of which he was the original editor, addressed to Robert and other members of the Lloyd family; the letters to Rickman and others, printed by Ainger in 1904; besides many another choice example of Lamb's incomparable epistolary art. The reader will look in vain through these volumes for the letter to Coleridge—conceived, as the editor justly remarks, "in the finest spirit of comedy"—describing a visit paid with George Dyer to Joseph Cottle, after the death of Amos; he will miss Elia's touchingly mild and humble-minded reply to the remonstrance of Olen; the wild and witty fantasies addressed to Hume, Dodwell, and John Chambers; the last letter to Manning, irresistibly provocative at once of tears and laughter; the message of cheer and conciliation to Hazlitt, penned in an hour of acute domestic misery. The disabilities under which Mr. Lucas labours may be measured by the fact that his total assemblage, including the 74 letters now printed for the first time, amounts to no more than 590. Of the letters already in print 516 only are available for Mr. Lucas, while as many as 117 are placed, through the operation of what he feelingly terms the "dismal" law of copyright, beyond his reach.

To remedy as far as may be this awkward state of things, Mr. Lucas resorts to the plan of summarizing in his notes the contents of every copyright letter of importance, taking them one by one, each at its proper point in the chronological series. This expedient raises the biographical value of his edition of the letters; but the use of a uniform type for text and notes is to be regretted. The editor would, perhaps, have done better had he abstained in the notes from all mention of these unattainable letters, and dealt with them in a tabular list of the entire epistolary remains, such as that given at the end of Mr. Wright's recent edition of the Cowper correspondence. He has, however, deliberately chosen to sacrifice artistic form to biographical continuity—a step which he probably holds to be justified by the nature of his material, the strength of which lies rather in its wealth of character—its revelation of a heart essentially sound and sweet—than in any pervading charm or idiosyncrasy of style. For in truth this edition of the letters is a Peter's net of all epistolary sorts—a "mixed lot" of correspondence, yet for that very cause all the more frankly and fully representative of the writer, a man of many humours, of broad tastes and sympathies.

Opinion may vary regarding Mr. Lucas's editorial aptitudes; of his industry there can be no question. Of the 516 letters here reprinted 252 represent a fresh collation of the originals, while in 52 of the remainder—that is, of the letters which, in default of the originals, are here reproduced from various early printed sources—an occasional phrase, sentence, or paragraph will be found to be restored which nineteenth-century nicety, in the somewhat drastic exercise of its discretion, had emasculated or suppressed. Thus three out of five centuries of these old friends are here presented in a shape as nearly approaching textual authenticity as the editor's means allow. Many of the new letters are of no literary account; perhaps a score have the true Elian cachet, and one or two supply a link hitherto missing in the writer's life. Access to the primary sources enables Mr. Lucas occasionally to decipher a doubtful postmark or rectify a false date; and, where the autograph is not forthcoming, he avails himself intelligently of internal evidence to fix the chronology. His arrangement is seldom open to question; but why does he perpetuate Ainger's blunder by placing Letter 55 under the year 1800, when the contents, now first printed in full, show that its date cannot be earlier than 1801? Indeed, the letter in question probably belongs to the early summer of 1803.

Mr. Lucas works with a will; yet at times a passing fit of ennui, or perhaps of irresponsibility, comes to him, and he nods over his task, or else breaks out into some odd freak or other. Only thus can we attempt to account for the extraordinary suggestion that the Plantas (respectable literary folk) are cigars, the rendering of circum præcordia nostra by "chill about the midriff," or that eminently original emendation of Pope, "Fearless on high stood unabashed Defoe." Hippocras is called "a medicinal drink," and one marvels what meaning Mr. Lucas can attach to the passage in which it figures for the first and last time in Lamb's correspondence:—

"I wished for you yesterday. I dined in Parnassus, with Wordsworth, Coleridge, Rogers, and Tom Moore—half the Poetry of England constellated and clustered in Gloster Place. It was a delightful Evening.....I am scribbling a muddy epistle with an aching head, for we did not quaff Hippocrene last night: marry, it was Hippocras rather!"

How any plain man could read this, and fail to gather that "hippocras" is a strong drink of some sort, passes comprehension. But it is really curious to note how often Mr. Lucas appears to make a boggle of his author's jocularities. Great wits, it seems, do not always jump. A case in point is the note on Letter 71 (November 28th, 1800). Lamb writes to Manning that he has accepted an invitation to the Lakes from Charles Lloyd, and begs Manning "not to take it unkind" that he should throw over Cambridge for Westmoreland. Let Manning consider the delights of a tour amongst the Lakes to one "in City pent," &c.:—

"Consider Grasmere! Ambleside! Wordsworth! Coleridge! I hope you will. [Here the first page of the letter ends, and overleaf Lamb proceeds:—] Hills, woods, lakes, and mountains, to the eternal Devil! I will eat snipes with thee, Thomas Manning. Only confess, confess, a bite!"

Here Mr. Lucas comments: "Manning's reply to this letter indicates that Lamb's story of the invitation to stay with Lloyd was a hoax." Is it possible that Mr. Lucas ever took the letter for anything else? The note certainly seems to imply this. And, begging the editor's pardon, we may say that it was not "Lamb's story of the invitation" that was the hoax, for the invitation was actually sent: the postscript makes that clear. It was Lamb's pretended acceptance of the invitation that constituted the hoax; and the words, "Only confess," &c., mean simply, "Only admit that you have been fairly taken in."

Another case, almost as curious, of the misconstruing of a jest occurs in connexion with a letter from Lamb to Stoddart, dated August 9th, 1827. The letter contains the following bite, or bam (as Sir Walter would call it), which, however, is one of the many passages excluded as copyright from this edition. We take it from Moxon's edition of 1870:—

"I am sorry to say that he [i.e., Stoddart's son, then a Carthusian] does not conduct himself so well as we could wish. He absented himself four days this week (this is Thursday) from the Charterhouse, and was found tippling at an obscure tavern at Barnet, with a chorus-singer of the Coburg Theatre. Mr. Hine and I with difficulty got him away; but Dr. Raine, the Head Master, hushed it up with a slight imposition, viz., the translation of Gray's 'Elegy' into Greek Elegiacs, which I partly did for him. I write this with reluctance to offend a father's feelings; I might ha' been one myself, if.....had let me."

Will it be believed that Mr. Lucas accepts the foregoing precious farrago as "cold fact"? After this, the whale that swallowed Jonah had best look to his laurels. Evidently Mr. Lucas is not the man to make two bites of a cherry.

This curious coyness towards his author's jests reappears in the editor's handling of a letter to Charles Chambers, in which Lamb discourses at length upon the relative merits of a John Dory and "your Brighton turbot." The original is endorsed "Sept. 1, 1817," in another hand; but Mr. Lucas will have none of this date, and assigns the letter to May, 1825, because in it Lamb, amongst other palpable gross fibs, asserts that "Dr. Parr is two months dead," and Dr. Parr, as the 'Dictionary of National Biography' duly records, died on March 6th, 1825. Nevertheless, the date endorsed on the autograph is correct, for in this same letter Lamb speaks of "visiting Brighton again next summer," and we know that he was at Brighton in the early summer of 1817. The announcement of Parr's death may, therefore, be taken just as seriously as the statement in the same sentence that Truss—or "Twiss," as Mr. Lucas proposes to read—"had been whipt through the Town of Derby for robbing an old woman at church of a seal ring." One more example and we have done with the subject. In a postscript to a letter from Mary to Sarah Hutchinson—in which letter Wordsworth is asked to interest himself on behalf of Mary Betham, the portrait-painter—Lamb hurriedly adds: "Wordsworth may tell De Q. that Miss B.'s price for a Virgin and Child is 3 guineas"—a deliciously sly and malicious joke, not at De Quincey's expense so much as at the Wordsworths', who just then were enacting with great gusto the part of Mrs. Grundy for the benefit of the Opium-Eater. The equivoque, indeed, is so covert that it will probably be missed by many readers besides Mr. Lucas; but it reveals itself on a comparison of the postscript (which probably belongs to the latter end of 1817) with certain references to De Quincey in a joint letter from Charles and Mary to Dorothy Wordsworth, to be found on pp. 506-7 of this edition. One of these references—"I am very sorry for Mr. De Quincey; what a blunder the poor man made when he took up his dwelling among the mountains"—is erroneously connected by Mr. Lucas with a supposed illness of De Quincey's. The allusion really is to a rumoured skeleton in the cupboard at Dove Cottage (where De Quincey was then domesticated), the report of which had sadly fluttered the Wordsworthian dovecot, and had doubtless reached the Lambs through the kind-hearted Dorothy.

Of the early letters in this edition, two—Nos. 19 and 20—may be reckoned as to all intents fresh acquisitions, of such preponderant length and value are the portions now added by Mr. Lucas from the originals in the Morrison collection, as compared with the meagre extracts given by Talfourd and succeeding editors. The letters in question—Nos. xix. and xxi. in Ainger—are addressed to Coleridge, and contain a minute examination of the 'Ode on the Departing Year.' Nothing is more noteworthy in Lamb than the rapid ripening of the critical faculty, the development of which is, in ordinary cases, a gradual process, involving years of study and experience. Here, for example, while recognizing in the amplest terms the supremacy of Coleridge's lyrical genius, the youth of twenty-one lays his finger with unerring precision on the weak places—the inequalities and insincerities—in “the splendid thing,” as he calls it. The exordium of Epode ii., he writes—ll. 103–20 in Dykes Campbell’s edition, p. 80—

“I most heartily commend to annihilation. The enthusiast of the lyre should not be so feebly, so tediously, delineative of his own feelings; ’tis not the way to become ‘Master of our affections.’”

To this Coleridge in reply seems to have cited the example of the Hebrew prophets; but Lamb persists:—

“I cannot be made to like the former part of that second Epode; I cannot be made to feel it, as I do the parallel places in Isaiah, Jeremy and Daniel. Whether it is that.....the rhyme impairs the efficacy; or that the circumstances are feigned, and we are conscious of a made-up lie in the case, and the narrative is too long-winded to preserve the semblance of truth; or that lines 5–8 in their change of rhyme show like art—I don’t know, but it strikes me as something meant to affect, and failing in its purpose.”

The criticism is sound, for in point of fact the lines objected to are, in the main, a purple patch borrowed from Sappho (Fragm. 2, Bergk), which Coleridge has gratuitously tacked on here, to the interruption of the rapid movement and logical evolution of the ode. Indeed, his version is scarce worthy of Coleridge; and many may prefer the more liquid, if less artful paraphrase by Aphra Behn in Gildon’s ‘Chorus Poetarum.’

Nothing could be happier than the plan of Mr. Lucas’s table of contents—if the execution had but been equal to the original conception! But here again the same spirit of impatience seems to have invaded the editor, to the injury of his work. In seven cases at least letters are marked as new which had already appeared in print elsewhere; Letter 39 is entered as reprinted from a volume (‘The Lambs,’ &c.) published in 1897, whereas it is actually taken from another and earlier source (‘Mary and Charles Lamb’), published in 1874; and, again, Letter 58, evidently a new item, figures in the list as an old one—in fact, is a regular Melchisedec of a letter, without apparent source or pedigree whatsoever. That flaws such as these should exist in the table of contents is a misfortune, for they disparage its general authority. The index also is an unequal performance. A few of the more important articles are carefully done, but there is a great deficiency both of names and page-references. Under the letter D, for instance, eighteen names are wanting.

Mr. Lucas’s is, on the whole, the best text of the letters that has yet appeared. Amongst the many corrections now introduced we may mention one in the postscript (by Charles) to a letter from Mary to Dorothy Wordsworth, postmarked “Nov. 13, 1810” (Ainger, 1904, i. p. 319). Lamb writes: “I have been aquavorous now for full four days.” Here Talfourd and, after him, Mr. Carew Hazlitt and Ainger print: “I have been acquaintance with it now for,” &c. Those who would learn how far Talfourd thought himself justified in tampering with Lamb’s words would do well to compare the letter to William Ayrton, dated March 14th, 1830, as it appears in Mr. Macdonald’s edition, with the text as given by Mr. Lucas. Here the honours lie with Mr. Macdonald, who was fortunate enough to obtain access to the original. The version printed by Mr. Lucas, which is that of Talfourd, Ainger, and Mr. Carew Hazlitt, is altered and mutilated almost beyond recognition.

There are not many misprints in these volumes. “Render,” for undo, occurs (p. 133, line 8). Read massy for “mass” (p. 610). “Front” (p. 648) may possibly be Lamb’s word, but, if so, it was certainly a slip for font (cf. pp. 616, 708). “Palloris” (p. 178) is a bad blunder for Pallor, &c. “Howitt” (Howell) and “boiled” (broiled), pp. 250, 283, are old mistakes, long since exploded, which ought not to have reappeared. “Black Backs” (p. 188) is nonsense; Black Book is unquestionably what Lamb must have written. Letter 508—an epistola to Barton—is one of those marked as having been collated with the original, yet here we find the impossible “pruna nana evellens” reproduced from the text of Mr. Carew Hazlitt, although the true reading, varia, appears in Mr. Macdonald’s text. We are sorry to see the absurd blunder “by Mary” for by sea perpetuated in Mr. Stephen Gwynn’s translation of the letter to Coleridge of October 9th, 1802; indeed, this version is hardly worthy of a good scholar. “I will be sure to observe diligently your Stuartial tidings” does not convey Lamb’s meaning successfully; “I will attend carefully to your orders respecting Stuart” seems to come a little nearer to the Latin. Again, in translating a phrase of the letter to Rickman dated October 3rd, 1828, “utpote habenti mundum (quod aiunt) præ oculos [sic],” Mr. Gwynn appears to miss the writer’s meaning, which surely is: “The whole world, then, being (as they say) before my eyes,” not, “The world, then, being, as the saying is, beyond my ken.” Why again does he, or Mr. Lucas, print (p. 247) “progredi [? *progre*di],” as if the first form was wrong? Lamb had considerable Latin, and has himself explained in reply to criticism on the point (p. 251), “Progredi or *progre*di I thought indifferent, my authority being Ainsworth.” Lamb was right, for Plautus (see ‘Cas.’ 5, 1, 9) is certainly as good a Latin scholar as Mr. Gwynn, and uses the longer form of infinitive. Mr. Lucas makes an ambitious but, as it seems to us, unsuccessful attempt to solve the puzzling paragraph beginning “Istum Ludum,” &c., in the letter to Coleridge aforesaid. He identifies “Ludus” with Charles Lloyd; but how it comes to pass that Lamb, by taking Lloyd as the subject for a jest, should thereby “alienate utterly the goodwill of the whole of the Columbian people,” he entirely neglects to explain. The paragraph is obscure, in the absence of the letter which elicited it. Possibly Coleridge had been finding fault with the Lancastrian school-system, already adopted in the United States (Ludum Americanum), and had recommended it to Lamb as a fitting subject for an epigram or a short jocular paragraph in The Morning Post. Lamb, in reply, plays upon the double meaning of ludus—“school,” and “sport” or “joke.” The passage might, perhaps, be loosely rendered thus:—

“As to that school-plan, about the Yankee methods of which you croak at such a rate, I will not touch it, because it is as far as far can be from a joke, as jokes go nowadays. Indeed, where is the fun in estranging from ourselves the goodwill of the entire American nation, our cousins, for the sake of a single joke? What I’m looking for is a likely subject for a jest; but you keep hurling your Bells at my head.”

The main objection to this view of the matter—which is proffered for what it is worth—lies in the date of Lamb’s letter (October, 1802), which is earlier than that of any recorded deliverance of Coleridge’s, known to us, on the rival systems of Lancaster and Bell.

Here and there in the notes, which show a commendable zeal in their identification of obscure references, Mr. Lucas falls into error concerning matters of fact. Thus on p. 223 he writes: “Sir James Mackintosh was not in 1801 on the eve of departing for India.” In point of fact, Mackintosh was several times on the eve of departure for India before he actually left home to become Recorder of Bombay (1804). In June, 1801, Coleridge writes to Godwin: “The Scotch gentleman is to be Professor of Morals to the young Nabobs at Calcutta, with an establishment of 3,000*l.* a year!” The scheme, however, fell through; for on January 19th, 1802, Coleridge writes to Stuart from Stowey:—

“Tom Wedgewood, who has been with me at Poole’s, informs me that the Calcutta scheme is knocked on the head, and with it Mackintosh’s hopes in that quarter.”

Mr. Lucas, again, errs when he identifies ‘The American Farmer,’ a book lent by Hazlitt to the Lambs, with Gilbert Imlay’s novel ‘The Emigrants,’ 1793. The book in question is entitled ‘Letters from an American Farmer,’ by Hector St. John Crèvecoeur, and was written and published pseudonymously at Philadelphia, in 1774, by Benjamin Franklin. Hazlitt praises it highly in his article on ‘American Literature,’ published in The Edinburgh Review of October, 1829 (‘Works,’ ed. Waller and Glover, 1904, x. 314). In the note on Letter 514 (C. L. to Wm. Hazlitt, jun., September 13th, 1831), Mr. Lucas writes that “this is the only letter extant to the younger Hazlitt.” Here, undoubtedly, he is mistaken, for Mr. Carew Hazlitt prints in his edition a joint letter, of uncertain date, from Lamb and Emma Isola to his father. Mr. Lucas deserves praise for the courage with which he restores Lamb’s occasional (so-called) profanities; in one place, however, he shows an odd squeamishness in suppressing what is, after all, but a harmless sally of fun. In a letter to Manning which is not to be found in the editions of Ainger, Mr. Carew Hazlitt, or Mr. Macdonald, Lamb writes:—

“By the pleasantries of Fortune, who likes a joke or a double entendre as well as the best of her children, there happens to be another Mr. Lamb (that there should be two!) in Mitre Court. [Here Mr. Lucas stops short; whereas the original proceeds:—] His duns and girls frequently stumble up to me, and I am obliged to satisfy both in the best way I am able.”

Perhaps the only line of Lamb’s one might fairly wish to blot is that in which he speaks of "sulky Fanny Imlay, alias Godwin." Amongst a few admirable dicta which appear for the first time in these volumes is the following on Shakespeare. On the need of a legibly printed edition of the plays Lamb observes:—

"Shakespeare is one of the last books one should like to give up, perhaps the one just before the Dying Service in a large Prayer-book."

One of the very few quotations which the editor has failed to trace to their source is "Tower above tower, a massy structure high" (p. 788). This is an instance of a composite quotation, made up of Milman's "Tower above tower, one pyramid of flame" ('Belshazzar'), and Milton's "In Heav'n by many a Towred structure high" ('P. L.', i. 733). "Lines 'not less erring' than her words" (p. 608) is a reference Mr. Lucas has failed, he notes, to trace. Is not the phrase a reminiscence of Lamb's own remark concerning Tipp in the essay on 'The South Sea House,' "His pen was not less erring than his heart"? Perhaps he may have been teased or censured for using this phrase, and repeated it with that wilfulness which was one of his chief charms.

For an accurate and complete edition of Lamb's correspondence we must await the "coming of a milder day," when the rival publishers shall be content to join their forces, and give to the world the complete series of letters, edited by a competent scholar. May this blissful consummation speedily arrive! We have no desire to enter into odious comparisons concerning the merits of the editors whose work is now to be had, but it seems evident to us that the new man, when he comes, ought to be clear of cliques and coteries, and have access to all possible sources of information, printed or unprinted, ought to be a good classical scholar, ought to have as much time as he likes for his work, and ought finally to receive every support in his determination to print all that Lamb wrote as he wrote it, whatever the pedant, the Protestant, or the public may think.

THE AUTHOR OF 'JOHN INGLESANT.'

Life and Letters of J. H. Shorthouse. Edited by his Wife. 2 vols. (Macmillan & Co.)

We find here a brief thread of memoir interweaving and connecting various letters. It was the only way to adopt in the case of a man whose life was so quiet and uneventful as Mr. Shorthouse's. A man given up wholly to literature is difficult matter for biography; but Mr. Shorthouse's literature was pursued in the intervals of business, and the methodical combination of the two leaves singularly little scope for colour or incident. He was really that phenomenon not infrequent in the history of letters—a man of double mind, not a littérateur by profession, who finds vent for his meditative side in one book, and leaves that one book as his true literary memorial. Mrs. Shorthouse has given us, doubtless, what could be given—a quiet, unpretentious, domestic narrative—but it is inevitably domestic, and, apart from the record of one great literary success, is as the life of many provincial business men with cultivated tendencies. For it is not only domestic, it is further a provincial domesticity. The pith of these two volumes lies in the letters and literary remains.

Nor will the letters rank among distinguished letters; we do not say with those of Lamb, or the Brownings, or Byron, or Stevenson, or the other great and vivid letter-writers of an age not distinguished for letter-writing, but with those of Coleridge, Shelley, or others in whom the personality gives interest to letters not themselves strong in style. They are the letters of a cultivated man, with ideas of his own, and as such good and interesting to a certain degree. But they have no salient originality, no piquancy of personal flavour. To lovers of 'John Inglesant' they will be interesting, in so far as they shed light on the character of the author of 'John Inglesant.' They become, in fact, a portion of the memoir.

As so often happens in an uneventful life, which ultimately becomes hemmed round by routine, the most interesting portion of the memoir is that relating to childhood and boyhood or early youth. From the beginning Shorthouse was something of a contradiction, a strife between hereditary circumstances and personal qualities which also seem to have been in part hereditary. He repeated, in fact, on a smaller and less uncompromising scale, the evolution we witness in men like Ruskin (who, it is not surprising to learn, was among the authors that influenced him). A Quaker, the descendant of Quaker manufacturers, he was foredoomed to Quakerism and a prosaic business life. Yet his grandmother was an intellectual woman of literary tastes, and both his parents, but particularly his mother, had some share of imagination and were fond of romances. As often chances, the qualities and tastes inherited specially from the female line became intensified in the boy, and conflicted with what appeared his ancestral destiny. But only in the matter of religion was the conflict pursued to a logical issue. In regard to business he contrived a successful compromise, pursuing amateur studies of literature when his day's work was ended. Had his literary vocation been complete, such a compromise would have proved unworkable.

The blend of imagination and religious enthusiasm which characterized his writing appeared from the first. As a child he thought Christ the most loving and beautiful being that ever walked the earth. When he went into the country, waking in the room of an hotel or lodging-house, he would delight himself with the new pattern of a wall-paper, and, watching the clouds cross the sky, would realize the deeper joy of God's presence everywhere. Later, as a boy of sixteen and upwards, he showed the literary side strongly. With his female cousins, one of whom supplies her recollections, he read Tennyson much, while Hawthorne was another very favourite writer. He had something of the moods and also of the sedentariness of imaginative youth. While his cousins pursued amateur science among the clefts of the hills he would lie on the grass, watching the stream emerge from the foot of the hill. At such times he was now silent and bored, now communicative, but always full of thought. Characteristically he loved not mountains, but peaceful and rather dreamy scenes. On his holidays with them he read 'Rokeby' in Greta woods and by Mortham's tomb, as an imaginative youth was bound to do. But when he talked his dreaminess fell from him; he was eager and brilliant; and opposition roused him to vigorous argument. During this time he seemed to attend to business only when he had nothing else to do; and the symptoms are those of anything from a poet downwards. But his imagination thus early had a decided cast. It was the historical imagination, the imagination of the descriptive historian or the historical novelist. He was no mere dreamer in green landscapes; he loved the streets and their panorama of humanity; he, like Browning, would "paint man, man, whatever the issue." Like Browning, but not in Browning's way. Thus early, he had reconstructed to a remarkable degree the life of historic England in its towns. Old maps delighted him; and this was hereditary, for his father shared the taste. Old chroniclers and ancient contemporary memoirs he read eagerly. In these ways, though he lacked formal education, his self-culture proceeded apace from childhood. That formal education lagged somewhat we have a glimpse in a letter he wrote during a holiday to his cousin:—

"There is a large family of children next door, with a very pretty governess, who is at this moment playing on the pianoforte. I want papa to get me a governess to teach me spelling, but he won't agree that I should choose one myself, and I tremble at the thought of some into whose clutches I might happen to fall. He says he thinks it would be a very good thing, and if he'd let me choose I should be decidedly of that opinion."

Seeing that young Shorthouse was at this time nineteen, one can understand his proviso, and that upon such condition he should eagerly embrace the idea of a governess. The doubt whether he might not also eagerly embrace the governess perhaps explains the paternal dissent from his proviso. His tendencies, be it said, did not at all that way lie. It was in other matters that he somewhat dismayed his puritanically trained cousins. His mind, working away from its environment, had conceived hostility towards the radicalism in which they were trained. He even contrived to sunder Charles Kingsley's religious liberalism, which he accepted, from his political liberalism, which he abhorred. It is a small, but characteristic matter that, even in dress, he had so far broken from the Quaker idea as to seem in his cousins' eyes exaggeratedly fastidious. It is the same natural Tory, aristocrat—call it what you will—who writes unconsciously to his cousin about the "stupid common people" that scrawled their names in the ruined church of Llandudno—a double offence, against the historic sense and his growing religious conservatism.

He belonged, in fact, to those whom we may call intellectual Conservatives; to that conservatism of the mind and imagination which bursts through the swaddling-bands of heredity, so powerful with other men, which refuses the plastic influence of environment, all-powerful with other men; even as Shelley's native radicalism defied the pressure of his aristocratic heredity and environment. This brought the evangelically bred Ruskin to say before his Oxford audience, in the most casual way, "we Catholics" (applying the phrase to art). This brought the Quaker-bred Shorthouse to much measure of sympathy with Little Gidding, the community in which Tractarians found their spiritual ancestors. His literary instinct, we have said, contrived a compromise with his business ancestry and milieu. His spiritual instinct, after his early and happy marriage, carried him out of Quakerism into the Established Church. Yet it may be questioned whether the "sacramental Christianity" (a somewhat vaporous and indefinite thing, though he was ever ready to define it) into which he finally crystallized was not itself a compromise. In our view he was, with his mixture of sobriety and enthusiasm, imagination and contented middle-class domesticity, his birth and his personality, almost necessarily a compromise in the flesh. We are most of us compromises, but he, perhaps, especially so.

To follow this out would be to consider him too curiously—more curiously than we can here do. Nor are all the materials in his wife's pages. As we have said, after the portion dealing with his early years the memoir becomes mainly the record of a very domestic middle-class life. That record is broken for a moment by the publication of 'John Inglesant,' with the inevitable London journey and lionizings, which are like unto most lionizings, and give no illuminative glimpses of the great men, from Gladstone downwards, whom he met. The book was a work of love and of a life, written in the after-business leisure of several years. Issued privately, it roused the interest of an Oxford reader, who recommended it to Mr. Alexander Macmillan, and he made overtures to the modest author for its public presentation. The success that followed was the last thing ever dreamt in the writing of it. But Shorthouse the author has here mainly to be gathered from the letters and remains. Of the letters we have expressed our opinion. Some of the youthful letters interest, not only from their union of literary enthusiasm with strong religious sincerity, but also because they show how early Shorthouse had formed his own views in his special province of history. At nineteen he condemns the historical shallowness of the then received Macaulay, and is confident he shall have small difficulty in attacking that writer's essay on Hampden, "since it contradicts itself." The later letters are, perhaps, most generally interesting when they touch (as they often do) on literary themes. The best of these, and (to our mind) of all the letters, is a very thoughtful and stimulating epistle to Matthew Arnold, whom he addressed as a stranger, before the publication of 'John Inglesant.' He urged on Arnold the writing of a great work, and sketched the principle on which it might rest:—

"All history is nothing but the struggle of the divine principle to enter into the life of humanity.....But the contrast between the divine love and our sacramental hours and the everyday life of ourselves and others is so appalling, that the question that seems forced upon us is, 'Is the Christ we have sufficient for these things, or look we for another?'"

He then draws out his peculiar conception of humour "in the very highest sense," as an enthusiasm for humanity as it is, not as it might be (which is the preacher's enthusiasm). It studies man in the circumstances of his existence, and because of these circumstances. To it

"human nature appears at once in its essence too noble, and in the circumstances of its individual daily life too paltry, for any feeling but that of compassion."

This enthusiasm it seeks to instil in others. But most such writers have been satisfied with their immense understanding of human life, neglecting the divine principle which seeks to enter into it.

"Cervantes and Jean Paul Richter have come nearest to this conception of Humour. But the one positive exception to the neglect of the divine principle is Cervantes, in 'Don Quixote.' This, as it seems to me, masterpiece of philosophic humour is, as I understand it, nothing but a representation of the struggles of the divine principle to enter into the everyday details of human life; and the master work of it appears in this, that the divine is represented to us under no clumsy machina.....but the reader himself is made to enter into the struggle, and in most cases sides, as he does in life, with the commonplace and the material against the enthusiastic and divine; and so unfaltering is the genius of Cervantes, that this is carried to the grave itself; before which, talked down by commonplaces and crushed by worldly good sense, Quixote acknowledges his madness and confesses his life to have been a mistake; this is unspeakably sad, but it is true."

Cervantes would be perfect did he not regard only the failure of the divine. It does not always fail, nor is its votary always reckoned mad. This reconciliation, unaccomplished even by Cervantes, the synthesis of revelation and humour, Shorthouse thinks Arnold could achieve, and urges it on him.

The long letter which perforce we have done little more than epitomize is suggestive not only in itself, but also because it adumbrates an unfulfilled critical faculty, further indicated by some of the 'Remains' which compose the second volume. For this reason we cite it, because it unites and illustrates his best in two different kinds. In fact, the essay on humour, among the most successful of these 'Remains,' is nothing but an expansion of the letter; nor do we think it has profited on the whole by expansion. Even the letter has much redundancy of expression; and in mobilizing his ideas (so to speak) for the essay form, Shorthouse is apt to handle them unwieldily, till their first force evaporates. The essay on 'Self-Denial in Art' (by which he intends painting) suffers through similar lack of practised skill. It anticipates the counsel of renunciation enforced by a later essayist; and opens excellently, with suggestive use of the Greek restrictions on the compass of the lyre. But when he comes to suggest remedy for modern licence, the depth of reflection gives place to trite and inadequate recommendations. An inexperienced desire for completion leads him on after his thought has ceased to be effectual. Yet both essays give promise of a true, if undeveloped critic.

Very thoughtful and stimulative is also the essay on Wordsworth's 'Platonism,' the most finished of all, though we cannot invariably follow Shorthouse in detail, where his interpretation seems at times unsound. On the other hand, some of these papers are very slight and incidental; while the tales and other disjecta membra will scarcely augment his reputation. The net cast has been more wide than discriminating, and all size and value of fish are brought to the surface. The book, in fine, shows unconsummated potentialities, and increases one's respect for the cultivated, meditative, profoundly sincere and restrained character of the author; but it leaves his literary fame as it found it, based on 'John Inglesant.' It further helps us to understand how and why he was mainly a man of one book; that 'John Inglesant' was in effect an exposition of himself and his inner life, the life behind and beneath his business life. Which is indeed the explanation of most reputations built on a single book.

NEW NOVELS.

The Red Cravat. By Alfred Tresidder Sheppard. (Macmillan & Co.)

COMPARED with the general average of historical fiction, this novel must be pronounced a decided success. It is instinct with that irresponsible joviality which is of such value in any attempt to catch the spirit of a rough and stirring time, and with the closely allied power of presenting a strongly marked and grotesque personality in a life-like manner. The choice of a period so rich in strange persons and strange events as the reign of old Friedrich Wilhelm of Prussia is, in view of the author's peculiar gifts, much to be commended. Amongst people who, like his nominal hero and heroine, are neither ludicrous nor eccentric, he is scarcely at home; but the portraits of Gundling and Fassmann, those worthy members of the amazing Tabaks-Collegium, are drawn with much skill on the lines of such facts as are actually known concerning them. Still greater praise is due to the Countess-Dowager here pictured, an inspired conception of a type of old lady which has become extinct in our dull and decorous generation. The chronicle of her words and actions, especially in her delightful encounter with the crazy king, wins our pardon even for the truly terrible comic Irishman who figures among the Potsdam giants.

Sandy. By Alice Hegan Rice. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THAT Mrs. Wiggs could have no worthy counterpart was self-evident; her individuality was too finished to become a type for variations, and the same may be said, in a lesser degree, of Lovey Mary. It would be idle therefore to complain that Sandy is not on the level of either of these, or that the Irish-American stowaway is a trifle too charming, a little too unfailingly favoured of the gods in his upward career of love and honour. His personality is undeniably attractive, and, allowing for excusable partiality in the mind of the author, who can say that his character and career might not be the consistent outcome of the two combined races and the traditions from which he is sprung? The standard of Mrs. Wiggs must in this case be ignored, and due respect shown for the discretion which has led the author to forsake the Cabbage Patch for other, if less original, localities and personages. The story is a good deal more than readable, and has its full share of that indefinable charm which characterizes all her writing, a charm which may best be compared to the delicate fragrance which pervades a well-kept and old-fashioned garden.

The Tyranny of the Dark. By Hamlin Garland. (Harper & Brothers.)

IN its plot this story rather suggests a prose version—elaborated, of course, and altered in detail and background—of Browning's 'Sludge, the Medium.' It is a good and interesting tale; but perhaps it suffers a little from the vehemence of its author's contempt for what is respectfully called psychical research—for all that the man in the street means by the word spiritualism. The story opens in romantic style with the picture of a beautiful young girl sitting alone among the peaks and boulders of the Great American Divide, a mile or two outside a small mining township. To her, or to the township, comes a young man of science from one of the Eastern colleges. He is roughing it in the wilds by way of passing a vacation, and, attracted by the girl's beauty, proceeds, in free-and-easy Transatlantic style, to make acquaintance with the heroine and her mother. He finds himself involved in a curious set of circumstances. The girl's mother is a convinced spiritualist. As a child, the girl showed symptoms of what one kind of observer would call an hysterical temperament, and another, remarkable psychical acuteness. This quality—allied, curiously enough, to robust general health—was religiously fostered by the mother. The girl herself was full of healthy rebellion against the "manifestations." Then a young clergyman came to the township, and after a short time lost his wife there. He came to believe that he could be placed in communication with his dead wife through the mediation of the girl. Thenceforward two strong influences, his and the mother's, made for the cultivation of this side of the heroine's temperament, always more or less against her own instincts and desires. With the young professor of science at hand some of the resultant complications may easily be imagined.

A Prima Donna's Romance. By F. W. Hayes. (Hutchinson & Co.)

IN telling a story that depends for its interest solely upon action and adventure it is not easy for the author to keep up a semblance of probability, unless he invokes to his aid some stirring historical conditions. He may, it is true, disarm matter-of-fact criticism by placing his characters in a frankly unreal kingdom. But Mr. Hayes in his latest work adopts neither expedient, and lingers but a little space in the mountain fastnesses near Athens, where exciting things are very likely to happen. The action is chiefly laid in modern London, Paris, and the English Lake country. The twin heroines, supposed to be the daughters of a Greek brigand, undergo hairbreadth escapes even in civilized regions. "It's a very curious thing," naïvely observes one man to another, "that you should save each sister's life within five minutes of first seeing her"; and it certainly is, as he says, remarkable that the young engineer should rescue one of these ladies from a mass of burning scenery at a Brussels theatre, the other from an unusual sort of ghyll in the Lake district, by way of introduction. The brigands, who pervade the scene more or less, carry things with a high hand, and we dream of M. About's immortal hero, the Hadgi-Stavros of our youth. But if the reader can be content—and why not for once?—to accept the marvellous, he will find the story graphically told, blameless in purpose, and never dull.

The Silver Key. By Nellie K. Blissett. (Chapman & Hall.)

THIS romance of France and England in 1669-70 has some merit. The author has grasped the spirit of the times, and there are pleasing pictures of Charles II., whom it is the oft-claimed privilege of novelists to represent in the most amiable light, and of his sister Henrietta, while of the characters it may be said that they are living men and women well representing the manners and customs of their age. It is, however, irritating to find so dull a hero that he fails to see until the nineteenth chapter what has been patent to every reader since the fourth. Apart from this rather serious blemish the story is well written, and makes pleasant reading.

The Rose Brocade. By Mrs. Philip Champion de Crespigny. (Nash.)

THIS is a lively enough story of a maid of honour at Leicester House in the early part of the nineteenth century. The chief interest is caused by the somewhat well-worn expedient of marrying the heroine to an unknown pseudo-highwayman in the first chapter. Of course he appears again at Court, and is recognized by his wife, but fails to recognize her, till at last the heroine, dressed as she was on the fateful night in a rose brocade, refuses to give evidence against him in a court of law on the ground that she is his wife. It is a lightly written little story, but none of the characters has enough individuality to excite more than a faint and passing interest.

Sins of the City. By William Le Queux. (White & Co.)

THIS narrative is a good specimen of the sensational story, and fairly well described in the sub-title as "a story of craft, crime, and capital." The financier who acts the chief villain is Italian, and mixed up with a secret society and another Italian, who relentlessly pursues him. Mr. Le Queux manages the threads of his story well, ending strongly, but his figures are not more than puppets, and we look in vain for any character-sketching.

A Gendarme of the King. By Philip L. Stevenson. (Hurst & Blackett.)

THE Seven Years' War is Mr. Stevenson's theme, his hero a Scotch gentleman in the Prussian service; and the great Frederick himself, along with other historical personages, takes part in the action of the story. The dry bones seem to have been carefully put together, but it cannot be said that they live. We find enough and to spare of battles and hairbreadth escapes, of torture and imprisonment, of love and jealousy. But no single character or occurrence takes hold of our imagination, and our feeling at the close is not one either of satisfaction or exhilaration.

Dorothy Tuke. By Edmund Downey. (Hurst & Blackett.)

THIS is a tale connected with sea life, a good and interesting story of a quiet, unpretentious sort, the writing of which is reminiscent of the leisurely three-volume days, when cleverness was not so common as it is to day, and if readers were less fastidious with regard to manner they were apt to look for a great deal more matter in a novel than is the fashion now. The heroine, while still a child, becomes owner of a substantial barquentine as the result of the death of her father, a silent, unresponsive man, who had achieved the position of a master of his own craft by virtue of sheer hard work and economy. The vessel is left to the management of her mate and second mate, who are entrusted with the task of running their dead skipper's ship for the benefit of Dorothy. One of them is a middle-aged rascal, whose sole aim is the accumulation of money; the other, a romantically inclined young fellow, who falls in love with an abstraction, the ideal picture of his "owner." Dorothy, upon her coming of age, receives the impression that every one concerned with the barquentine she has taught herself to love and treasure is bent only upon deceiving her. Under another name, and in the guise of a disinterested invalid, she makes a voyage in her own ship, and learns the truth regarding those responsible for the management of her property. Incidentally, we have pictures of a certain kind of sea life, which have unmistakably been drawn from first-hand experience, and drawn with unpretentious ability.

Mr. Chippendale of Port Welcome. By Charles Fellows. (Hutchinson & Co.)

IT may be said at once that this curious book is particularly well worth reading: first, because it is genuinely entertaining, and, secondly, because it conveys a good deal of a kind of information of which Englishmen stand greatly in need. Port Welcome, in Cook's Island, represents an Australian settlement, and the book is a picture of life there. The author shows small regard for literary convention, and his book is without definite shape and finish. He has made no study of the art of construction. He writes in the first person, as a commercial traveller whose business frequently took him to the Port Welcome of the title. But if the writing is not rich in literary grace, it is full of sincerity, and has the notable merit of straightforward simplicity. The author is generous with the wealth of material he has in hand, Mr. Chippendale is a modern Micawber, with a wife of a far more articulate sor-than the good lady who shared the name and fortunes of his great prototype; an amiable, if ordinary son; and a daughter of rare good nature, virtue, and simplicity, a perfectly genuine type, and well realized here. Thus Mr. Fellows challenges comparison with notable literary productions, and his work, amateurish as in some respects it is, endures the test remarkably well.

Tolla the Courtesan. By E. Rodocanachi. (Heinemann.)

MR. FREDERICK LAWTON has translated this work from the French, and is to be complimented upon the discernment and adequacy with which his task has been accomplished. The book is a sketch of private life in Rome at the beginning of the eighteenth century, and is written entirely in the form of letters between lovers separated by the length of Italy. These letters describe at length, and with an antiquary's enthusiasm for detail, the amours of Tolla Boccadileone with the Prince Constantine Sobieski and with Don Gaetano Cesarini, as seen by the French lover who writes the letters, and whose dalliance with the beautiful Tolla, though tolerably innocent, provokes at length jealous doubts in the mind of his own absent mistress. The author claims that he has too little imagination, or too much respect for historic accuracy, to have modified in any of their essentials the facts of his narrative, and he concludes the volume with a lengthy list of authorities studied and quoted in its compilation. And, indeed, the reader soon discovers that, if as a whole this chronicle of a great courtesan's loves is purely fictitious, it is yet sufficiently true in those details which go to the making of a sound historical picture. The author is to be commended, too, for his delicacy, for the book is perfectly suitable for general reading.

Les Nuages. By Ivan Strannik. (Paris, Calmann-Lévy.)

THOSE who have an all-devouring passion for the Russian novel will not be deterred even by the gloom of 'Les Nuages'; but it is not at the highest level of work of its kind.

SCHOOL-BOOKS.

The Dream of the Rood. Edited by Albert S. Cook. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)—This is a most welcome edition of what must be considered one of the finest of Old English poems—though too little known outside the circle of scholars and students. In his introduction Prof. Cook gives an excellent account of the Vercelli book, in which this poem is contained, and goes on to discuss the still vexed question of authorship. Stephens's theory, with its ingenious but mistaken evidences from the Ruthwell Cross, that the poem is the work of Caedmon, is now no longer tenable, and Prof. Cook turns to the case for and against Cynewulf. The arguments of Dietrich in favour of the Cynewulf theory are presented at length, as are those of Rieger; while on the other side come the objections of Wülcker, Ebert, and Trautmann. Arguments on a subject of this kind are, as often as not, likely to be flimsy; as, for example, that of Ebert, which suggests that because the nails on the Cross are described as dark in 'The Dream of the Rood,' and in the 'Elene' as shining like stars or jewels, it is improbable that these two poems are from the same hand. However, we are inclined to consider that, apart from similarities of language, which are frequent enough, one of the strongest grounds for ascribing this work to Cynewulf lies in its treatment of the Cross. This treatment is identical in spirit with that found in the 'Elene' and the 'Christ,' and certainly seems to point to unity of origin. This, together with the personal note which is evident in each poem, leads us to Prof. Cook's conclusion that in all probability Cynewulf is, in this case, the author. Various emendations are printed in foot-notes; the notes proper are full and interesting, and the glossary unusually helpful.

Tennyson's Princess. Edited by Ethel Fry. (Blackie.)—This is a useful edition, the notes being sensible and to the point. The annotator had, of course, many predecessors to help her, by whose work she has profited. The notes on Tennyson's style are not adequate.

Hakluyt's English Voyages. Selected and edited by E. E. Speight. With a Preface by Sir Clements Markham. (Marshall & Son.)—This is a very well-chosen book of extracts, calculated, we should think, to send any boy who has read it in search of the original. If middle-class schools still used reading-books it would be an excellent choice for an intermediate form, or a holiday task which would be a real pleasure. The drawings and maps by R. Morton Nance are very well done, being full of life and incident. Mr. Speight might have pointed out that much of his story about the elephant has its original source in Bartholomew Angliens. Drake and Grenville, Frobisher and Raleigh, and a score of less-known adventurers are introduced to the reader in this fascinating volume, and tell their story, sometimes even in their own words, seconded by a few judicious notes of the editor and a glossary.

Landmarks of European History, by E. H. M'Dougall (Blackie), was written originally to meet the requirements of the syllabus adopted in Government schools and training-colleges at Cairo, where the author was engaged as a lecturer in history. We find in his pages a concise account of the great events which have combined to produce the Europe of to-day, and we congratulate Mr. M'Dougall on having produced a volume which will prove of great service not only to the senior classes of our secondary schools, but also to all who are interested in the development of national life. We should have liked a chapter on the history of Greece, for surely the check imposed by that nation on the invading forces of the Persians must be considered a landmark of European history.

Paul et Virginie. Préface de Melchior de Vogüé. (New York, Putnam's Sons; London, Dent.)—We notice under 'School-Books' this pretty little volume, though it is unprovided with notes, and apparently intended less "for the use of schools" than for adults interested in French literature. In his clear and useful introduction M. de Vogüé assures us that this once idolized classic has remained a favourite with the workgirls of Paris, and even now can boast its tribute of sympathetic tears. In England it is scarcely so honoured, yet, for children especially, there is an abiding charm in the picture therein presented of a state of society in which every one grows his own coffee and sugar and seeks his cabbage from the palmetto tree. We are indeed reminded of the immortal 'Swiss Family Robinson,' though the author of this last-named romance has sounder views than Bernardin de Saint-Pierre concerning the course to be adopted by a shipwrecked heroine.

French by the Direct Method, by T. Cartwright (Jack), is an adaptation of the German work of Rossmann and Schmidt. We have long been convinced of the artificial nature of the system adopted in most schools for teaching a foreign language. How often a pupil's disgust for French is aroused by the lengthy array of irregularities which he is told to commit to memory at an early stage of his acquaintance with that language! This is the inevitable result of the examination craze; to "the powers that be" must be assigned the blame, for the teacher has no alternative but to store his pupils' minds with the facts that he knows the examiners will require. The book under review is intended to lead pupils back to the natural method of teaching French, and by the use of such simple phrases as "montre-moi," "c'est," "est-ce," "voilà," &c., the beginner is at once introduced to the French names of the objects around him. The book is copiously illustrated to supply material for conversation, and the grammar is introduced by very easy stages. We consider it excellent for those who desire to acquire in the minimum of time a practical knowledge of French, to be of real service in conversation, as opposed to the usual examination French. For those who advocate the teaching of language by phonetic spelling the author has given a few examples; we think, however, that the script should have been accompanied by an explanation of the system.

The Teaching of Latin. By W. H. S. Jones. (Blackie.)—This is an eminently sane exposition of the "new" method of studying Latin and Greek. Mr. Jones is evidently a thoughtful teacher who has used his experience in elaborating many good devices for dealing with Latin classes in the earlier stages. His treatment lays no claim to be exhaustive, but most teachers will find something in these pages that they would do well to assimilate. His first chapter is a sensible statement of the use of classics in schools: the remaining three chapters discuss separately the three years of the Latin course of an average grammar-school boy between the ages of twelve and fifteen. The writer is to be congratulated on wisely limiting his subject to the class of school and boy mainly affected. After the recent controversy carried on in the pages of The Times, we need not follow Mr. Jones into his introductory essay. Horace (Epistles ii. 1) had to enter a vigorous protest against an age which nisi quæ terris semota suisque

Temporibus defuncta videt, fastidit et odit.

Mr. Jones's arguments are meant for an age of which contempt for antiquity is the characteristic mark. He hits the nail on the head when he writes:—

"The pertinent question in estimating the value of any course of study is this: Does it increase the learner's stock of ideas, clarify these ideas, and arrange them into well-assorted and intimately connected groups, easily called into the foreground of consciousness when occasion requires?"

The questions are, of course, to be answered in the affirmative in regard to classics. In sketching a system the writer ventures the opinion that "the average boy, with one hour a day for home-work and school-work combined, can attain to the requisite standard in Latin at the end of a three years' course," but he happily premises that "a teacher who believes in his subject is a more potent instrument than any system." The important features of his first-year plan are viva voce lessons, use of diagrams and pictures, reformed pronunciation, marking of long quantities, and generally the accommodation of Latin lessons to the sense-experience of the class. "Things seen are mightier than things heard." Always use the inductive method: "Examples before rule"; and keep the work well within the power of the class.

The same principles are applied to the second year, at the end of which the pupil is nearly able to fly alone. On reaching the third year a boy with his six Latin lessons a week is to have one reserved for composition, one for an unseen, and four for the reader. With this distribution of time we entirely agree. By an inversion of the usual procedure, Cæsar should be reserved for the sixth form, as in the old Eton curriculum. So in the second year the teacher is to commence his lesson by giving a fluent translation of the whole. The use of plain texts should be begun as soon as possible. From the middle of the third year the method sketched approximates more and more to the traditional system, the details of which in its different departments Mr. Jones analyzes with considerable insight. There is little in his method or analysis with which we are in disagreement; but one doubt suggests itself: Is not the author over-sanguine about the rapidity of the average boy's progress?—

"After two terms, or at most a year, spent in the way described in the previous chapter, a boy should have thoroughly learnt Latin accidence up to and including the regular conjugations."

And again, in describing the scheme of composition for the third year:—

"First term.—Sentences illustrating syntactical rules.

"Second term.—Simple continuous pieces composed by the teacher and based upon the prose author being read at the time.

"Third term.—Continuous pieces from some textbook."

And once more, of the "unseen lesson": "To prevent hurry on the part of the class, sufficient time, say half an hour, should always be reserved for the fresh piece." Softly, Sir Sanguine! We wonder how many teachers have seen accidence and composition and "unseens" tackled by the "average boy" at this pace. Few, we think. To us it appears that little short of marvels are claimed for this method. The method is sound, but we would far rather have Mr. Jones's seventy pages of suggestion than Scott and Jones's 'First Latin Course' put into our hands as a guide to it. Until we have seen with our own eyes some speed trials we shall be sceptical as to the results of these three anni mirabiles.

An Abridged History of Greek Literature, by A. and M. Croiset, translated by G. F. Hefelbower (New York, the Macmillan Company; London, Macmillan), is to be commended. We noticed the French original, published in 1900, as one of the best short histories, and the translator has done well in making it available for the "students in the Secondary Schools" for whom it is intended. The book is of a weighty, clumsy size, more fit for the library than the class-room. The rendering is careful and competent, though not free from traces of foreign idioms. The references given to editions and translations have wisely been revised, and increased as regards English and German books. But we note that Prof. Hefelbower writes from an American standpoint and is nothing like thorough enough in his lists. Thus he refers to Long's version of Marcus Aurelius in a Boston edition of 1863, and does not mention F. W. H. Myers's article in 'Essays Classical.' In several cases the latest editions, German and English, are omitted, which seems a pity. Under Æschylus, Paley (1887) is the only English edition mentioned, and Mr. Morshead's excellent translations are ignored, though Plumptre's bald work is noted.

New School Arithmetic. By C. Pendlebury. (Bell & Sons.)—The old book on this subject by the same author has been for so long a favourite with teachers that the present new edition is bound to awaken much interest in mathematical circles. The most striking feature in it is the early introduction of the metric system, so that a boy may acquire a knowledge of the value of metres, grammes, &c., simultaneously with that of our English weights and measures. We notice that the new method of multiplication is adopted throughout—a feature which, in view of the attention now given to approximations, most teachers will welcome. The graphical illustrations will be found most useful in giving a clear idea of positive and negative values, fractions, &c. The chapter on approximations has been extended and improved, and we welcome the attention given to decimalization of money. The new sections on graphs, mensuration, and logarithms add considerably to the value of the book, which in this form is unrivalled. The examples in it are also published separately, with or without answers.

Elementary Algebra, by W. M. Baker and A. A. Bourne (Bell & Sons), is intended to follow, to a great extent, the recommendations of the Mathematical Association. The authors have endeavoured, by an unusually large number of varied examples, to compel even beginners to reason for themselves, instead of working out calculations mechanically. Much stress has been laid on the importance of checking results and of using approximations. The student will find in this volume all that he needs on graphical solutions of problems, this portion of the book being one of its most valuable features. The remainder theorem is freely used in finding factors, and the use of functional notation is introduced at an early stage. In the later chapters we find, in addition to the usual work on the progressions and the binomial theorem, valuable sections on annuities, exponential series, and indeterminate coefficients. For the University Locals and similar examinations we know of no other volume so well adapted.

A Modern Geometry (Theoretical and Practical), by G. A. Christian and A. Pratt (Allman), is one of the many attempts to produce a book to supersede Euclid, and we can safely recommend its use to students working for the examinations we have just mentioned. The authors have discarded many of Euclid's proofs in favour of more direct methods, at the same time omitting such propositions of the old-fashioned system as are now deemed superfluous. The practical exercises are selected with the object of teaching the essential principles of geometry, and though sufficient in number, they are not too numerous. In our opinion, the chapters on graphs and the use of squared paper are scarcely enough; but these can be supplemented by the teacher. The type and diagrams are very clear, the arrangement of the work is rational, and as a first book in geometry it deserves success.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

WE are able to commend Mr. Maurice Baring's With the Russians in Manchuria (Methuen), of which we should discourse at length were it not already known to our readers from the appearance of Mr. Baring's excellent correspondence in The Morning Post. Mr. Baring does not write well, but he thinks well and observes well, and he can judge literary points in others—witness his account of the modern Russian drama. One curious fact brought out is the extraordinary popularity of Milton's 'Paradise Lost' among the Russian peasantry and private soldiers. The author noticed this throughout Russia. He afterwards bought a copy "at a small side station between Kharbin and Baikal." We doubt if a Milton could have been purchased during our war at a bookstall between Kimberley and Mafeking. The Morning Post was looked on by the Russian officers as pro-Japanese, anti-Russian, and even bloodthirsty, but Mr. Baring's letters might be reprinted by the Peace Society, and will be to the taste of Mr. Methuen, his publisher, sometimes charged, on the strength of his own writings, with holding views similar to those of Mr. Baring, though expressed in better literary form. Here is a good war-picture:—

"A soldier near us had his pipe shot out of his mouth by a bullet. I shouted to him that we were in rather a dangerous place; he shouted back that he was much too hungry to care."

THE late Col. Henderson has left a high and deserved reputation. The Science of War, edited by Capt. Malcolm, and containing a brief memoir by Lord Roberts, is a collection of Col. Henderson's essays and lectures, and is published by Messrs. Longman & Co. Whether Henderson was a great military teacher is perhaps doubtful, although there is no doubt possible as to his literary powers. There have been many able men who have applied the principles of Napoleon and of Clausewitz to modern war. Whether the soldiers and sailors have been as successful as the civilians we are inclined to doubt. The essays of two civilians, Mr. Spenser Wilkinson and Mr. Thursfield, are perhaps more highly valued outside this country among military and naval men than are the writings of any of our soldiers or sailors. Henderson, we think, was perhaps greatest as a stylist, and his 'Life' of Stonewall Jackson is a pride of English letters. As a military teacher he was not steady, and in the present volume there are many contradictions. So, too, as regards style itself: some of the essays are admirable from that point of view, including his last work, of which the proofs were corrected in the Sudan just before his death; others are curiously loose in composition, and there are some expressions which are indefensible. Of the seeming contradictions, one—the most important—is perhaps not real. Grant's employment of his chief army in the American Civil War is described in words which are followed by these: "It was a machine, perhaps unskillfully used." The reader will imagine that the passage applies to Grant, but there are three other passages in which the breadth and soundness of Grant's strategy are commended in terms so high as to suggest that the words which we have quoted are not intended to apply personally to Grant. In the list of "great generals" of the Civil War, Henderson gives the order—Lee, Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Stuart. Soldiers generally, but not invariably, put Lee above Grant, setting both high among the generals of the world. We are disposed to alter the order, and are convinced that that will be the ultimate judgment of history.

On modern tactics Henderson is thoroughly sound and sane, and does not allow himself to be carried away by his South African experience. On the future of cavalry he is also in accord with the best continental view. He is in favour of the addition of regular battalions of mounted infantry to regular cavalry, keeping both; and for the regular cavalry he is strongly favourable to the lance. Lord Roberts's introduction suggests that Henderson's South African experience had not had time to sink sufficiently into his mind. But we, on the contrary, believe that the best judgment of the military world is on Henderson's side in all these cavalry questions.

Coming to volunteers and general staff—for the two questions are connected in Henderson's writings—we find him a strong advocate of both. He considers the general staff more important to us, who largely depend on men not permanently organized for war, than it is to other powers. Henderson is fiercely in favour of manœuvres; but it is perhaps rather the fault of governments than "the reluctance of Parliament to vote" the funds, which accounts for the deficiency in such operations at home. Henderson's defence of the volunteers is in terms so strong that it will please the advocates of the volunteer service; but it is not inconsistent with the diminution of numbers recommended by Mr. Arnold-Forster. The article on "foreign criticism," in which the courage of the British soldier in South Africa is defended against those who have written on the war, is not conclusive. We wish it were. We have noted but two mistakes. The Great Exhibition of 1851 is described as being held "in 1852"; and, while both Napiers are quoted correctly in other passages, one passage attributed to Sir Charles Napier is, we think, the most famous of the passages in W. Napier's 'Peninsular War.'

THE Linscott Publishing Company, of Toronto, issue in the United States and Canada, and Messrs. W. & R. Chambers in Great Britain, in "The Nineteenth Century Series," Political Progress of the Nineteenth Century, by the late T. Macknight, of The Northern Whig, revised and completed by Mr. C. C. Osborne. The preface states that Mr. Macknight was always a Liberal, but no one, Conservative or Liberal, would gather the fact from perusal of the text, which is written from the Ulster point of view, and not the Ulster of Mr. T. W. Russell. The book bristles with points of controversy, historical and literary; but we had best confine ourselves to actual error. Mr. Disraeli is called an early advocate of representation of the colonies in London by a council, on the strength of a speech "as early as 1872, when Imperial Federation.....was regarded as an idle dream." We should say that Imperial Federation was far stronger during the agitation of Sir George Grey, before that date, than it is now, while Mr. Disraeli had advocated some such plan a generation before the date named, and, like Lord Salisbury, grew to recognize the insuperable difficulties which colonial opinion offers to all such schemes. Bright, rather than Mr. Chamberlain, who is not named in this connexion, is put forward as the opponent of coercion and of W. E. Forster in the Cabinet of 1880-1. That this is not Ulster tenderness towards Mr. Chamberlain is proved by his being included by name with Mr. Morley and Mr. Bright as the chiefs of those who by their "rantings" showed themselves to be "demagogues, whom in a fit of mental aberration the nation mistook for responsible statesmen." The "Speaker's coup d'état" is ascribed to "Mr. Peel" in place of Mr. Brand. It is hard on "Mr. Errington" to declare that he "constituted himself" the representative of the Irish Government at Rome, inasmuch as Gladstone made him a baronet for the services he undertook and rendered. The idle story that the Redistribution Scheme of 1885 was given by Gladstone's Government to The Standard is resuscitated, although the suit which took place on the subject of the printing contract brought out the facts. Not "eighteen" but twelve seats were "additional" by the redistribution scheme. Lord George Hamilton's naval programme of 1889 is attributed to Mr. Goschen. Bradlaugh's doctrines as to certain relations are called "the most questionable theories of Malthus"—that blameless parson! Sir Salter Pyne is called "Payne"; and Zulfikar becomes "Zarfikar."

PROF. GEORGE WRONG, whose work we have often praised in connexion with the 'Review of Historical Publications relating to Canada,' of which, as Professor of History in the University of Toronto, he has so complete a knowledge, is responsible for a biography with a title, The Earl of Elgin (Methuen & Co.), likely to mislead some purchasers. It is with the brother of Sir F. Bruce, with the head of the Elgin Mission to China, with the man whose private secretaries were Laurence Oliphant and Lord Loch, that Prof. Wrong deals. We have already had one Canadian life of Lord Elgin by an equally considerable Canadian writer, Sir John Bourinot; but Prof. Wrong has not confined himself to Lord Elgin's Canadian career. The greater portion of his volume is concerned with China, Japan, and India. In China Lord Elgin played a more showy, but a less important part than his brother, who has also left a great name at Washington as well as at Peking; and among the Viceroy's of India Lord Elgin has been eclipsed by his successors. There is little interest now felt in his career, excellent, and even admirable, as it was, and no necessity for us to go over its steps. The steady and upright policy pursued by Lord Elgin in Canada, although such as must have been pursued by any Governor, was accompanied by an unpopularity extending to mob violence and even serious riot in the early stages. It is a remarkable fact, in face of the historical foundation of the Canadian Protestant Conservative party on a United Empire Loyalist base, that the need for paying attention to Catholic French Canada led to a movement for annexation to the United States. Prof. Wrong says of Lord Elgin, "Even he was surprised when members of the Tory party, the party of traditional loyalty, took up the annexation cry." The discontent had not only a religious and racial, but also a commercial basis. Canada had just lost the greater part of her preference in British markets, and had in consequence abandoned discrimination in her own tariff in favour of the mother country. Another matter in which the discussions of Lord Elgin's time deal with subjects which are still before us concerns the Yangtse, up which he took a British fleet. Prof. Wrong tells us that "it was his journey indeed that helped chiefly to fix the political tradition now established that the Yang-tse valley is the British sphere of influence in China."

The repudiation by Germany of this doctrine has been so complete, and our recent insistence on it so feeble, that it is difficult to support the words of Prof. Wrong.

How Canada was Held for the Empire is, as its second title tells us, an account of the war of 1812, from the pen of Dr. James Hannay, and is published by Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack. The volume is chiefly about the land fighting on the Canadian frontier, and does not deal fully either with the naval battles or with the land warfare in other parts of the United States. The result is that the book is chiefly concerned with Canadian triumphs, and takes little account of the operations on American soil of Wellington's veterans from the Peninsula. The nineteenth and last chapter, entitled 'The Capture of Washington,' explains what happened in the little campaign which conferred the title of Bladensburg on the family of General Ross. Its last two pages mention "the expedition for the capture of New Orleans. A full description of this unfortunate affair is without the scope of this history." Dr. Hannay explains that it was an enterprise which had no connexion with the defence of Canada; but it was intended to have the same connexion with the defence of Canada as had the capture of Washington, and was a far more important military undertaking. A large force of the best British troops had been sent across the Atlantic from France. Alone among the troops that fought in the second American war, they were organized as an army and commanded by officers carefully chosen for the purpose; and their complete defeat, and return, disgraced, to England, too late for Waterloo, came near having grave consequences in relation to the European situation. It reminds us of the worst of our defeats in South Africa to be told, as we are in the few lines of Dr. Hannay, that the valour of the American militia

"was not put to the test, for the entire loss they suffered was only six killed and seven wounded, so well were they protected, while the British loss was about two thousand."

These, of course, as is explained, were not the total losses of the expedition, but those of the unsuccessful attempt to storm breastworks outside New Orleans at a single point.

THE house of Calmann-Lévy publishes La Question d'Égypte, by M. de Freycinet, the announcement of which has excited much interest in advance. There is little to be said about the first half of the book, except that it forms an excellent history of the Egyptian question up to 1882. Almost the only point on which we should take issue with M. de Freycinet concerns the Khedive Tewfik, to whom he attributes "intelligence étroite." Even here we know that the majority of competent critics would side with M. de Freycinet against us. It was, however, the case that the Khedive showed considerable intelligence in a most difficult situation, while his timidity did not exceed that which most kings and statesmen would have displayed. When we come to the account of the Alexandria riots, we begin to part company with M. de Freycinet. He conceals the fact that a considerable number of petty officers and seamen of the French fleet were killed or wounded in the so-called massacre. He regrets, and attributes to England, the failure to announce "prompt intervention." He does not relate the energetic steps which were taken by the British Government to insist on punishment of the leaders, reparation by public apology, and payment of compensation to the injured and to the relatives of the killed; and he gives no particulars with regard to the inquiry which was immediately commenced, and which failed to reveal the complicity of the nationalist leaders. All these facts were material to the story; and from this point M. de Freycinet seems rather inclined to vindicate his own policy than to write history. Things are worse when we come to the account of our campaign, which is cut down to nine lines, with five lines of comment—short allowance in a volume of over 450 pages. The comment is in the following words:—

"The strange contest has been explained in various manners. The reason generally accepted is that a sort of understanding had grown up between the British commander and Arabi. The indulgence shown later on to the latter corroborates this hypothesis."

We suggest to our readers that this confirmation by M. de Freycinet of the ridiculous legend as to "the cavalry of St. George," by which is meant the employment of bribery to prevent the Egyptian army from fighting, is the adoption of a flagrant lie, which it is unworthy of M. de Freycinet to accept. As for the "indulgence" to Arabi, we now know that it was not without difficulty that Gladstone was able to save his life, while the perpetual imprisonment, to which the death sentence was commuted, was considered unduly harsh by French opinion.

When we come to the negotiations conducted by Lord Salisbury and Sir H. Drummond Wolff in 1887, and to the events of 1892, we find similar imperfection in the work. M. de Freycinet defends French pressure on the Sultan, to force him to reject the Drummond Wolff Convention for the evacuation of Egypt, on technical grounds, which are swept away, even in his book, by the healthy common sense of statements placed in the mouth of the then French Ambassador in London, but no more accepted by M. de Freycinet than they were at the time by the Foreign Minister of France. As regards 1892, M. de Freycinet is not unnaturally silent on the pressure of the French financiers which made the French Government deliberately refrain from making that proposal to renew the Drummond Wolff Convention which Gladstone had publicly invited. The history of the various French expeditions now grouped in history under the name "Fashoda" is prudently abridged. The facts that the Marchand column had been only one of many, and that a determined attempt had been made to lead Abyssinians under French and Russian officers not only to, but also across the Nile, are material to the subject. Finally, M. de Freycinet, in spite of the recent Morocco Convention, has a concluding chapter, in which he declares the presence of British troops in Egypt to be not more legitimate at this moment than it was twenty years ago, and seems to invite Europe to raise the question.

The book displays the usual French carelessness about names. Sir H. Drummond Wolff's second name is in every passage but one, we think, spelt with a final t, although in one case correctly given. Sir Edward Grey is always "Sir Grey," except once where he is "Sir Edway Grey."

We heartily commend the first part of M. de Freycinet's volume as an accurate account of highly complicated negotiations, clearer than the still fuller history to be discovered in the intricate series of British Blue-books.

In The Memoirs of Constantine Dix (Fisher Unwin) Mr. Barry Pain has written twelve stories of a thief's operations, which are very readable, and may well serve to while away an idle hour. They are not, however, in any way considerable work. The thief—who gets retribution at the end for a murder—leads a double life, prides himself on the simplicity of his methods, and is known to the world as a lay preacher, who reclaims sinners from thieving and other vices. The contrast thus afforded is frequently introduced, but in a rather cheap way, it seems to us. We need, perhaps, hardly remind our readers that Mr. Pain writes very much better than the ordinary purveyor of crime and mystery.

We have received from The Bulletin Newspaper Company of Sydney a large gift-book containing drawings by Mr. Livingston Hopkins, who contributes to The Bulletin under the name suggested by the title of this volume, On the Hop. The volume, although it has only just reached us, is dated 1904, but a great many of the best pictures are of the time of the late Sir Henry Parkes, and are somewhat out of date, while all of them are more interesting in Australia than to us here. There are few Englishmen who possess sufficient acquaintance with the physiognomy of the colonial statesmen to recognize at a glance even Mr. Reid, whose features and personality lend themselves to caricature. Sir E. Barton is better known, because of F. C. G.'s caricatures of him during his visits to England, when the kangaroo was familiar to readers of The Westminster Gazette. Mr. Livingston Hopkins's work is even more uncertain than that of most caricaturists, but he is admirable when at his best. The taste of the readers of The Bulletin will, of course, permit a latitude in caricature less extreme than that of the Parisian boulevards, but much wider than that of the London daily paper.

MR. JOHN MURRAY publishes Railways and their Rates, with an Appendix on the British Canal Problem, by Mr. Edwin A. Pratt. Portions of some of the chapters are reproduced from a series of articles in The Times. The book is on the side of the railway companies, and an unsuccessful attempt is made to show that such of them as have bought up many of the canals of this country have done their duty to the public with regard to the waterways.

SOME further volumes of Messrs. Methuen's "Standard Library" are just out: Shakespeare's Works, Vol. II.; Goldsmith's Poems and Plays; Gibbon's Decline and Fall, Vol. II. of Prof. Bury's masterly edition; Milton's Paradise Lost (Vol. I. of his works); and Of the Imitation of Christ, by Thomas à Kempis. This last is the translation (revised) of Dr. Bigg, who has managed admirably to combine clearness with dignity, but seems to us unduly archaic in punctuation. Mr. Sidney Lee supplies a prefatory note in each case, which is just what is needed, and the volumes are bound to continue the rapid success of the library.

WE have on our table The Romance of Victor Hugo and Juliette Drouet, by H. W. Wack (Putnam),—Critical Times in Turkey and England's Responsibility, by G. K. Lewis (Hodder & Stoughton),—A Handbook of Cyprus, compiled by Sir J. T. Hutchinson and C. D. Cobham (Stanford),—An Academy for Grown Horsemen, by G. Gambado (Methuen),—The Final Transition, a Sociological Study, by J. K. Ingram (Black),—A Practical French Grammar, by F. W. Aveling (Sonnenschein),—Brahms, by H. Antcliffe (Bell),—The Poems of Lord Tennyson: Maud, and other Poems, edited by A. Waugh (Heinemann),—Library of Congress: Copyright in Congress, 1789-1904, prepared by T. Solberg (Washington, Government Printing Office),—Catalogue of the Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Library of the India Office: Part VII. Sanskrit Literature, edited by J. Eggeling, Ph.D. (India Office),—Franks Bequest: The Treasure of the Oxus, with other Objects from Ancient Persia and India, by O. M. Dalton (Trustees of the British Museum),—Leetures Françaises: Géographie et Histoire, by W. M. Poole and M. Becker (Blackie),—Concise and Practical Guide to Rome, by L. D. Gordon (Lawrence & Bullen),—The Golfers' Year-Book, 1905, edited by J. L. Low (Nisbet),—Gas Engine Design, by C. E. Lucke, Ph.D. (Constable),—A New Humanity; or, the Easter Island, by A. Wilbrandt, translated from the German by Dr. A. S. Rappoport (MacLaren),—Roger Trewinion, by J. Hocking (Ward & Lock),—Mixed Relationships, by R. Rennison (Simpkin),—A Legend of the Twilight, by Ha Rollo (Burleigh),—A Courier of Fortune, by A. W. Marchmont (Ward & Lock),—The Puritans and the Tithes, by the late Rev. T. Hancock (S.P.C.K.),—The Christ in the Teacher, by J. H. Skrine (Simpkin),—St. John: the Revised Version, edited by A. Carr (Cambridge, University Press),—The Christian, and other Poems, by Margaret Cave (Mowbray),—The Dance of Olives, by A. Maquarie (Dent),—The Ring of the Nibelung, by R. Wagner: Part I. Prologue: Rhinegold (Owen),—The Burden of Babylon, by H. E. M. Stutfield (Arnold),—Annales du Musée Guimet: Le Népal, by S. Lévi, Vol. I. (Paris, Leroux),—Abhandlungen der Fries'schen Schule, by G. Hessenberg and others, Part II. (Williams & Norgate),—Romæ Carrus Navalis, by G. A. Sartorio (Milan, Treves),—Archivio Muratoriano, Nos. I and II., edited by V. Fiorini (Castello, Lapi),—and Déclassé, by C. Pettit (Paris, Lévy).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Balmforth (R.), The New Testament in the Light of the Higher Criticism, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Batten (L. W.), The Hebrew Prophet, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Davenport (F. M.), Primitive Traits in Religious Revivals, cr. 8vo, 6/6 net.
 Dole (C. F.), The Religion of a Gentleman, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Donaldson (J.), The Westminster Confession of Faith and the Thirty-Nine Articles of the Church of England, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
 Jesus in London To-day, by Mortalls, cr. 8vo, 3/6

- Macran (F. W.), English Apologetic Theology, 6/
 Mott (J. R.), The Home Ministry and Modern Missions, 3/6
 St. Catherine of Siena as seen in her Letters, translated by V. D. Scudder, extra cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
 Shipley (M. E.), An English Church History for Children, A.D. 597-1036, illustrated, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
 Watts (C.), The Meaning of Rationalism, and other Essays, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.

Law.

- Hemming (H. B.), A Practical Guide to the Law of Patents, 8vo, 6/ net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Horth (A. C.), Repoussé Metal Work, cr. 8vo, 2/6
 Macquoid (K. S.), Pictures in Umbria, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
 Weir (I.), A Greek Painter's Art, cr. 8vo, 12/6 net.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Binyon (L.), Dream Come True, cr. 8vo, boards, 12/6 net.
 Dante: Concordanza delle Opere Italiane in prosa e del Canzoniere, edited by E. S. Sheldon, 8vo, 3/6 net.
 Dowson (Ernest), Poems, with Memoir by A. Symonds, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
 Drummond (W. H.), The Voyageur, and other Poems, 5/ net.
 Gordon (Julien), Poems, 12mo, 3/6 net.

Music.

- Ragster (O.), Chats on Violins, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Bibliography.

- Auction Prices of Books, edited by L. S. Livingston, 4 vols. 1855-1904, roy. 8vo, 163/ net.

Philosophy.

- Holmes (E.), What is Philosophy? cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
 Santayana (G.), The Life of Reason, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

History and Biography.

- Baring (M.), With the Russians in Manchuria, 8vo, 7/6 net.
 Fox (J.), Following the Sun-Flag, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
 Hannay (J.), How Canada was Held for the Empire, 7/6 net.
 Home (G.), The Evolution of an English Town: the Story of Pickering, fcap. 4to, 10/6 net.
 Joubert (C.), The Fall of Tsardom, 8vo, 7/6
 Mayo (W. H.), The Trinity House, London: Past and Present, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Memoirs of a Royal Chaplain, 1729-63, annotated by A. Hartshorne, 8vo, 18/ net.
 Moore (I.), Talks in a Library with Laurence Hutton, cr. 8vo, 10/6 net.
 Newbolt (H.), The Year of Trafalgar, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
 Peters (Mrs. S.), The History of Pembroke Dock, 3/ net.
 Tarbell (I. M.), The History of the Standard Oil Company, 2 vols. 8vo, 24/ net.

Geography and Travel.

- McMaster (J. B.), History of the Expedition under the Command of Captains Lewis and Clark, 3 vols. 10/6 net.
Narratives of the Career of Hernando de Sota, edited by E. G. Bourne, 2 vols. cr. 8vo, 7/ net.

Sports and Pastimes.

- Anderson (E. L.) and Collier (P.), Riding and Driving, extra cr. 8vo, 8/6 net.
 Brownlee (W. M.), Lawn-Tennis, cr. 8vo, 2/6
 Graham (J.), Practical Track and Field Athletics, 8vo, 2/6
 Hunt's Universal Yacht List, 1905, oblong 12mo, 6/

Philology.

- Aristophanes: The Acharnians, edited by C. E. Graves, 7/; Peace, edited by H. Sharples, 8vo, 12/6 net.
 Buchheim (E. S.), Der Ungebetene Gast, and other Plays, 12mo, 2/6
 Platt (H. E. P.), Byways in the Classics, including Alia, 12mo, 3/6 net.

Science.

- Crane (D. B.), Chrysanthemums for Garden and Greenhouse, edited by T. W. Sanders, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
 Duncan (R. K.), The New Knowledge, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
 Dye (F.), A Practical Treatise upon Warming Buildings by Hot Water, 8vo, 8/6 net.
 Goebel (K.), Organography of Plants: Part 2, Special Organography, translated by I. B. Balfour, 21/ net.
 Horner (J.), Engineers' Turning, 8vo, 9/ net.
 McDonald (D.), Fragrant Flowers and Leaves, 2/6 net.
Mathematical Questions and Solutions, edited by C. I. Marks, New Series, Vol. 7, 8vo, 6/6
 Mellor (J. W.), The Crystallization of Iron and Steel, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
 Osterhout (W. J. V.), Experiments with Plants, 5/ net.
 Peckham (G. W. and E. G.), Wasps, Social and Solitary, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
 Punnett (R. C.), Mendelism, 16mo, 2/ net.
 Schneider (N. H.), Electrical Instruments and Testing, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
State and Agriculture in Hungary, 1896-1903, translated by A. György, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
 Tennant (W. J.), The Compound Engine, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
 Twelvrees (W. N.), Concrete Steel, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
 Williams (W. R.), Essentials of the Practice of Medicine, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.

General Literature.

- Altscheler (J. A.), The Candidate, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Biggs (H.), A Schoolmaster's Talks with his Boys, edited by the Rev. W. T. Flack, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
 Cross (Victoria), Life of my Heart, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Marchi (E. de), Demetrio Pianelli, translated from the Italian by M. Newett, cr. 8vo, 6/
Dental Annual and Directory, 1905, cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.
 Ensell (Mrs.), The Mysteries of Schoedering Hall, 2/6 net.
 Foster (A. E. M.), The Sensitive and other Pieces, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Grant (S.), A Japanese Guardsman, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Henderson (G. F. R.), The Science of War, edited by Capt. N. Malcolm, 8vo, 14/ net.
 Horne (C. S.), The Model Citizen, cr. 8vo, 2/ net.
 Kernahan (Mrs. C.), The Whisperer, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Le Queux (W.), Who Giveth this Woman? cr. 8vo, 6/
 Martin (D. A.), Gran, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Palm (B.), The Memoirs of Constantine Dix, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Pratt (E. A.), Railways and their Rates, extra cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
 Shaler (N. S.), The Citizen, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
 Wayne (C. S.), A Prince to Order, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Wells (C.) and Taber (H. P.), The Matrimonial Bureau, 6/
 Whishaw (F.), A Grand Duke of Russia, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Whitson (J. H.), The Rainbow Chasers, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Winter (John Strange), Just as It Was, cr. 8vo, 6/

FOREIGN.

Theology.

- Herrmann (J.), Die Idee der Sühne im Alten Testament, 3m. 50.
 Klttel (R.), Biblia Hebraica, Part 1, 4m.
 Schmidt (C.), Koptisch-gnostische Schriften: Vol. 1, Die Pistis Sophia, Die beiden Bücher des Jeu, 13m. 50.
 Werminghoff (A.), Geschichte der Kirchenverfassung Deutschlands im Mittelalter, Vol. 1, 7m.

Law.

- Breuilac (M.), Des Changements de Qualification par les Tribunaux Répressifs, 5fr.
 Varigny (H. de), La Nature et la Vie, 3fr. 50.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Bajot (E.), Frises et Moulures Ornées, 50fr.
 Hampel (J.), Alterthümer des frühen Mittelalters in Ungarn, 3 vols. 60m.
 Migeon (G.), Chefs-d'Œuvre d'Art Japonais, 75fr.

Poetry.

- Ernault (L.), La Croisade des Enfantelets Francs, 3fr.

Music.

- Cuvillier (C.), Chansons de Route, 7fr.

Bibliography.

- Mellottée (P.), Histoire Économique de l'Imprimerie: Vol. 1, 1439-1789, 7fr. 50.

Philosophy.

- Maurras (C.), L'Avenir de l'Intelligence, 3fr. 50.
 Michel (H.), Propos de Morale, Series 3, 3fr. 50.

History and Biography.

- Bérard (V.), L'Empire Russe et le Tsarisme, 4fr.
 Bloy (L.), Quatre Ans de Captivité à Cochons-sur-Marne, 1900-4, 3fr. 50.
 Ducéré (E.), Le Mariage de Louis XIV., 20fr.
 Ferrero (G.), Grandeur et Décadence de Rome: Jules César, 3fr. 50.
 Ferry (E.), La France en Afrique, 3fr. 50.
 Lefranc (A.), Les Navigations de Pantagruel, 12fr.
 Luchaire (A.), Innocent III.: la Croisade des Albigeois, 3fr. 50.
 Mondon-Vidailhet (C.), Chronique de Théodoros II., 2 vols. 14fr.
 Tourville (H. de), Histoire de la Formation Particulariste: l'Origine des Grands Peuples Actuels, 10fr.

Geography and Travel.

- Fullerton (W. M.), Terres Françaises: Bourgogne, Franche-Comté, Narbonnaise, 3fr. 50.
 Quillardet (M.), Espagnols et Portugais chez Eux, 3fr. 50.
 Salle (G. de la), En Mandchourie, 3fr. 50.

Folk-lore.

- Sébillot (P.), Le Folk-lore de France: Vol. 2, La Mer et les Eaux Douces, 16fr.

Philology.

- François (A.), La Grammaire du Purisme et l'Académie Française au XVIII. Siècle, 5fr.
 Lidzbarski (M.), Das Johannesbuch der Mandäer: Part 1, Text, 14m.

Science.

- Beauverie (J.), Le Bois, 20fr.

General Literature.

- Ajalbert (J.), Sao Van Di, 3fr. 50.
 Clo (Comtesse), L'Inévitable, 3fr. 50.
 Ducoté (E.), Le Servage, 3fr. 50.
 Guerlin (H.), Le Baiser de la Déesse, 3fr. 50.
 Hess (J.), La Vérité sur l'Algérie, 3fr. 50.
 Lichtenberger (A.), Line, 3fr. 50.
 Sorb (Capt.), Quittons la Méditerranée et la Mer de Chine, 3fr. 50.

THE HARVARD MEMORIAL WINDOW AT ST. SAVIOUR'S.

30, Little Russell Street, W.C., May 30th, 1905.

PROBABLY Canon Thompson, for so many years the devoted custodian and upbuilder of London's latest cathedral, little suspects that he owes the most recent beautifying gift for his beloved and venerable fabric to a curious incidence of Lord Lindsay's pet "progression by antagonism." Such, however, is the fact. Last week Mr. Choate, as a parting gift commemorating the close of his six years' memorable occupancy of the United States Embassy at the Court of St. James, unveiled a memorial window to John Harvard in the presence of a distinguished company, including Archbishop Davidson. This is how it all came about.

Just twenty years ago my friend Mr. Henry Fitzgilbert Waters gave to the world, through the medium of the New England Historic-Genealogical Society, his remarkable identification of the parentage of the Rev. John Harvard, the youthful Puritan whose princely legacy induced the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to adopt his name for their newly founded State college, now the world-famed Harvard University. In his printed report Mr. Waters, after showing that Harvard was baptized at St. Saviour's, November 29th, 1607, and that his father and two brothers were buried there in the terrible plague of 1625, goes on to remark:—

"All, however, I think, were buried in the church. As I passed through this venerable edifice, once the place of worship of our modest benefactor, I noticed the great window in the South Transept was of plain glass, as if Providence had designed that some day the sons of Harvard should place there a memorial of one who is so well entitled to their veneration."

Strange to say, this broad appeal came to nothing, although the discovery of Mr. Waters was widely heralded in many lands. Possibly certain bitter jealousies in Boston from rival organizations, over such a long keenly-pursued personality as that of Harvard, shrouded from the first in complete mystery, may have accounted for the failure of Mr. Waters's suggestion. More, however, of this failure was probably due to an unfortunate petty controversy, in which The Athenæum played an important part. A local Southwark antiquary, having stumbled on the name of Harvard, had constructed an entirely erroneous theory about John. The indiscretion of a minor official of St. Saviour's enabled this gentleman to hastily amend his notes, after Mr. Waters had been to St. Saviour's and identified John's baptism, and then to rush into print without any semblance of proof, as if he had made an independent discovery. The whole story is set forth by the late Mr. Hassam, of the New England Society, in The Athenæum for January 2nd, 1886. The public do not go into the pros and cons of technical details, and are apt to lose interest in disputed matters which are purely of sentimental importance. The memorial project fell through. Some eight or ten years ago, when I happened to be strolling through St. Saviour's, I accidentally got into conversation about the church with Canon Thompson, and he mentioned to me how ungratefully he had been treated by the many sons of Harvard, having kept purposely for several years a special window open to them to use as a Harvard memorial. He said, however, he had waited quite long enough, and was about to utilize the window for other memorial purposes. Two or three years ago I happened to mention this conversation to Mr. Choate. Mr. Choate made no remark, and I had almost myself forgotten the matter; when I was astonished to see the announcement by Reuter that a Harvard memorial window had actually been shipped from New York, given by Mr. Choate. Mr. Choate is a forceful man, who, when he has a purpose, says little, but does things, as in this case, doing alone what all the sons of Harvard failed collectively to do. The allotted window had long been filled up, as threatened. All things, however, always work in the end for the best in this best of all possible worlds. The long delay has given John Harvard a chapel and a shrine to himself. It is appropriate that this splendid gift was given by a fellow-townsmen of Mr. Waters, both being sons of Hawthorne's historic Salem, the mother town of Massachusetts. Moreover, Mr. Choate and Mr. Waters were class-mates together in Harvard's distinguished class of 1855, which included Louis Agassiz and Bishop Phillips Brooks. It is a remarkable fact that the two colonial patriots which enabled the establishment of the two great New-England rivals, Harvard and Yale, both came from the Southwark end of London Bridge, and chiefly from St. Saviour's. Harvard's inheritance from his mother is fully set forth by Mr. Waters. Although Mistress Harvard (Katherine Rogers) was a daughter of Stratford-on-Avon, the home of her childhood being at this day the most beautiful Elizabethan relic of Stratford, she derived the chief means which she bequeathed to her son, for him to use in his endowment, from the dowry of her several marriages with Southwark tradesmen. On the other hand, the real founder of Yale College, Nathaniel Lynde, inherited his means from quite a network of Southwark grandsires—to wit, Roger Cole, the chief citizen of St. Saviour's and executor of Edward Allen, his son-in-law; William Lock, proprietor of Merton Abbey; and John Newdigate, or Newgate, the richest of the founders of Boston in 1630, who was himself born on the southern end of London Bridge. The reasons which sent Harvard and these others across the sea, the romantic interlacing of antagonistic but closely related players and Puritans in this teeming bit of old London, the still remaining fragments of some of the very walls of the Clink Prison, into which Laud threw John Lothrop and all his congregation, and the infinite other number of early colonial associations of Southwark, form, in the words of Southwark's most illustrious citizen, "a whole history." LOTHROP WITHINGTON.

TWO IDENTIFICATIONS IN GRAY'S LETTERS.

Fiveways, Burnham, Bucks, May 26th, 1905.

SINCE writing my note under the above heading (Athenæum, May 20th, 1905), I have been informed by Col. Prideaux that he had already discovered Lady Fawkener in the "Lady Fr." of Gray. Col. Prideaux was kind enough to send me the number of Notes and Queries (November 21st, 1901) in which his discovery was published, and I regret that the fact that he had anticipated me had entirely passed from my memory when I wrote my note.

HELEN TOYNBEE.

'THE FAIR JILT.'

IN Lord Harrowby's library at Sandon Hall I have recently come across a small volume which I believe to be the first edition of Mrs. Aphara Behn's novel 'The Fair Jilt,' dated 1688.

It is not mentioned in the Grenville nor in the General Catalogue of the British Museum, nor in Watt, Lowndes, Hazlitt, 'Book-Prices Current,' or the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' In the last-named work Mr. Gosse states that "original editions" of Mrs. Behn's writings "are now unusually rare."

The only mention of this edition that I have found is in vol. ii. (just out) of Prof. Arber's valuable 'Term Catalogues,' under the date Hilary Term (July), 1688.

In 1886 an edition was published in "The Temple Series," on the title-page of which occur the words: "Reprinted from original edition in the British Museum." This so-called "original" is doubtless the first edition of 'All the Histories and Novels written by the late ingenious Mrs. Behn,' published in 1705—i.e., six years after her death. The title-page of Lord Harrowby's volume reads:—

"The | Fair Jilt: | or, the | History | of | Prince Tarquin | and | Miranda. | Written by | Mrs. A. Behn. | London, | Printed by R. Holt, for Will. | Canning, at his Shop in the | Temple-Cloysters, 1688."

It forms part of the collection, in his lordship's possession, of books which belonged to Lady Mary Wortley Montagu.

Quite possibly other copies of this edition may be lying hid in private libraries about the country. DORSET ECCLES.

A LYKE-WAKE DIRGE.

St. Luke's, Wincanton.

IF the correspondence on the word "fleet" is not yet closed may I venture to point out that the word is still in use in the Swiss dialect? It occurs in its collective form "G'flezz," and denotes the various quarters into which the body of a church is divided, "Gentlemen's G'flezz, Ladies' G'flezz," &c. I have heard it used in this sense hundreds of times, but cannot recollect its occurrence in any other connexion.

(Rev.) B. ZIMMERMAN.

'DICTIONARY OF INDIAN BIOGRAPHY.'

(Third List.)

May 20th, 1905.

By the courtesy of the Editor of The Athenæum, I have been permitted to publish the following list of names of the deceased persons (601-900) who have been provisionally selected for inclusion in the 'Dictionary of Indian Biography,' to be published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. in the autumn. This work is intended to contain biographical notices of about 2,000 to 2,500 persons, living or dead, Europeans or natives of India, connected with India since about the year 1750 A.D. Suggestions are invited, and it is hoped that readers of The Athenæum will bring any important omissions to my notice, and state where materials for short biographies can be obtained. Letters should be addressed to 61, Cornwall Gardens, S. Kensington, S.W.

C. E. BUCKLAND, Editor 'D.I.B.'

Grant-Duff, James, Captain, Historian, 1789-1858
 Greathed, Sir Edward Harris, General, 1812-81
 Greathed, William Wilberforce Harris, Major-General, 1826-78
 Green, Sir George W. G., General, 1825-91
 Grey, Sir Charles Edward, Chief Justice, Bengal, 1785-1865
 Grey, Sir John, Lieutenant-General, 1780?-1856
 Grey, Sir William, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, 1818-1878
 Griffith, William, Botanist, 1810-45
 Grose, John Henry, Author, before 1750-after 1783
 Grote, Arthur, Indian Civil Service, Bengal, 1811-86
 Groves, Anthony Norris, Missionary, 1795-1853
 Growse, Frederic Salmon, Indian Civilian, Oriental Scholar, 1837-93
 Gubbins, Martin Richard, Indian Civil Service, Oudh, 1812-63
 Guise, John Christopher, Lieutenant-General, V.C., 1826-1895
 Gundert, Rev. Herman, Missionary, Scholar, Linguist, 1814-93
 Guy, Sir Philip M. N., General, 1804-78
 Gwalior, Daulat Rao Sindia, Maharaja of, 1780-1827
 Gwalior, Sir Jiaji Rao Sindia, Maharaja of, 1835-86
 Gwalior, Madhava Rao Sindia, Maharaja of, 1730-94
 Hadley, George, in the Bengal Army, Linguist, 2-1798
 Halhed, Nathaniel Brassey, Indian Civil Service, 1751-1830
 Halifax, Charles Wood, Viscount, Secretary of State for India, 1800-85
 Hall, Fitzedward, Professor, Librarian, 1825-1901
 Hall, Henry, General, 1789-1875
 Halliday, Sir Frederick James, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, 1806-1901
 Hamilton, Charles, E.I.Co.'s Army, 1753?-92
 Hamilton, Sir John, Baronet, Lieutenant-General, 1755-1835
 Hamilton, Sir Robert North Collic, Baronet, Agent to the Governor-General for Central India, 1802-87
 Harding, Francis Pym, Major-General, 2-1875
 Harding, Right Rev. John, Bishop of Bombay, 1805-74
 Hardinge, Hon. Sir Arthur Edward, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1828-92
 Hardinge, Charles Stewart, second Viscount, 1822-94
 Hardinge, Henry, first Viscount, of Lahore, Governor-General, 1835-1856
 Hardwicke, Albert Edward Philip Henry Yorke, sixth Earl of, Under-Secretary of State for India, 1867-1901
 Hardy, Rev. Robert Spence, Missionary, 2-1868
 Hare, David, Educationist, 1775-1842
 Haridas, Nanabhai, Judge, Bombay High Court, 1832-89
 Harington, Sir Henry Byng, Member of the Supreme Council, 1808-71
 Harington, John Herbert, Member of the Supreme Council, 1761-1828
 Harness, Sir Henry Drury, Major-General, 1801-83
 Harris, George, first Baron, of Seringapatam and Mysore, 1746-1829
 Harris, George Francis Robert, third Baron, 1810-72
 Harris, Sir William Cornwallis, Bombay Engineers, Sportsman, 1807-48
 Harris, William George, second Baron, 1782-1845
 Harrison, Sir Henry Leland, Indian Civil Service, Bengal, 1837-92
 Hart, George Vaughan, Lieutenant-General, 1752-1832
 Hartley, James, Major-General, 1715-99
 Harvey, Sir George Frederic, Indian Civil Service, N.W.P., 1809-81
 Harvey, Robert, Director-General, I.M.S., 1812-1901
 Hastings, Francis Rawdon, first Marquis of, Governor-General, 1754-1826
 Hastings, Warren, Governor-General, 1732-1818
 Hathaway, Charles, E.I.Co.'s Medical Service, 1817-1903
 Haug, Martin H., Professor and Linguist, 1827-76
 Haughton, Sir Graves Champney, Linguist and Scientist, 1788-1849
 Haughton, John Colpoys, Lieutenant-General, 1817-87
 Havelock, Sir Henry, Major-General, 1795-1857
 Havelock, William, Military Secretary to the Governor, Madras, 1793-1848
 Havelock-Allan, Sir Henry Marshman, Baronet, 1830-97
 Haviland, Thomas Firth de, Madras Engineers, Architect, 1775-1866
 Hayes, Sir John, Commodore, Indian Navy, 1767-1831
 Haythorne, Sir Edmund, General, 1808-83
 Hayward, George W., Traveller, 2-1870
 Hearsay, Hyder Young, Soldier and Explorer, 2-1840
 Hearsay, Sir John Bennett, Lieutenant-General, 1793-1865
 Heaviside, Rev. James William Lucas, Professor at Haileybury, 1808-97
 Heber, Right Rev. Reginald, Bishop of Calcutta, 1783-1826
 Henderson, John, Merchant, 1780-1867
 Henley, Samuel, Principal E.I. College at Hertford, 1740-1815

Herbert, William, Hydrographer, 1718-95
 Herklots, G. A., Surgeon, Madras, 2-after 1832
 Hewett, Sir George, Baronet, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1770-1840
 Hewett, Sir William Nathan Wrighte, Naval Commander-in-Chief in India, 1831-88
 Hickey, Thomas, Portrait Painter, 1740?-1822
 Hidayat Ali, Khan Bahadur, Lieutenant-Colonel, 2-1882
 Hill, Sir William, Major-General, 1805-86
 Hill, William, Major-General, 1846-1903
 Hills, Sir John, Major-General, 1831-1902
 Hippisley, Sir John Cox, Baronet, 1718-1825
 Hirst, Rev. William, Chaplain, 2-1769?
 Hislop, Stephen, Missionary, 1817-63
 Hislop, Sir Thomas, Baronet, Commander-in-Chief, Madras, 1764-1843
 Hobart, Vere Henry, Baron, Governor of Madras, 1818-75
 Hobhouse, Arthur, first Baron, Member of the Supreme Council, 1819-1904
 Hodges, William, Artist and Traveller, 1744-97
 Hodgson, Brian Hodgson, Indian Civil Service, Bengal, 1800-94
 Hodgson, John Studholme, Major-General, 1805-70
 Hodson, William Stephen Raikes, of "Hodson's Horse," 1821-58
 Hogg, Sir James Weir, Baronet, Member of the Council of India, 1790-1876
 Holloway, William, Indian Civil Service, Madras, 1828-93
 Holmes, Sir George, Major-General, 1764-1816
 Holwell, John Zephaniah, Governor of Bengal, 1711-98
 Home, Robert, Artist, 1764?-1834
 Honner, Sir Robert William, Major-General, 2-?
 Hoole, Elijah, Missionary and Author, 1798-1872
 Hopkinson, Henry, General, 1820-99
 Horsburgh, James, Captain, Hydrographer, 1762-1836
 Horsford, Sir Alfred Hastings, General, 1818-85
 Horsford, Sir John, Major-General, 1751-1817
 Houston, Sir Robert, General, 1780-1862
 Howard, John Eliot, Writer on Quinology, 1807-83
 Howden, John Francis Caradoc, first Baron, Commander-in-Chief at Madras, 1762-1839
 Howlett, Sir Arthur, General, 1819-1904
 Hudleston, William, Acting Governor of Madras, 2-1894
 Hudson, Sir John, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1833-93
 Hughes, Sir Edward, Naval Commander-in-Chief in India, 1720?-94
 Hughes, Sir Robert John, Major-General, 1821-1904
 Hughes, Thomas Elliott, Member of the Supreme Council, 1830-86
 Humbarston, Thomas Frederick Mackenzie, Captain, 1753?-1783
 Hume, Joseph, E.I.Co.'s Medical Service, 1777-1855
 Hunter, Robert, Missionary and Historian, 1823-97
 Hunter, William, E.I.Co.'s Medical Service and Linguist, 1755-1812
 Hunter, Sir William Guyer, Surgeon-General, Bombay, 1828-1902
 Hunter, Sir William Wilson, Indian Civil Service, Author and Historian, 1840-1900
 Huthwaite, Sir Edward, Brigadier-General, 1791-1873
 Hutton, James, Journalist and Author, 1818-93
 Huyshe, Alfred, General, 1811-80
 Hyde, John, Judge, Supreme Court, Calcutta, 1737?-96
 Hyderabad, Nizam Ali, Nizam of, 2-1803
 Hyder Ali, Ruler of Mysore, 1717 or 1722-82
 Idlesleigh, Stafford Henry Northcote, first Earl of, Secretary of State for India, 1818-87
 Ikbāl-ud-daula Muhsin Ali Khan, Nawab, 1808-87
 Impey, Sir Elijah, Chief Justice of Bengal, 1732-1807
 Impey, Eugene Clutterbuck, Colonel, 1830-1904
 Indore, Jaswant Rao Holkar, Maharaja of, 1775?-1811
 Indore, Malhar Rao Holkar, Maharaja of, 1805-33
 Indore, Takoji Rao Holkar I., Maharaja of, 2-1797
 Indore, Sir Takoji Rao Holkar II., Maharaja of, 1832-86
 Inglis, Sir John Eardley Wilmot, Major-General, 1814-62
 Inglis, Hon. Julia Selina, Lady, 1833-1904
 Irwin, Eyles, in the E.I.Co.'s Civil Service, Madras, 1751?-1817
 Iyengar, S. Srinivasa Raghava, Diwan Bahadur, 2-1903
 Jack, Alexander, Brigadier-General, 1805-57
 Jackson, Sir Charles Robert Mitchell, Judge, Calcutta, 2-?
 Jackson, Sir Louis Stuart, Indian Civilian, Judge, Calcutta, 1824-90
 Jacob, Sir George Le Grand, Political, Bombay, 1805-81
 Jacob, John, Brigadier-General, Officiating Commissioner in Sind, 1812-58
 Jacob, William, Meteorologist and Astronomer, 1813-62
 Jacquemont, Victor, French Traveller and Botanist, 1801-32
 Jaipur, Maharaja Dhiraj Saiw Sir Ram Sing, of, 1833-80
 James, Right Rev. John Thomas, Bishop of Calcutta, 1786-1828
 James, Sir William, Baronet, Commander of E.I.Co.'s Marine, 1721-83
 Jameson, Sir G. J., Lieutenant-General, 2-1871
 Jameson, William, Promoter of Tea-cultivation, 1815-82
 Jang Bahadur, Koonwar Ranaji, Maharaja Sir, 1816-77
 Jarrett, Hanson Chambers Taylor, Lieutenant-Colonel, V.C., 1836-91
 Jaschke, Heinrich August, Missionary, Tibetan Scholar, 1817-83
 Jee, Joseph, Deputy Surgeon-General, V.C., 1821-99
 Jeffreys, Julius, E.I.Co.'s Medical Service, Inventor, 1801-77
 Jehangir, Pestonji, Khan Bahadur, Minister in Baroda, 1831-1901
 Jenkins, Sir Richard, Indian Civilian, Resident at Nagpur, 1785-1853
 Jerdon, Thomas Claverhill, Zoologist, 1811-72
 Jeremie, Rev. James Amiraux, Professor and Dean, Haileybury, 1802-72
 Jerome, Henry Edward, Major-General, V.C., 1829-1901
 Jijibhai, Hyramji, Philanthropist, Bombay, 1821-90
 Jijibhai, Sir Jansetji, Baronet, Bombay, 1783-1859
 Johnson, Sir Edwin Beaumont, Member of the Supreme Council, 1825-93
 Johnson, Frances, oldest British Resident in Bengal, 1725-1812
 Johnson, Francis, Professor and Linguist, 1795-1876
 Johnstone, Sir James, Major-General, Political, 1811-95
 Johnstone, James Henry, Promoter of Steam Navigation, 1787-1851
 Jones, Henry Richmond, General, 1808-80
 Jones, Sir John, Lieutenant-General, 1811-73

Jones, John Felix, Captain, Indian Navy, Political, 2-1878
 Jones, Rev. Richard, Professor at Haileybury, 1790-1855
 Jones, Sir William, Judge, Calcutta, Orientalist, 1746-94
 Jones, Sir William, General, 1808-40
 Joshi, Anandibai, Doctor of Medicine, 1865-87
 Judson, Rev. Adoniram, Missionary, Burma, 1788-1850
 Kamran, Shah, Abdali or Durani, of Herat, 2-1842
 Kapurthala, Raja Sir Randhir Singh, of, 1831-70
 Karaka, Dosabhai Framji, Government Officer, Bombay, 1829-1902
 Kashmir, Maharaja Golab Singh, of, 2-1857
 Kashmir, Maharaja Ranbir Singh, of, 1832?-85
 Kavanagh, Thomas Henry, V.C., 2-1883
 Kay, Rev. William, Principal, Bishop's College, 1820-86
 Kaye, Sir John William, Member of Council of India, Historian, 1811-76
 Kazi Shahabuddin, Khan Bahadur, Minister at Baroda, 1832-1909
 Keane, John, first Baron, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1781-1844
 Keatinge, Richard Harte, General, V.C., Chief Commissioner, Assam, 1825-1901
 Keene, Rev. Henry George, Professor at Haileybury, 1781-1864
 Keith-Falconer, Hon. Ion Grant Neville, Missionary and Professor, 1856-87
 Kellner, Sir George Welsh, Military Accountant-General, 1825-86
 Kellogg, Dr. Samuel H., Missionary, Linguist, 1839-99
 Kelly, Sir Richard Denis, General, 1815-97
 Kennaway, Sir John, Baronet, Resident at Hyderabad, 1758-1836
 Kennedy, John Pitt, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1796-1879
 Kennedy, Sir Michael Kavanagh, General, 1824-98
 Kennedy, Vane, Major-General, Linguist and Author, 1784-1846
 Kerr, Lord Mark, General, 1817-1900
 Kershaw, Sir Louis Addin, Chief Justice, Bombay, 1845-99
 Kettle, Tilly, Artist, 1740-86
 Keyes, Sir Charles Patton, General, 1823-96
 Khote, Raghunath Narayan, Merchaut, Bombay, 1821-91
 Khurshid Jah Bahadur, Nawab Sir, of Hyderabad, 2-1902
 Khwaja Abdul Ghani Mia, Nawab Sir, 2-1896
 Khwaja Ahsanulla, Nawab Bahadur Sir, 1846-1901
 Kiernander, Rev. John Zachariah, Missionary, 1711-99
 Kimberley, John Wodehouse, first Earl of, 1826-1902
 King, Sir Richard, Baronet, Admiral, 1730-1806
 Kinneir, Sir John Macdonald, Political, 1782-1830
 Kirkpatrick, William, Major-General, Political, 1754-1812
 Knox, Sir Alexander, Major-General, 2-1834
 Kosegarten, Jean Godefroi Louis, Professor, Linguist, 1792-1862
 Kurz, W. Sulpiz, Botanist, 1823?-78
 Kyd, James, Shipbuilder, 1786-1836
 Kyd, Robert, Colonel, Founder of Botanical Garden, 1746-1793
 La Bourdonnais, Bertrand Francis Mahé de, 1699-1753
 Laeox, Rev. Alphonse Francois, Missionary, 1799-1859
 Laessoe, Albert F. de P., Political, 1818-1903
 Laha, Maharaja Durga Charan, Merchant, Landowner, 1822-1904
 Lahiri, Ramtannu, Teacher, 1813-98
 Laing, Samuel, Member of the Supreme Council, 1812-97
 Lake, Edward John, Major-General, 1823-77
 Lake, Gerard, first Viscount, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1741-1808
 Lally, Thomas Arthur, Count de, and Baron de Tollendal, 1700-66
 Lamb, Charles, Clerk in the India House, 1775-1834
 Lambton, William, Lieutenant-Colonel, Superintendent G. T. Survey, 1756-1823
 Lane, Charles Edward William, General, 1786-1872
 Lang, John, Barrister, Editor, 2-1864
 Langlès, Louis Mathien, Orientalist, 1764-1824
 Lassen, Christian L., Professor, Linguistic Scholar, 1800-76
 Law, Jean, Governor of Pondicherry, 1720-?
 Lawrence, Sir Alexander, Baronet, Indian Civil Service, 1838-65
 Lawrence, Alexander William, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1763?-1835
 Lawrence, Sir George St. Patrick, Lieutenant-General, Political, 1801-84
 Lawrence, Sir Henry Montgomery, Chief Commissioner in Oudh, 1806-57
 Lawrence, John Laird Mair, first Baron, Viceroy and Governor-General, 1811-79
 Lawrence, Richard C., General, Resident in Nepal, 1818-96
 Lawrence, Stringer, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1697-1775
 Leach, Esther, Actress, 1809-43
 Le Bas, Rev. Charles Webb, Principal, Haileybury, 1779-1861
 Lebedeff, Herasim, Adventurer, Linguist, before 1785-after 1801
 Le Couteur, John, Lieutenant-General, 1761-1835
 Leeke, Sir Henry John, Commander-in-Chief, Indian Navy, 1790?-1870
 Lees, William Nassau, General, Linguist, Journalist, 1825-1889
 Leighton, Sir David, General, 1773?-1850
 Leith, James, Major, V.C., 1826-69
 Leitner, Gottlieb William, Professor, Principal, Linguist, Author, 1840-99
 Le Marchant, Sir John Gaspard, Lieutenant-General, 1803-1874
 Lennox, Sir Wilbraham Oates, General, V.C., 1830-97
 Lester, Frederick Parkinson, Major-General, 1795-1858
 Leyden, John, Linguist, Professor, Author, 1775-1811
 Lindsay, Sir Alexander, General, 1785-1872
 Lindsay, Hon. Charles Robert, Indian Civil Service, 1784-1835
 Linton, Sir William, Inspector-General of Hospitals, 1801-1880
 Little, Sir Archibald, General, 1810-91
 Littler, Sir John Hunter, Member of the Supreme Council, 1783-1856
 Lockhart, Sir William Stephen Alexander, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1841-1900
 Lockwood, Sir George H., General, 2-1881
 Logan, James Richardson, Authority on the Indian Archipelago, 2-1869
 Login, Sir John Spencer, Superintendent of M.R. Dullig Singh, 1809-63

Long, Rev. James, Missionary, 1814-87
 Longden, Sir Henry Errington, General, 1819-90
 Lord, Percival Barton, Medical Officer and Political, 1808-40
 Low, Sir John, General, Member of the Supreme Council, 1788-1880
 Lowe, Edward William Howe De Laney, Major-General, 1820-80
 Lowis, John, Member of the Supreme Council, 1801-71
 Lugard, Sir Edward, General, 1810-98
 Lumley, Sir James R., Major-General, 2-1846
 Lumsden, Sir Harry Burnett, Lieutenant-General, 1821-96
 Lumsden, Matthew, Professor, Linguist, 1777-1835
 Lushington, Sir James Law, Chairman of the Court of Directors, 1779-1859
 Lushington, Stephen Rumbold, Governor of Madras, 1776-1868
 Lyall, John Edwardes, Advocate-General, Bengal, 1811-45
 Lynch, Henry Blossie, Captain, Indian Navy, 1807-73
 Lytton, Edward Robert Bulwer, first Earl of, 1831-91
 Lyveden, Robert Vernon Smith, first Baron, 1800-73
 Macartney, George, first Earl, Governor of Madras, 1737-1806
 Macaulay, Colman Patrick Louis, Indian Civilian, 1848-90
 Macaulay, Thomas Babington, first Baron, Member of the Supreme Council, 1800-59
 Macdonald, Sir Hector, Major-General, 1853-1903
 Macdonald, John, Military Engineer and Writer, 1759-1831
 Macdonald, Rev. Kenneth Somerled, Missionary, Writer, 1832-1903
 Macdonald, Sir Reginald John, Naval Commander-in-Chief, E. Indies, 1820-99
 Macdowell, Sir Andrew, Lieutenant-General, Commander-in-Chief, Madras, 2-1835
 Macgregor, Sir Charles Metcalfe, Major-General, 1840-87
 Macgregor, Sir George Hall, Major-General, Political, 1810-83
 Macgregor, Sir John, Inspector-General Medical Service, Madras, 1791-1866
 Macintyre, Donald, Major-General, V.C., 1832-1903
 Mackenzie, Sir Alexander, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, 1812-1902
 Mackenzie, Colin, Colonel, Surveyor-General, 1753?-1821
 Mackenzie, Colin, Lieutenant-General, Political, 1806-81
 Mackenzie, Holt, Indian Civil Service, 1787-1876
 Mackenzie, Kenneth Douglas, Colonel, 1811-73
 Mackenzie, Sir William, Inspector-General, Madras Medical Department, 1811-93
 Mackeson, Frederick, Lieutenant-Colonel, Political, 1807-53
 Mackinnon, Sir William, Baronet, Head of the B.I.S.N.Co., 1823-93
 Mackintosh, Sir James, Recorder of Bombay, 1765-1832
 Maclean, Charles, in the E.I.Co.'s Medical Service, circa 1788-1824
 Maclean, Sir Hector, General, 1756-1848
 Macleod, Sir Alexander, Brigadier-General, 1767-1831
 Macleod, Sir John Macpherson, Member of Indian Law Commission, 1792-1881
 Macnaghten, Chester, Principal, Rajkumar College, Kattiawar, 1843-96
 Macnaghten, Elliot, Chairman Court of Directors, 1807-88
 Macnaghten, Sir Francis Workman, Judge, Calcutta, 1763-1843
 Macnaghten, Sir William Hay, Baronet, Envoy to Kabul, 1793-1841
 Macpherson, Duncan, Inspector-General, Medical Service, Madras, 2-1867
 Macpherson, Sir Herbert Taylor, V.C., Commander-in-Chief, Madras, 1827-86
 Macpherson, Sir James Duncan, Major-General, 1811-74
 Macpherson, Sir John, Baronet, Acting Governor-General, 1745-1821

CANNING.

May 31st, 1905.

WHILE duly acknowledging the kindly and favourable notice of my book on Canning in your issue of May 20th, I should like to notice two points. 1. The reviewer recommends for my perusal the anonymous 'Memoirs of George Canning,' published in 1828. In my notice of it in my preface, he says I "paraphrase Mr. Hill." I will not trouble you with the reproduction of Mr. Hill's judgment and mine, but the paraphrase does not appear very close. Nor do I think it very generous to assume that I reproduce (without acknowledgment) another's estimate of a work which I have not myself read. I personally should think it an act of literary dishonesty to act thus, or to mention by name and criticize a book in my preface which I had not myself read. The 'Memoirs' in question, as a matter of fact, are very well known to me; but, with all deference to the reviewer, I think the Lonsdale MSS., Malmesbury, Ward, and George Rose far better-informed guides to the period 1806-7 than the 'Memoirs' he so values. 2. The reviewer writes, "Was it 'the French' who called the Lord Privy Seal the 'sôt [sic] privé'?" We had always supposed this gentle witticism as much Canning's as, &c. I appeal unto Cæsar, i.e., Canning himself (letter to Lord Liverpool, 'Stapleton Correspondence,' i. 213, December 14th, 1824): "While (Westmoreland) the senior Cabinet Minister—the doyen de Ministres, the Sôt Privé (as the French take the liberty of calling him)," &c. Can anything be clearer than this? I hope the reviewer will withdraw his [sic] after "Sôt," unless he wishes to criticize Canning, and admit my account of the origin of this "gentle witticism" as the true one.

H. W. V. TEMPERLEY.

SALE OF SHAKSPEAREANA.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE sold the following books out of a Shakspearean collection, 25th to 27th ult. Beaumont and Fletcher's Tragedies, with The Wild Goose Chase, first editions, 1647-52, 50l. Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, first edition, 1621, 50l. Butler's Hudibras, first editions of the three parts complete, 1663-78, 48l. John Chalkhill's Alcilia, 3 parts, 1613, 68l. Chaucer, 1561, 42l. Coryat's Crudities, first edition, 1611, 45l. Gascoigne's Works, 1587, 42l. Habington's Castara, first edition, 1634, 33l. Dr. John Hall, On English Bodies, 1657, 30l. Herrick's Hesperides, &c., 1648, 55l. Higden's Polychronicon in English, W. de Worde, 1495, 65l. Holinshed's Chronicles, 1577, 50l. Johnson's Seven Champions of Christendom, first edition, 1596, 40l. Ben Jonson's Works, 1616-40, 42l. Marlowe and Chapman's Hero and Leander, unrecorded edition, 1622, 30l. Marston's Tragedies and Comedies, 1633, 30l. T. Middleton, The Blacke Booke, 1604, 30l. Montaigne's Essays by Florio, 1603, 60l. Painter's Palace of Pleasure, 2 vols., 100l. North's Plutarch, 1579, 50l. Purchas's Pilgrims, 5 vols., 1625, 68l. Rabelais, by Urquhart and Motteux, 1653-94, 30l. Ravenscroft's Measurable Musick, 1614, 60l. Barnabe Rich, Faultes, Faults, and Nothing Else but Faults, 1606, 40l. Rowlands's A New Year's Gift, 1582, 42l. Shakspeare, Second Folio, large copy, 1632, 225l.; Third Folio, fine copy, 1664, 500l.; Fourth Folio, fine copy, 1685, 130l.; Romeo and Juliet, 1637, 120l.; Othello, 1630 (6 ll. in facsimile), 90l. Spenser's Complaints, 1591, 60l.; Faerie Queene, first edition, 1590-6, 160l.; another copy, finer, 220l. Whitney's Choice of Emblems, 1586, 30l. The three days' sale (761 lots) realized over 6,500l.

Literary Gossip.

MR. G. F. BRADBY has written a new story, which will be published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. next week. It bears the title 'The Marquis's Eye,' and it tells the curious adventures which befell a good young man after an operation whereby he exchanged a damaged eye of his own for the eye of a gay French marquis, and consequently saw life through a strangely sophisticated medium.

PROF. HERKLESS and Mr. Hannay are publishing shortly through Messrs. Blackwood a work called 'St. Leonards,' dealing with the history of a portion of St. Andrews University.

MR. FISHER UNWIN has in the press a romance of New Zealand history, entitled 'Captain Sheen.' The author is Mr. Charles Owen, and the incidents are mostly based upon facts gathered from old records. The period is the dawn of the nineteenth century, and the story is full of adventure.

A NEW novel by Mrs. F. A. Farrar is announced for early publication by Mr. Elliot Stock, entitled 'Ruth Fielding: a Double Love Story.' The scene of the story is laid in Lincolnshire, and it incidentally introduces the misfortunes of one of its county families.

MESSRS. JAMES MACLEHOSE & SONS will issue in the autumn 'The History of Japan, giving an Account of the Ancient State and Government of the Empire,' by Engelbert Kaempfer, Physician to the Dutch Embassy to the Emperor's Court in 1698. This book was published in 1727 under the imprimatur of Sir Hans Sloane, and has not since been reprinted in its entirety. In addition to Kaempfer's account of his travels in Japan, it includes a very full account of the manners and customs of the people and of the Shinto religion, and also deals fully with the natural history of the country. The format will be uniform with that of the recent editions of Hakluyt and Purchas, and all the illustrations of the original edition will be reproduced.

DR. H. SPIES has accepted the editorship of the great German dictionary of Middle-English, which was begun by Eduard Mätzner. The first number was published in 1872, and there is sufficient material on hand to bring the work down to the end of "M" in 1906. In order to hasten the completion of the dictionary, the remaining letters are to be proceeded with simultaneously, and it is hoped that prominent students of Middle-English will render assistance by undertaking some of the more important texts, with a view to furnishing the necessary examples.

MR. BODLEY is slowly recovering from his long illness, and is hoping soon to resume his work, interrupted fourteen months ago, on the second series of 'France,' which has been his chief occupation since the first part appeared in 1898. The new volumes, as they will treat primarily of 'The Church and Religious Questions in France,' will derive increased importance from the present ecclesiastical crisis, which no one foresaw when they were commenced seven years ago, and Mr. Bodley hopes to complete them before the French general elections of next year.

MR. H. A. VACHELL writes:—

"I have to thank you for a handsome notice of my novel 'The Hill'; but I must protest vehemently against a paragraph of a correspondent of yours last week, who writes: 'Those who are in close touch with Harrow School will be able to identify a good many of the boys and masters in the novel,' and your obvious comment thereon, that you 'are sorry to hear it, for close portraiture is both bad art and bad manners.' In my preface I take pains to state that there are no portraits in 'The Hill.' Some few composite photographs are submitted, notably of the two masters. Harrovians will recognize a trait, a trick of speech, taken from life, but purposely fused with other traits absolutely imaginary. 'The Hill' is fiction, not fact. The central theme, a not uncommon one, the struggle between two boys, representing good and evil, for the possession of the friendship of a third, was suggested to me by a friend, an older Harrovian than I, who witnessed a somewhat similar fight (although differing from my fictitious one in episode and incident), which did not end as my fight ends. Two of the original protagonists were unknown to me; the third, in appearance, character, and temperament, is essentially other than my presentation of him. Of course, hundreds of persons will see in my masters and boys types of other masters and boys to be found in most public schools; but I repeat I have taken particular pains to avoid portraiture."

WE regret to notice the death of Mr. Edward Livingstone, of the Edinburgh publishing and printing firm of E. & S. Livingstone. Mr. Livingstone enjoyed close friendship with R. L. Stevenson, and published a short-lived magazine, to which Stevenson contributed. He was also associated with Sir Conan Doyle.

IN order to avoid misapprehension, Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. ask us to call attention to the fact that 'The Conscience of a King,' the title of a newly published romance by Mr. A. C. Gunter, the author of 'Mr. Barnes of New York,' is virtually the same as that of a sociological work, 'The Conscience of the King,' by Mr. J. C. Spence, which still has a considerable sale.

WE have received the following :—

Permit me to appeal to all who reverence the evidences of our country's story to oppose the Local Government Board's attempt to obtain parliamentary sanction to a drastic alteration of county boundaries. Though the county of Essex is apparently to be the only sufferer on this occasion, the question is one which affects the whole country. The petition presented to the Local Government Board by my Council explains the position, but in addition I would point out that the order will in this case alter bounds existing since pre-Roman days, and all for the sake of the Poor Law, which may at no distant date be amended.

GEO. PATRICK,

Hon. Secretary,

British Archeological Association.

The Essex Archæological Society and the Essex Field Club are also protesting in similar fashion.

THE Committee of the Booksellers' Provident Retreat will be happy to make arrangements for any members of the trade, who may desire to do so, to visit the Retreat at Abbots Langley, in parties of, say, ten or twelve, on Saturday afternoons during the summer months.

At the meeting of the Board of Directors of the Booksellers' Provident Institution held on May 18th 98<sup>l</sup>. was granted to fifty-six members and widows of members; six new members were elected, and two members were proposed.

FURTHER evidence of the spread of a desire for Japanese knowledge in India is furnished by the fact that the authorities of the Dayanand Anglo-Vedic College at Lahore have appointed a Japanese teacher to instruct a class of the students in his language. Mr. Goto, graduate of Tokio Imperial University, has been appointed to the chair, and his arrival in India is now announced.

M. HENRI POIDATZ, the well-known French journalist, who has just died at the comparatively early age of fifty-three, was one of M. Marinoni's most able assistants on the Petit Journal, and was for eight years chief editor of one of the most popular of French daily newspapers, the Matin.

A FURTHER list of prizes in the gift of the Académie Française has been published, and the more important of these are as follows: The Prix Vitet, of the value of 2,900 francs, "décerné par l'Académie comme elle l'entendra dans l'intérêt des lettres," goes to Madame Daniel Lesueur; the Prix Née, 3,500fr., is awarded to M. Paul Adam as the "auteur de l'œuvre la plus originale comme forme et comme pensée"; the Prix Narcisse Michaut, of the value of 2,000fr. for the best work on French literature, is taken by M. Paléologue; and the Prix Kastner-Boursault, also of the value of 2,000fr., goes to M. Paul Doumier, President of the Chamber of Deputies, for a work on Indo-China. The Prix Monbinne, 3,000fr., "marques d'intérêt à des hommes de lettres," has been divided between two: M. Montégut gets 2,000fr. and M. Tancrède Martel the remaining 1,000fr.

THE Académie of Amiens announces the opening of a subscription list for the erection of a monument to the memory of Jules Verne, and a very strong committee has been formed, under the patronage of M. Dujardin-Beaumetz, Under-Secretary of State for Fine Arts. M. Mézières, of the Académie Française, is president, in association with MM. Jean Dupuis, Berthelot, Pierre Loti, Marcel Prévost, Jules Claretie, J. Hetzel, and Fiquet, Mayor of Amiens. Subscriptions will be received by Dr. Fournier, 22, Rue Jules Lardière, Amiens.

THE Parliamentary Papers of the most general interest to our readers this week are: Indian Forest Service, Correspondence relating to Training of Forestry Students (8d.); Report on Reformatory and Industrial Schools, Great Britain, Part I., List of Schools and Detailed Reports (1s. 11d.); Report of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland, 1904-5 (2½d.); Code of Regulations for Continuation Classes, Scotland (2½d.); and Statutes made by the Governing Bodies of St. John's College, and Christchurch, Oxford (½d. each).

SCIENCE

Metapsychical Phenomena. By J. Maxwell, M.D. Translated by L. J. Finch. (Duckworth & Co.)

DR. MAXWELL, a French gentleman, presumably of Scottish descent, is Deputy-Attorney of the Court of Appeal at Bordeaux, and has taken the degree of Doctor of Medicine. His book is concerned with his own studies of the alleged phenomena recently styled "metapsychical." As Sir Oliver Lodge says :—

"He does not give a minute account of all the details, nor seek to convince hostile critics that he has overlooked no possibility, and made no mistakes."

Like Hegel, he may think that "the a priori conceptions of hostile critics are so rooted that no testimony can prevail against them" ('Philosophie des Geistes,' 'Werke,' vol. vii. p. 179, 1845). Dr. Maxwell has done his best as an investigator, and is convinced that certain unexplained phenomena (reported in all ages and conditions of culture) do occur. Of the historical evidence he says very little; of the anthropological evidence he says nothing. He thinks that the phenomena, as of the movement of objects without physical contact, are due to what Sir Oliver Lodge, in his introduction, calls "an extension, as it were, of the motor and sensory power of the body beyond its apparent boundary." The phenomena are, mainly, "mechanical movements without contact, production of intelligent noises, and either visual, tangible, or luminous appearances which do not seem to be hallucinatory." All these things, as Dr. Maxwell knows, or the appearance of them, can be produced by fraud, and he explains the fraudulent methods. He remains absolutely convinced that he has had experience of honest phenomena, both with the paid Neapolitan peasant woman Eusapia Paladino and with amateurs among his friends and acquaintances. He is not a spiritualist; he does not regard the "personifications" or "controls" which profess to produce the "intelligent noises" as ghosts of the dead. Sir Oliver Lodge disclaims responsibility for the book, the author, and the very ungrammatical translator, who uses "phenomena" now and then as a Greek neuter plural, with the English verb in the singular, and conceives "stigmæ" to be the plural of "stigma."

As to Eusapia, in Appendix A (not Appendix B, as the notes say), Dr. Maxwell criticizes the Cambridge report on her deceptions. Dr. Hodgson deliberately allowed her to release her hand from his hold, informed the darkling company that phenomena were about to occur, and occur they did. It is answered that all the phenomena were not explained, which is true, and that Eusapia did not find Cambridge congenial, and was overworked, which is very probable. Again, Dr. Maxwell thinks that muscular exertions by the medium and others merely synchronize with and aid the unexplained exertions of an unknown force. He might hold a séance in a room where a fencing-match is going on, and see how that works—if light enough for fencing is allowed. Eusapia's deeds greatly preferred the darkness. Nor did she let herself be mechanically fastened up, so as to prevent trickery. The table with her does not move untouched, for the lower part of her skirt must be in contact with it. Dr. Maxwell has "often seen women mediums' dresses bulge out and approach the table," though "the sensitive's feet remained visible." Why not put the fair medium into gymnastic costume? Prof. Ricket thinks it "rash to conclude that all the phenomena produced, or supposed to be produced, by Eusapia are fraudulent." The late Henry Sidgwick reckoned it "unreasonable to attribute, even hypothetically, to supernormal agency the residuum that was not so easily explicable." British inquirers vote with Mr. Sidgwick, continental savants are less austere. Our sympathies are strongly with Mr. Sidgwick. On the other hand, we do not profess to explain how Eusapia, in a light good enough to permit reading, and with her hands at a distance of fifteen centimetres from a letter-balance (her hands resting on those of Dr. D., or one of his hands on one of hers), caused the balance to follow her movements. We do not quite make out where one of her hands was at this time. Note made on the day of the experiment: "My judgment will convince no one," says Dr. Maxwell; but he would have aided conviction if he had described the doings of Eusapia's hand which appears not to have been laid on that of Dr. D. Both of her hands, at all events, are said to have been, in one experiment, "about ten centimetres away from the edge of the apparatus." In another passage Eusapia is said to have done the performance with the letter-balance "without abandoning her neighbour's hands," in the plural. One thing certain about Eusapia is that she could, in France, make a higher record, when squeezing a dynamometer, than Sir Oliver Lodge; it would thus appear that she can exert great muscular force. But Eusapia is neither here nor there, compared with the following anecdote. Breakfasting at a restaurant with an amateur, Dr. Maxwell mentioned the name of a "personification," a soi-disant spirit. A small table "near which we were seated glided of its own accord across the floor." The cloth of this small table was in contact with that of the table at which Dr. Maxwell and his acquaintance were sitting, but the distance covered before the woods of each table were in contact was eleven inches. "A conversation ensued with the personification, by means of the movements of the table, without contact." If the tables had been uncovered the phenomena would have been more satisfactory.

There is a certain lack of precision in the descriptions of such scenes. As for movements of tables, we are most impressed by first-hand accounts received from friends who have witnessed them, now in the course of private experiments, now after such experiments were over, and, above all, when nobody was thinking of experiments, or even knew that they were made, and the movements of objects were wholly unlooked for, and excited alarm. Nearly the oldest recorded case known to us is the sudden convulsion of a large table on which the murderers of St. Thomas of Canterbury had laid their arms, while they supped at another table, on the evening of the day of the murder! However, the occurrence is decidedly "remote."

Dr. Maxwell's remarks on crystal-gazing are not of great interest. He thinks that "amnesia" as to the things seen occurs very rapidly in the seer, as happens usually in the case of dreams. In a large experience we have found nothing of this kind. "The disappearance of the voluntary and personal activity of the consciousness" of the crystal-gazer has never occurred in our personal observation, nor has there been an instance of "premonition." Dr. Maxwell gives one curious example. He knew of the vision (an accident to a steamer) eight days before the accident (exaggerated in the crystal pictures) occurred. "I have observed," he says, "results so extraordinary as to confound the imagination. They appeared to me to tend towards demonstrating Kant's idea of the relativity and contingency of time and space." That is the present result of our own observations on crystal-gazers, all amateurs, and none of them "hysterical" or "degenerate" subjects. In France experiments have too usually been made with persons notoriously unwholesome, and the natural inference has been drawn that only such détraqués possess the faculty of crystal-gazing.

For the reasons touched on by Sir Oliver Lodge—namely, that Dr. Maxwell "does not record his facts according to the standard set up by the Society for Psychical Research in this country"—we cannot expect his very candid book to have even as much effect on scientific opinion generally as the Transactions of the S.P.R.

THE ELECTRICAL CONSTITUTION OF MATTER.

II.

IN last week's article on this subject some account was given of the electronic theory, according to which all matter consists merely of positive and negative electrons, or units of electricity, in different forms of aggregation. At first sight, however, it is not clear how this theory can be made to fit in with the known facts of magnetism. Magnetism and electricity have always, up to the present, been found in close association with each other, so that some connexion between the two is more than a mere hypothesis. Thus, a magnet thrust into the coil formed by wrapping wire round a cylinder will produce a current of electricity in the wire upon entering and leaving the coil; while an electric current passed through a similar coil will convert into a magnet an iron bar lying within it. Hence it has been conjectured that every current of electricity is accompanied by a magnetic field at right angles to its directions, and this is a law to which no exception has yet been discovered. But this alone hardly accounts for all the phenomena of magnetism, although Ampère's theory that every molecule of a permanent magnet is traversed by a current of electricity, which current is free to move about its centre, is now generally admitted to be well founded. According to this, the currents of the inner molecules of the magnetic substance neutralize each other, and external magnetic force is only exercised by the currents of the outer or surface molecules, the act of magnetization consisting in giving the currents a parallel direction. Similar reasoning may be applied even to the much larger class of substances called diamagnetic, which are repelled instead of attracted by a magnetic field, and therefore attempt to place themselves athwart it. The molecular-current theory is plain enough in the case of electromagnets, or bars of soft iron which only become magnets while surrounded by wires carrying currents of electricity. But how are we to account for such currents within a natural substance like the loadstone? Whence do these currents draw their electricity? and how is the supply of force kept up?

An attempt to answer these questions in the terms of the electronic theory was lately made by M. Paul Langevin, one of the Professors of Physics at the Collège de France, in an address which he delivered to the Congress of Science held on the occasion of the St. Louis Exhibition. By a highly ingenious train of reasoning, of which he promises fuller details, he concludes that the electrons within the molecules of magnetic and diamagnetic substances alike may be expected to remain in constant motion, if the phenomenon of inertia be an entirely electromagnetic one, and that the orbits which they describe are rigidly circular and can change their places without losing their conformation. This, which is apparently an extension of the view of the German physicist Weber, that the current of electricity round the molecules of a magnet is free from what is termed resistance, would seem, if accepted, to be capable of accounting for most magnetic and diamagnetic phenomena. For its proof, however, we must wait, as stated, for M. Langevin's full exposition. As to the cause which originally starts the electrons on their orbits, he does not expressly speak; but if a guess in the matter may be allowed, it is perhaps due to the directive magnetism of the earth, which might be expected to force the currents round the molecules of magnetic or diamagnetic ores to take up positions either parallel or at right angles to its own axis. In view, too, of M. Curie's proof that, while magnetism varies in inverse ratio to the absolute temperature, diamagnetism does not, and M. A. Leduc's experiments with fused bismuth

(for which see 'Research Notes' in The Athenæum, No. 4048), it may well be that the physical conditions under which the ore is deposited have a determining influence upon the nature of its magnetism.

The question of gravitation presents much more difficulty, because, while it can be shown experimentally that electricity and magnetism are so closely related that the force exercised by them is, as it were, interchangeable, we have nothing but the vaguest indications of any necessary connexion between electricity and gravitation. Faraday, who devoted many years of his life to an attempt to prove such a connexion, was at last forced to abandon his experiments, with the remark that "They do not shake my strong feelings of the existence of a relation between gravity and electricity, though they give no proof that such a relation exists." Nor has the electronic theory helped us much further on the same road. M. Langevin says, indeed, that gravitation seems to him to result from a property of the electrons and a mode of activity in the ether distinct from those which produce electrical and magnetic phenomena, and that he abandons for the present any attempt to show connexion between the three. Prof. Fleming, on the other hand, suggests that the complete mathematical expression for the law of mutual action of the electrons will show:—

"1. That at exceedingly small distances they must all repel each other without regard to size.

"2. That at greater distances positive electrons must repel positive, and negative repel negative, but unlike electrons attract, with a force that varies inversely as the square of the distance.

"3. Superimposed on the above there must be a resultant effect such that all atoms attract each other at distances great compared with their size, without regard to the relative number of positive electrons which compose them, inversely as the square of the distance."

He thinks this last condition would furnish the necessary assumption to account for universal gravitation, although he points out that this may be only true of electrons gathered into atoms. Meanwhile, it may be said that, if gravitation cannot be explained on this theory, it is not by any other, all the older hypotheses which would account for gravitation by supposing it due to the bombardment by corpuscles of great velocity, the generation or absorption of fluid by bodies under pressure, and the existence of a tide within the ether, being apparently disposed of by Clerk Maxwell's demonstration that all these conditions presuppose the expenditure of work.

To recapitulate, then, what has been said, the theory which supposes all ponderable matter to be composed of positive and negative electrons or corpuscles of electricity, whereof the negative revolve within the atom round a core consisting wholly or partly of positive electrons, will account for all the known facts of electricity and, if, indeed, M. Langevin's promised proofs turn out to be satisfactory, of magnetism. Up to the present it has failed, like all other theories, to account for the phenomena of gravitation. The existence of the negative electrons which it supposes has been experimentally demonstrated, while that of the positive remains till now largely a matter of inference.

It does not, of course, follow from these considerations either that the electronic theory is untrue, or that it is not capable of rendering the most signal services to science. The time has gone by, probably for ever, when the authors of a scientific theory could expect for it universal acceptance, and could demand that it should take its place among those imaginary "laws of nature," to question the validity of which was looked upon as little better than blasphemy. Rather do we now consider such theories, in the words of M. Lucien Poincaré, as "simples images, commodes pour le langage, facilitant la recherche, permettant de grouper et d'associer les faits, mais ne présentant avec la réalité objective qu'une ressemblance fort éloignée." Looked at thus, and with a due appreciation of its provisional character, the electronic theory will probably prove to be—as has lately been said of another hypothesis—a lamp to guide our feet some steps further on the path of knowledge.

PETRARCH'S GEOGRAPHY.

May 22nd, 1905.

IN the notice of the Italian work 'Da Dante a Leopardi' in your issue of May 13th your reviewer very justly objects to Signor Cesareo's depreciation of Petrarch's geographical knowledge; and he thinks that Petrarch may have founded the map of Italy, his authorship of which is denied, on other maps already in existence. In two marginal notes to the famous Virgil at Milan Petrarch expressly states that he had such maps—cartæ vetustissimæ he calls them—on the strength of which he corrects the geographical mistakes of Servius (De Nolhac, 'Pétrarque et l'Humanisme,' pp. 126, 127). From a similar note in his Pliny (now at Paris) we know that he had a map of Peloponnesus; and if we may believe a passage in one of his 'Letters of Old Age' (ix. 2) he even had a map of China, India, and Ceylon. No one else in those days had so correct a knowledge of the classical geography of Italy, and his enthusiasm for the subject was such that, at the age of sixty, he pressed Boccaccio ('Epp. Sen.,' iii. 1) to join him in an expedition to the sources of the Timarus, which he knew was the Isonzo, and not, as was then supposed, the Brenta. Cesareo's argument that, if Petrarch had executed such a map of Italy (as Blondus states, 'Italia Illustrata,' Basle edition, 1531, pp. 353 and 355), he would have mentioned it in his works, is a singularly infelicitous one, for we know from an incidental notice in Boccaccio's Geographical Dictionary ('De Montibus, Silvis,' &c., ad fin.) that Petrarch had written a work on classical geography. This work has not only not come down to us, but the author makes no mention of it in any of his extant treatises or in his voluminous letters.

EDWARD H. R. TATHAM.

SOCIETIES.

ZOOLOGICAL.—May 16.—Mr. G. A. Boulenger, V.P., in the chair.—The Secretary read a report on the additions to the menagerie during April, and called special attention to a young female chimpanzee (Anthropopithecus troglodytes); to a young female giraffe from Northern Nigeria, probably belonging to the race known as Giraffa camelopardalis peralta; to a young male huanaco (Lama huanacos), from Punta Arenas, Tierra del Fuego, presented by Mr. Moritz Braun and Capt. R. Crawshaw; and to a pair of concave-casqued hornbills (Dichoceros bicornis) from India.—Mr. Oldfield Thomas exhibited examples of a new golden mole which had been obtained in connexion with Mr. C. D. Rudd's exploration of South Africa, and which he proposed to call Amblysomus corriei.—Mr. H. B. Fantham exhibited and made remarks upon microscopic slides of Lankesterella tritonis, a hæmogregarine parasitic in the blood-corpuscles of a newt, Triton cristatus. This parasite was recently found by Mr. A. S. Hirst and the exhibitor, and their observations had since been independently confirmed by Dr. A. C. Stevenson.—Mr. F. E. Beddard read a paper entitled 'A Contribution to the Knowledge of the Eucephalic Arterial System in Saurapsida.'—Sir Harry Johnston read a paper containing criticisms of the Hon. Walter Rothschild's proposed classification of the anthropoid apes. He was disposed to agree with Mr. Rothschild's classification of the African apes, but suggested that the proper transcription of the native name for the bald chimpanzee should be nkulunkamba instead of (as Du Chaillu wrote it) koolookamba. Sir Harry, however, could not agree with Mr. Rothschild's proposed change of the generic name of the orang from Simia to Pongo; and although considering him right in applying the former name, at present used for the orang, to the chimpanzees, he was of opinion that either Satyrus or Pithecius was a far preferable name to Pongo for the orang. He concluded with a list of words used in several African languages for the chimpanzee, and with a précis of the history of European knowledge of the anthropoid apes down to the eighteenth century.—Mr. Knud Andersen contributed a paper on some species of bats of the genus Rhinolophus. All the Ethiopian species of Rhinolophus were shown to be of Oriental origin.—A paper was read from Dr. E. Bergroth, containing the results of his observations on the stridulating organs of five new species (two of which were referred to new genera) of the hemipterous family Halyinæ.—Dr. P. Chalmers Mitchell read a paper entitled 'On the Anatomy of Limicoline Birds, with Special Reference to the Correlation of Modifications.'—Mr. R. I. Pocock read a paper containing results of observations on a female specimen of the Hainan gibbon (Hylobates hainanus), now living in the Society's gardens.

MICROSCOPICAL.—May 17.—Dr. Dukinfield H. Scott, President, in the chair.—Mr. Rousselet described an old microscope of the Culpeper-Scarlet type, presented by Mr. J. E. Haselwood. It was signed "Nath. Adams, Optician to his Royal Highness Frederick, Prince of Wales, Fecit." The date was probably about 1740, and it differed from others of the type in having four pillars instead of the usual three. Mr. Rousselet also described an old Adams's lucernal microscope made by W. & S. Jones (Adams's successors). The instrument, presented to the Society by Lieut.-Col. Tupman, was exhibited in the room. The body consisted of a mahogany box, of the form of a frustum of a pyramid, about 17 in. long by 7 in. square at the base, lying horizontally. The objective was carried in a sliding tube at the small end, and an eyepiece, consisting of two lenses about 5 in. in diameter, was placed at the other end. The stage had vertical and horizontal motions, and there was a condensing system of two independent lenses behind it. The curious feature about the instrument was the method of observing the image, which was by means of an aperture, about 1/4 in. diameter, in a small disc carried by an arm attached to a telescopic rod projecting from below the instrument. The distance of the disc from the eyepiece could thus be adjusted until the best effect was obtained. On looking through the disc, which in this instance was about 14 in. from the eyepiece, one saw in the eye lens a very fair image of an object placed on the stage.—A communication received from Mr. D. D. Jackson, of New York, on 'The Movements of Diatoms and other Microscopic Plants,' was read. In it Mr. Jackson described the interesting observations and ingenious experiments made by him, some with artificial diatoms, which have led him to the conclusion that the movements referred to are caused by the escape of oxygen gas evolved in these organisms.—There was an exhibition of slides of the Oribatidæ from the collection presented to the Society some twenty years since by Mr. A. D. Michael, who made some remarks upon that family of the Acarina.

PHYSICAL.—May 20.—The National Physical Laboratory was open to the inspection of Fellows, and the following special demonstrations were shown: 'The Specific Heat of Iron at High Temperatures,' by Dr. J. A. Harker. Dr. Harker also exhibited some new types of electric furnace for the attainment, in absence of noxious gases, of temperatures between 800° C. and 2,200° C.—Mr. A. Campbell exhibited apparatus for the measurement of small inductances.—In the Optical Department two new optical benches, constructed for the Laboratory by Messrs. R. & T. Beck, were shown by Mr. Selby.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC.—May 21.—Mr. P. Carlyon-Britton, President, in the chair.—The President announced that H.R.H. Princess Christian and H.R.H. Princess Henry of Battenberg had honoured the Society by the acceptance of its Royal Membership.—Mr. R. A. Ababrelton, Dr. G. A. Auden, and Messrs. M. E. Hughes-Hughes, B. Max Mehl, J. F. Walker, and G. H. Ward were elected Ordinary Members.—Mr. H. A. Parsons read a paper on 'The Mail-Coach and its Halfpennies,' wherein—after a sketch of the history of mail-coaches, and a reference to the conditions existing at the time of their most general employment—the writer recounted the circumstances attendant on the issue of the three varieties of halfpenny tokens struck in memory of the reforms and improvements instituted by Palmer in the latter part of the reign of George III. The writer, Mr. Baldwin, and Mr. Ogden exhibited specimens in illustration of the paper.—Fleet-Surgeon A. E. Weightman contributed a complete historical monograph on 'The Royal Farthing Tokens, 1613-36.' From the evidence afforded by the patents and a close study of specimens of numerous varieties of the tokens dealt with the writer was able to classify the types presented in periods corresponding with the changes of ownership of the patents conferring the right of striking and issue. He adduced strong arguments to prove that the oval specimens constituted a separate and contemporary issue for circulation in Ireland, and also to show that the small tokens issued in the reign of James I. were intended for half-farthings—not farthings, as has been hitherto maintained. The writer illustrated his subject by enlarged photographs of specimens in his cabinet, and both he and Lieut.-Col. Morrieson showed many rare examples of the tokens themselves.—Mr. L. A. Lawrence exhibited one of the four known specimens of silver pennies attributed to Æthelbald, King of Wessex, and stated that he had, after careful consideration, reluctantly arrived at the conclusion that all the specimens were clever fabrications of the same class as the forgeries of William I. and II., Henry I., and some other coins of the Norman period already exposed by him.—Mr. Hamer exhibited the very rare Bissett's halfpenny token, without the pictures on the field of the obverse.—Presentations to the Society's library and collections were made by Dr. G. A. Auden and Messrs. Spink & Son.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- MON. Institute of Actuaries, 5.—Annual Meeting.
- Engineers, 7½.—'The Improvement of London Traffic,' Messrs. C. Scott Meik and W. Beer.
- Aristotelian, 8.—'The Metaphysical Criterion and its Implications,' Mr. H. Wildon Carr.
- Geographical, 8½.—'Exploring Journeys in Asia Minor,' Col. P. H. H. Massy.
- TUES. Royal Institution, 5.—'Velazquez: III. The Impressionist,' Rev. H. G. Woods.
- Colonial, 8.—'The British Empire in the East,' Prof. Alleyne Ireland.
- Zoological, 8½.—'Notes on the Natural History of Western Uganda,' Col. C. Dehné-Radcliffe; 'Descriptions of New Species of Ethionychis and Allied Genera,' Mr. Martin Jacoby; 'On the Intestinal Tract of Mammals,' Dr. F. Chalmers Mitchell.
- WED. Dante, 3½.—'Plato and Dante,' Mrs. Craigie.
- Archaeological, 4.—'Symbolism in Norman Sculpture at Quenington, Gloucestershire,' Miss Josephine Knowles.
- Entomological, 8.—'New African Lasiocampidae,' Prof. Chr. Aurivillius; 'Rhynchota collected by Dr. A. H. Willey at Birara and Lifu,' Mr. G. W. Kirkaldy.
- Geological, 8.—'The Microscopic Structure of Minerals forming Serpentine, and their Relation to its History,' Prof. T. G. Bonney and Miss C. A. Kassin; 'The Tarus of the Canton Ticino,' Prof. E. Johnstone Garwood.
- THURS. Royal, 4½.
- Royal Institution, 5.—'Electro-Magnetic Waves,' Lecture III., Prof. J. A. Fleming. (Tyndall Lectures.)
- FRI. Astronomical, 5.
- Royal Institution, 9.—'Submarine Navigation,' Sir Wm. H. White.
- SAT. Royal Institution, 3.—'Exploration in the Philippines: II. Among the Head Hunters of North Luzon,' Mr. A. H. Savage Lander.

Science Gossip.

No. 74 of the Bulletins of the Lick Observatory contains Prof. Hussey's ninth catalogue of new double stars, which includes the places of two hundred objects, and raises the whole number discovered to one thousand. No. 75 gives a list of twelve stars whose radial velocities vary, and have been observed at Santiago, Chile, under the superintendence of Prof. W. H. Wright, of the D. O. Mills Expedition to the southern hemisphere; and No. 76 a set of elements and ephemeris of Giacobini's comet ( $\alpha$ , 1905) by Messrs. R. T. Crawford and J. D. Maddrill, which assign April 4th as the day of perihelion passage, and make it probable that the orbit is an elongated ellipse with a period of about 231 years. The perihelion distance from the sun is about 1.115 in terms of the earth's mean distance, or 104 millions of miles.

INTENDING observers of the total solar eclipse of next August who can read Spanish will find very useful a little work issued from the Madrid Observatory by D. Antonio Tarazona, entitled 'Memoria sobre el Eclipse Total de Sol del día 30 de Agosto de 1905,' with a preface by the Director, Señor Francisco Iníguez. It gives, with other useful information, a complete list of the towns, in alphabetical order, which are included in the zone of totality, with the times of the different phases of the eclipse; also maps showing the general position of the track, the Spanish portion on a very large scale, and a chart indicating the position of the eclipsed sun amongst the stars.

THE Thirtieth Annual Report of the Savilian Professor of Astronomy at Oxford has been issued, embracing the events of the twelve months which ended on the 30th of April last. The printing of the measures for the 'Astrographic Catalogue' has been at last sanctioned, the expense to be shared by the Government and the University; it will be commenced in October after the return of the Director (Prof. H. H. Turner) and Mr. Bellamy from the expedition to observe the solar eclipse on August 30th, in Egypt. Several improvements have been effected in the buildings and equipment, but the work has been of rather a miscellaneous character, especially as the Director made a prolonged tour in the United States last summer, visiting most of the observatories there; he had been invited to attend the International Congress of Arts and Sciences at St. Louis, and it is hoped that the International Union for Co-operation in Solar Research will meet at Oxford next autumn. Work with the Eros photographic plates has been continued. The editing of the Rousden variable-star observations led to a request that the MS. observations of the late Mr. Pogson should be placed in the hands of the Director for publication, and, after examination, this has been undertaken.

FINE ARTS

The Royal Academy and its Members, 1768-1830. By the late J. E. Hodgson, R.A., and Fred. A. Eaton. (Murray.)

THIS work appears opportunely at a time when the position of the Royal Academy is the subject of much criticism. It treats of its foundation and of the more noteworthy incidents of its history during the presidencies of Sir Joshua Reynolds, West, and Sir Thomas Lawrence. As appearing under the joint authorship of the late librarian and the secretary, who have had free recourse to the archives of the institution, the book must necessarily be looked upon in the character of an official history, although in substance it is mainly a reprint of articles which have appeared in The Art Journal. The collaboration has been within defined limits. Such parts as treat of art in general and of the art of the Academicians in particular are the work of Mr. Hodgson; and in the last five chapters, which were written since his death in 1895, his place has been taken by Mr. G. D. Leslie, R.A. Mr. Eaton is responsible for all that relates to the history of the institution and for the admirable appendixes, which contain lists of Academicians, Associates, and prize-winners down to 1904, of the pictures in the Diploma Gallery, and of those acquired for the nation under the terms of the Chantrey Bequest, together with a copy of the instrument or original charter of the Academy. The clauses from the will of Sir Francis Chantrey which established the Bequest might also have been included with advantage in their entirety, for purposes of reference, though, indeed, there are very full extracts in the book itself. The appendixes, however, are, for reference at any rate, the most valuable portion of the book, forming almost a concise history in outline of the institution.

Of the work as a whole it may be said that it has a full measure of that serenity in face of criticism which is eminently characteristic of official histories. The wind may be blowing outside, but they are written in harbour. After the opening chapters, which treat of the inception of the Academy, the method adopted is purely biographical, and as a result the value of the letterpress is found to vary somewhat considerably. Where it treats of an artist of any real distinction the work is always interesting. We may instance especially the notices of Richard Wilson and Etty, and the chapters devoted to Gainsborough and Turner. Flaxman, also, among the lesser luminaries, and even a spent light like Angelica Kaufmann, are treated of in a manner at once sympathetic and discriminating, though in the case of the latter it may be observed that the sympathy concerns itself as much with her affections as with her art.

The estimate of Constable, on the contrary, does somewhat scant justice to his merits. We are told that "perhaps his fame now is as much above his deserts as in his lifetime it was below them." This attitude of cautious reserve is in marked contrast to the general tenor of the artistic appreciations. They at any rate fully bear out the author's statement on p. 203 to the effect that the short history of British art is perhaps more thickly studded with geniuses than any other. Constable was not elected to membership until twenty-seven years after the date when he first exhibited, and was then told by the President that he should consider himself fortunate in being chosen an Academician at a time when there were historical painters of great merit on the lists of Associates. We think that current opinion concerning him is rather nearer to the true estimate.

During the whole period under review there were elected in all more than a hundred and fifty Academicians and Associates, and in the accounts of many of these the authors seem somewhat the victims of their method. The lives of the majority really lend themselves to tabular statement only. There are records of the dates of their births and deaths and election to membership, and there is little to add to these other than trivial incident. The art of some may be charitably assumed to have perished with them. As a consequence, presumably, these notices are concerned rather with their personal foibles, and details of their early environments, their interments, and the grants frequently made from the funds of the Academy towards the expenses of the same. Of Edward Bird, R.A., we are told that "he displayed all the usual precocity of genius; drawing on walls and furniture when quite a child, receiving a box of colours from his sister at fourteen, and being then apprenticed to a tin and japan ware manufacturer at Wolverhampton, where he rapidly distinguished himself by the skill he displayed in the embellishment of tea-trays."

This course of early artistic development might well have served as the theme of one of the famous obituary lyrics in Max Adeler's 'Out of the Hurly Burly,' and we are again agreeably reminded of the same source when we learn that "his friends and admirers in Bristol gave him a grand funeral in the cathedral."

But in general the lives are more colourless, and the impression they convey to the reader may be very fairly summed up in the words of an obituary notice of Joseph Wilton, the sculptor who executed the monument to Wolfe in Westminster Abbey: "He was a very respectable man, and if not a leading genius in the Arts, he possessed considerable knowledge of them, and had a very correct taste." In the nature of things these qualities represent the extreme practical limit of qualification for membership of academies, and this work shows with what regularity, in the case of the Royal Academy of Arts, this standard is found to recur. The exceptions almost compel notice by their infrequency. Of John Hamilton Mortimer, Associate, we are told that "at the outset he painted historical subjects, but after his marriage he seems to have relinquished them with other dissipations to which he had before been addicted; and retiring to Aylesbury painted pictures with a moral tendency."

Our authors offer the very natural conjecture that but for his untimely death he would have been speedily raised to the full honour of membership.

The occasional discords are told with considerable detail. We may clearly infer the arbitrary nature of Sir Joshua's rule from the account given of his attempt to get Bonomi elected Professor of Perspective, and of his temporary resignation in chagrin at his failure. His position certainly required tact. On one occasion, after a dinner, we are told that he proposed the health of "Mr. Gainsborough, the greatest living landscape painter," whereupon Wilson jumped up and added: "and the greatest living portrait painter also." Passing, however, from these almost genial differences genially portrayed to the notice of James Barry, we become conscious of a contrast. We are told, "he had the manners of a clown and the language of Billingsgate." Edmund Burke enabled him in his youth to spend four years in Italy. "In return," we are told,

"Barry nobly determined to do nothing whatever to earn his own living; that sort of thing was beneath him, he could condescend to nothing but great monumental art."

The manner of the sneer savours somewhat strangely of the Philistine! Barry's life was one of penury; but we may cite his words when offering to decorate St. Paul's with historical pictures at his own expense:—

"I have taken great pains to form myself for this kind of quixotism. To this end I have contracted and simplified my cravings and wants and brought them into a very narrow compass."

We are told that "for Michael Angelo, Raphael, and Titian he had the supremest contempt." His published works prove the exact contrary. In a letter to Burke, written when at Rome, he says:—

"You will, I hope, do me the justice to remember that I have the highest and justest sense of the beauty, elegance, and propriety of Raffael, though I believe them rather, perhaps, diffused amongst his works than to be found in any particular one; and I hope to give you some, though a faint, idea of Michael Angelo's grandeur, knowledge, and even eloquence and beauty in some of his figures and stories in the compartments of the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel."

We might easily quote a score of passages to the same purport from his letters, his lectures on painting, and his tract on Titian's colouring. His own impressive series of paintings in the great hall of the Society of Arts, which were designed to form a history of human culture, reveal the influence of Raphael's works in the Camera della Segnatura at the Vatican.

The book repeats his uncivil retort to Reynolds when the latter remonstrated at his delay in delivering his lectures as Professor of Painting; but there is no mention of the fact that the delay was due to his being occupied with the works for the Society of Arts, or that he subsequently became completely reconciled with Sir Joshua.

In the notice of George Stubbs, the animal painter, of whom we are here informed that "solicitous Fame still bears him aloft upon her trembling pinions," the authors proceed to say that "if we place him alongside his contemporary James Barry, and contrast the inflated utterances, the bumptious life and ambitious art of the one with the unassuming industry of the other, we cannot but chuckle and rejoice in the irony of fate which has so completely reversed their reputations."

This is emphatically not the way in which an official history, or any other history, should be written.

It is somewhat easy to "chuckle and rejoice" on the strength of unsound premises. It would have been more to the purpose to explain the action taken by the Academy when, in 1799, by thirteen votes to nine, they expelled Barry, without allowing him any opportunity of meeting their charges against him. These charges are understood to have been founded upon his published letter to the Dilettanti Society, which contains some intemperate language as to the action of cabals within the Academy, and severe strictures upon the financial policy of the institution. It has been well said that "both parties appear to blame—Mr. Barry for losing his temper so often, and that public body for ever losing its temper at all, so far as to expel him in consequence of this publication."

In spite of the lapse of more than a century this loss of temper has apparently not yet been made up.

Barry, in his letter to the Dilettanti Society, which dealt with "certain matters essentially necessary for the improvement of public taste and for the accomplishing the original views of the Royal Academy," referred to certain projects which he had urged upon the Academy as worthy of their financial support. These were the establishment of a gallery of pictures by old masters which should, by the generosity of the public, "soon fructify and extend to a National Gallery"; of a gallery of prints and casts of famous statues for the benefit both of students and of the public; and also the reproduction, with the royal sanction, of the anatomical manuscripts and drawings by Leonardo da Vinci which were in the king's possession. He had further urged the holding of loan exhibitions of works by old masters as likely to prove profitable to the Academy and beneficial to public taste. The last suggestion has, of course, long since been adopted, and the other projects have been realized by the operation of other agencies. Of the originator of these projects Allan Cunningham said, not without some justice, that "he was the greatest enthusiast in art which this country ever produced."

TWO EXHIBITIONS.

AN exhibition of old masters in the galleries of Messrs. P. & D. Colnaghi is always certain to contain some fine pictures, and the present show is no exception to the rule. All the works presented, except three, are by British painters, but our national predominance in this case is not a mere predominance of number. Neither of the works attributed to Ruysdael represents that master at his best, and the larger of them is far from pleasant in colour. The single specimen of De Koninck, on the other hand, is one of the best of his smaller works, the greys being most felicitously handled, striking the desired note of gravity and coolness without the least loss of harmony. The actual painting, too, is singularly crisp, keen, and skilful, and might serve as a proof, if proof were needed, that the large landscape in the Wantage Collection which passes under the name of Rembrandt was not beyond the capacity of his gifted pupil.

Yet even this excellent painting fails to hold its own by the side of one of the English landscapes in the same room, although it makes the little Gainsborough sketch look loose and mannered, and Constable's Hampstead Heath seem rather poor and thin, both in quality and sentiment. This last represents the same scene as the picture in the Sheepshanks Collection, painted from a slightly higher point of view, and from its style appears to belong to the beginning of Constable's Hampstead period. The date 1824 must thus represent the year of its completion. The other picture by Constable, however, is the splendid sketch of Salisbury Cathedral, which, when recently seen at Christie's among the pictures of the late Mr. Louis Huth, excited universal admiration. This study for the finished work which was exhibited in 1823, and is now in South Kensington Museum, like so many of Constable's studies, moves us more to-day than does the elaborate picture built up from it, fine as that is. Indeed, it would be difficult to name any work from Constable's hand in which his characteristic excellence shows to better advantage than in this fresh and radiant sketch. The exquisite passages of colour in the sky round the cathedral spire are specially wonderful.

Gainsborough as a figure painter is represented only by a very slight and graceful study of The Mushroom Girl, but the specimens of Reynolds are more important. The sketch of Mrs. Payne-Gallwey, it is true, is a trifle plausible about the eye, the nostril, and the lip; and the large double portrait of Lord Ashburton and his Sister, though enlivened everywhere by passages of delightful brushwork and juicy colour, is not quite satisfactory in its total effect, perhaps from the endeavour to convey a sense of naturalness by posing the two sitters opposite to each other. The Portrait of Mrs. Irwin, however, is entirely characteristic, and the slight fading of the carnations has done no more than tone the picture to an exquisite silvery coolness. The accident in the case of Reynolds is, of course, common enough, and at times deplorable too; but there are occasions, like the present, when it is positively felicitous in its results, conveying, as no deliberate process could do, an air of serene distinction which marks off these cultured persons of eighteenth-century England from those born in less fortunate periods or places. The social philosopher may think, perhaps, that our nation has always overestimated the fair sex, and it is not our present affair to dispute the statement; but whether this British characteristic prove right or wrong in the long run, its effect on English portrait-painting is incontestable. In the hands of Reynolds, Gainsborough, and one or two of those who have inherited some portion of their genius the well-born Englishwoman has become a type unique in art, compared with which the women of all other painters seem childish, wanton, or bovine.

The art of Romney is less searching and profound than that of Gainsborough and Reynolds, approaching nature with an appreciation more purely external. Nevertheless in his masterpieces, such as the well-known 'Miss Cumberland,' and even in less remarkable though fresh and typical specimens of his art, such as the 'Mrs. Drake,' the fascination remains. The large portrait of Lady Hamilton as Cassandra, a three-quarter-length taken from the well-known full-length version of the subject engraved for Boydell's 'Shakspeare,' lacks Romney's usual lightness of touch, and therefore his characteristic charm. The strong and vivid picture of two children by Hoppner shows to much better advantage. Hoppner, indeed, is almost always successful in his portraits of children, perhaps because his feeling for youth and innocence was far stronger than his grip of mature character, and the picture in Messrs. Colnaghi's exhibition is one of the best things of its kind, although in ability it may not be on the level of the Miss De Vismes by Lawrence. The gipsy-like gaiety of this girl sitter was peculiarly suited to Lawrence's sparkling talent, and since the picture dates from the time when the artist was not yet spoilt by social success, it is a delightful example of his powers, as well as a bold and original piece of colour.

A humbler collection at the Rowley Gallery, Silver Street, Kensington, also calls for notice. It is composed of landscape sketches in water colour, and oil studies of poultry, by Mr. H. M. Livens, who, if we remember rightly, has shown several excellent if rather low-toned interiors in various recent exhibitions. The sketches indicate unusual feeling for design and an unusual taste in the choice and arrangement of colours, derived apparently from intelligent study of Oriental art. Mr. Livens's talents deserve employment on a more extended scale.

THE LOUIS HUTH ENGRAVINGS.

THE sale of these engravings at Christie's on the 24th ult. was notable for the fact that a first state, before any letters, of T. Watson's mezzotint after Reynolds's Lady Bampfylde fetched 1,260*l.*, the highest price ever realized at auction for a mezzotint. Many other good prices were obtained. Details of the sale are appended. After Hoppner: The Right Hon. William Pitt, by G. Clint, 31*l.*; After Van Dyck: Lords John and Bernard Stewart, by J. McArdell, 120*l.*; George, Duke of Buckingham, and his Brother, by the same, 157*l.*; Henry, Earl of Danby, by V. Green, 40*l.*; Sir Thomas Wharton, by the same, 77*l.*; After Reynolds: Sir Joshua Reynolds as President of the Royal Academy, by V. Green, 168*l.*; Oliver Goldsmith, by J. Marchi, 84*l.*; Dr. Samuel Johnson, by W. Doughty, 54*l.*; Master Crewe as Henry VIII., by J. R. Smith, 36*l.*; Mrs. Braddell, by S. Cousins, 44*l.*; Lavinia, Countess Spencer, by C. Hodges, 50*l.*; Mrs. Payne-Gallwey and Child, by J. R. Smith, 367*l.*; Master Bunbury, by F. Howard, 294*l.*; Miss Penelope Boothby, by T. Park, 29*l.*; Lady Caroline Howard, by V. Green, 31*l.*; Duchess of Marlborough and her Daughter, by J. Watson, 31*l.*; Mrs. Montagu, by J. R. Smith, 33*l.*; Miss Mary Palmer (Lady Thomond), by W. Doughty, 54*l.*; Miss Theophila Palmer, by J. R. Smith, 65*l.*; Hon. Mrs. Stanhope, by the same, 63*l.*; Miss Jacobs, by J. Spilsbury, 241*l.*; Lady Harriet Herbert, by V. Green, 535*l.*; Countess of Aylesford, by the same, 462*l.*; Mrs. Hardinge, by T. Watson, 367*l.*; Duchess of Devonshire and her Daughter, by G. Keating, 89*l.*; Lady Stanhope, by J. Watson, 52*l.*; Mrs. Sheridan as St. Cecilia, by W. Dickinson, 147*l.*; Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse, by F. Howard, 131*l.*; Mrs. Mathew, by W. Dickinson, 810*l.*; Elizabeth, Countess of Derby, by the same, 178*l.*; Anne, Viscountess Townshend, by V. Green, 63*l.*; Lady Elizabeth Compton, by the same, 609*l.*; Mrs. Musters, by J. R. Smith, 168*l.*; Mrs. Carnae, by the same, 110*l.*; Isabella, Duchess of Rutland, by V. Green, 892*l.*; The Countess of Salisbury, by the same, 483*l.*; Mrs. Pelham feeding Chickens, by W. Dickinson, 110*l.*; The Ladies Waldegrave, by V. Green, 99*l.*. After Morland: Child looking into a Pig-sty, by J. R. Smith, 25*l.*; The Public-House Door, by the same, 28*l.*; Smugglers, by J. Ward, 26*l.*; The Carrier's Stable, by W. Ward, 52*l.*; Children playing at Soldiers, by G. Keating, 69*l.*; Children Bird's-nesting, by W. Ward, 69*l.*; The Delightful Story, by the same, 99*l.*; The Farmyard, by the same, 58*l.*; The Farmer's Stable, by the same, 42*l.*; The Warrener, by the same, 115*l.*; Sunset: a View in Leicestershire, by the same, 86*l.*; Travellers, by the same, 25*l.*; Cottagers, by the same, 65*l.*; The Return from Market, by J. R. Smith, 67*l.*. After Gainsborough: Interior of a Cottage, by C. Turner, 147*l.*. The eighty-three lots brought a total of 9,971*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*

SALES.

SEVERAL important art sales have just been concluded in Paris by M. Paul Chevallier. The more extensive of these began on May 15th, and continued until May 24th, a total of 1,407,206*fr.* being realized. It consisted of the collection of the late M. Michel Boy (to which we referred last week), and was more particularly rich in works of art of the Middle Ages and of the Renaissance period. The Edwards collection of ancient and modern pictures realized a total of 193,835*fr.* for fifty lots, of which the most important were: G. Dow, Portrait of a Lady of Quality, 9,000*fr.*. Three by Fr. Goya, Portrait of Mariano Ceballos, 14,000*fr.*; Picador enlevé par les Cornes d'un Taureau, 11,000*fr.*; and Portrait of Alberto Foraster, 16,100*fr.*. J. B. Greuze, Le Réveil, 9,500*fr.*. N. de Largillière, Portrait of the Artist, 18,200*fr.*. Sir Joshua Reynolds, Portrait of a Young Gentleman, 13,300*fr.*. P. Wouverman, Le Maréchal-Ferrant, 18,000*fr.*

The collection of M. Henri Heugel, sold on May 26th, consisted of nineteen modern pictures, and these produced a total of 289,330*fr.*. The more important were: Corot, Paysage de l'Artois: Vue prise aux Environs du Village de Sainte Catherine-lès-Arras, 32,500*fr.*. Two by Delacroix, Chasse aux Lions, 1858, 65,000*fr.*; and Le Christ en Croix, 1853, 15,000*fr.*. This latter realized 18,250*fr.* at the Noël sale in 1891. Diaz, Le Repos des Hamadryades, 9,500*fr.*. This realized 5,500*fr.* at the Saulnier sale in 1886, and 9,250*fr.* at the Daupias sale in 1892. Two by J. F. Millet, Baigneuse, 61,000*fr.* (at the first Saulnier sale, in 1886, this was appraised at 29,100*fr.*, and at the second sale, in 1892, 48,000*fr.*); and La Petite Gardeuse d'Oies, 56,000*fr.*. At the Garnier sale in 1894 this sold for 38,200*fr.*. Rousseau, Dans la Forêt, 30,000*fr.*

Messrs. Christie sold on the 27th ult. the following. Pictures: Sam Bough, Loch Lochy Castle, 294*l.*. W. Shayer, sen., The Anchor Inn, 105*l.*. H. Fantin-Latour, A Basket of White Grapes and Pomegranates, 135*l.*; A Bowl of Flowers, 199*l.*; Zinnias, 126*l.*. R. Ansdell, The Stray Lamb, 152*l.*. L. Deutsch, A Dervish Dance, 105*l.*. G. F. Watts, Portrait of a Young Girl, in red dress, with white hat, 136*l.*. Sir L. Alma Tadema, After the Drive, 199*l.*. W. Holman Hunt, The King of Hearts, 220*l.*. H. Herkomer, The Guards' Cheer, 294*l.*. Drawings: J. Israëls, Coming from Church, 105*l.*; Waiting for Father's Return, 115*l.*

The same firm sold on the 29th ult. the following drawings: S. Austin, St. John's Market, Liverpool, 105*l.*. J. S. Cotman, St. Michael's Mount, 101*l.*. C. Fielding, A View of Ullswater, 50*l.*. A. C. Gow, The Last of the Old Squires, 71*l.*. J. D. Harding, Val d'Aosta, 252*l.*. T. Heaphy, The Fish-Market, Hastings, 252*l.*. S. Prout, The Porch of Chartres Cathedral, 141*l.*

The following engravings were sold by the same firm on the 30th ult. By Whistler: Pierrot, 73*l.*; San Biagio, 31*l.*; Putney Bridge, 30*l.*; Battersea Bridge, 38*l.*. The Palace Doorway, by D. Y. Cameron, 26*l.*. A Sunset in Ireland, by Sir F. Seymour Haden, 27*l.*. La Pompe, Notre Dame, by C. Méryon, 32*l.*. After Rembrandt: Rembrandt's Peasant-Girl, by W. Say, 43*l.*. After Romney: Lady Hamilton, by J. Jones, 42*l.*; Lady Hamilton as Nature, by H. Meyer, first published state, 336*l.*; by J. R. Smith, in colours, 69*l.*; Miss Cumberland, by J. R. Smith, 105*l.*. After Reynolds: The Bedford Children, by V. Green, 28*l.*; Countess Spencer, by Bartolozzi, 88*l.*; Lady Smyth and Children, by the same, 37*l.*; Mrs. Pelham feeding Chickens, by W. Dickinson, 178*l.*; Lady Harriet Herbert, by V. Green, 309*l.*; Lady Caroline Price, by J. Jones, 42*l.*. After Hoppner: Sophia Western, by J. R. Smith, 38*l.*; The Daughters of Sir Thomas Frankland, by W. Ward, 152*l.*; Duchess of York, by W. Dickinson, 42*l.*. After Morland: St. James's Park, and A Tea-Garden, by F. D. Soiron, 183*l.*; The Return from Market, and Feeding the Pigs, by J. R. Smith, 89*l.*

After A. Kauffman: Lady Rushout and Daughter, by Burke, 48*l.*; Rinaldo and Armida, by the same, 46*l.*. After Lawrence: Lady Peel, by S. Cousins, 75*l.*. After A. Nasmyth: Robert Burns, by W. Walker and S. Cousins, 52*l.*. After Zoffany: The Flower-Girl, by J. Young, 28*l.*

Fine-Art Gossip.

MESSRS. HENRY GRAVES & CO. are showing a picture of the Japanese war by Mr. Frederic Villiers, 'Sap and Shell,' which is a study in the colours of modern shell fire.

A SECOND series of Miss E. Fortescue-Brickdale's remarkable water-colours—'Such Stuff as Dreams are made of!'—on which she has been engaged for the past four years, will be shown for the first time early in June at the Dowdeswell Galleries.

WE regret to hear of the death of M. Paul Dubois, one of the greatest of modern French sculptors. Born in 1829 at Nogent-sur-Seine (Aube), it was not until he was twenty-four years of age that he decided to adopt art as a profession; he studied under Toussaint, and first exhibited at the Salon in 1858; after four years in Italy, he returned to Paris, and won a second-class medal with his 'Narcisse' at the 1863 Salon. He executed busts of Henner, Dr. Parrot, Paul Baudry, Pasteur, Cabanel, Charles Gounod, and Bonnat. He has also been a frequent exhibitor of portraits and other pictures in oils. He was appointed Keeper of the Luxembourg in 1873, and succeeded Guillaume in the direction of the École des Beaux-Arts in May, 1878, a post he only resigned some weeks ago. He succeeded Perraud at the Académie des Beaux-Arts in December, 1876. His two greatest works, the equestrian statue of 'Le Connétable de Montmorency,' at Chantilly, and his 'Jeanne d'Arc,' in front of the St. Augustin Church, Paris, are said to have occupied him for nearly ten years.

THE list of the winners of medals of the Société des Artistes Français was published a few days ago. In the section of painting no first-class medals have been awarded; those who have won medals of the second class are MM. Decamps, Lartean, Palézioux, Planquette, Pagès, Lecomte, Bellemont, Alleaume, Tavernier, Cayron, Trigoulet, Laisement, Benner, Camoreyt, Godeby, and Gardier, and Madame Lucas Robiquet. First-class medals for sculpture have been awarded to MM. Marquet, Peter, Charles Jacquot, and Segoffin. In the section of Gravure en Médailles et Pierres Fines, M. Pillet has won the only first-class medal. In addition to these and many other second-class awards, the Prix Maguelone Lefebvre Glaize has been awarded to M. Jacques Patissou, and the Prix Rosa Bonheur to M. Lucien Simonnet.

PROF. ADOLF NICKOL, whose death in his eighty-first year is reported from Brunswick, was well known as a landscape and animal painter.

THE death, in his thirty-sixth year, is announced from Halensee of the portrait painter and etcher Wilhelm Rubach. Among his best-known works are pictures of Shakspeare and Schiller, and his etching of Lenbach's portrait of Bismarck.

A PRIVATE collection of lace and embroideries is now on view at the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge. This collection comprises lace and embroideries from Italy, France, Spain, Greece, Bohemia, Switzerland, Germany, Flanders, Holland, Denmark, Russia, Finland, Sweden, England, Ireland, Mexico, and South America. The Italian, Flemish, and Russian sections, the drawn-muslin, and the Mexican embroideries are special features of the exhibition. It fills some twenty cases, and will be on view, it is hoped, during the whole of the summer.

MR. J. T. PAGE writes regarding our note of May 13th on 'A Northamptonshire Church Chest':—

"The strongly worded note under the above heading is very timely. I trust it may be the means of rousing the public conscience and preventing a repetition of such deplorable incidents as the one you mention. For several centuries, up to the year 1888, there was in the church of West Haddon, Northamptonshire, an old oak-log chest, which formed a repository for the parish books and documents. It was cut out of a solid oak log, being about 8 feet long by 2½ feet wide. The lid was fitted with three locks, the respective keys of which were held by the vicar and two churchwardens. A little prior to the date mentioned it was discarded, and an iron chest obtained wherein to keep the registers, &c. To the regret of some, this interesting relic was on November 29th, 1888, handed over by the then vicar and churchwardens to the Northampton Museum. It is no doubt now in very good hands; but I am one of those who consider that its proper place is West Haddon Church."

THE death, in his seventy-third year, is reported from Amsterdam of Prof. Gugel, the author of several valuable works on architecture, the best known of which is 'A History of Architectural Style.'

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

COVENT GARDEN. — Tristan, Tannhäuser, Rigoletto, Die Meistersinger.

WAGNER'S 'Tristan' and 'Tannhäuser' were performed at Covent Garden on Thursday and Saturday evenings last week, and between them Verdi's 'Rigoletto.' During the last twenty or twenty-five years many interesting operas written by Italian composers have enjoyed more or less popularity; but when the historian of the future sums up the history of dramatic music during the nineteenth century, the art-work of Wagner and of Verdi will chiefly engage his attention. Beethoven's 'Fidelio,' produced at Vienna in 1805, will, of course, be mentioned, but that work only counts in the development of opera since Mozart in so far as its magnificent, highly emotional music led Wagner to assign so important a part to the orchestra in his music-dramas.

In 'Tristan' Frau Wittich impersonated Isolde. As Brünnhilde we greatly admired this lady, but as the Cornish princess she was less impressive, and the torpid Tristan of Herr Burrian must have affected her powers. There was plenty of excellent singing on the part of both artists, yet neither acted in downright earnest. For instance, the entry of Tristan in Act I. was singularly lacking in dignity, while the meeting of the lovers in the second act gave no idea of the ecstatic state of mind in which they are supposed to be. Of Madame Kirkby Lunn and Herr van Rooy in their respective parts of Brangäne and Kurwenal there is no need to speak.

Frau Wittich and Herr Burrian were the Elisabeth and Tannhäuser on the Saturday evening, and again in this opera the impersonations were more or less conventional. Elisabeth's intercession in the second act had not the true ring of sincerity. In that act Herr Burrian, however, was very good—indeed, at his best. It must be understood that Frau Wittich and Herr Burrian are able artists; it is the remembrance of certain great exponents of Wagner which leads to comparison and qualified praise. Frau Reinl was a commendable Venus; more convincing, however, in the amorous than in the irate moods of the goddess. In both works Dr. Richter and his band won golden opinions.

Of 'Rigoletto' we need only say that Mlle. Selma Kurz made her first appearance this season, and as Gilda captivated the audience by her excellent singing and clever acting. Signor Caruso, the Duke, was in very fine voice. Signor Scotti impersonated Rigoletto with good effect. Signor Mancinelli conducted with his usual entrain.

'Die Meistersinger' was given at Covent Garden on Wednesday evening. Fräulein Alten, the Eva, possesses a thorough understanding of her part; she sings well, though somewhat coldly. Herr Herold, the Walther, acted with marked refinement; his voice is of delightful quality; as yet, however, the tone is not sufficiently round and resonant. Herr van Rooy impersonated Hans Sachs to the life; his singing was wonderfully smooth and telling. Herr Geiss, the Beckmesser, was very clever, though here and there he showed a tendency towards the comic, notably in the trial scene.

The performance altogether was very good. Continual praise of Dr. Richter and his band is apt to become monotonous; yet justice demands that these important factors in the success should be recognized.

WALDORF.—L'Amico Fritz.

MASCAGNI'S 'L'Amico Fritz' was revived at the Waldorf Theatre on Tuesday evening. The composer's 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' produced in London by Signor Lago at the Shaftesbury Theatre in 1891, was first heard at Covent Garden, May 16th, 1892, and ever since then has formed part of its regular repertory. The opera in question was given there for the first time a week later, but after a few performances was set aside. The public is excited by anything out of the way, such as the sensational plot of 'Cavalleria,' and also its strenuous music; the story of 'L'Amico Fritz,' on the other hand—of quiet, idyllic character—is not calculated to stir the public pulse. Then, again, although we note clever music in it, and effective numbers—notably the "cherry-tree" duet—the music is often out of character with the personages of the pastoral and their Alsatian atmosphere. Strains more like Volkstied, of a homely nature, would have been more in keeping. The revival of the work was, however, interesting. Mlle. Alice Nielsen as Suzel sang well, though she at times unduly forced her high notes. Madame de Cisneros, the gipsy Beppe, has a fine contralto voice, and promises to be a useful member of the company. Signor de Lucia, who created the part of Fritz at Rome, was excellent, and so also was Signor Ancona as David. Signor Arnaldo Conti conducted; the orchestral playing was far better than on previous evenings. The new opera 'Fiorella,' by Mr. Amherst Webber, is announced for next Wednesday evening, the principal parts being assigned to Mlle. Ferraris, Madame de Cisneros, and MM. Pezzuti, Angelini-Fornari, and Pini-Corsi.

Musical Gossip.

HERR FRITZ KREISLER gave his only recital this season at Queen's Hall on Monday afternoon. He is not only a great violinist, but also a great artist. His programme included Bach's Concerto in E, the Beethoven Concerto, and Tartini's 'Trillo del Diavolo' Sonata. It would be difficult to imagine finer interpretations of these works. Now that Dr. Joachim has given up solo playing Herr Kreisler may be regarded as his legitimate successor. There was a small orchestra, under the vigilant direction of Señor Arbos. The organ was introduced into the Bach and Tartini accompaniments; the effect was at times disturbing, and at the end of the Tartini of an unsuitable ad captandum character.

WE are unable this week to notice the Hillier Festival, which was to begin on Thursday at the Queen's Hall. The Ostend Kursaal Orchestra—under the direction of its conductor, M. Léon Rinskoff—which makes a first appearance in England, enjoys a good reputation. M. Hillier, moreover, has included a novelty in each of his six programmes; in the second and last, indeed, two novelties. He has engaged good artists, and if the orchestra and conductor prove worthy of their reputation, the enterprise ought to prosper.

M. MAUREL gave his recital at the Bechstein Hall yesterday week, and in songs of various kinds once again displayed his unrivalled artistic powers. His voice may have lost something of its freshness, but his mastery of his art remains unimpaired. The hall was crowded. A duet from 'Don Pasquale' sung by Mrs. Landon Ronald and M. Maurel was highly appreciated. Mr. Landon Ronald, an admirable accompanist, presided at the pianoforte.

MESSRS. BREITKOPF & HAERTEL are about to begin a critical edition of the works of Haydn, which they expect to complete within a period of from ten to fifteen years. Many of the composer's works were destroyed by fire during his lifetime, and some have been lost; yet the number which remains is exceedingly large.

ON the 18th of last month Carl Goldmark quietly celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of his birth at Abbazia. 'Die Königin von Saba,' the composer's masterpiece, was produced at Vienna a little over thirty years ago.

ÉMILE JONAS, the French composer of many operettas, produced for the most part at the Bouffes Parisiens, died last week at St. Germain, at the ripe age of seventy-eight. He was of Jewish descent, and in 1854 published a 'Recueil de Chants Hébraïques.'

THE Archbishop of Canterbury has conferred the honorary degree of Doctor in Music on Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, the able organist of Gloucester Cathedral, and festival conductor in that city since 1901.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |  |
|--------|--|
| SUN.   | Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.                  |
| —      | Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.                      |
| MON.   | Miss Lila de Berna's Concert, 3, Follan Hall.                |
| —      | Mr. F. Meisels's Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.                   |
| —      | Yvette Guilbert's Songs, 8.30, Haymarket Theatre.            |
| —      | Miss Alice Mandeville's Vocal Recital, 3.30, Bechstein Hall. |
| —      | Special Orchestral Concert, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.            |
| —      | Miss Nora Clench's Quartet, 8.30, Follan Hall.               |
| —      | Mischa Elman's Orchestral Concert, 8.30, Queen's Hall.       |
| TUES.  | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                                  |
| —      | London Symphony Orchestral Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.         |
| —      | Mr. and Mrs. Hermann Lohr's Concert, 3.15, Follan Hall.      |
| —      | Miss Gladys Law's Pianoforte Recital, 3.30, Bechstein Hall.  |
| —      | Yvette Guilbert's Songs, 8.30, Haymarket Theatre.            |
| —      | Musical Festival, 8.30, Queen's Hall.                        |
| —      | Madame J. Chatterton's Harp Concert, 3, Steinway Hall.       |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                                  |
| —      | Grand Opera, Waldorf Theatre.                                |
| WED.   | Grand Opera, 2.15, Waldorf Theatre.                          |
| —      | Miss C. Stubenrauch's Viollo Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.  |
| —      | Musical Festival, 3.15, Queen's Hall.                        |
| —      | M. Sanzini's Orchestral Concert, 8.15, Queen's Hall.         |
| —      | Mr. Julian Henry's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.      |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                                  |
| —      | Mr. Amherst Webber's 'Fiorella,' Waldorf Theatre.            |
| THURS. | Musical Festival, 3.15, Queen's Hall.                        |
| —      | Yvette Guilbert's Songs, 8.30, Haymarket Theatre.            |
| —      | Philharmonic, 8, Queen's Hall.                               |
| —      | Miss Marie Schinde's Pianoforte Recital, 8, Steinway Hall.   |
| —      | Hegedus's Violin Recital, 8.30, Follan Hall.                 |
| —      | Mr. and Mrs. Henry Phillips's Concert, 8.30, Bechstein Hall. |
| —      | Royal Opera, Gaiety Night, 9, Covent Garden.                 |
| —      | Grand Opera, Waldorf Theatre.                                |
| FRI.   | Yvette Guilbert's Songs, 8.30, Haymarket Theatre.            |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                                  |
| —      | Grand Opera, Waldorf Theatre.                                |
| SAT.   | Grand Opera, 2.30, Waldorf Theatre.                          |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                                  |

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

IMPERIAL.—Hawthorne, U.S.A.: a Light Play in Four Acts. By James Bernard Fagan.

THOUGH the search for Utopias, Arcadias, Atlantises, and empires of the sun and moon is apparently abandoned, like that for Ophir or Cathay, out of that Eastern part of Europe which constitutes a sort of debatable land are being carved by our dramatists endless kingdoms, the proceedings in which are only less extravagant and outrageous than those to be witnessed in real states. The latest imaginary kingdom to be thence drawn is the creation of Mr. Fagan, the author of 'The Prayer of the Sword.' It has much in common with imaginary Ruritania and something with actual Servia, the ordinary proceedings in which unfavoured district it can scarcely be held to caricature. The recurrent revolutions in Borrovina, due to the rivalries between the Oberitches and the Unteritches, are, it is hoped, to be settled by a marriage between Prince Vladimir Unteritch, the chief pretender, and the Princess Irma, daughter of the reigning monarch, Augustus III. Unluckily, Prince Vladimir comes in war, not in peace, and his arrival is the prelude to another revolution, which is to end in the deposition of Augustus and his own elevation to the throne. For this change of government there is but too much cause. Borrovina is hopelessly insolvent; salaries, ministerial and other, are months in arrear, and the army, to which a year's pay is due, is on the point of mutiny. The insurrection seems bound to succeed, and would do so, but for the interference of Anthony Hamilton Hawthorne, a penniless American, second Secretary of Legation. By a strange chance Hawthorne has come upon the princess sleeping in her bower, or her orchard, or somewhere else, and has fallen in love with her. Judging by his unconventional proceedings that he is her princely lover wooing her incognito, the princess responds to his passion. Some interesting and tender passages over a ruined sundial in the park of the Summer Palace precede the outbreak of revolution. Meantime a second chance most opportunely befalls Hawthorne. His uncle, known as the Steel King, is, with his only son, killed in a motor smash, and the young Secretary of Legation comes into an immense fortune. When, in a confidential interview with his chancellor, the king says he must have sixty million francs or choose between a revolution and a Russian occupation, Hawthorne blandly offers to supply the money. Surprised at such a response from so unexpected a quarter, the monarch is disposed to treat the matter as impertinence. In the end he acquiesces, accepts the proposed largess, and constitutes the American his chief adviser, giving him entire control of the negotiations with the rebels. When the leader of the opposition, the commander-in-chief, and the mutineers generally are in his presence, Hawthorne has little difficulty in showing them on which side their bread is buttered, and persuading them that a full payment of all that is due to them, together with a complementary douceur, is more to their advantage than a revolution which will bring them nominal power, but leave them impecunious as before. The only person on whom this conclusion jars is the princess. She resents these mercenary engagements, in the course of which she seems to be herself put up for auction. In the end she learns from her father that, instead of making, as she had conceived, a sound and remunerative financial transaction, Hawthorne has virtually thrown his enormous fortune into the sea. Slowly it dawns upon her that this pushing, assertive, and resourceful American financier is another Mark Antony, who, for her sake, regards the world as well lost. She then accepts his advances, and consents to accompany him to his Virginian home, leaving the audience to muse on the question whether, in so magnificently re-establishing and reconstituting a kingdom, Hawthorne has left himself money enough to be able to support so costly a bride. All this is extravagant and futile. It is pleasant and pretty also, and may be accepted by those who, according to childish folk-lore, will "open the mouth and shut the eyes and see what Providence will send them." It is agreeably acted by Miss Evelyn Millard as the Princess, Mr. Lewis Waller as her American benefactor and suitor, and Mr. H. V. Esmond as the King. All that is wanted to express the full measure of charm is an atmosphere of more youth. The extravagances of which the characters are guilty smack of adolescence rather than of full-grown youth. The whole was received with favour, and constitutes an appetizing entertainment.

COURT. — Afternoon Representation. — Beatrice. In Three Acts. By Rosina Filippi.

In three short acts, which may almost be regarded as tableaux, Miss Filippi has portrayed as many imaginary meetings between Dante and her whom in the 'Convivio' he calls "il primo diletto della mia anima," and in the 'Vita Nuova' "la mia gentilissima donna." His encounters with her are due to the interference of supernatural beings, who are called impersonations of Love and of Death, and cannot be regarded as wholly satisfactory. In the first act, indeed, he is kissed by the lady, who is already affianced to Simone dei Bardi. This accolade, with all its gracious promise, does not prevent the lady in the second act, when he presents himself at her wedding, from treating him with levity, if not ridicule, and laughing at the verses in her honour he is vain and indiscreet enough to recite. In the third act he gazes on her dead body. This mystical piece, symbolic of we know not what, was accompanied with song and dance. A number of Italian worthies of whom we hear in connexion with Dante were presented, but were sadly sentimental and lackadaisical.

Dramatic Gossip.

On Wednesday evening Miss Ethel Irving revived at the Criterion Mr. Gilbert's 'Comedy and Tragedy,' playing at the same time 'What Pamela Wanted.'

'LORD DANBY'S LOVE AFFAIR,' announced as a "society romance" in four acts, by the Rev. Forbes Phillips, has been given at the Coronet Theatre with a cast comprising Miss Constance Collier, Mr. George P. Hawtrey, and Mr. Sydney Brough.

MADAME MODJESKA, well remembered in this country as an actress of remarkable power and versatility, has taken her farewell of the stage at the Metropolitan Opera-House, New York, in the sleep-walking scene from 'Macbeth.' Many artists, English and American, took part in the complimentary benefit that was given her.

'HAMLET' is this evening withdrawn from the Adelphi Theatre, and will on Monday be succeeded by 'Under which King?' a drama concerning George II. and "bonnie Prince Charlie," by Mr. J. B. Fagan, in which Miss Lily Brayton and Mr. Oscar Asche will play leading parts.

MR. STEPHEN PHILLIPS is said to contemplate a tragedy on the subject of Harold, which will constitute a species of rivalry with Tennyson.

THE Porte Saint-Martin has witnessed the successful production of 'Pauvre Fille,' a translation by M. Jean Thorel of Hauptmann's 'Rose Bernd.'

THIS evening sees at the Great Queen Street Theatre the closing performance for the present season of the Mermaid Repertory Theatre. A final performance of 'The Knight of the Burning Pestle' was given on Thursday afternoon.

MR. MARTIN HARVEY's production of 'Hamlet' is this evening succeeded at the Lyric by 'The Breed of the Treshams,' a four-act play by John Rutherford, which was given at Kennington on December 7th, 1903, but is now for the first time set before the West-End public.

THE run at the Shaftesbury of 'Renaissance' terminated on Wednesday, though there is some mention of a possible revival.

'ALICE,' a rendering of 'Alice in Wonderland' and 'Through the Looking-Glass,' by Miss Rosina Filippi and Mr. Nigel Playfair, in which Mr. Playfair enacted two characters, was given at the Court on Monday afternoon after the performance of 'Beatrice,' to which we refer elsewhere. It is fairly successful and entertaining.

ON Monday Signora Duse appeared at the Waldorf Theatre in Hedda Gabler, a part in which she was first seen at the Adelphi on October 7th, 1903. Signora Maty Wilson took the part of Thea Elvsted, but the cast in other respects seems to be the same as before.

THE death is announced of M. Ambroise Janvier de la Motte, better known as Janvier, author of various plays. Under the pseudonym Beauvallon he gave, March 22nd, 1876, 'Il ne sait pas lire' to the Palais Royal; on March 2nd, 1880, 'L'Indiscrète' to the Gymnase; and August 20th, 1881, 'La Parole de Barbansac,' all in one act. Subsequently, as M. Janvier, he produced, alone or in collaboration, 'Les Respectables,' comedy in three acts, Vaudeville, November 21st, 1889; 'Cinq Mille Quatre,' vaudeville in three acts, Déjazet, June 10th, 1890; 'Les Petits Côtés du Divorce,' comedy in three acts, Théâtre Moderne, December 5th, 1892; 'Les Amants Légitimes,' three acts, Gymnase, February 14th, 1893; and 'Les Jocrisses du Divorce,' Menus-Plaisirs, October 20th, 1895. Born at Angers, he was a man of leisure and wealth.

TO CORRESPONDENTS—C. J.—H. G. H.—W. M.—C. A. S.—H. H.—J. R. A.—received.

J. A. H. M.—Too late for this week.

R. R. S.—W. R. M.—C. F. G. M.—Noted.

T. H.—Many thanks.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST.

Catalogue sent post free on application.

CHEAPER REISSUE. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE EVE OF THE REFORMATION.

Studies in the Religious Life and Thought of the English People in the Period preceding the Rejection of the Romish Jurisdiction by Henry VIII.

By the Right Rev. Abbot GASQUET, D.D.

[Ready June 7.]

PART I. NOW READY, 5s. net.

A KEY to A NEW TRIGONOMETRY

for SCHOOLS. By W. G. BORCHARDT, M.A. B.Sc., and the Rev. A. D. PERROTT, M.A. 10s. net; or in Two Parts, 5s. net each.

THE POCKET HORACE.

HORACE. The Latin Text, with

Conington's Translation on Opposite Pages. Complete in 1 vol. Printed on thin paper for the pocket. Bound in stamped sheepskin. 5s. net; or limp cloth, 4s. net.

* * * Also in Two Parts: 'The ODES and CARMEN SECLARE.' Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; limp leather, cut flush, 2s. net. 'The SATIRES, EPISTLES, and ART of POETRY.' Cloth, 2s. net; limp leather, cut flush, 2s. 6d. net.

Pott 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 1s. net; or in limp leather, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. net.

MILTON. By G. C. Williamson, Litt.D.

[Bell's Miniature Series of Musicians.]

THE ART GALLERIES OF EUROPE.

With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. net each.

The ART of the LOUVRE. By Mary KNIGHT POTTER.

The ART of the PITTI PALACE. By JULIA DE W. ADDISON.

The ART of the VATICAN. By MARY KNIGHT POTTER.

BELL'S CATHEDRAL SERIES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

In specially designed cloth cover, crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net each.

"The series bids fair to become an indispensable companion to the cathedral tourist in England."—Times.

NOW READY.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. An Itinerary and Description—BRISTOL—CANTERBURY—CARLISLE—CHESTER—CHICHESTER—DURHAM—ELY—EXETER—GLOUCESTER—HEREFORD—LICHFIELD—LINCOLN—MANCHESTER—NORWICH—OXFORD—PETERBOROUGH—RIPON—ROCHESTER—ST. ALBANS—ST. ASAPH—ST. DAVID'S—ST. PATRICK'S, DUBLIN—ST. PAUL'S—SALISBURY—SOUTHWELL—WELLS—WINCHESTER—WORCESTER—YORK.

Uniform with above Series. 1s. 6d. net each.

ST. MARTIN'S CHURCH, CANTERBURY—BEVERLEY MINSTER—WIMBORNE MINSTER and CHRISTCHURCH PRIORY—TEWKESBURY ABBEY and DEERHURST PRIORY—BATH ABBEY, MALMESBURY ABBEY, and BRADFORD-ON-AVON CHURCH—WESTMINSTER ABBEY—STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

BELL'S HANDBOOKS TO CONTINENTAL CHURCHES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net each.

CHARTRES: the Cathedral and other Churches—ROUEN: the Cathedral and other Churches—AMIENS: the Cathedral and other Churches—PARIS (NOTRE-DAME)—MONT ST. MICHEL—BAYEUX.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

DUCKWORTH & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A NEW BOOK FOR READERS OF 'THE ROADMENDER.'

A MODERN MYSTIC'S WAY.

Uniform with 'The Roadmender.' 2s. 6d. net.

The anonymous author of this work was the intimate friend of Michael Fairless, the Author of 'The Roadmender,' by whom, indeed, the book was inspired. Revealing the attitude of a mystic, it presents much original thought, particularly in the matter of recent tendencies in psychology.

THE GREY BRETHREN.

By MICHAEL FAIRLESS, Author of 'The Roadmender.'

Cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

THE ITALIAN POETS SINCE DANTE.

By WILLIAM EVERETT. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

A study of the language and poetry of Italy, accompanied by a series of verse translations.

IDEALS AND REALITIES IN RUSSIAN LITERATURE.

By PRINCE KROPOTKIN.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"Prince Kropotkin's masterly and interesting book will come as a revelation to most English readers. It presents a panoramic survey of Russian literature from the times of the songs and sagas of the twelfth century down to the present day. No one who is interested in Russian affairs should fail to read it."—Morning Post.

METAPSYCHICAL PHENOMENA.

By Dr. JOSEPH MAXWELL.

With Prefaces by Sir OLIVER LODGE and Prof. CH. RICHTER.

Large crown 8vo, 10s. net.

This book is a most important contribution to the scientific and methodical study of the phenomena variously known as "spiritistic," "occult," or, to use the term now suggested by M. Richet, "metapsychical."

AUGUSTE RODIN.

By CAMILLE MAUCLAIR,

Author of 'The Great French Painters,' 'French Impressionists.'

With 40 Illustrations, Photogravure Frontispiece. Crown 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

"The most complete and authoritative account. M. Maclair has the advantage of being an intimate friend."—Daily Chronicle.

"The public interest in the Michael Angelo of our time is more than ordinarily acute. We could have no better guide than M. Maclair.....giving us this illuminating study of a genius."—Daily News.

CRITICAL STUDIES AND FRAGMENTS.

By the late S. ARTHUR STRONG, M.A.,

Librarian to the House of Lords, and to the Duke of Devonshire at Chatsworth.

With a Memoir by LORD BALCARRES, M.P.

Royal 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 16s. net.

With Photogravure Portrait and 26 Illustrations.

Prospectuses on application.

DUCKWORTH'S POPULAR LIBRARY OF ART.

Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net. NEW VOLUME.

VELAZQUEZ.

By AUGUSTE BRÉAL, Author of 'Rembrandt.'

With 50 Illustrations.

NEW FICTION.

Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

IT'S A WAY THEY HAVE IN THE ARMY.

By LADY HELEN FORBES.

[Just published.]

The author gives a convincing picture of regimental social life in India, which conveys aspects scarcely realized by the public. While the picture is not always pleasing, the book is certain to call forth much comment and remark.

NAPOLEON'S LOVE STORY.

By WACLAW GASIOROWSKI.

Translated by the COUNT DE SOISSONS. [Shortly.]

This true romance of a passage in Napoleon's life is a most faithful study of Polish society of a century ago, as well as a fascinating love story.

THE DISCIPLE'S WIFE.

By VINCENT BROWN,

Author of 'A Magdalen's Husband.'

In this work Vincent Brown has created one of the most notable women of modern fiction—Marie Durnford. Such is his searching analysis that the book has been termed 'The Soul of Marie Durnford.'

"She stands before us real flesh and blood. As to the minor characters, they are nearly all delightful miniatures. All that Mr. Vincent Brown has done is individual and noteworthy. He has style, imagination, and high ideals."—Daily Telegraph.

THE HOUSE OF BARNKIRK.

By AMY McLAREN.

"It has what we too seldom get and what is never without its charm—a picture of kindly, well-bred people who talk and act in a perfectly natural manner."—Times.

THE VICISSITUDES OF EVANGELINE.

By ELINOR GLYN,

Author of 'The Visits of Elizabeth,' &c.

[Second Impression.]

Mrs. Glyn's New Novel is one of the most successful books of the year both in England and America. Large additional printings have been called for in both countries.

PROGRESS.

By R. B. CUNNINGHAME-GRAHAM,

Author of 'Success.'

"A magnificent book, rich in observation. Briefly, he is in this volume a master of the sublime, the showy, the pathetic, the picturesque."—World.

GOSSIP.

By BENJAMIN SWIFT, Author of 'In Piccadilly.'

London: DUCKWORTH & CO. 3, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

THE BOOK OF THE SEASON.

PRINTERS'

PIE, 1905.

EDITED BY

W. HUGH SPOTTISWOODE,

PUBLISHED

ON THE FIRST OF JUNE.

Every Copy sold helps one of the best-managed Charities in the Country—The Printers' Pension Corporation. President for 1905, Mr. C. ARTHUR PEARSON.

CONTENTS:

STORIES, &amp;c.

BY

W. L. ALDEN.
F. ANSTEY.
DUKE of ARGYLL.
G. B. BURGIN.
Lieut.-Col. NEWNHAM-DAVIS.
Major - Gen. Sir A. G. FRENCH.
TOM GALLON.
G. L. GRAVES.
J. K. JEROME.
E. W. LUCAS.
H. W. LUCY.
BARRY PAIN.
Major - Gen. B A D E N - POWELL.
C. ARTHUR PEARSON.
MOSTYN PIGOTT.
WM. LE QUEUX.
W. PETT RIDGE.
ADRIAN ROSS.
LORD STANLEY.
G. R. SIMS.
KATHARINE TYNAN.
I. ZANGWILL.

&amp;c. &amp;c.

DRAWINGS, &amp;c.

BY

CECIL ALDIN.
C. A. BUCHEL.
E. M. CROXTON.
C. DANA GIBSON.
DUDLEY HARDY.
JOHN HASSALL.
L. RAVEN HILL.
GUNNING KING.
PHIL MAY.
WILL OWEN.
CHAS. PEARS.
F. PEGRAM.
L. THACKERAY.
F. H. TOWNSEND.
DAVID WILSON.
LAWSON WOOD.
STARR WOOD.

&amp;c. &amp;c.

1s. net.

Of all W. H. SMITH & SONS' Bookstalls,
And of all Booksellers and Newsagents.

Published by THE SPHERE and TATLER, Ltd.,
Great New Street, London, E.C.

NOW READY, with Illustrations, 2s. 6d. net; by post, 2s. 9d.

X RAYS: their Employment in Cancer and other Diseases.
By RICHARD J. COWEN, L.R.C.S.I. L.R.C.P.I., &c.
London: H. J. Glaisner, 57, Wigmore Street, W.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.
The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, GOUT,
And INDIGESTION.
And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

L O N D O N   L I B R A R Y,
ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING. President—The Right Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P.
Vice-Presidents—The Right Hon. VISCOUNT GOSCHEN; FREDERIC HARRISON, Esq.; GEORGE MEREDITH, Esq.
ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, Esq., F.R.S.
Trustees—EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G.; Right Hon. LORD AVEBURY, F.R.S.;
Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

Committee—Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, Bart., LL.D., Dr. J. H. Bridges, Horace T. Brown, Esq., F.R.S., Prof. Ingram Bywater, Prof. Lewis Campbell, LL.D., Austin Dobson, Esq., LL.D., Sydney Gedge, Esq., Sir A. Geikie, F.R.S., Sir R. Giffen, K.C.B. F.R.S., Edmund Gosse, Esq., LL.D., Mrs. J. R. Green, Rev. W. Hunt, M.A. Litt.D., Sir C. P. Ilbert, K.C.S.I., Sir C. M. Kennedy, K.C.M.G. C.B., Sidney Lee, Esq., Litt.D., W. S. Lilly, Esq., Sidney J. Low, Esq., Sir Frank T. Marzials, C.B., Sir F. Pollock, Bart., Rev. J. H. Rigg, D.D., H. R. Tedder, Esq., Rev. H. Wace, D.D., Sir Spencer Walpole, K.C.B., A. W. Ward, Esq., Litt.D. LL.D.

The Library contains about 220,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in various Languages. Subscription, 3l. 3s. a year, with an entrance fee of 1l. 1s.; Life Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from Ten to Half-past Six. The NEW CATALOGUE (1626 pp. 4to, 1903) is now ready, price 2l. 2s.; to Members, 25s.
C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, LL.D., Secretary and Librarian.

ESTABLISHED 1824.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL AND GENERAL
LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Assets over FOUR MILLIONS Sterling.

BONUS DIVIDED 1902, £597,415.

TO SHARE IN NEXT BONUS

APPLY NOW OR BEFORE JUNE 30 TO

CHIEF OFFICE: 15, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

C E L E S T I A L   M O T I O N S :*A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S."Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SEVENTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES :

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

N O T E S   A N D   Q U E R I E S .*THIS WEEK'S NUMBER CONTAINS—

NOTES:—Pinchbeck Family—Westminster Changes—Shakespeariana—"Coryate's Crudities"—Self-made Men—No. 53, Fleet Street—"The Nore"—Isle of Dogs.

QUERIES:—Sir Lewis Stukeley's 'Petition'—"In cauda venenum"—Tyndale's Ordination—Ewart Family—Dr. Chamberlen—Prayer for Twins—"Rational's Festival"—"St. James's Chapter"—"The Streets of London"—"Goyle"—English Crown Jewel—Madden's 'Havelock the Dane'—Tunbridge Wells and District—"Maydewing"—Polish Royal Genealogy—"Guardings"—"Theatrical Remembrancer"—"Tertias of foot"—"Pop goes the weasel"—Coke or Cook—"The Lovesick Gardener"—Col. Hewetson—Parsloe's Hall, Essex.

REPLIES: The "Old Bell" Inn, Holborn—Police Uniforms: Omnibuses—"Iland": "Ile"—Charlemagne's Roman Ancestors—"Poeta nascitur non fit"—Epigram on a Rose—Great Queen Street—Inscriptions at San Sebastian—Pillion: Flails—Sack—Shorter: Walpole—Vulgate—Portraits which have led to Marriages—"Rebecca"—Lincoln Inventory—Lines on Mug—Bigg, the Dinton Hermit—Hollicke or Holleck—"Purdonium"—Twitchel—Lincoln Civic Insignia—The Mayor's Ring—"Steer to the Nor'-Nor'-West"—Bibliography of Epitaphs—"Legenvre"—Vixens and Drunkenness—Coliseums Old and New.

NOTES ON BOOKS:—Lady Dilke's 'Book of the Spiritual Life'—Furness's 'Variorum Shakespeare'—"Specimens of the Elizabethan Drama."

Booksellers' Catalogues.

Notices to Correspondents.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

And of all Newsagents.

DAVID NUTT,

57-59, LONG ACRE.

JUST OUT, AT ALL BOOKSTALLS, BOOK-SELLERS', AND LIBRARIES.

FORBIDDEN IN RUSSIA.

TRAGIC STORIES FROM RUSSIA.

THE GREAT HEART, and other Tales and Sketches by

MAXIM GORKY, LEO TOLSTOY, NEMIROVITCH - DANTCHENKO, &c.

Translated by W. F. HARVEY.

Crown 8vo, wrapper, 1s.

ETAIN AND OTINEL.

A Romance.

By E. HAMILTON MOORE.

With Designed Title-page by CAROLINE WATTS.

Small 4to, printed at the Ballantyne Press on Hand-made Paper, bound in vellum and art linen, top gilt, 3s. 6d. net.

The UNWRITTEN LAW. A Novel.

By ARTHUR HENRY. Crown 8vo, 411 pp. cloth, 6s.

DEIRDIRE and the LAY of the CHILDREN of UISNE. Orally Collected in the Island of Barra and literally Translated by A. CAR-MICHAEL. Crown 8vo, 146 pp. cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

MISTER DORMOUSE, and other

Verses for Children. By GERALDINE M. SEYMOUR. Square demy 8vo, printed at the Ballantyne Press on Hand-made Paper, red-and-black title, gilt top, bound in art linen, fancy gilt boards with label, 2s. 6d.

The THREE - CORNERED HAT.

Translated from the Spanish of DON PEDRO DE ALARCON by LADY GOODENOUGH. 16mo, iv-225 pp. cloth, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

GREAT EXPLORERS OF AMERICA.

A Series of Original Narratives, Edited, with Introductions and Notes, Maps, and Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, half-bound in art linen, gilt top. Net prices.

HERNANDO DE SOTO (Explorer

of Florida and the Mississippi Valley, 1529-42).—The CONTEMPORARY NARRATIVE of the KNIGHT of ELVAS, LUIS HERNANDEZ DE BIEDMA, and RODRIGO DE RANGEL, De Soto's Private Secretary. Translated (the Latin for the first time) by BUCKINGHAM SMITH, and edited by B. G. BOURNE, Professor of History in Yale University. Portrait and Maps. 2 vols. 7s. 6d.

LEWIS and CLARK.—HISTORY of the EXPEDITION under the COMMAND of Captains LEWIS and CLARK to the SOURCES of the MISSOURI, thence across the Rocky Mountains and down the River Columbia to the Pacific Ocean, performed during the Years 1804-6. Edited by Prof. I. B. McMASTER. With Illustrations and Maps. 3 vols. 10s. 6d.

A CHAPTER from MALORY

(Book XXI. Ch. VIII.). Retold in Spenserian Stanza by HENRY CLORISTON. Square demy 8vo, printed at the Ballantyne Press on Hand-made Paper, silver-and-blue wrapper, 1s. net.

GUBBIO, PAST and PRESENT.

By LAURA McCracken. Illustrated by KATHARINE McCracken. With Preface by PAUL SABATIER. Fcap. 8vo, xvi-319 pp. Photogravure Frontispiece, 30 Illustrations (many Full-Page), and 2 Maps. Art linen, cloth gilt, 5s. net.

* * Gubbio, the town of S. Ubaldo and of the Procession of the Ceri, the scene of the legend of S. Francis and the Wolf, is one of the most picturesque and interesting of Italian mediæval towns. This is the first time its story has been related and its monuments described.

THE TRUTH OF CHRISTIANITY.

Being an Examination of the more important Arguments for and against believing in that Religion.

Compiled from various sources

By Major W. H. TURTON, Royal Engineers.

Cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

FIFTH EDITION NOW READY, carefully Revised throughout.

"'Truth of Christianity' has reached a third edition, a well-deserved recognition of the merits of a book which on its first appearance commanded general attention. As we intimated before, the book is of considerable value to every one who is concerned with the controversy on Christian evidences; it presents a perfect storehouse of facts and the conclusions which may be legitimately drawn from them."

Church Times.
"Has a freshness about it that is singularly attractive."
(New York) Churchman.

HOW TO PREACH.

A Manual for Students.

By the Rev. E. TYRRELL GREEN, M.A.,
Lecturer in Theology and Hebrew, St. David's College,
Lampeter.

Cloth boards, 2s. net.

THE STORY OF THE BEGINNING.

Genesis in the Light of Recent Research.

By Mrs. FREDERIC GREEN.

With Introduction by the Right Rev. H. E. RYLE, D.D.,
Bishop of Winchester.

Cloth, 1s. 3d. net; paper, 9d. net.

This will be found a most valuable help to parents and teachers at the present time.

THE LAW OF CHURCHWARDENS And Sidesmen in the Twentieth Century.

By P. V. SMITH, LL.D.,

Barrister-at-Law, Chancellor of the Diocese of Manchester.
Cloth boards, 2s. net (postage 4d. extra).

THIRD EDITION.

"Altogether an admirable production."—Guardian.
"Excellent, an indispensable possession for all who are called to the office of churchwarden."—Church Times.

BOOKS BY PHŒBE ALLEN. GARDEN PESTS.

"The literature of the garden has a welcome, we may say a necessary, addition in 'Garden Pests.'"—Spectator.

Illustrated by Dr. HAROLD F. BASSANO. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

PLAYING AT BOTANY.

"The writer's qualifications for her task are unquestioned. Our regret is we were never numbered among her pupils."

Schoolmaster.
"The explanations are so clear and concise that a fairly intelligent child will easily understand them."

Morning Post.
Profusely illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THIRD NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

JACK AND JILL'S JOURNEY.

"Specially suitable for young students in botany."

Morning Post.
Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION.

THE FORBIDDEN ROOM; Or, Mine Answer was My Deed.

Illustrated. Imp. 16mo, extra cloth boards, 2s.

ON MINIATURE AND WINDOW GARDENING.

By the Editors of 'The Sun-Children's Budget.'
Imp. 32mo, paper cover, 3d.; cloth, 6d.

London:

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO., LIMITED,
3, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.; and
44, Victoria Street, S.W.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & CO.' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Two New Six-Shilling Novels.

1 A powerful Story of the Times of Mahomed Ali, the Greek, who was Pasha of Egypt in 1828. It is a Tale of Love and War and Intrigue, and has a Plot as well as Passion and Characterization.

THE HONOUR OF HENRI DE VALOIS.

By DAVID M. BEDDOE.

(Sharia el Manakh, Cairo.) Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

2 An English translation of a successful Italian Novel, dealing with Modern Italian Life. The Novel has been translated into several languages besides English, and has aroused considerable attention.

DMETRIO PIANELLI.

By EMILIO DE MARCHI.

Translated by MARGARET NEWETT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE EVOLUTION OF AN ENGLISH TOWN.

Being the Story of the Ancient Town of PICKERING, in Yorkshire, from Prehistoric Times up to the Year of Our Lord Nineteen Hundred and Five.

By GORDON HOME.

Fcap. 4to, with Coloured Frontispiece, and numerous Black-and-White Illustrations by the Author.
10s. 6d. net.

SAINT CATHARINE OF SIENA,

As Seen in her Letters.

Translated, with Notes and Introduction, by VIDA D. SCUDDER.

Large crown 8vo, 6s. net.

These Letters of St. Catharine are very fascinating, not for any literary quality, but for "the impetuous outpourings of the heart and mind of a daughter of the people, who was also, as it happened, a genius and a saint."

AN ELIZABETHAN VIRGINAL BOOK.

By E. W. NAYLOR, Mus.D. M.A.,
Author of 'Shakespeare and Music,' &c.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

A Critical Study of the Collection of Clavier Music known as the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, and kept at the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge.

MASTER MUSICIANS.—New Volume.

SCHUBERT.

By E. DUNCAN.

Illustrated. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

CHRONICLES OF THE CITY OF PERUGIA (1492-1503).

By FRANCESCO MATARAZZO.

Translated by E. S. MORGAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

THE TEMPLE CLASSICS.

Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; leather, 2s. net.

THE CATHEMERINON

(Or Hymns for the Day)

OF PRUDENTIUS.

Latin Text opposite Translation by the Rev. MARTIN POPE and R. F. DAVIS.

LES CLASSIQUES FRANCAIS.

Pott 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net.

NEW VOLUME.

A DOLPHE.

By BENJAMIN CONSTANT.

With Preface by PAUL BOURGET.

Write for a List of Previous Volumes.

London: J. M. DENT & CO. 29, Bedford Street, W.C.

T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The PROGRESS of HELLENISM in ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE. By JOHN PENTLAND MAHAFFY, D.D. Mus.Doc. Dublin, Hon. D.C.L.Oxon., sometime Professor of Ancient History in the University of Dublin. 5s. net.

MODEL FACTORIES and VILLAGES. Ideal Conditions of Labour and Housing. By BUDGETT MEAKIN, Lecturer on Industrial Betterment, Author of 'The Land of the Moors,' &c. With about 200 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

In PERIL of CHANGE. Essays Written in Time of Tranquillity. By C. F. C. MASTERMAN, Author of 'From the Abyss,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A volume of brilliant studies of contemporary literature and religious and social conditions.

MEDIÆVAL ENGLAND. By MARY BATESON. Fully illustrated. Large crown 8vo, 5s. [Second Impression.

"The best manual that can be found anywhere for the life of the Middle Ages in England." Speaker.

WHAT I HAVE SEEN WHILE FISHING, and HOW I HAVE CAUGHT MY FISH. By PHILIP GEEN. With 73 Illustrations. Second Edition. 7s. 6d. net.

"A narrative full of life and vigour, lightened by pleasant humour and inspired with a genuine love of country sights, country sounds, and country people."—Field.

The CAMERA in the FIELDS. A Practical Guide to Nature Photography. By F. C. SNELL. With 80 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

BRITISH BIRD LIFE. By W. PERCIVAL WESTELL, M.B.O.U. F.R.H.S., &c. With over 60 Illustrations. With an Introduction by Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

BIRDS I HAVE KNOWN. By ARTHUR H. BEAVAN. Fully illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

ANIMALS I HAVE KNOWN. By ARTHUR H. BEAVAN, Author of 'Birds I Have Known,' &c. With about 50 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

ENGLISH WAYFARING LIFE in the MIDDLE AGES (Fourteenth Century). By J. J. JUSSERAND. Cheap Edition. Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

The HISTORY of FLORENCE (for the First Two Centuries). By Prof. PASQUALE VILLARI. Cheap Edition. Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

T. FISHER UNWIN.

JOHN OLIVER

HOBBS' New Novel
will be published on
JUNE 5.

THE FLUTE OF PAN.

6s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF

THE SCHOOL FOR SAINTS.

ROBERT ORANGE.

LOVE AND THE SOUL HUNTERS.

THE VINEYARD.

THE HERB-MOON.

SOME EMOTIONS AND A MORAL.

A STUDY IN TEMPTATIONS.

THE SINNER'S COMEDY.

A BUNDLE OF LIFE.

The First Large Impression of 'The FLUTE of PAN' is already sold out. The Second Impression will be ready on MONDAY, June 5.

T. FISHER UNWIN.

IN PREPARATION.

A LITERARY HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. Vol. II. By J. J. JUSSERAND, French Ambassador to the United States. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. net.

SIBERIA: a Record of Travel, Exploration, and Climbing. By SAMUEL TURNER, F.R.G.S. With 100 Illustrations and 2 Maps. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. net.

IN SEARCH of EL DORADO: a Wanderer's Experiences. By ALEXANDER MACDONALD, F.R.G.S. With 32 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

JOHN CHINAMAN at HOME. By the Rev. E. J. HARDY, Author of 'How to be Happy though Married,' lately Chaplain to H.M. Forces in Hong Kong. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

INTERNATIONAL LAW and the NORTH SEA CRISIS. By F. E. SMITH, B.C.L., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, and Vinerian Scholar in the University of Oxford, and N. W. SIBLEY, LL.M., Trin.H.Cant., Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo, cloth, 21s. net.

RUSSIA UNDER the GREAT SHADOW. By LUIGI VILLARI, Author of 'Giovanni Segantini,' 'Italian Life in Town and Country,' &c. With 60 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready.

The AGE of the EARTH, and other GEOLOGICAL STUDIES. By W. J. SOLLAS, LL.D. D.Sc. F.R.S., Professor of Geology in the University of Oxford. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The MYSTICS, ASCETICS, and SAINTS of INDIA. By JOHN CAMPBELL OMAN, LL.D., Author of 'Indian Life, Religious and Social,' &c. Fully illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth. Cheaper Edition, 7s. 6d. net.

"A work of the first importance.....In the work of analysis and description Mr. Campbell Oman has no superior in authority, at least as far as the races of the Punjab are concerned."

Daily Chronicle.

FICTION.

THE FLUTE OF PAN.

By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS. [June 5.

GRAND RELATIONS.

By J. T. FLETCHER. [June 5.

A SPECIMEN SPINSTER.

By K. WESTLAKE YEIGH.

THE PROGRESS OF PRISCILLA.

By LUCAS CLEEVE.

THE INTERPRETERS.

By Mrs. BYRDE.

STARS OF DESTINY.

By L. PARRY TRUSCOTT

THE YARN OF OLD HARBOUR TOWN.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

T. FISHER UNWIN.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4050.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

ROYAL SOCIETY of LITERATURE.

20, HANOVER SQUARE, W.
On WEDNESDAY NEXT, June 11, at 4.30 p.m., PHILIP H. NEWMAN, Esq., F.S.A. R.B.A., will read a Paper on 'El ingenio Hidalgo Don Quixote de la Mancha: the Book and its Author.' E. W. BRADBROOK, Esq., C.B., Vice-President, in the Chair.
PERCY W. AMES, Secretary.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)
An ORDINARY MEETING of the SOCIETY will be held on THURSDAY, June 15, at 5 p.m., in CLIFFORD'S INN HALL, Fleet Street, when the Alexander Prize Essay on 'The Beginnings of the Clerical Order' will be read by Mr. W. A. PARKER MASON, M.A., formerly of Trinity College, Oxford.
H. E. MAULDEN, Hon. Sec.

THE OXFORD ARCHITECTURAL and HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Offers a Portion of its Surplus Stock of PROCEEDINGS (1862-1900) at the reduced price of 1s a Part. Each Part includes from about 25 to 80 octavo pages, with occasional Plates.
Apply to the TREASURER, 2, St. Michael's Chambers, Oxford.

GRESHAM LECTURES.—Four Elementary Lectures on 'The Infinitesimal Calculus' will be delivered on Tues., Wed., Thurs., Fri., June 13-16, at Gresham College, Basinghall Street, E.C., by W. H. WAGSTAFF, Esq., M.A., Gresham Professor of Geometry, at 6 p.m. Admission free.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

SEPTEMBER, 1905.
SUNDAY, September 10.—3.30, Grand Opening Service, with Chorus and Orchestra.
TUESDAY, September 12.—11.30, 'Gerontius' (Elgar), 'Hymn of Faith' (Ivor Atkins), 4th Symphony (Brahms); 7.30, Symphony (Beethoven), 'Sleepers Wake' (Bach), Motet (Cornelius), 'Requiem' (Mozart).
WEDNESDAY, September 13.—11.30, 'Tod und Verklärung' (Strauss), 'De Profundis' (Parry), 'Beatus Ille' (Selection) (Frank), 'Hymn of Praise'; 8 p.m. Concert.
THURSDAY, September 14.—11.30, 'Apostles' (Elgar); 7.30, 'Elijah'.
FRIDAY, September 15.—11.30, 'Messiah'.
ARTISTES.—Albani, Agnes Nicholls, Soprano, Muriel Foster, Edna Thornton, Mildred Jones, Coates, Green, Black, Frederic Austin, Dalton Baker, William Higley, and Plunket Greene.
CONDUCTOR.—Mr. Ivor Atkins.
For further information apply to DEIGHTON & Co or E. J. SPARK, Worcester.

O B A C H & C O.
EXHIBITION of PICTURES by FRENCH and DUTCH MASTERS of the NINETEENTH CENTURY.
NOW OPEN at 168, NEW BOND STREET, W.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S
SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27, King Street, St. James's.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT and PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.
Funds exceed 25,000L.
Office: Memorial Hall Buildings, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.
Patron:
The Right Hon. the EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G. K.T.
President:
The LORD OLENESK.
Treasurer:
The LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

A Donation of Ten Guineas constitutes a Vice-President and gives three votes for life at all elections. Each Donation of Three Guineas gives a vote at all elections for life. Every Annual Subscriber is entitled to one vote at all elections in respect of each Five Shillings so paid.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man and Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employed, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guineas for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuitants now number Thirty-six, the men receiving 25L and the Women 20L per annum each, and they include:—
The "Royal Victoria Pension Fund," which was established in 1887 and enlarged in 1897, 1901, and 1902, perpetually commemorates the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides Pensions of 20L a year each for Six Widows of Newsvendors.

The "Francis Fund" provides Pensions for One Man, 25L, and One Woman, 20L, and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing "Taxes on Knowledge," and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The "Horace Marshall Pension Fund" is the gift of the late Mr. Horace Brooks Marshall. The employers of that firm have primary right of election to its benefits, but this privilege not having been exercised until 1904, the General Pensions of the Institution have had the full benefit arising from the interest on this Investment from 1887 to 1903.

The "Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund" provides 25L per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The "Hospital Pensions" consist of an annual contribution, whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20L for One Year to a Man, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c. W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTOR in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAN, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 35, Sackville Street, London, W.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION will be held on JUNE 28, 29, and 30 to FILL UP not less than EIGHT RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS, THREE NON-RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS, and SOME EXHIBITIONS.—For particulars apply to the HEAD MASTER, 19, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

F O L K E S T O N E.
WOODLANDS PREPARATORY SCHOOL.
Rev HENRY T. J. COGGIN, M.A. Cantab.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX.
Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Redford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

THE BUSHEY SCHOOL of PAINTING,

BUSHEY, HERTS.
For the Study of the Human Figure and Animal Painting from the Living Model.
Principal.—Miss LUCY KEMP WELCH, R.B.A.
Assistant Master.—HOWLAND WHEELWRIGHT.
Master of the Life-Class.—J. W. WHITELEY.
For Prospectus, apply to the SECRETARY.

ROYAL SCOTTISH GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

The SECRETARYSHIP of this SOCIETY will be VACANT on AUGUST 31. Salary 200L per annum. The Gentleman holding the Office would require to be willing to give his whole time to its duties.
Written applications, stating age, qualifications, references, &c., should be addressed to the HONORARY SECRETARIES, Geographical Society, 1, Queen Street, Edinburgh, not later than JUNE 26, 1905.
It is particularly requested that there be no canvassing of Members of Council.

MERIONETH EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

DOLGELLEY COUNTY INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL.
WANTED, a HEAD MASTER for the above School, who must have taken a Degree in the United Kingdom, preference (all other things being equal) being given to those who have had training and experience in teaching. Salary 150L, with a Capitation Grant of 1L 10s. per Scholar. Applications, together with thirty-six copies of not more than six Testimonials, to be sent to the undersigned on or before WEDNESDAY, June 28.
H. HAYDN JONES.
Education Office, Towyn (Merioneth), June 1, 1905.

HARRIS INSTITUTE, PRESTON.

The COUNCIL require a HEAD ART MASTER, whose duty will be, with competent Assistants, to undertake the General Work and Management of the School of Art. He will also advise with the Director of Education for the Borough on the Art Instruction in the Elementary Day Schools, and possibly supervise such instruction, and also arrange and conduct Art Classes for the Instruction of Teachers. Salary 250L per annum. Candidates must be qualified as Art Masters according to the rules and regulations of the Board of Education, and must have had experience in teaching Design and Modelling. The Gentleman appointed will enter upon his duties in SEPTEMBER NEXT.—Applications before JUNE 26. Form of Application may be obtained from
T. R. JOLLY, Secretary and Registrar.

THE UNIVERSITY of LIVERPOOL.

CHAIR OF FRENCH
The COUNCIL invite applications for the CHAIR of FRENCH. The emoluments of the Chair are derived from a fixed stipend and a share of the Fees and are guaranteed to be not less than 600L per annum. Applications, with References and, if Candidates desire, Testimonials, must be forwarded not later than JUNE 24.—For further details apply to the REGISTRAR, the University of Liverpool.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the post of DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in GEOLOGY.

Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials (which need not be printed), must be sent on or before TUESDAY, July 4, 1905.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.
June 6, 1905.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY of MANCHESTER.

Applications are invited for the post of JUNIOR ASSISTANT LECTURER in MATHEMATICS. Some acquaintance with Experimental Mechanics, and with the practical teaching of Mathematics generally, is desired. The appointment will be made for a term of Three Years, at a Salary of 150L per annum.—Applications should be sent to the REGISTRAR not later than JUNE 21.

KHEDIVIAL LAW SCHOOL, CAIRO.

LAW LECTURESHIPS.
The EGYPTIAN MINISTRY of PUBLIC INSTRUCTION invites applications for TWO POSITIONS of LECTURERS in the ENGLISH SECTION of the above-mentioned School. Salary 650L rising to 800L. Candidates must be University Men, having either a Law Degree or other legal qualification, and must have a moderate knowledge of French. They will be required in the first instance to Lecture (in English) on Jurisprudence, Roman Law, or Political Economy.—Applications, stating age and qualifications, accompanied by copies only of Testimonials, should be made by letter to M. SIMONSON AVON, Esq. If posted in London not later than June 17, 1905 they should be addressed to the Native Court of First Instance, Cairo. Later applications should be addressed to St. Ermin's Hotel, Westminster.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, GENEVA, GOLFE-JUAN, HAVRE, HYÈRES, JUAN-LES-PINS, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, MONTE CARLO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS (Est, Nord, Lyon), PAU, ROUEN, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOULON, TOURS.
PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON 218, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

ST. DAVID'S COLLEGE, LAMPETER.

THEOLOGICAL LECTURER WANTED. 200L and Capitation Fees. Rooms.—Particulars from the PRINCIPAL.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.

The COUNCIL invite applications for the post of LECTURER in BOTANY. Salary 120L per annum.—Applications, and three copies of three recent Testimonials, to be sent in by JUNE 16 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.
JAMES RAFTER, Registrar and Secretary.

MUNICIPAL SECONDARY DAY SCHOOL and PUPIL-TEACHERS' CENTRE for GIRLS, LEAMINGTON, to be opened in SEPTEMBER NEXT. The COMMITTEE invite applications for the post of HEAD MISTRESS of the above School. Applicants should have a University Degree or its equivalent qualification, and must have had suitable experience in a good Secondary Day School. Salary 200L per annum, together with a Capitation Fee of 1L per Pupil on all Pupils above One Hundred. (250L guaranteed for the first year.) Forms of Application, and conditions of appointment, may be obtained from the Director, Technical School, Leamington.—Applications, accompanied by not more than three recent Testimonials, to be forwarded to the Director, endorsed "Application for Appointment of Head Mistress," on or before SATURDAY, June 24, 1905. Personal canvassing will be considered a disqualification.
LEO. RAWLINSON, Clerk to the Education Authority.
June 7, 1905.

DUDLEY JOINT P.T. CENTRE for GIRLS.

LADY PRINCIPAL REQUIRED for above CENTRE, to be opened at the TECHNICAL SCHOOL, DUDLEY, EARLY SEPTEMBER NEXT. Candidates must be registered (or qualified for registration) in Column B. Salary 175L. Canvassing will disqualify. Further particulars sent on application.—Forms of Application obtained from, and returned, not later than JUNE 19, to
J. M. WYNNE.
Education Offices, Dudley, Wore.

JUNIOR SCIENCE MISTRESS REQUIRED in SEPTEMBER for MUNICIPAL HIGH SCHOOL for GIRLS, DONCASTER. Special Subjects: Physics, Botany. The Mistress appointed would have charge of a Farm, and be required to take some ordinary Form Subjects. Salary 100L, non-resident.—Apply, before JUNE 22, HEAD MISTRESS.

BRISTOL DAY TRAINING COLLEGE.

The LOCAL COMMITTEE of the BRISTOL DAY TRAINING COLLEGE invite applications for the post of ASSISTANT MASTER. Salary 140L, rising to 160L. Candidates should have good qualifications in Science, Mathematics (and perhaps French or German), and a thorough acquaintance with the work of Elementary Schools so as to render assistance to the Master of Method. Applications, with four typed or printed copies of three recent Testimonials, should be sent in on or before FRIDAY, June 30, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

JAMES RAFTER, Secretary, University College, Bristol.

C O U N T Y of L O N D O N.

EDUCATION ACTS, 1870 to 1903

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for Two Appointments of ASSISTANT INSPECTORS under the Chief Inspector (Education). They will be required to assist the Council's District Inspectors in the Inspection of Public Elementary Day Schools and Evening Schools, and, if required, any other Educational Institutions within the areas allotted to them.

The salary in each case is 200L a year, rising by annual increments of 15L to a maximum salary of 400L a year.

The persons appointed will be under the control of the Chief Inspector, and will be required to give their whole time to the duties of the office, and will in other respects be subject to the usual conditions attaching to the Council's service, particulars of which are contained in the Form of Application.

In connection with these appointments there is no restriction with regard to sex.

Applications should be made on the official form, to be obtained from the Clerk of the London County Council at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W., or at the Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C. The applications must be sent in not later than 10 a.m. on SATURDAY, June 24, 1905, addressed to the Clerk of the Council, at the Education Offices as above, accompanied by Copies of not more than three recent Testimonials.

Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for appointment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.
The County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W.,
June 7, 1905.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN

YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, W.
The COUNCIL will appoint a RESIDENT LIBRARIAN for NEXT SESSION. Candidates must hold a Degree or its equivalent. Six copies of applications, and of not more than three recent Testimonials, must be sent not later than JULY 7 to the Secretary of the College, from whom all information may be obtained.
H. WALTON, Secretary.

STOCKPORT PUBLIC LIBRARY.

WANTED, an ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN, age 23 to 24, for the above LIBRARY. Previous Library Experience essential. Good knowledge of English Literature, Type-writing, and Shorthand would be an advantage. Wages, 25s. per week, rising by 2s. 6d. to 35s. in four years. Address, enclosing three Testimonials, to the CHAIRMAN, Public Library, Stockport, not later than JUNE 17.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

ASSISTANT WANTED. Salary 70L, rising by three annual instalments to 100L. University Man, with some Library experience, preferred.—Applications, &c., to be addressed to the PUBLIC LIBRARIAN, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

FRENCH TRANSLATOR.—Services of a FRENCH TRANSLATOR REQUIRED by a COMPANY. Excellent prospects. Light and permanent work to qualified man. Must know French as well as English. Commencing salary 150L. Must invest 250L at 5 per cent.—Apply, firstly, to J. D., Manager, 6, Claremont Terrace, Blackpool.

CATALOGUER WANTED in a LONDON BOOKSELLER'S. Must be experienced.—Write F., Box 1013, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

SECRETARY, LIBRARIAN, or otherwise.—An educated ENGLISH LADY (25), speaking and writing French and German, Shorthand (110), Typist (Remington or others), wants post as above.—Letters to W. L., care of Cowie & Co., 17, Gresham Street, E.C.

YOUNG MAN (19) desires post as SECRETARY or LIBRARY ASSISTANT. Well educated. German; French; Type-Writing; up-to-date acquaintance with Continental Literature.—Address M. D., Box 1010, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

LADY PROOF READER, of some experience, wants SITUATION. In London preferred.—Apply, personally or by letter, J. E. F., Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

EXTRACTS (SOURCE of) WANTED WEEKLY from LIBRARY BOOKS.—LANEDA, 14, Argyle Road, Faling.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL WORK and INDEXING.—Apply Miss PETERBRIDGE (Nat. Sci. Tripos), 52A, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 8d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, &c., carefully and promptly executed. Unsolicited Testimonials. 8d. per 1,000.—Miss A. MASSIE, Strathairly, New Barn, Longfield, Kent.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BUACHES, 34, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED, And supplied with every requisite.

Write for 'THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST.' The Imperial News Agency, 2 and 4, Tudor Street, London, E.C. America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. Australia: Holt's Chambers, 121, Pitt Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application. Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Catalogues.

H. H. PEACH, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 11 contains Shakespeareana—Mary Queen of Scots Items—Scott Broadside—Bindings, &c.

CATALOGUE No. 43.—Etchings by Whistler and Samuel Palmer—Engravings after Turner—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Drawings of the Early English School—scarce illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence.—Wm. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 140, containing a Special Article, entitled 'The RECENT DEVELOPMENT of ART BOOKS,' by Dr G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the New Edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters and Engravers,' &c. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORRIS, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

GLAISHER'S REMAINDER BOOK CATALOGUE.

JUNE SUPPLEMENT NOW READY, Comprising all most Recent Purchases in PUBLISHERS' REMAINDER STOCK. Books in NEW condition, at REDUCED Prices.

WILLIAM GLAISHER, Remainder and Discount Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London.

BOOKS on ART, ILLUSTRATED BOOKS, COLLECTIONS of PORTRAITS, &c. 96 pages. Just ready.—FRANCIS EDWARDS, 33, High Street, Marylebone, London, W.

LEIGHTON'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 Illustrations, price 2s JUST ISSUED. Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

CATALOGUE of FRENCH BOOKS, at greatly reduced prices. I. PHILOSOPHY. II. RELIGION. III. HISTORY. IV. POETRY. DRAMA. MUSIC. V. BEAUX-ARTS. VI. GEOGRAPHY. VII. MILITARY. VIII. FICTION. IX. GENERAL LITERATURE.

DULAU & CO. 37, Soho Square, London, W.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Almsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Philz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROOR & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

NEWSPAPER LIBRARY.—ADVERTISER seeks OFFERS of BOOKS suitable for a LIBRARY of a great DAILY PAPER. Only reasonable offers will be entertained.—Address LIBRARIAN, 204, Temple Chambers, E.C.

BOOK PLATES. Medieval and Modern Styles Designed and Engraved.

Write for ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET free. THOMAS MORING, Engraver, Stationer, Printer, &c., 257, High Holborn, W.C.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—Spink & Son, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8 1/2 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—APARTMENTS. Comfortably Furnished Sitting-Room and One Bedroom. Pleasant and central. No others taken.—It. H., 66, Grove Hill Road, Tunbridge Wells.

Sales by Auction.

Miscellaneous Books—Modern Publications and Remainders.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on FRIDAY, June 16, at 1 o'clock, MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS in all Classes of Literature; also Modern Publications and Remainders, chiefly new in cloth—Sets of Standard Authors—Popular Novels—Juvenile Books, &c.

To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

Rare and Valuable Books, including a Selection from an Old Country Library.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 21, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, rare and valuable BOOKS, including an interesting Copy of Anne Killigrew's Poems, 1650, with the rare Portrait—White's Selborne, First Edition—a fine Copy of the Original Edition of Ackermann's Microcosm, 3 vols., and Cambridge University, 2 vols.—valuable Sporting Books and Prints—Modern Fine-Art and Illustrated Books—handsome Library Editions of Scott, Dickens, Thackeray, Whyte-Melville, J. H. Jesse, Lady Jackson, Carlyle, and others, many in fine calf or morocco bindings—Brinkley's History of Japan, 12 vols.—Yule's Cathay, 2 vols., Hakluyt Society, and other scarce Standard Books; also an extensive LIBRARY of MATHEMATICAL and SCIENTIFIC BOOKS, including a Copy of the Editio Princeps of Gilbert on the Magnet, 1600; and a SELECTION of WORKS in EARLY ENGLISH LITERATURE from an OLD COUNTRY LIBRARY.

To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

Valuable Law Books, including the Library of the late Sir JOHN BUDD PHEAR (formerly Chief Justice of Ceylon), sold by Order of the Executors.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., during JUNE valuable LAW BOOKS, including the above LIBRARY and other Properties, comprising two Complete Sets of the Law Reports from the Commencement to 1905—Works in Legal History—Text Books, &c.

Catalogues are preparing.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. beg to ANNOUNCE that they will hold several SALES of RARE and VALUABLE BOOKS during the NEXT FEW WEEKS, prior to the Close of their Season about the middle of July. They would therefore respectfully advise those having Libraries or Collections of Books to dispose of, to communicate as to the Sale of the same with as little delay as possible, in order to ensure the Property being offered this Season.

Books and Manuscripts, including the Library of the late Lieut.-Col. E. A. SHULDAM, that of the late FRANCIS POPHAM, Esq., and others.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 15, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including the Library of the late Lieut.-Col. E. A. SHULDAM, of Colkellme, co. Cork, comprising the Bibliographical Works of Dibdin—French Illustrated Books—Historical Literature—the Writings of Scott, Thackeray, and other Contemporary Authors—White's Selborne, First Edition—Books of Prints—Burlington Fine-Arts Club, Exhibition of Book-bindings, &c. A PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late F. A. INDERWICK, Esq., K.C., containing Howell and Cobbett's State Trials—Cokayne's Peerage—Dictionary of National Biography, a Set—Law Books—Rogers's History of Prices—the English Dialect Dictionary—Notes and Queries, a Set, with Indexes—Froissart, Chroniques de France, 4 vols. Paris, 1530, &c. The LIBRARY of the late FRANCIS POPHAM, Esq., including Gould's Humming Birds, 5 vols., and other Works on Natural History—Sporting Books—Voyages—Travels—and General Literature. The LIBRARY of the late Major HENRY HALB, containing La Fontaine, Contes et Nouvelles, 1762—Westmacott's English Spy—Hutchinson's Dorset—Manning and Jray's Surrey—Clutterbuck's Hertfordshire—and other Works on Topography, &c. Other Properties, including Books of Prints—Architecture—Engravings—Scott's Novels—First Editions—Early Printed Books—Warner's Orchid Album—Select Orchidaceous Plants—Bateman's Odontoglossum, and other Works on Botany—Tracts, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

Plates from the Liber Studiorum, the Property of a Lady.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 19, at 1 o'clock precisely, PLATES from the LIBER STUDIORUM and other ENGRAVINGS, by and after J. M. W. Turner, the Property of a LADY.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The THIRD PORTION of the valuable Library of JOSEPH KNIGHT, Esq., F.S.A., &c.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 19, and Five Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the THIRD PORTION of the valuable and interesting LIBRARY of JOSEPH KNIGHT, Esq., F.S.A., &c. (Editor of 'Notes and Queries'), consisting chiefly of Works by the best-known English and French Writers on Poetry, Literature, and the Drama of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Eighteenth, and Nineteenth Centuries, including Ancient and Rare Editions of the 'Conteurs' of the Period—a large number of Dramatic Pieces, Biographies, Anecdotes, &c. of the English Stage in the Eighteenth Century—Reprints and Private Limited Issues of very Rare Works—Series of Scarce Editions of Bacon, Boccaccio, Cervantes, Chaucer, Corneille, Diderot, Dryden, D'Urfey, Froissart, La Fontaine, Longus, Marguerite de Valois, Marat, Milton, Molière, Montaigne, Wm. Morris, Duchess of Newcastle, Rabelais, Récit de la Bretonne, Ronsard, D. G. Rossetti, Rousseau, Scarron, Shakespeare, Sheridan, Spenser, Suckling, Symonds, Tabouart, Uzanne, Voltaire, Withers—Works on Bibliography—a Series of Elzevir Editions—Theatrical Costumes—Out-of-Print Periodicals—a large number of Plays by various Writers—Publications of the Kilmiscott and other Presses, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Fine 18 in. Reflector Telescope, with Observatory Transit Instrument, &c.

FRIDAY, June 16, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., a fine 19 in. REFLECTOR TELESCOPE by Calver, and Observatory 16 1/2 in. Transit Instrument by Coates & Sons, and other Scientific Instruments—Photographic Cameras and Lenses—Microscopes and Microscopic Slides—Tools—and a large quantity of valuable Goods.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Curiosities.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., on TUESDAY, June 20, at half-past 12 o'clock, CHINESE and JAPANESE PORCELAIN, CARVED IVORIES, and CLOISONNE WARE—interesting Specimens of Native Work—Carved and Inlaid Furniture—Pictures—Prints—and Curios from all Parts.

On view day prior 10 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Books.

WEDNESDAY, June 21, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by AUCTION, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., an important LIBRARY of WORKS on NATURAL HISTORY, comprising Meyer's Coloured Illustrations of British Birds and their Eggs, 7 vols.—Yarrell's History of British Birds, with Manuscript Additions—Lord Lilford's Birds of the British Islands, 7 vols.—British Museum Catalogue of Birds, 26 vols.—The Ibis, a Complete Set—Proceedings of the Zoological Society, 58 vols.—Dresser's Birds of Europe, 9 vols.—Gray's Genera of Birds, 3 vols.—Smith's Illustrations of the Zoology of South Africa, 5 vols.—a Set of Notes and Queries, &c.

Catalogues on application.

Valuable Books.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on TUESDAY, June 27, and Following Day, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS in all Branches of Literature, including a Library removed from Shropshire.

THE ELIZABETHAN STAGE SOCIETY.

The valuable and artistic COLLECTION of ANTIQUE, HISTORICAL, and ALLEGORICAL THEATRICAL COSTUMES, designed and produced at great cost by William Poel, Esq., including many Costumes purchased at the Sale of M. Victor Barthe—Armour—Swords—rare Books—Carved Oak Elizabethan Bedstead—and other Furniture and Bric-a-brac.

Also

The unique FULL-SIZE MODEL of the OLD FORTUNE PLAY HOUSE, with its Furniture and Working Equipment.

BOREHAM & CO. (of Mowbray House, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.) will SELL, on JULY 5 NEXT, at the Atelier, No. 90, College Street, Chelsea, S.W.

Catalogues of the AUCTIONEERS.

IPSWICH.—Eighty Works in Water-Colour and Oil by F. G. Cotman, R.I., including three large Canvases.

GARROD, TURNER & SON will SELL the above by AUCTION at the SALOON, 5, TAVERN STREET, IPSWICH, on FRIDAY, June 23, 1905, at 3 o'clock, P.M. Catalogues of the AUCTIONEERS, Ipswich.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On FRIDAY, June 16, WORKS of ART of MEDIEVAL and RENAISSANCE TIMES from the COLLECTION of J. H. FIZIENRY, Esq., and PORCELAIN and OLD ENGLISH FURNITURE from various Sources.

On SATURDAY, June 17, ANCIENT and MODERN PICTURES, the Property of Major CORBETT WINDER and others.

NOW READY.

The JUNE Number of

THE UNIVERSITY REVIEW.

Principal Contents.

UNIVERSITY SETTLEMENTS.

By Canon Barnett.

QUESTIONS for DISCUSSIONS.

By Sir Oliver Lodge.

The POSSIBILITY of POPULAR PROGRESS.

By J. A. Hobson.

The FREE CHURCHES and the UNIVERSITIES.

By Rev. J. Hope Moulton.

The STUDY of LOCAL HISTORY.

By Ramsay Muir.

May be obtained through all Booksellers and Newsagents.

Price SIXPENCE net.

London: Sherratt & Hughes.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL. Price 2s.

Contents.—JUNE.

The PROBLEM of the UPPER YANG-TZE PROVINCES and their COMMUNICATIONS. By Lieut.-Col. C. C. Masfoid, I.M.S. With 8 Illustrations and Map.

C. REGINALD ENOCK'S JOURNEYS in PERU. By Sir Clements R. Markham, K.C.B., President R.G.S. With Sketch-Map.

The IDEAL TOPOGRAPHICAL MAP. By Major C. F. Close, C.M.G. R.E.

GLAREANUS: his Geography and Maps. By Edward Heawood, M.A.

ALPINE RAILWAYS and INTERNATIONAL COMMERCE. By A. J. Sargent. With Map.

The ALEXANDER-GOSLING EXPEDITION.

REVIEWS:—Africa: Tunis; South Africa: The Hydrography of the Nile. America: A Feature of the Brazilian Coasts. Mathematical and Physical Geography. An English Success. General: The Position of Geography in Science and Education.

The MONTHLY RECORD.

OBITUARY:—Paul Lessar. By T. H. H. and P. K.

CORRESPONDENCE:—Temperatures and "Glacial Reservoirs." By Dr. William Hunter Workman.

MEETINGS of the ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, SESSION 1904-1905.

GEOGRAPHICAL LITERATURE of the MONTH.

NEW MAPS and ILLUSTRATIONS.

London: Edward Stanford, 12, 13, 14, Long Acre, W.C.

BOOKS and BOOK-PLATES.
The Book-Lover's Magazine.

Vol. V. Part 4, JUNE, 1905, 2s. 6d.

THACKERAY and his ILLUSTRATORS. By Lewis Melville. With 10 Illustrations.

DÜRER'S BOOK-PLATES in the BRITISH MUSEUM. By Stewart Dick. With 9 Illustrations.

The SILVER LIBRARY of the DUKE ALBRECHT of PRUSSIA. By Th. A. Fischer. With an Illustration.

The COMPOSITION of a DECORATIVE TITLE-PAGE. By Edward F. Strange. With 6 Illustrations.

COLOURED BOOK-PLATES. By Stewart Dick.

SWISS BOOK-PLATES. By T. R. Dennis. With 6 Illustrations.

* Vol. V., bound in ornamental cloth case, 12s. 6d. net.

Otto Schulze & Co.

20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

LOSTWITHIEL CHURCH (with Illustrations); Monument at Aldershot to Members of the Medical Corps; Letter from Paris; Notes and Sketches in Southern Italy (XI); Competition Designs for Hammersmith Public Baths; Competition Designs for Clock Tower, St. George's Circus; "Tullylagon," Co. Tyrone, Ireland; House at Denbigh; Typical Structures in Concrete-Steel (Student's Column), &c.—See the BUILDING of June 10 (4d.); by post, 4½d.).—Through any Newsgent; or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

NEARLY READY, A LEARNED AND IMPORTANT WORK ON THE VIRGIN BIRTH, ENTITLED

THE VIRGIN BIRTH
a Principal Foundation of Christianity.

Fully Explained, Corroborated, and faithfully Expounded by Doctors of Theology and Doctors of Medicine in Past Centuries.

Presented to the Twentieth Century by a BIBLIOPHILE.

NOTE.—This book is not intended for general circulation, but is privately printed in 100 Copies only, each numbered, and can be had only from

Mr. C. Higham, Theological Bookseller, Farringdon Street, E.C., at a price of 10s. 6d., in order of application.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

The RELIGION of ISRAEL: a Historical Sketch. By R. L.

OTTLEY, Canon of Christ Church, and Hon. Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 4s. EXTRACT FROM PREFATORY NOTE:—"This book is intended to supplement the 'Short History of the Hebrews' (published in 1901) in which the writer was unable to deal particularly with the development of religion in Israel."

The PRESERVATION of ANTIQUITIES: a Handbook for

Curators, Translated, by permission of the Authorities of the Royal Museums, from the German of Dr. FRIEDRICH RATHGEN, Director of the Laboratory of the Royal Museums, Berlin, by GEORGE A. AUDEN, M.A. M.D. Cantab., and HAROLD A. AUDEN, M.Sc. Vict., D.Sc. Tübingen. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

MATHEMATICAL and PHYSICAL PAPERS. By the late Sir

GEORGE GABRIEL STOKES, Bart., Sc.D. LL.D. D.C.L. Past Pres. R.S., &c. Reprinted from the Original Journals and Transactions, with brief Historical Notes and References.

Vol. V. (Concluding Volume) Demy 8vo, 15s. (Already published, Vols. I.-IV. 15s. each.)

KUMMER'S QUARTIC SURFACE. By R. W. H. T. Hudson,

M.A. D.Sc., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Lecturer in Mathematics at the University of Liverpool. Demy 8vo, 8s. net.

RECORDS of the BOROUGH of LEICESTER. Being a Series of Extracts from the Archives of the Corporation of Leicester. Vol. III. 1509-1803. Edited by MARY BATESON, Fellow of Newnham College, Cambridge. Revised by W. H. STEVENSON, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, and J. E. STOCKS, M.A., Rector of Misterton, Archdeacon of Leicester. Royal 8vo, 25s. net. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

VEDIC METRE in its HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT. By

E. VERNON ARNOLD, Litt.D., Professor of Latin in the University College of North Wales, formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo. [Nearly ready.]

CAMBRIDGE ENGLISH CLASSICS.

NEW VOLUME, NEARLY READY.

ABRAHAM COWLEY.—POEMS (Miscellanies, The Mistressse, Pindarique Odes, Davideis, Verses Written on Several Occasions). Edited by A. R. WALLER, M.A. Large crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. (To be followed by the PROSE and ENGLISH PLAYS.)

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net each.

SAMUEL BUTLER.—HUDIBRAS.

Written in the Time of the Late Wars. The Text Edited by A. R. WALLER, M.A.

RICHARD CRASHAW.—STEPS to the TEMPLE, DELIGHTS of the MUSES, and other Poems. The Text Edited by A. R. WALLER, M.A.

ROGER ASCHAM.—ENGLISH

WORKS: Toxophilus, Report of the Affaires and State of Germany, The Scholemaster. Edited by WILLIAM ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A.

THOMAS HOBBS.—LEVIA-

THAN; or, the Matter, Forme, and Power of a Commonwealth, Ecclesiasticall and Civill. The Text Edited by A. R. WALLER, M.A.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES.—General Editor: G. W. PROTHERO, Litt.D.

EUROPE and the FAR EAST. By Sir R. K. Douglas, Keeper of Oriental Printed Books and MSS. at the British Museum. Crown 8vo, with 4 Maps, 7s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES.—General Editor: F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, M.D.

NEW VOLUME, READY IMMEDIATELY.

The LANDS of the EASTERN CALIPHATE: Mesopotamia,

Persia, and Central Asia. From the Moslem Conquest to the Time of Timur. By G. LE STRANGE, Author of 'Baghdad during the Abbasid Caliphate,' 'Palestine under the Moslems,' &c. Large crown 8vo, with 10 Maps, 15s.

THE CAMBRIDGE BIOLOGICAL SERIES.—General Editor: A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S.

READY IMMEDIATELY. Vol. III.

TREES. A Handbook of Forest Botany for the Woodlands and the Laboratory. By H. MARSHALL WARD, D.Sc. F.R.S., Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge. Vol. III. FLOWERS and INFLORESCENCES. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

Already published:—Vol. I. BUDS and TWIGGS. Vol. II. LEAVES. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net each.

To be completed in Six Volumes:—IV. FRUITS and SEEDS. V. SEEDLINGS. VI. GENERAL CHARACTERS.

TIMES.—"A work that cannot fail to appeal to all who are interested in the trees and shrubs of our woodlands, and it ought to be no less useful to the professional forester."

FIELD.—"This set of volumes should find a place in the country house library, and in those of institutions devoted to natural history."

THE JOURNAL OF AGRICULTURAL SCIENCE.

Edited by R. H. BIFFEN, M.A., A. D. HALL, M.A., T. H. MIDDLETON, M.A., and T. B. WOOD, M.A., in consultation with W. BATESON, M.A. F.R.S., J. R. CAMPBELL, B.Sc., and W. SOMERVILLE, M.A. D.Sc.

NOW READY, Vol. I. Part II. MAY, 1905.

Contents.

1. CROWTHER, CHARLES.—Variation in the Composition of Cows' Milk.
2. WOOD, T. B., and BERRY, R. A.—Variation in the Chemical Composition of Mangels. Eight Figures in Text.
3. DYMOND, T. S., HUGHES, F., and JUPE, C. W. C.—The Influence of Sulphates as Manure upon the Yield and Feeding Value of Crops.
4. CAVE, T. W.—"Black-quarter" in Sheep.
5. HALL, A. D.—On the Accumulation of Fertility by Land allowed to Run Wild.
6. BIFFEN, R. H.—The Inheritance of Sterility in the Barleys. One Figure in Text.
7. HALL, A. D.—Variation in Composition of the Swede.

The Journal of Agricultural Science will be issued as material accumulates, aiming at Quarterly Parts of about 100 pages, with Plates and Figures, Four Parts to constitute a Volume.

The Subscription Price, payable in advance, is 15s. net per Volume (post free); Single Numbers, 5s. net. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane. C. F. CLAY, Manager.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

PROF. DICEY'S NEW BOOK.

LECTURES ON THE RELATION BETWEEN LAW AND PUBLIC OPINION IN ENGLAND DURING THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By A. V. DICEY, K.C. B.C.L., Author of 'Introduction to the Study of the Law of the Constitution.' 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THE TRADE POLICY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND HER COLONIES SINCE 1860.

By CARL JOHANNES FUCHS, Professor of Political Economy in the University of Freiburg i. B. Translated by CONSTANCE H. M. ARCHIBALD. With a Preface by the Right Hon. J. PARKER SMITH, M.A. M.P. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.
NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

ITALIAN BACKGROUNDS.

By EDITH WHARTON. Illustrated by E. C. PEIXOTTO. Royal 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

BY THE LATE F. J. A. HORT.

VILLAGE SERMONS.

Second Series. By the late F. J. A. HORT, D.D. D.C.L. LL.D. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW IMPRESSION NOW READY.

THE SEVEN WEEKS' WAR:

Its Antecedents and its Incidents. By Col. Sir H. M. HOZIER, K.C.B. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A BOOK OF ESSAYS.

By S. A. HIRSCH, Ph.D., Joint Editor of the Greek Grammar of Roger Bacon and a Fragment of his Hebrew Grammar. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.
(Published for the Jewish Historical Society of England).

MACMILLAN'S NEW NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

FOND ADVENTURES.

Tales of the Youth of the World.

By MAURICE HEWLETT.

MRS. DARRELL.

By FOXCROFT DAVIS.

POCKET EDITIONS

OF THE NOVELS OF

SCOTT, DICKENS, & THACKERAY.

Fcap. 8vo, limp cloth, 2s. net; limp leather, 3s. net each.

LATEST ADDITIONS.

OLD MORTALITY.—The OLD CURIOSITY SHOP.—The VIRGINIANS.

MENDELISM.

By R. C. PUNNETT, Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. 16mo, 2s. net.

A Brief Account of Mendel and his Experiments with Plant Hybridization, and his Discovery in Heredity.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

MESSRS. HURST & BLACKETT beg to announce the publication of Mr. F. A. McKENZIE'S new work in 1 vol. demy 8vo, with Illustrations, Plans, and a Map, price 7s. 6d. net.
FROM TOKYO TO TIFLIS. Uncensored Letters from the War. By F. A. McKENZIE, Special Correspondent of the 'Daily Mail.'

"If the man must have a heart of stone who can read these sidelights on war without feeling their tragedy, he must be devoid of human pride who can read them without being thrilled by the courage and devotion they record."
St. James's Gazette.

NEW AND INTERESTING BOOK.

NEXT WEEK, in 1 vol. demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, Maps, &c. Price 7s. 6d. net.

ZANZIBAR IN CONTEMPORARY TIMES.

By R. N. LYNE.

The SECOND EDITION of Mr. PERCEVAL LONDON'S great work on Tibet, entitled LHASA, is NOW READY in 2 vols., with all the original Illustrations, and the new Official Survey of Lhasa and Neighbourhood, price 2l. 2s. net.

NEW VOLUME BY JEROME K. JEROME.

READY NEXT WEEK, in 1 vol. crown 8vo.

Price 3s. 6d.

IDLE IDEAS IN 1905.

By JEROME K. JEROME,

Author of 'Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow,' 'Three Men in a Boat,' &c.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

THE TRUTH OF CHRISTIANITY.
Being an Examination of the more important Arguments for and against believing in that Religion.

Compiled from various sources

By Major W. H. TURTON, Royal Engineers.

Cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

FIFTH EDITION NOW READY, carefully Revised throughout.

"'Truth of Christianity' has reached a third edition, a well-deserved recognition of the merits of a book which on its first appearance commanded general attention. As we intimated before, the book is of considerable value to every one who is concerned with the controversy on Christian evidences; it presents a perfect storehouse of facts and the conclusions which may be legitimately drawn from them."
Church Times.

"Has a freshness about it that is singularly attractive."
(New York) Churchman.

HOW TO PREACH.

A Manual for Students.

By the Rev. E. TYRRELL GREEN, M.A.,
Lecturer in Theology and Hebrew, St. David's College,
Lampeter.

Cloth boards, 2s. net.

THE
STORY OF THE BEGINNING.

Genesis in the Light of Recent Research.

By Mrs. FREDERIC GREEN.

With Introduction by the Right Rev. H. E. RYLE, D.D.,
Bishop of Winchester.

Cloth, 1s. 3d. net; paper, 9d. net.

This will be found a most valuable help to parents and teachers at the present time.

THE
LAW OF CHURCHWARDENS
And Sidesmen in the Twentieth Century.

By P. V. SMITH, LL.D.,

Barrister-at-Law, Chancellor of the Diocese of Manchester.

Cloth boards, 2s. net (postage 4d. extra).

THIRD EDITION.

"Altogether an admirable production."—Guardian.
"Excellent, an indispensable possession for all who are called to the office of churchwarden."—Church Times.

BOOKS BY PHÆBE ALLEN. GARDEN PESTS.

"The literature of the garden has a welcome, we may say a necessary, addition in 'Garden Pests.'"—Spectator.

Illustrated by Dr. HAROLD F. BASSANO. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

PLAYING AT BOTANY.

"The writer's qualifications for her task are unquestioned. Our regret is we were never numbered among her pupils."
Schoolmaster.

"The explanations are so clear and concise that a fairly intelligent child will easily understand them."
Morning Post.

Profusely illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THIRD NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

JACK AND JILL'S JOURNEY.

"Specially suitable for young students in botany."
Morning Post.

Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION.

THE FORBIDDEN ROOM;
Or, Mine Answer was My Deed.

Illustrated. Imp. 16mo, extra cloth boards, 2s.

ON MINIATURE AND WINDOW
GARDENING.

By the Editors of 'The Sun-Children's Budget.'
Imp. 32mo, paper cover, 3d.; cloth, 6d.

London:

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO., LIMITED,
3, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.; and
44, Victoria Street, S.W.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|   | PAGE    |
|---|---------|
| THE VICTORIA HISTORY OF SURREY ... ..   | 709     |
| A BOOK OF REMINISCENCES ... ..  | 710     |
| THE HISTORIANS OF BOHEMIA ... ..  | 710     |
| M. HOUSSAYE ON NAPOLEON ... ..  | 711     |
| A GERMAN HISTORY OF JAPANESE LITERATURE ... ..  | 712     |
| NEW NOVELS (Rose of the World; Maid Margaret; Mrs. Galer's Business; Millions of Mischief; A Rough Reformer; The Millionaire Baby; The Stigma; The Countessine ... ..)  | 713-714 |
| BOOKS ON THE WAR ... ..   | 715     |
| SHORT STORIES ... ..  | 716     |
| FISHING ... ..  | 718     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE ('The Times' History of the War in South Africa; The Far Eastern Tropics; Saints and Savages; William Rathbone: a Memoir; The Italian Poets since Dante; Herbert Spencer on Education; Leaves from the Past; A Garden of Eden; Urban VIII.; Sastrow's Journal; Stories of King Arthur and his Knights; Reprints; Printers' Pie; Field Service Pocket-Book ... ..) | 717-720 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..  | 720     |
| LAMB'S LETTERS; CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS; CANNING; 'DICTIONARY OF INDIAN BIOGRAPHY'; SALES ... ..   | 721-723 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..  | 723     |
| SCIENCE—RESEARCH NOTES; THE ROYAL OBSERVATORY, GREENWICH; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..  | 724-727 |
| FINE ARTS—PAINTED TOMBS AT MARISSA; THE SALONS; FRENCH AND DUTCH PICTURES AT MESSRS. OBACH'S; THE TWEEDMOUTH SALE; SALES; GOSSIP ... ..   | 727-729 |
| MUSIC—LES HUGUENOTS; FAUST; LOHENGRIIN; DON PASQUALE; NORMA; FIORELLA; MILLER FESTIVAL; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..   | 730-731 |
| DRAMA—THE CABINET MINISTER; THE BREED OF THE TRESHAMS; MADAME RÉJANE'S SEASON; UNDER WHICH KING? WATERLOO; LOUIS XI.; GOSSIP ... ..   | 731-732 |

LITERATURE

The Victoria History of the County of Surrey.
 Edited by H. E. Malden. Vol. II.
 (Constable & Co.)

THE second volume of what promises to be a thoroughly good and comprehensive history of Surrey, when completed in the allotted four volumes, has now been issued. It contains several contributions of particular merit. The opening section, by Mr. Malden, on 'The Ecclesiastical History of the County,' is good of its kind, and in some respects the editor strikes out a rather original line, as where he shows, illustrated by diagrams, the usual arrangement of parish boundaries according to geological formations. The Rev. Dr. Cox has treated separately each of the religious houses; they were not very numerous, but included two or three of importance, such as the Cluniac house of Bermondsey and the Cistercian abbey of Waverley. He has brought together in those short sketches much that is unrecorded in the 'Monasticon' or elsewhere, and shows himself conversant with the Winchester registers and the various extant chartularies. The account of the Carthusian priory of Sheen is the most interesting.

The editor adds a short section on the 'Military History of Surrey,' which is of value as to military organization apart from actual warlike operations, giving a chronological account of knight-service, commissions of array, militia, volunteers, and county regiments; but it would probably have been better to include these in the 'Political History' of the first volume.

The treatises on 'Ecclesiastical' and 'Domestic Architecture' are the respective work of Mr. Philip Johnston and Mr. Ralph Nevill; they are both well-illustrated and thoroughly successful essays on the old buildings of Surrey. In each case it is impossible not to regret their comparative brevity; but it is evidently intended to let much in this connexion stand over for the particular record of each parish.

The account of the schools of the county, compiled by Mr. Leach, shows considerable research, and comprises much information neglected by previous historians of Surrey. Absolute proof of the existence of three pre-Reformation schools is cited—namely, those of Kingston, Guildford, and Croydon; and no real doubt is expressed that there were also early schools of some importance both at Southwark and Farnham. Had, however, the chantry certificates of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. for Surrey been extant, there can be little doubt that incidental references to various small parochial schools would have been forthcoming. If, indeed, search had been made among the ordinations of chantries in the Winchester Diocesan Registers, or in the Patent Rolls, where they sometimes occur, it is possible that further evidence as to early village schools might have been procured. Mr. Leach supplies exceptionally interesting information as to the history of the school at Kingston, which was clearly a public school—that is open to all comers—in the fourteenth century. Guildford school, in the time of James I., must have been rather a terrible place; the hours were from 6.30 A.M. to 11 from March 1st to September 1st, and 7.30 A.M. to 11 from September 1st to March 1st, and 1 to 5 P.M. throughout the year. The usher at 8.45 was allowed a quarter of an hour off, and "on his return the master may in the like sort, and for the like space, withdraw himself out of the sayd schole"; but there were apparently no intervals for the unhappy scholars. It was a free grammar school, so there was no charge for tuition; but there were a few small fees, including 1*d.* a quarter for "brooms and rods." It was ordered that "the fower chief formes shall in all their speeches within the schole use the latyn tongue." The details as to the general school life of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries are often curious and entertaining. Thus, of the scholars of St. Saviour's, Southwark, it was ordered that "theire plays shall be shootinge in longe bowes, chesse playe, runinge, wrestlinge, and leapinge, players for monye or betters shall be severely punished and expulsed."

Silver spoons were given as prizes to the two best boys of the Latin School of St. Olave's; the scholars of Dulwich received bread and beer at 8 A.M., and "beere without stint" at dinner. Mills, the head master of Croydon, was accused of being a Jacobite in the time of George I., having made himself unpopular with some Non-conformists by objecting to their sending a boy in fancy dress riding on a donkey, to make ridicule of Christmas Day when the boys were on their way to church.

This account of the schools of the county will prove of real value as an authoritative essay for their early history and origin. But surely the editors, who must find the work of compressing all their material into four volumes very arduous, have been ill advised in allowing Mr. Leach to devote so much space—about a third of the whole on this subject—to the story of the schools during the last hundred years, most of which can be easily obtained from modern books. Moreover, Mr. Leach's style, when he comes to matters of his own days, is not only too diffuse, but also lacking in the tone and dignity that befit important volumes of this nature. In dealing with the new scheme of St. Saviour's and St. Olave's Girls' School, he writes:—

"There Miss Frodsham, one of the products of the Holloway College, with a staff of ten mistresses (exclusive of visiting teachers for special subjects), now shepherds a flock of 186 girls."

This is the opening sentence of the account of Charterhouse School:—

"On 18 June, 1872, a new planet swam into the ken of the observer of Surrey Schools, destined soon to become one of the first magnitude. This was Charterhouse School, at Godalming."

Mr. E. T. Cook is among the first journalists and scholars of his day, but probably no one will be more surprised than himself at the list of all the papers he has joined being thus dragged into an account of St. Olave's School:—

"These [scholarships] placed the school among the first twenty schools in the kingdom in the 'Public Schools Record,' which was annually published by Mr. E. T. Cook, successively in The Pall Mall Gazette, The Westminster Gazette, The Daily News, and now in The Daily Chronicle."

We have no objection to the long summarized alphabetical list of the secondary and elementary schools up to date which are to be found in Surrey; but it is just because we are jealous for the success of this great scheme of county histories that we ask the editors in future volumes to use their pruning shears with greater freedom when dealing with the modern history of schools that can be readily found in books of reference.

Seventeen pages are assigned to the subject of forestry; they are written by Mr. Nisbet, well known as one of the best English authorities on tree culture and preservation. He has a good subject, worthily handled, in a county which contains the home and birthplace of John Evelyn, the author of the great classic of English forestry: 'Sylva; or, a Discourse of Forest Trees, and the Propagation of Timber in His Majesty's Dominions'; and his work in dealing with the Surrey arboriculture of the last two centuries is an admirable piece of condensed writing. It perhaps would have been better if the little-known subject of the early forests had fallen into an antiquary's or historian's hands, for that part of the subject is characterized by many omissions. Abundance of material of considerable interest, hitherto altogether unused, can be found at the Public Record Office, relating to the important Surrey half of the royal forest of Windsor, stretching out to Guildford with its important park, and including Cobham, Chertsey, and Woking. The record of the pleas of the forest held at Guildford in July, 1270, with their wealth of illustration of local venison and vert trespasses, ought not to have been passed by in silence—if any history is attempted; whilst the rolls of the forest justices' eyre at Guildford in 1488 are still more interesting, when the keepers of four parks and seven woodwards, as well as a multitude of other forest ministers, were in attendance. Presentments were made, inter alia, of the deer killed by Henry VII., in his "oon persone," since the beginning of his reign. The account for the park of Guildford records that he killed ten does and a fawn between Michaelmas and All Saints', whilst he elsewhere killed "with his Bowe and his buk-hundes iij bukken." The details as to vert offences in the unauthorized cutting of timber and underwood, as well as the bestowal of gift and fee trees, ought to have been mentioned.

The comprehensive nature of this new scheme of county histories is shown by the considerable space devoted to the story of the industries of Surrey, which has fallen into the capable hands of Mr. M. S. Giuseppi, F.S.A. In the introduction the enormous indebtedness of England to alien workmen for the origin and development of various industries becomes strikingly apparent. Mr. Giuseppi has found a task congenial to an antiquary in telling the stories of the celebrated old ironworks of the county; of the Chertsey tiles; of the Lambeth Delft ware; of the sixteenth-century glass works of Southwark; of the Battersea enamels; of the saltpetre men; of the long-sustained pre-eminence of Bermondsey in the leather trade; of the whilom staple industry of woollen-cloth weaving at Guildford, Godalming, and the adjacent villages; of the fine-art tapestry of Mortlake; of the felt-hat making of Southwark; and of a variety of other trades. Moreover, the different industries are carefully traced up to the present day. Mr. Giuseppi is to be warmly congratulated on the thorough and interesting way in which he has discharged his important share in this volume.

'Sport, Ancient and Modern,' including hunting, racing, polo, shooting, angling, athletics, golf, cricket, and football, is under the general editorship of Mr. E. D. Cuming, who has secured various capable writers for the different parts. It will surprise many to learn that Surrey now possesses "three packs of staghounds, all hunting the carted stag." We are glad to note that this emasculated form of sport is dismissed in a paragraph.

At the end of the volume a beginning is made with the topography of the county, comprehending the small hundred of Farnham. The letterpress, every solitary statement supported by reference to records and other authorities, and the illustrations of this part are excellent throughout. The large plans by Mr. Peers of Farnham Castle, and by Mr. Brakspear of Waverley Abbey, coloured according to successive dates, are the best work of their kind hitherto issued.

Bygone Years. By the Hon. F. Leveson Gower. (Murray.)

MR. LEVESON GOWER'S book is, as might be expected, simple, and essentially the work of a man who is a gentleman by nature—which Greville never was—and has lived throughout his life in the best society—the best society in all senses of the phrase, because, while well enough connected to have been among the "smartest" of the smart, Mr. Leveson Gower has always been the unpretentious friend of men of letters, and has known the best of all worlds. It is strange to find him writing in 1856 of having seemed to cross in a day "the rubicon which separates youth from old age." That is forty-nine years ago, and it is a marvellous fact that one who was thus crippled when he accompanied his brother on the special Coronation embassy to Moscow should nearly half a century later be "still young." It is equally amusing to read of the first introduction to the Holland House set and to true society, under the auspices of the author, of that "handsome Frank Charteris" who now survives in equal, if not more extraordinary, youth. This was about 1841, if we read aright, at the time when the present Lord Wemyss became member for Gloucestershire. Mr. Leveson Gower was a Judge's Marshal in the days when, as he explains, these officials were forced to post, inasmuch as going by coach was low; it might expose them to the company of attorneys. Another pleasing anecdote is one of Sir Henry Bulwer, afterwards Lord Dalling, who begged Mr. Leveson Gower to go to his stables and choose whatever horse might suit him best: "I found he only possessed one, and that one was dead lame." We are accustomed to find members of the Bulwer-Lytton family exhibiting a certain swagger, from which the present head of the family has alone been exempt. But it startles us to find Cobden seated in a carriage drawn by seven mules in red-and-yellow trappings. This was the reception of the Free Trade agitator at Seville, where Mr. Leveson Gower accidentally met him, much embarrassed by the surroundings, in 1846.

"Poodle" Byng, who married his mother's maid, was a source of embarrassment to the family of Leveson Gower. Lord Granville was a great favourite of hers, but unfortunately she continued to embrace him "after he was grown-up." As Lord Granville naturally—being then, we think, Master of the Buckhounds—drew back when he was embraced at dinner, Mrs. Byng had to explain that she observed, "You're not fond of peppermint." The lady, no doubt, had just been sucking a lozenge of the kind dear to Presbyterians of all the kirks.

As Mr. Leveson Gower is not afraid of the well-established scandals of a long time ago, and reminds us of the relations of emperors and kings with famous ballet-dancers, it is noticeable that, when describing how the Comte de Flahault found for him a cook from the kitchen of the Duc de Morny, he does not add that Flahault made no secret of his being the Duc de Morny's father, but was not equally believed when he asserted that he was Talleyrand's son. One of the best anecdotes of the same part of the book has a literary flavour, as it concerns Matthew Arnold. It will be remembered that when the poet was a school inspector, and was sent by Lord Granville to France to make a report, he fought the Treasury about the allowance for his expenses. It now seems that Mr. Leveson Gower, who was in Paris at the time, and had gone to dine with a friend at the most expensive restaurant, shook hands with Matthew Arnold, who was dining there alone. In a letter to his wife Matthew Arnold told her that he had taken Mr. F. Leveson Gower for his brother, Lord Granville, and had been somewhat put out at attention being called to the sumptuous nature of his dinner. But he added that Lord Granville must have become convinced that the sum allowed him by the Treasury was obviously insufficient.

There are a few unimportant slips in the volume, as might be expected in the case of a "young author," for it seems that this is Mr. F. Leveson Gower's first book. Some of them affect the names of well-known places in Sicily, such as Taormina; but we allude to them only because of the reference to Segesta, of which the last letter has twice gone wrong, while the first letter is printed in different fashions in the same passage. The author, regretting that he was unable to visit Segesta at the time of year when he was in Palermo, adds that one of his friends was nearly drowned on his way to the temple. In old days it was the brigands who prevented this grand ruin from becoming tourist-haunted. Happily, we should say, but for the misfortune to our author, the necessity for being carried across a treacherous ford still makes access difficult, and the result is that Segesta remains less hackneyed than are even the temples of Asia Minor, and continues to add seclusion to its extraordinary charms. Another little slip would appear to make Lady Waldegrave survive her husband; but the context will correct the apparent error. The author's style is pleasant, though singularly familiar. We by no means resent the intrusion into such a book of extremely modern slang. It adds to our respectful admiration for Mr. Leveson Gower, who must have acquired many forms of the English tongue during his experience of society. We do not much like the phrase "to arm them about"—applied to the conducting of beautiful ladies through crowded reception rooms.

We welcome Mr. Leveson Gower's entertaining volume, and hope that now that he has broken the ice, he will continue on his new course.

Lectures on the Historians of Bohemia. Being the Ilchester Lectures for the Year 1904. By the Count Lützow. (Frowde.)

It is astonishing that so little interest has been taken in this country in the history and language of Bohemia, although the English have been on more than one occasion brought into close connexion with the Cechs, and the constitution of Bohemia, while it was independent, greatly resembled that of our own country. They are not merely idle words which are used by Count Lützow and Palacky before him, when they speak of Bohemia as being in the vanguard of European civilization at one time. Just ideas of constitutional government and of the right of private judgment in religious matters can be claimed for them. Certainly Milman in his 'History of Latin Christianity' says of Hus that this was the great principle for which he died. Nor in literature was this people behind other European nations. The Bohemian prose of the fourteenth century—to take the writings of Thomas Stitny as a specimen—was far superior to anything of the kind which we could show at the same time. In spite of these claims upon our attention Bohemia is virtually unknown to us; its people are supposed by many to be identical with the Germans, and the very word Bohemian, by a droll accident, has come to signify a carelessly living person of artistic proclivities.

We welcome, then, these eloquent lectures of Count Lützow, which the Clarendon Press has done well to print. The Count has already produced some good works on Bohemian matters—a history of the country and of its literature, and a charming little book giving a description of Prague, one of the most fascinating cities of Europe. And what memories are gathered round this city—the quixotic adventures of the blind king; the patriotic efforts of his son, Charles IV.; the preaching of Hus; and the battles of Zizka, who was able to defy the Catholic hosts of Germany! Sadder days were in store when the union with Austria took place in 1526, and the country was completely ruined after the battle of the White Mountain in 1620. From her degradation, however, Bohemia was destined to emerge in the nineteenth century under the patriotic efforts of Palacky. It is Palacky who is really the hero of Count Lützow's volume. He taught the Bohemians that past which they had been carefully educated to forget. Their national heroes were insulted, and their language reduced to a peasants' dialect. We remember a Bohemian professor telling us how in his youth, in the district in which he was born, a fête was given in honour of Schiller, although hardly any one in the place or near it spoke German, and certainly Schiller was not a national hero among them. Palacky, in the midst of great opposition, carried forward the national flag of his country, and created a school of historians, who have elucidated the earlier condition not only of their own country, but also of the surrounding European lands. We need but mention the names of Tomek, Goll, Gindely, Rezek, and others. With such good work accessible the English student has no excuse for betaking himself to German accounts of Bohemian history. This is the day of archival knowledge, and Bohemia can abundantly furnish him. In the large volume of contributions in honour of the memory of Palacky which was published in 1898, the great difficulties under which his literary career was accomplished are fully set forth. Insult, repression, and contempt were fully meted out to him, and when Austria—after the suppression of the Hungarian revolt—was under military law, there were thoughts of having the historian tried by court martial. We remember, when we were at Prague many years ago, and the unfortunate Prince Rudolf visited the city in his youth, what a snubbing was inflicted upon the historian by the Austrian courtiers who were in attendance upon the Prince. Palacky, however, outlived all these annoyances, and became the idol of his people, as was fully evinced by the thousands who followed the triumphal procession in his honour.

But we must return to Count Lützow. The count, who is a master of our language, goes through the list of Bohemian historians, estimating their merits and furnishing characteristic extracts. Only the most prominent can be mentioned here; but we must not omit Cosmas of the eleventh century, to say nothing of the mysterious fragment of Kristián, the importance of which is still being keenly debated. The rhyming Bohemian Chronicle of Dalimil is described at some length. It breathes the most intense hatred of the German, and thus at the beginning the note was struck which was to be constantly heard. The autobiography of Charles IV. is very interesting. He was a monarch of whom the Cechs have reason to be proud—the founder of their university and beautifier of their city. Count Lützow devotes his second lecture to the Hussite wars. Here some of the extant letters furnish very valuable material. Count Lützow is able to dispel some of the absurd calumnies which have been circulated about Zizka. We may mention here that the best life of the great fighter and malleus Teutonicorum is by Prof. Tomek, now living at a very advanced age. The third lecture treats of Bohemia under the House of Habsburg, the great exemplification of the motto Tu felix Austria nube.

After the battle of the White Mountain, in 1620, the country sinks into obscurity. By the efforts of Ferdinand II. the religion and language of Bohemia were stamped out. It was not without just surmises that the Diet, in 1618, made statutes with a view of preserving the national language, always an important element in a free country. The inhabitants were executed or driven out in great numbers, and some of the most eminent people of Bohemia, such as Zerotin and Comenius, were condemned to exile. The latter gave up his learned educational labours, and took to mystic visions and millenary dreams. Everywhere the saints were smitten. During this period, which lasted nearly two hundred years, Bohemia has little to show in the way of literature, historical or otherwise. Count Lützow can mention only one author with just pride, the Jesuit Balbinus, who, though belonging in some respects to the reactionary party, did not forget that it was Bohemian blood which coursed in his veins. Slowly the tide turned, Joseph II. having paved the way by his Edict of Toleration. Joseph did not intend to do the Bohemians any good—quite the contrary—but they profited indirectly by his insane attempts to weld his country, full of heterogeneous elements, into a compact whole. Joseph is well described by Count Lützow on p. 87. He was an enlightened man, but a doctrinaire and a pedant. The attempts which have been made to describe him as a patron of the arts and literature are wholly fallacious. When he allowed a certain freedom of religious belief, the concealed Protestants, whose families had pretended to acquiesce in Catholicism, openly avowed themselves, and among these were the family of the Palackys. Some interesting steps were then taken in the direction of national self-consciousness—old Bohemian authors were edited, and a somewhat grotesque appearance was given by the printing of Cech in Gothic letters. Schafarik wrote of the ethnology of the Slavs in a book which, although somewhat antiquated, is yet full of valuable matter even at the present day. Kollar in his 'Slavy Deera' sang the ancient glories of his country, and Palacky told its story.

We have already alluded to the dexterous way in which Count Lützow carries us on in his subject by his extracts from the authors of whom he treats. These are translated into very clear and succinct English, and in none of them does the writer appear to greater advantage than in the extracts from Palacky, whose manly, straightforward avowals and glowing appeals to his countrymen cannot fail to attract the attention of the reader. We hope that this excellent book will carry out the object for which it has been published, and that the English reader will learn to sympathize with the gallant little nation which has seen such triumphs, but also such humiliations; has endured so much in the past from the powerful peoples who surround it, and probably has so much to endure in the great débâcle of nationalities which seems likely to occur in Europe.

---

1815—La Seconde Abdication—La Terreur Blanche. Par Henry Houssaye. (Paris, Perrin & Cie.)

LIKE the three preceding volumes of M. Houssaye's great work on the last days of the Napoleonic régime, this book is intensely interesting, far better founded on documents than any earlier history of the time, and evidently inspired by a laudable desire to state not one, but all sides of the questions involved. But as in '1814' and 'Waterloo,' the narrative at last runs away with the author, and too often becomes a mere apology for Napoleon. The period is not a pleasant one for any patriotic Frenchman to deal with: neither the military chiefs, nor the leaders of the Chambers, nor the king and his advisers show to advantage, and it is easy to see that an author, looking around for some sympathetic figure to place in the midst of all this treachery, selfishness, and short-sighted intriguing, is almost bound to fall back on Napoleon as his hero. An historian who did not chance to be a compatriot of M. Houssaye, and had no need to discover a beau rôle for at least one Frenchman, would certainly find it easy to represent the emperor as a far less imposing figure during the last days of his stay in France. There was no real magnanimity or unselfishness in his second abdication: when he came back from Waterloo, he fully intended to fight out another hopeless campaign, and he ultimately resigned his throne not because he wished to spare France the horrors of a second invasion, but because his Ministers failed him, and his Chambers boldly offered him battle, and called out the National Guard to depose him by force. Mentally and physically he was exhausted for the moment; if he had been his ordinary self, he would have listened to the counsels of his brother Lucien, and have marched against the Parliamentarians at the head of the small force of regular troops then in Paris and the populace of the Faubourgs. The only really unselfish outburst in his many recorded sayings during the last days of June was his exclamation that he hated the idea of calling out the rabble, that "he would not be the leader of a Jacquerie" (p. 41). All his military instincts, all his early memories, prejudiced him against the idea of using the mob as his tool; mobs, as he had himself observed, are meant to be dispersed with whiffs of grapeshot, and he had a genuine dislike to accomplishing with such followers what he would not have scrupled to undertake with the aid of a well-disciplined division of regulars. The ex-emperor must have his due meed of credit for not starting the Jacquerie, but we retain our doubts whether he would not have made the plunge if he had been in his ordinary health and spirits, and had been granted ten days in which to recover from the effects of Waterloo.

It is usual to saddle Fouché with the whole responsibility for the emperor's abdication and the surrender of Paris, and to impute both to him as gross crimes. The Duke of Otranto was as selfish and cynical an intriguer as ever lived, and undoubtedly betrayed his master; but it is certain that the policy which he initiated and carried out between June 22nd and July 8th was the most profitable one for France at the moment. To have allowed the emperor to lead the wrecks of his armies to one more defeat would have entailed upon the country a far worse fate than it actually endured, despite all the miseries of the occupation by the Allies, on which M. Houssaye enlarges so much in the chapter called 'La Terreur Prussienne.' Blücher would have stormed Paris; we can have no doubt that he would have succeeded when we read the reports on the state of the garrison made by the French generals. The proceedings of the council of war held on July 1st give incontrovertible evidence that the city could not be defended. When a meeting including Davoust, Masséna, Soult, St. Cyr, Macdonald, Mortier, Drouot, and Vandamme voted that "if Paris were attacked at many points at once, there would be no hope of successful resistance," and that "no general can guarantee that a battle now delivered would have satisfactory results," it is absurd to argue that it would have been profitable to continue hostilities. The marshals knew the exact fighting value of the Paris garrison at that moment far better than any writer of the present day can pretend to do.

But if prolonged resistance could only have led to further disasters—a probable storm of Paris by the Prussians, and a certain partition of the frontier departments of France as a punishment for contumacious obstinacy—it was for the undoubted profit of the nation that Fouché and Davoust worked when they engineered the surrender of Paris and the restoration of Louis XVIII. It is clear that by recognizing the old king and receiving him into the capital the Provisional Government placed the Allies in a difficult position. They could not plunder a France which had restored their own friend and confederate as they would have plundered a France which adhered obstinately to Napoleon. All the plans for annexing the North to the Netherlands, for enlarging Sardinia and Switzerland, and for carrying the Prussian frontier into Alsace and Lorraine were dropped. Louis XVIII. was mulcted of nothing except a few frontier enclaves, such as Philippeville and Marienbourg, Sarrelouis and Landau, and one considerable patch of territory on the side of Savoy. The amount of the fines to be levied on France was diminished, the duration of the occupation of the North by the Allies was shortened—most important of all, the king was allowed to maintain an army, by whose existence France preserved her position as a great power. If Louis had not been restored, Europe would not have permitted a single French regiment to be kept under arms.

There can be little doubt that the Provisional Government and the Chambers acquiesced in the restoration of the Bourbons not because they were "hypnotized" by Fouché's plausibility, or dominated by his strong will, but because all intelligent men were forced to acknowledge to themselves that this course was the best for France. It was not a showy policy, nor a particularly dignified one: it involved the swallowing of a number of fine phrases and the surrender of many legitimate hopes, but it saved France from the worst evils of conquest, and so "il fallait avaler la pillule." There is no need to attribute to those who allowed the king to be restored judicial blindness, corrupt motives, or shamelessness. If some of them covered their submission to the inevitable by insincere phraseology, or explanations that will not bear investigation by documentary evidence, we must pardon them for "playing to the gallery," in consideration of the unhappy position in which they were placed. Davoust and Lafayette both need a certain allowance of this sort, and many a soldier and politician with them. We think that M. Houssaye is a little hard on the men of 1815, when he showers his epithets and his ironies over their heads.

Dr. Rose and other English writers, who have been dealing of late with the last days of Napoleon's career in Europe, will have some controversies to conduct with M. Houssaye concerning his views on the emperor's surrender to the British blockading squadron off Rochefort. In these chapters we do not find repeated the grosser errors and falsifications of Las Cases, but, nevertheless, Capt. Maitland's conduct is stigmatized as treacherous, he had a "bouche de mensonge et de perfidie," &c. The charge against him seems simply to be that he assured Las Cases and Savary that he had no knowledge of how the British Government would treat the emperor, but that he was sure that he would suffer no personal violence, and would find that the nation was not so prejudiced against him as he supposed. As the captain of the Bellerophon had by him at the time a dispatch from Lord Hotham, in which the latter used the phrase that "the repose of Europe seems to depend on Napoleon's captivity," and another in which he was ordered to send the emperor directly to England in case he should surrender himself, M. Houssaye argues that Maitland must have guessed from these hints that the emperor would be doomed to imprisonment if he gave himself up, and that he should therefore have warned the French negotiators that they would be unwise to urge such a course on their master. M. Houssaye cannot dispute that the captain's assurances were literally true—neither he nor Hotham knew what the British Government would do with Napoleon—nor that he warned Las Cases and Savary that he was unauthorized to make any promises or engagements as to the emperor's fate. But it is held that it was Maitland's duty as a man of honour to let the Frenchmen understand that the "asylum" which the fugitive would find in England would not be a pleasant one. There is another side to this: Would Maitland have been doing his duty as a British officer if he had striven to discourage the surrender which would do so much to guarantee the peace of Europe? And in Napoleon's own interest, was not a voluntary visit to the Bellerophon the best and safest course left? The alternatives left to him were to stay longer at Rochefort, or to make a desperate attempt to escape by sea. But had he remained one day longer on French soil he would have been arrested by the Royalist Government, which had just come into power—a fate far worse than that of falling into the hands of Great Britain. And the chance of a successful escape to America seems by this time to have grown desperate—it suffices to say that one of the schemes urged on the emperor was that he should face the Atlantic in a 15-ton chasse-marée, and another that he should hide in a barrel in the hold of a Danish merchant vessel. Maitland, as a matter of fact, had warnings of these attempts from royalist partisans at Rochefort, and would almost certainly have foiled them. What an end to Napoleon's career would it have been to be discovered stowed away in a tub "lined with mattresses, furnished with an air-tube, and properly provisioned"! We cannot but conclude that he did well to surrender while it was still possible to act as a free agent.

English readers will note some curious misreadings of names and words in their own tongue. Lord "Steewart" occurs many times, and those strangely spelt ships, the Switzure (p. 390), the Lane (p. 392), and the Lithey (p. 353), may cause some questionings. But compared with most French historians, M. Houssaye has a very fair eye for English orthography.

---

Geschichte der Japanischen Literatur. Von Dr. K. Florenz, Professor a. d. Univ. Tokyo. (Leipsic, Amelung.)

FOLLOWING the example of their earliest teachers in civilization, the Japanese have always been great dictionary makers, encyclopædists, literary collectors, and bibliographers. As early as the ninth century Shigeno no Sadanushi compiled a classified list of books, which must have been mainly Chinese, in a thousand (thin) volumes. This work appears to have been lost. Sadanushi was followed by Fujihara no Atsumoto, who, in the eleventh century, produced a catalogue in 360 volumes. Much later Hanawa Hoki Ichi, a wagakusha (Japanese scholar) of the end of the Bakufu period, who died in 1822, published an authoritative list called the 'Gunsho Ruijiu' ('Classified Collection of the Host of Books'), which ran to 530 volumes, the contents of which were arranged under 1,273 subdivisions. The most generally useful bibliography, however, is that in six stout volumes of Ozaki Masayoshi, who died in 1828, the 'Gunsho Ichiran' ('Compendious View of the Host of Writings'), the preface to which is dated 1801. Ozaki's work is far from being a mere catalogue; the contents are classified according to subjects, and of each book a fairly sufficient account is supplied, so that if not exactly histories of Japanese literature, they constitute ample treatises on that subject. Some years ago Mr. (now Sir Ernest) Satow wrote a valuable and interesting article on Japanese literature in Appleton's 'Cyclopædia,' founded in part upon the 'Gunsho Ichiran.' Though it is concise, the whole field of literary production in Japan is covered, and in particular the monogatari (ancient and mediæval romances) are well and amply described. Dr. Aston's 'History of Japanese Literature,' one of Mr. Heinemann's excellent series of "Short Histories of the Literatures of the World," was published in 1899. It was reviewed in these columns (Athenæum, No. 3732). And now we have a new history written on a much more extensive scale than Dr. Aston's, for the Halbband before us deals only with the literature of the pre-classic and classic periods, extending over the period between the beginning of the eighth and the end of the twelfth centuries.

Both Dr. Florenz and his English predecessor in the field Dr. Aston appear to regard the literature of Japan as extremely voluminous in bulk. In a sense this is true, but a very large portion of the literature of Japan is not Japanese literature. Up to the seventeenth century, for instance, and even long afterwards, nearly all the printed books, as Sir E. Satow has shown in his essay on 'The History of Printing in Japan' (Transactions As. Soc. Japan, vol. x.), were reprints of Chinese works, Buddhist or classical. Again, a large division of Japanese literature is composed in pure Chinese—most of the histories, for example—and is too Chinese in tone as well as in language to be considered as Japanese literature, otherwise than in a loose sense of the expression. Pure Japanese literature, in archaic Japanese, free from Chinese, or in the later style charged with Chinese compounds (Japano-Chinese), is not, after all, so very voluminous—we are, of course, speaking of the literature of Old Japan—and much of it is repetition of earlier work. The imaginative literature of the period covered by the present volume is of manageable dimensions.

Dr. Florenz occupies a prominent place in the front rank of Japanese scholarship. His edition of a portion of the 'Nihongi' (the whole of which has been admirably translated by Dr. Aston) is a monument of German industry and accuracy. Dr. Florenz had the advantage of consulting Ihida's great chushaku (commentary) on the 'Nihongi,' which was not available when Dr. Aston's version was prepared. His various contributions to the Transactions of the German and Anglo-American Asiatic Societies of Japan are among the most valuable essays in those periodicals, and his 'Japanische Dramen' (Terakoya and Asagao) and 'Japanische Dichtungen' show his capacity as a writer of attractive German prose and poetry. In particular, his version of the curious modern epic, written by Tetsujiro Inouye some twenty years ago in Chinese, dealing with that most dramatic and little-known episode in modern Japanese history, the Satsuma rising of 1877, and intitled 'Song of the Filial Maid Shiragiku' (White Chrysanth), deserves high commendation on account of its fidelity to the original and the skill with which the blank verse is manipulated—no easy task in German.

Of the literature of Old Japan it is not probable that much will attain world-wide reputation, or even survive in Japan itself, as literature pure and simple, beyond what is written in the pure Japanese of the archaic uta, or in the nearly pure language of the older and some of the mediæval monogatari (romances), inclusive of a few of the nikki (personal jottings) and soshi (reflections). It is precisely with these tracts of Japanese literature that the present volume deals, in an informed, appreciative, yet fairly critical spirit, too often absent from books treating of things Japanese. It would be out of place to review in any detail, in these columns, Dr. Florenz's elaborate account of the 'Mannyōshū' (ancient anthology), the principal work of the pre-classical age, and of the monogatari (romances, &c.), which may be justly regarded as the best production of the classical period (794–1186). Both are amply illustrated by examples—well rendered in imitative metre or simple prose, for which we must refer the reader to Dr. Florenz's pleasant pages. On two points only can we find space to make any observations. Dr. Florenz does not touch upon the question of the age of the uta in the 'Kojiki' and 'Nihongi' (the two oldest records). These songs, as their diction amply proves, cannot, for the most part, be anything like so old as the events to which the text refers them. They may, some of them, especially in the 'Kojiki,' be echoes of ancient ritual or phallic songs; but these must have been recast in the language and metre of the seventh or eighth century. Nor is any explanation offered of the replacement of the naga uta (poem) by the tanka (quintain) and the hokku (or half quintain), of which Dr. Florenz truly writes: "Wohl keinen anderen Volke ist es gelungen, aus einem so beschränkten Gestaltungs-mittel....so viel herauszuholen." The justice of this remark is amply exemplified in Prof. Chamberlain's charming essay on 'Bashō and the Japanese Poetical Epigram' in the thirtieth volume of the Transactions of the Asiatic Society of Japan. It was the influx of the civilization, language, and literature of China that killed the naga uta and arrested the development of a national imaginative literature—not only directly, but also indirectly by the importation of ideas for which the indigenous vocabulary was insufficient, and of ideographs which afforded facile combinations of an eye-reading character.

We may close this notice with a version of one of the "cuckoo" songs of the Anthology, which is a good example of the archaic Japanese muse in her lighter mood:—

Among the fledglings of the nightingale
the cuckoo hath his birth;
alone is he;
nor like his father singeth,
nor like his mother;
he soareth high, and flieth to the moor-side
amid the white-flowered bushes,* and with his singing the welkin all resoundeth—
the orange blossoms be rendeth as he singeth, and all day long
his song I hearken gladly, and bribe him would I ne'er far away to fly, but in my garden
among the orange blossoms to sit and sing for ever!

NEW NOVELS.

Rose of the World. By Agnes and Egerton Castle. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

It is possible that some readers will find a difficulty in rationalizing the conduct of Lady Gerardine, who is the heroine of Mr. and Mrs. Castle's latest novel. Lady Gerardine was formerly the wife of an English officer, for whom she had no confessed affection. On learning of his death in action, she marries, a little later, Sir Arthur Gerardine, the governor of an Indian province, whose pomposity and self-importance are excellently rendered by the authors. To her "enters" a certain Major Bethune, a friend and associate of her first husband, an obstinate, stiff man, with the request for Capt. English's papers, to assist him in his task of writing a memoir of the dead man. This Lady Gerardine flatly refuses, and it is only by a turning movement that the Major succeeds in getting what he wants; in other words, he secures the aid of Sir Arthur, who lays his commands upon his wife. Now the essence of this story is psychological, and it is Lady Gerardine's mind that is the subject. Here begins the first of the series of developments which furnish the story with its emotional values. The rationalization of a woman's heart is an absurdity on the face of its terms, so that there is no reason in the world why Lady Gerardine should not have moved upon the lines laid down. She had not loved her first husband, and she certainly did not love her second. So far she estranges sympathy. But one is driven by the authors' romantic investment of this Rose of the World into, first, a toleration, secondly a respect, and, lastly, an affection for her. The dead man's papers and letters, freshly read after a lapse of years, revive the past and the man. Unaccountably she had not opened his diary before. As she reads she realizes that she now loves the dead husband, the dead lover. To convince the reader of this required exquisite handling; but the authors have achieved their purpose. Awake to her realities now, the full shame of her situation pours upon the woman in a tide. This is treated with knowledge and insight, and with a certain courage and delicacy. It is probably the most subtle passage in the book. But we may not indicate the plot further. It will carry a reader along, and please those who stickle for happy endings. The value is not so much in plot as in psychology, and, as we have shown, this is entirely successful. The characterization is subordinated to the central study, but is quite adequate, and includes a very successful portrait of a young girl. Mr. and Mrs. Castle always write with distinction and with colour. If this is not the best of their novels it takes high rank among them.

* Deutzia scabra.

Maid Margaret. By S. R. Crockett. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THIS sequel to 'The Black Douglas' is in Mr. Crockett's best vein. The heroine, though something of a romp and dairymaid, qualities which cling more or less to the characters of all his women, has a stout heart and shrewd intuition, and bears not ignobly the hard lot which made her a pawn in the game of violence and intrigue in which her house went down. For she is no other than that Fair Maid of Galloway who saw the extinction of her father's family by the judicial murder of her brothers in their teens; whose husband and cousin, William, eighth earl, was stabbed to death at Stirling by his host and king; and who married secondly the brother of the slain lord, James, last Earl of Douglas. It may be doubted whether the author has made the most of this Æschylean drama; but he has emphasized the actors, and his additions to history tend to fix the picture in our memory.

Mrs. Galer's Business. By W. Pett Ridge. (Methuen & Co.)

IN this story of Clerkenwell life, as in most of Mr. Pett Ridge's books, there are obvious faults that may easily cause its undoubted merits to be underrated. Too often the rude sarcasms of the street and the work-room are intended to do service as amusing dialogue; sometimes a mistaken sense of humour is responsible for situations that seem to lack the quality of truth. One of the earliest escapades of Mrs. Galer's precocious boy is an excellent specimen of this humour at any price. Hurrying from the cemetery in which his father has just been buried, he drives off with one of the funeral carriages through the crowded streets! But, despite its defects, 'Mrs. Galer's Business,' with its life-like sketches of laundrywomen, railway porters, dressmakers, and policemen, and its sympathetic study of the social conditions under which these humble people live, is both an amusing and interesting book. Mrs. Galer, a singularly bright and industrious little woman, has a flourishing laundry business and a troublesome but promising son, and the story is mainly concerned with the development of both these possessions. Her lodgers are among the other chief characters in the story—Ballard, a railway porter with horticultural yearnings, being a particularly happy piece of portraiture.

Millions of Mischief. By Headon Hill. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

HEADON HILL's fertility in devising audacious plots and tangled situations seems inexhaustible. It is not many weeks since we dealt in these columns with one story of his, and now he is upon us with another, which soars higher than ever into the regions of the frankly impossible—or, let us say, the hitherto unexperienced. Three Cabinet Ministers, dissatisfied with the policy of their chief, resolve to remove him by the simple method of assassination, for all the world as if they had been living en pleine Renaissance, instead of in the unromantic twentieth century. They know of a criminal under sentence of death, whom the Home Secretary, one of their number, is naturally able to get at. They make the mistake, however, of assuming that this culprit is really the cold-blooded murderer that he has been pronounced by a jury of his countrymen to be, whereas he is really as honourable and innocent a gentleman as ever passed through Woolwich. The real murderer—as is soon discovered by the acumen of the convict himself and a young lady to whom he is attached, and who happens by a fortunate coincidence to be at the moment the guest of the intended victim—is still at large, and is closely related to one of the conspirators. Here, then, is the difficulty. If Capt. Rivington does not commit murder he will be given up, and hung for the murder which he has not committed. He does not want either to commit murder or to be hung; the young lady does not want him to be hung; the real murderer, who is also on the spot, does want him to be hung; while the murderer's relative does not much care whether he is or not, so long as he murders the Prime Minister first. Matters are complicated by the fact that the subordinate agent, through whom Rivington is abstracted from Winchester Gaol, and who is told off to see that he fulfils the condition of his release, has an old score to settle with one of his employers, and is glad enough presently to transfer his assistance to the cause of virtue and justice. This personage is indeed the nearest approach to a "character," if not a very original one, in the book.

A Rough Reformer. By Ernest Glanville. (Constable & Co.)

IN this book the somewhat breathless atmosphere of the Stock Exchange world is relieved by glimpses of model farming in Surrey and pioneer work in the wholesome open spaces of Canada. The early part of the story is vaguely reminiscent of 'Ready-Money Mortiboy.' A large, gruff-spoken son, who has been adventuring abroad since boyhood, arrives penniless in the suburban home of the thrifty, toiling couple who gave him birth. He carelessly borrows the whole of their savings, some five-and-twenty pounds, because he has invited a peer to dine with him that night. The peer in question is a well-known company director, whose name is wanted by the burly adventurer to adorn the prospectus of a mining venture that he wishes to float. In the course of a few days the adventurer has returned the borrowed twenty-five pounds to his parents, with a large amount of interest, and has purchased a fine estate in Surrey, which he dutifully places at their disposal for life. By devious ways, then, he enters and makes use of society, of a kind—composed principally of titled rascals of both sexes, whose lives are devoted to bridge-playing, dissipation, and stock-and-share gambling—and within the year becomes a famous and very wealthy financier. Among his companies are one or two of an industrial sort, for the ambition of this rude, callous, unscrupulous Napoleon of finance is to "wake up England," largely by means of teaching its young men to farm, and providing them with farms in Canada. The moral of the narrative would appear to be that "smart" society is a community of very unpleasant and decadent folk, that the speculative financier is a shady and unwholesome person, and that salvation is to be looked for in work on the land, here and in our undeveloped colonies. It is not at all a bad story of a spirited, rough-and-ready type.

The Millionaire Baby. By Anna Katherine Green. (Chatto & Windus.)

THE hand of the author of 'The Leavenworth Case' has not lost its cunning. This story, in which the adventures of an American detective in search of a missing baby are related, is ample proof of that. It were unbecoming to inquire too closely into the possibility of many of the incidents that follow in quick succession in these pages. They serve their purpose in exciting the curiosity of the reader, and nothing more can reasonably be required of the class of fiction to which 'A Millionaire Baby' belongs. Granted its fundamental improbability, the plot is skilfully constructed, and the interest of the story is successfully maintained. The book is much better written than most sensational stories. Its simplicity of style, and the absence of any attempt at mere sensationalism in the writing, make it almost convincing.

The Stigma. By Jessie Leckie Herbertson. (Heinemann.)

MOST people who read this book will close it with a feeling of relief. Nearly all the men who figure in it are brutal, and nearly all the women are unpleasant. The heroine is morbidly conscious of the baseness of her birth, and the dismal note in her character is deepened by her surroundings. She is a governess in a home for idiot children, and spends her leisure in the house of a Methodist lay preacher, whose exceedingly vulgar wife is carrying on an intrigue with a former lover. Her chief desire is to be sufficient unto herself. She scorns her father's offers of assistance, and cares little or nothing for the friendship of men or women. Even when, forced at last to realize that her attempts to be wholly self-centred are futile, she consents to marry a young village doctor, she has a haunting fear that she is "evading her life." The one merit of the book is the analytical skill with which the heroine is drawn. She has individuality and intensity, and the analysis of her inmost thoughts, if sometimes painfully minute, is unquestionably clever. This gift of character-drawing will be displayed to greater advantage when the author chooses a story less sordid than 'The Stigma,' and narrates it more lucidly.

The Countermine. By Arthur Wenlock. (Rivers.)

THE leading idea of this story of military life has done service in a hundred tales and more. An important chart is stolen, and Capt. Welford, who is prevented by a family secret from proving an alibi, is convicted of the theft. He is, of course, innocent of the crime, and knows that the culprit is a daughter of the officer from whose room the precious drawing was taken, but gallantly refrains from asserting her guilt. If the plot is familiar, the treatment is fresh. The story, which goes with melodramatic force from the first page to the last, contains some happy touches of characterization, and is related with a quiet humour that redeems even the most conventional parts of the narrative. 'The Countermine' is, in truth, an exciting tale excellently told. Mr. Wenlock, not satisfied with merely writing it, has illustrated it. As an artist he does but slight justice to himself as an author.

BOOKS ON THE WAR.

WE have to notice together two important volumes on the Russo-Japanese war. The topics which they suggest are of such interest that it would be easy to write of them at undue length, and the best means of avoiding that misfortune is to note in detached form the points which strike us as being of the highest interest at the moment. Mr. McKenzie, in his From Tokyo to Tiflis (Hurst & Blackett), covers a good deal of the same ground as that occupied by Mr. Bennet Burleigh. Both writers have taken pains, and both volumes contain useful maps of the engagements. We may add that both our authors are, although they hardly know it, distinctly hostile to the Japanese. There is observable among many of those who have followed the armies in the field a tendency to treat the Russian as, on the whole, like ourselves, in the sense of the American phrase, "a white man," and to treat the Japanese, however intelligent, as an "Injun," with the unconscious addition, "Injuns is poison."

Both Mr. McKenzie and Mr. Bennet Burleigh give dates and facts which increase our stupefaction at the blindness of Russia before the outbreak of the war. Mr. McKenzie was in Japan during January, 1904, and noted at that time that the entire regular army and the whole fleet of Japan were ready from the new year for instant action at spots which pointed to invasion of Korea and naval attack on Port Arthur. Mr. Bennet Burleigh gives his own telegram to the newspaper whose correspondent he was, with its date. He also shows that there was sufficient anticipation of war, even on the Russian side, in the neighbourhood, to cause the Russian fleet to have a patrol outside Port Arthur, steam constantly up, and flashlights in service before the end of January. It seems incredible, in face of these facts, that the Russians should have allowed themselves to be surprised at anchor in a fashion contrary to the teaching of every naval authority in the world. British fleets invariably put to sea when foreign complications cause the slightest risk of war, and this even in quarters of the globe where there seems little risk of torpedo night-attack. Both Mr. McKenzie and Mr. Burleigh describe the circumstances of the intervention of the foreign men-of-war in the case of the Variag. Mr. Bennet Burleigh distinctly states that our course was injudicious, and Mr. McKenzie implies the same opinion by pointing out that the American captain refused to participate in the proceedings. We think the Admiralty has taken notice of the action of the Talbot, and there can be no doubt that it was unwise. Patriotic prudence has prevented comment on it in the press and in Parliament. The Japanese show either sound sense or marvellous tact in abstaining from complaint on matters of the kind unless essential, and in making their complaints as easy-natured as possible, even in serious cases such as the use of French bases by Russian ships.

Our authors have much to say on the unfortunate position of correspondents in the present war, and on the general question which is involved. It is difficult to blame the Japanese for the extreme reserve which they displayed in the early stages of the war. It was difficult, too, for correspondents, or newspaper proprietors who had to pay for them, to keep their temper; but Mr. McKenzie rightly admits that, the Japanese being at war on their own account, and not for the benefit of English and American newspapers, the sole question for them to consider was their own interest. He thinks that they made a mistake, and know it; but to some extent answers himself by explaining that it was Japanese courtesy which prevented the definite declaration of exclusion which would have come from Germans in similar circumstances:—

"The Japanese mode of expression is different from our Western way. When a Japanese has to refuse your request, courtesy forbids that he should reply with a direct negative. He points out to you the difficulties involved in your plan; he fears you may suffer if you obtain what you want; he expresses a cordial wish that if you still desire it, it may be possible to grant it in a day or two. Such expressions, from Japanese lips, mean 'No.' Correspondents, imperfectly acquainted with Japanese thought, took them to mean 'Yes.' Hence endless misunderstandings, and many charges of bad faith."

Mr. McKenzie thinks that Japanese authorities have now "learned to trust the right men, and to make an end of the others." The Germans acted on the same principle as long ago as 1870. The only non-German correspondents who were suffered to remain with the Crown Prince's army during the invasion of France were Sir W. H. Russell and two other English journalists.

Mr. Bennet Burleigh's book has for title Empire of the East, and is published by Messrs. Chapman & Hall. No one has more experience of war than the author, who fought in the American Civil War, and has followed in almost every subsequent war the fortunes of one or other of the belligerents. His peace experience of our own army in manœuvres is also complete. We turned with great interest to Mr. Burleigh's pages to try to elucidate one of the most important points in relation to the present campaign which remain undetermined—namely, the character of the field guns mainly employed by the Russian and Japanese artillery, a matter on which little light is thrown by Mr. McKenzie's book. It is probably a result of the fact that different kinds of guns were employed in different portions of the field of war that Mr. McKenzie's statements on the subject involve a certain apparent contradiction. He has some general remarks against shrapnel and in favour of the Japanese shell, and some which appear to point to superiority of the Russian over the Japanese field artillery. In his account of one engagement, however, he states that the Japanese fire completely dominated the Russian fire, but ascribes the success to numbers, while he sets very high

"the precision of the Russian fire....The Russians proved again, as they proved at the battle of the Yalu, that, gun for gun (apart from shell and apart from the men handling the guns), they had the better weapons, surpassing the Japanese in range and in rapidity of fire."

This statement agrees with the information in the possession of the various Governments whose representatives have been present at the war. Neither the Russians nor the Japanese were equipped at the commencement of the war with a true quick-firing gun, as regards the main portion of their forces; but the Russian was an improved gun, while the Japanese was what we style old-fashioned. So greatly do the Japanese differ from other powers in recounting their successes, that they have never given the world a complete view of the extent of their capture of Russian field guns. Much surprise was expressed after Mukden when it was at last stated by the Japanese that they had captured only sixty guns, the figure which is given in Mr. Bennet Burleigh's book. If all the captures of guns announced are added together, they fall short of the number which would be required for even a single army corps. Yet it is the fact that at the present moment, in spite of the difficulty of horsing the Russian guns, which are too heavy for the ponies of the Japanese, the latter have at least 500 of the Russian guns horsed on service in Manchuria. No inkling of this fact can, we think, be gathered from either of the books before us. It is most difficult for any one to ascertain the exact truth upon this matter, but we are certain of the accuracy, so far as it goes, of the statement which we make. It is, however, perhaps, much within the mark. Mr. Bennet Burleigh, in describing the Japanese army, speaks of their artillery as having done "much to win them battles during the war," and says, "They use guns of both French and German pattern, but chiefly the latter." He adds, however, that "they maintain the strictest secrecy about their guns; on the march they screen them with canvas coverings, and allow no strangers to inspect them."

We suspect that the canvas screen served a different purpose at the beginning of the war and in its later stages, and that it was at first employed to prevent its being known for certain that they had no guns "of the French pattern," i.e., true quick-firers. There is also, perhaps, a little confusion in some other words of Mr. Bennet Burleigh, contained in the same paragraph which we have quoted, referring to guns of the "German pattern" and "guns of well-known Krupp manufacture." The German military gun is not a true quick-firer: a fact which, we may point out in passing, shows that the notion of German attack on France about Morocco was an idle scare. The Krupp gun—which has been sold to all the smaller powers, and with which the Swiss and many other armies are now provided—is a true quick-firer, and, being made in Germany, it is in a sense a German gun. Mr. Bennet Burleigh believes in the superiority of the Japanese artillery throughout the war, and writes: "The Japanese artillery had enabled them to gain two pitched battles, and was to assist them in winning other victories." If this is so, we believe that the superiority must at first have been in the handling of the guns rather than in their character. We note, however, an interesting passage describing a naval funeral at Tokyo, on which occasion Mr. Bennet Burleigh undoubtedly saw a modern quick-firer in the hands of the Japanese; but this was, he says, a small gun of the calibre of a six-pounder. It is probable that these guns were a special purchase at the commencement of the war. That the Japanese have not yet rearmed their artillery generally with a true quick-firer seems certain, from the fact that they are using on a large scale, in spite of the difficulty about horses, the Russian guns which they had captured, and, at all events at first, using them with Russian ammunition.

Mr. Bennet Burleigh complains, very possibly with justice, that our Admiralty were not represented by a sufficient number of good officers in the early days of the naval mobilization and operations of the Japanese fleets. We do not know that the Japanese would have encouraged the presence of a considerable number of our naval officers, although we admit that the attitude of the Japanese navy was from the first far more friendly towards us than was that of the military authorities. It is, we believe, a fact, though it has not, so far as we know, been publicly mentioned, that the British naval officer named by Mr. Bennet Burleigh, our late Naval Attaché in Japan, was the only foreign naval officer on board Admiral Togo's flagship, and probably the only one present with the Japanese fleet on its first appearance before Port Arthur.

Both Mr. McKenzie and Mr. Bennet Burleigh have concluding chapters on the future of the Far Eastern world and of Japan. There is between them a certain similarity, although Mr. Bennet Burleigh shows a natural caution about prophecy. Mr. McKenzie, we think, goes too far when he suggests that Japan will lead the East to conquest of the white races. He suggests that Japan can raise and train four million Chinese troops, an army sufficient "to defeat the combined forces of the Europeans." Why stop at four million? Why not forty million? Why suggest that an army of four million of Chinese troops can march to Calais, without considering at the same time the numbers and character of the forces which would be arrayed against them? We feel certain that there is no present prospect of Japan reorganizing a united Chinese military empire. Mr. McKenzie, indeed, seems to contradict himself when he adds that Japan will not "fight other Western powers unless forced thereto." He may reply to us that his prophecies are explained by him to concern our well-being in "generations yet unborn." In politics, while tendencies may be noted for the direction of thought over periods of ten or twenty years, prophecy more than a year ahead is generally to be avoided, and we must leave Mr. McKenzie's descendants to settle the controversy with The Athenæum of their time. In the suggestion, in which we think Mr. McKenzie and Mr. Bennet Burleigh agree, that Japan will threaten our Far Eastern trade, we are disposed to concur. But in the case of a commercial power such as Great Britain, a great deal of profitable trading with successful commercial rivals takes place during the period in which they are establishing themselves in certain special markets. Mr. McKenzie goes further in believing that our prestige and our territory are threatened. In our belief it is, and will be, the interest of Japan to be friendly with so considerable a naval power as the United Kingdom; and, so far from looking to a Japanese invasion of Burma, we do not believe in any danger even to our little colony of Hong Kong.

SHORT STORIES.

Fond Adventures: Tales of the Youth of the World. By Maurice Hewlett. (Macmillan.)—While Percival Perceforest was pommelling teeth out of the mouth of the stirrup-boy Jenkin in the yard of Hyde Abbey, we are told that "Mawdley Touchett strained in anguish from an upper window, provocatively dishevelled." This was extremely characteristic of one of Mr. Hewlett's heroines, all of whom appear to find the greatest difficulty in keeping their clothes upon their shoulders. In 'Fond Adventures,' as in other works from the same hand, one is occasionally liable, if one is sensitive upon such matters, to resent the presence of a satyr prying for rosy flesh; and this is the principal flaw in an art which is in many respects fine and distinguished. Mr. Hewlett's imagination is at once erudite and picturesque. He has a sense of colour and a lyric impulse. He can tell a highly ornamented tale without forgetting to make it move, and can inform with living humanity what in the hands of others might become mere puppets in mediæval fancy dress. All these qualities are fully apparent in 'Brazen-head the Great,' which is a Canterbury tale; in 'The Heart's Key,' which is a tale of Provence; and in 'Buondelmonte's Saga' and 'The Love Chase,' which are tales of Italy; although perhaps no one of these reaches the top of the writer's earlier achievement in the genre of the novelle. But Mr. Hewlett should beware of the satyr.

Dorset Dear, by M. E. Francis (Longmans), contains seventeen short stories of Mrs. Blundell's which have appeared in various periodicals. Written in the author's happiest vein, they form a welcome addition to the literature which deals with the simple life of rustic folk. Mrs. Blundell knows her people well, and lets them tell their own tale in their own way—there is no ostentatious analysis of character, no desire to overcrowd her stories with incident; she has happily realized how little is much to country folk, how slowly yet pertinaciously they take in a situation, how deliberately they form their opinions, how ponderously yet shrewdly they carry out their slowly formed intentions. Of the stories here given we like 'Keeper Guppy,' 'The Worm that Turned,' and 'A Woodland Idyll' the best—they seem most typical of the life which is described. Postman Chris is too quick, and too modern for his environment; but then he had been a soldier, and, further, who does not know that the village postman is often a dangerously smart young man with all sorts of new-fangled ideas? So there is excuse for his promptitude. All the stories are well worth reading, especially by those who love the simplicity of country life and regret its disappearance.

Stingaree. By E. W. Hornung. (Chatto & Windus.)—Of no importance from the literary standpoint, the present volume yet contains ten very readable and ingeniously worked-out stories, with a common central figure for hero—Stingaree, the Australian bushranger. Of course, Stingaree is depicted as a handsome and very interesting fellow, with "charming manners," "a single eyeglass, and a martial moustache, which combined to give distinction to a somewhat swarthy countenance." This may be rather nonsense—indeed, for the reader whose quest is pure realism it is arrant nonsense—but it is fooling of an entertaining sort, and the escapades of this dandy bushranger are really ingeniously set forth. Bushrangers, when they existed, were not at all like Stingaree. Even the best of them were bloody-minded, coarse-lived fellows, as was natural in view of the lives they led and of the lives they left behind them. Unlike Mr. Hornung's dandy, they had not the exigencies of fiction to consider, but only their own mostly unwashed skins to preserve. Yet we would not have Stingaree less debonair.

Tales of Rye Town. By M. Stepney Rawson. (Constable.)—Mrs. Rawson's style is good, because admirably fitted to her material. This she finds in the faded glories of that quaint old Sussex town, once prominent among the Cinque Ports, whose name figures in the title of this collection of fourteen stories. One of the tales is concerned with the nineteenth century, but most are eighteenth-century studies, and a few go further back in the ancient port's history. Mrs. Rawson has here succeeded, as she did in 'The Apprentice,' in impregnating her pages with the soft, briny, rather melancholy, but wholly delightful atmosphere of the Sussex marshland, and of the aged sunny town on the hill. Here and there in the book is a hint of that literary weakness which is indicated by a tendency to preciousness of phrase.

But for the most part a wise simplicity distinguishes these restful stories, and occasionally, without being precious, the author displays a real gift for word-colouring. The first of her stories is a charming little historical picture, which shows Queen Elizabeth, gloriously habited and riding among her squires, intervening to quell a brawl among rustic lovers, and taking into her own hands the task over which the lads had quarrelled: that of choosing a Queen of the May.

FISHING.

An Angler's Hours. By H. T. Sheringham, Angling Editor of The Field. (Macmillan.)—In his introduction to this charming little collection of essays on angling the author says:—

"Were I to formulate a wish as to the future of these sketches, it would be that my readers might find in them one tithe of the pleasure that I have had from so many books on angling. There are volumes which I read again and again with never-failing delight.....Should some other anglers catch here and there a memory or so, a murmur of streams, a gleam of sunshine, or a thrill of spring from my pages, I shall be well satisfied."

We can answer for it that Mr. Sheringham's hope will not be disappointed, for he will, indeed, be a sour-complexioned angler, to use Walton's expression, who will not find in this little book what its author refers to so modestly and much more. At this time of the year, when the May-fly appears on many rivers and lakes in the United Kingdom, Mr. Sheringham's chapter entitled 'The Festival of the Green Drake' will prove most attractive to the angling reader, who mentally, if not fortunate enough to be able himself to enter, exclaims with our author, Ecce jamna cæli. If we are to take him seriously, Mr. Sheringham can no longer fish for pound trout with the May-fly, because with it "a fisherman caught a brace of trout weighing seven and a quarter and nine and a half pounds respectively" in one small stream he knows. He ought to have fished in those palæozoic times when, according to Sir Archibald Geikie, the May-fly had a spread of wing measuring five inches across, and could have been taken by nothing much smaller than a salmon. Might it not salve his conscience if he used one of those miniature May-flies no larger than the "large March Brown with yellow twist" with which he landed a "lovely little trout of six ounces" on the Exe? We cannot agree with Mr. Sheringham and other anglers who hold the view that "the passing of the May-fly from such a river as the Test is not an unalloyed misfortune." If all the trout in the kingdom were caught this season, our streams and lakes could easily be repopulated from the continent of Europe, or, better still, from the grand fish of New Zealand; but the May-fly is passing, and all attempts to transplant it have been failures, or at best only temporary successes. Apart from the hundreds of years of, to anglers, hallowed associations in connexion with May-fly fishing—for has not every writer since Dame Juliana Berners sung its praises?—the passing of the May-fly means a lowering in the average size and condition of the trout. No other fly can replace it; indeed, when the May-fly goes, the time, as time goes, is not long for the rest of the ephemeridæ. Unless fly culture can be made as successful as trout culture, the delightful art of fly-fishing will come to be counted among those which are lost.

To the angler—the incomplete angler, if we may venture so to call him—who cares for nothing but salmon fishing, or dry-fly fishing for trout, many of Mr. Sheringham's pleasant chapters will not appeal, for he writes as cordially of fishing for dace, chub, pike, tench, and other fish sadly misnamed coarse, as for more aristocratic fishes. A practical treatise this does not pretend to be—there are already too many of them—but it is a long time since we had a book about angling in which practical hints were so takingly varied with admirably penned pictures of the delightful surroundings of the art—the things which give it its perennial attraction, the delights of life away from town, by stream and river and lake—things to make a man “newly come from London,” as our author says, “linger over, think about.”

Mr. Walter M. Gallichan, who had already put anglers under an obligation to him for his useful books on ‘Fishing in Wales’ and ‘Fishing and Travel in Spain,’ now gives them a guide to Fishing in Derbyshire and Around (Robinson), which we can with confidence recommend to all who want information about the fascinating streams of Charles Cotton’s country. It says not a little for the healthfulness of angling that even after his eightieth year Walton used to pay a visit to Cotton, and stay at his house in Beresford Dale, on the Dove. It was a long journey on horseback from Winchester to Ashbourne for an angler of eighty. Mr. Gallichan is a good angler, he writes well, and supplies just the kind of information which is required by those seeking fishing and fishing quarters in Derbyshire. As frontispiece he gives a little map of the rivers dealt with, which, with a good index, adds to the value of this well-produced and inexpensive little work.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

‘The Times History of the War in South Africa. Edited by L. S. Amery. Vol. III. (Sampson Low & Co.)—The third volume of ‘The Times History of the War in South Africa’ comes up to the standard suggested by the author in his preface as “a thoroughly trustworthy and convincing narrative.” With the politics of Mr. Amery and his fellow-workers we have no concern, and we have to repeat with regard to them the reservation which we made in commenting on his first volume. But the military portion of his book is, we think, sound. It is easy to pick out passages in which the generals are blamed with perhaps undue severity, and doubts may be thrown upon the accounts of certain episodes—as they were, indeed, in the examination of Mr. Amery before the Commission on the War in respect of the behaviour of the cavalry at the battle of Ladysmith. We recognize, however, the military picture as substantially a true one. Mr. Amery may, indeed, claim what is known as “Irish impartiality.” He is a little inclined to be rough in his language about everybody concerned, unless it is Lord Milner and Mr. Chamberlain. Lord Roberts is, on the whole, his military hero, but the shortcomings of the Commander-in-Chief are ruthlessly exposed; and as for Mr. Balfour and the Cabinet, while the language used of them is less severe than that which describes Mr. Amery’s opinion of the Liberal party, it is hard enough in all conscience. Much waste of money during the war was caused by the invasion doctrine now abandoned; the complacency of ministerial speeches, and the credit claimed for downright blunders, are exposed for the public edification. We leave such matters aside, and proceed to deal with a few of the topics on which it may be worth while to compare the statements of ‘The Times History’ with those made in these columns in reviews of previous books upon the war.

In his treatment of the complications which arose at Kimberley between Rhodes and Col. Kekewich, Mr. Amery becomes a true historian, and displays much judgment in avoiding prepossession, and in accounting for the messages and the action of Lord Roberts.

There is a certain contradiction in the long account given of the raising of the levies dispatched to South Africa by the colonies. The author thinks that

“the spirit animating their offers was the same as that which inspired the first offers of volunteer forces in England.....But for Mr. Chamberlain the colonial offers would probably have shared the same fate.....The fact alone that the colonial contingents took a leading part in the war has set a precedent which will almost inevitably be followed, and followed on a larger scale, in any great Imperial war the justice of which appeals directly to the political conscience of the colonies.”

On the other hand, it is pointed out later that

“the idea of active participation in the wars of the Empire was not altogether a new one. As far back as 1867 Tasmania had sent a contingent to assist the Imperial forces in the Maori war. More recently a body of New South Wales troops took part in the Sudan campaign of 1885.”

Mr. Amery does not quote the many earlier examples of colonial participation in imperial wars, such as the service of the Barbadian militia in the conquest of Jamaica under Cromwell. It is, too, a notorious fact that the New South Wales contingent was accepted in 1885, at great cost, and without the probability of direct effect on operations, merely for the purpose of encouraging the efforts which had led to the colonial offer.

‘The Times History’ not only deals faithfully—as the phrase goes—with Sir Redvers Buller, but also, in the foot-notes, indulges in satire with regard to the Tugela operations. Commenting on a passage which states that “the orders estimated the total Boer force on the Upper Tugela at 7,000,” the editor remarks in a foot-note: “These were, no doubt, the figures furnished by Buller’s intelligence, which rarely over-estimated the enemy by more than 50–100 per cent.” We need hardly say that “intelligence” here means the “intelligence department” of Sir Redvers Buller’s staff.

Mr. Amery, while he attacks much of the strategy of our South African campaign, on the whole praises that of Lord Roberts; but when he comes to tactics no one escapes. The disaster of the loss of the convoy at Waterval Drift is put down chiefly to Lord Roberts’s staff, but then Lord Roberts is held personally responsible for the constitution of that staff. The failure to surround the Boers at Poplar Grove is ascribed chiefly to Sir John French and his cavalry division, but partly to the vagueness of Lord Roberts’s instructions, which the authors think showed Lord Roberts not to have made up his own mind. Lord Kitchener is described as having had little military experience, which is, of course, true; and the general remark is made, after the account of Spion Kop:—

“Of the more specific and secondary causes, the most obvious is, perhaps, the tactical inferiority of the British, from highest to lowest, compared with the Boers.”

As Mr. Amery has, rightly, a very low opinion of the efficiency of the Boer forces, and, in fact, shows that from many points of view they were a contemptible enemy, it may be gathered what is his judgment of the British army. The accounts of the war which have been written by French and German officers of high standing are far more flattering to our army. We doubt whether they are so truthful. The continental nations were anti-British, but there was a strong pro-British current among the professional armies, who thought it a bad thing for such armies that a peasant militia should be successful against regular forces.

We are inclined to doubt whether Mr. Amery succeeded in making good the charges contained in the preceding volume against the regular cavalry. But in connexion with Lord Roberts’s great flank march he has in the present volume to relate the conspicuous failure of the mounted infantry on the 16th of February, 1900. The advocates of the use in war of mounted infantry not regularly organized in battalions during peace should give their minds to Mr. Amery’s account of this unfortunate day. The forces concerned consisted of four battalions of British mounted infantry, the New South Wales mounted infantry, and portions of Roberts’s Horse, Kitchener’s Horse, and Rimington’s Guides. Under the fire of one Boer gun and one pom-pom this large force broke up, with the result of “inextricable confusion.....Fortunately the Boers made no attempt to follow up their success, but, even as it was, large numbers of horses were drowned, and the whole Mounted Infantry force completely disorganized.”

One of the most grievous of Mr. Amery’s judgments of the British army is brought home to us by a comparison of his account of Kitchener’s attack at Paardeberg with his final judgment on that battle. It is explained that Lord Kitchener, in his entire inexperience, “never quite succeeded in making his colleagues or subordinates understand what his plan was, and what part he wished them to play in it.”

Nevertheless, the conclusion is contained in the following words:—

“The defects in the conduct of the battle of Paardeberg are patent. But, after all is said and done, it remains the best conducted and most successful engagement on a large scale in the whole war.”

Fault has been found with Mr. Amery’s view of the operations in South Africa on the ground that he is unduly disposed to support generalship of what is called the “butcher” order, against the opinion of those whose conceptions lean rather towards strategy that involves enveloping movements followed by the flight or surrender of the foe. The more reasonable opinion would seem to be that such questions cannot profitably be argued in the abstract. Regard must be had to the character of the troops engaged on both sides, and to the political objects of the war. Our own army is undoubtedly a tender plant, and continental soldiers are inclined to think that our infantry in particular has become so tender a plant that it can neither be drilled nor killed. In other words, the British enlisting class will not stand the work to which a continental conscript infantry, on a two years’ colour service, is submitted. Our infantry, it is said, has not in recent years displayed, as a rule, sufficient esprit de corps to stand the amount of “hammering” which our own artillery, or the Japanese, or even the Russian infantry will bear. It is a striking fact, not very easy to explain, that although it is difficult to defend Sir Redvers Buller’s generalship, or that of many of his leading divisional and brigade commanders, against the charges brought in this volume, Buller’s infantry fought better, except perhaps at Spion Kop, than did the infantry who were commanded by generals against whom less is said by The Times historian. One matter which it is only fair to name is, that while the British infantry received in after-dinner speeches much undue praise for their conduct in South Africa, the microscopic examination to which their behaviour has been subjected by close inquiry into some of the battles of the campaign is far more searching than that to which their rivals of other nations are exposed. We mentioned in The Athenæum, some years ago, in reviewing books in which such questions were raised, the curious instance of Inkermann. The conduct of the British infantry at Inkermann was invariably held up to us as heroic, until, after a generation, there were printed portions of letters which had not been allowed to see light at the time. From these it appeared that, although the men who fought at Inkermann fought as well as possible, there was a very large proportion of the infantry who should have been engaged in that encounter who shirked and slunk away. A witness whose competence and whose accuracy are above suspicion, and who has recorded the heroism of those who fought, can now be quoted as the authority for the statement that there was throughout the morning of Inkermann a constant stream to the rear of unwounded men taking advantage of the fog. The force which evacuated Spion Kop was perhaps not inferior to its great predecessor. There was a stream of unwounded men to the rear, but perhaps in a less degree than we now know had been the case at Inkermann. The battles of the Peninsula would perhaps not stand the test which Mr. Amery and some others have applied. The matter is one of interesting historical speculation, but incapable of settlement with certainty.

Military historians are often compared with Napier. While Mr. Amery does not, perhaps, possess the simple style of Col. Henderson at his best, or provide us with passages of the magnificence of those of the finest pages of Napier, he is more searching and accurate than either, and his narrative is more interesting. In strength of language about the slips of his heroes he and those who have worked for him surpass all military historians.

Almost the only matter of actual fact in the present volume that we should be inclined to question is the statement that "Boer information about what went on in Ladysmith throughout the siege was non-existent, or was confined to what could be picked up by the examination of captured Kaffir runners or from the perusal of private letters and of descriptive articles by newspaper correspondents occasionally captured with them."

We are under the impression that the trains which ran daily to the convalescent camp, remained there for hours, and then returned, had with them persons who used to chat and drink with leading Boer farmers in the neighbourhood, who nominally took neither side, but conveyed through their Boer friends at night the information which they had picked up by day.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE & Co. publish The Far Eastern Tropics, by Mr. Alleyne Ireland, whose 'Tropical Colonisation' met with some success. His present volume will be found necessary by all who are interested in British North Borneo, Sarawak, the Malay Peninsula, French Indo-China, Java, and the Philippines. With his account of Burma and of Hong Kong we are less pleased. Mr. Ireland holds somewhat the same views as Froude on what may be called the tropical races, but includes in his unfavourable estimate the Chinese, though they are admitted by him to be mainly non-tropical. He goes too far in his account of Hong Kong when, writing apparently of "all classes," he names "disregard of promises" in such a fashion as to seem to contradict the universal experience of the probity of the Chinese merchants, which has given them the commanding position they occupy at Hong Kong and in some degree in the Straits Settlements. Mr. Ireland even denies that the Chinaman can "feel ordinary physical pain." We are not, however, in the least disposed to belittle Mr. Ireland's book. He is courageous in his outspoken comment upon all that he finds wrong even among Britons, and makes, for example, in the interests of British North Borneo, a fierce attack upon a great firm of English contractors and the consulting engineer for their conduct in relation to the railway which he describes.

In the Burma chapter, in which the principal doctrine is the unwisdom of allowing Burma to form part of India, Mr. Ireland goes somewhat out of his way to attack the Indian Government for not seeing that "a strong policy" is as much called for on the eastern frontier against France as on the north-west frontier against Russia. There is, however, one gigantic difference between the cases, which Mr. Ireland ignores. France cannot reach Indo-China except by sea, and is in fact in so feeble a military position in that great province that debate after debate has recently taken place in both Houses of the French Legislature as to how it would be possible to resist even a small Japanese expeditionary force. Without exaggerating the Russian danger, the situation of Russia in Central Asia is very different from that of France on the Burma frontier. Russia communicates by railway with the Caspian to a port in regular steam communication, by internal navigation, with almost every port of European Russia, and has two other lines of approach by railway which, although extremely long, are entirely impervious to attack. Mr. Ireland is sufficiently impartial to separate the good from the bad with scrupulous care in his excellent account of French Indo-China. The work of M. Doumer as Governor-General has been attacked or ridiculed in France, probably on account of political partisanship, as he, being a leading member of the French Parliament, accepted his former high office from his political opponents. Mr. Ireland justifies the choice of those who have recently elected M. Doumer to two of the highest positions in the Republic.

In his account of Java Mr. Ireland has the field less to himself than in the portions of the volume to which we have hitherto referred. The Dutch rule in Java has been the subject of careful examination by many writers, such, for example, as M. Chailley-Bert. Mr. Ireland has an excellent bibliography for all his chapters. One of the writings upon Java which he notes is a little tract which is named respectfully by all those who have written on the island, and especially by the considerable French author to whom we have referred. The late Mr. Henry Scott Boys had been a Commissioner in British India, and when he visited Java towards the end of his career, he brought to the consideration of its institutions the trained mind of the Indian civilian, and noted the exact points of similarity and difference between two interesting systems. Mr. Ireland's chapter on the Philippines should be read by every American politician. The general public in this country is altogether unaware of the enormous numbers of the native population and of their remarkable intelligence, and there is some reason to fear that our American friends will have to face serious trouble unless they adopt a good deal of Mr. Ireland's advice. Our author may be listened to where others would not, inasmuch as he does not run counter to the ordinary view on the subject of the tropical races.

MR. ROBERT LAMB spent five years as a medical missionary in the New Hebrides, and he has rendered an interesting account of his experiences in Saints and Savages (Blackwood). We cannot quite approve of his method, which seems to consist in throwing parts of the book into the form of fiction. Thus, we should judge that the first part, which describes the education of a young man in New Zealand, and his subsequent training in Edinburgh for the work of a mission, is largely autobiographical. But Mr. Lamb will have it as fiction. Elsewhere he relates his personal experiences, and his observations deserve the respect due to first-hand information. He is naturally opposed to the deportation of Kanakas, and urges their physical unfitness:—

"These natives are not constituted for such hard work. We as missionaries live with them, study them, and know them.....Look at those 'boys' on the jetty yonder. One of them came to me with a ruptured vessel at the back of the eye. He was carrying a sack of potatoes, and suddenly went blind in that eye. Another was lifting a sack of flour and strained his back. Inflammation followed, and he was carried to hospital.....It is the same with the natives who go to Queensland. They can't stand the long hours and the sudden changes of climate; and you know the great reproach against the trade is that it kills three or four Kanakas to one white man. Their tissues are too soft. They get consumption, come home to die, and infect their fellows. Look at Aneityum. Five thousand people there have dwindled down to some five hundred. The same dismal fate apparently awaits them all. Of six young men who joined one of our mission stations a few years ago, all about the same age, and apparently in good health, four are dead; these deaths seemingly due to the extra strain thrown upon their physical and mental powers by contact with white men."

Mr. Lamb has no opinion of the future of the islanders. He considers that they are "widely infected," and are destined to fade before a "hardier race, brown or white." Was this one of the groups which Dr. Reich thinks should have been absorbed by the Japanese? But Mr. Lamb, as was to be expected, is more concerned with the social and religious side of the life than the political. His book is a series of detached impressions, from which one can get a fair picture of the native life. It is not a solid piece of work. The author is apparently uninterested in ethnological and other questions. But he has a sense of humour for which we are grateful. He stands for the Presbyterian Church; but there is also a Roman Catholic mission on the islands. A native teacher came into conflict with one of the priests, and the two contended for the allegiance of the chief and people of a certain village:—

"In a small way the battle of Whitby was fought over again. As on that occasion in England's history, so here, they [the priests] asserted their superiority: 'We hold the keys, and your church is no church at all.' We had tried to instil into our boys the truth—that faith is the key, and that he who is possessed of Peter's faith holds a duplicate for himself and others. But the teacher was not to be outdone. 'Choose,' he said to the people, 'choose whom you will follow. But let me remind you that Mary is French, and that Jesus Christ is English!'"

Mr. Lamb, as will be seen, is no bigot, though a steadfast holder to his own faith. He has praise for the work of other creeds than his own. But his book is more valuable for the pathetic picture of the fading black man that emerges from it than for anything else.

William Rathbone: a Memoir. By Eleanor F. Rathbone. (Macmillan.)—The Rathbones have been settled in Liverpool for five generations. William, the great-great-grandfather of the subject of this memoir, set up a saw-mill there shortly previous to 1730. In time he became a timber-merchant and a shipowner, and all his direct successors up to the present day have been members of the firm which he then founded. His son was a typical Quaker merchant of the eighteenth century. He used to relate how when he was just grown up an old lady, an elder in the Society, said to him:—

"William, thou art a man now. Thou wilt be thinking of taking a wife. Now, do thou look out for a wife with a natural good temper. Religion comes and goes, but a natural good temper is there always."

In 1784 his firm imported the first consignment of American cotton landed in England. It came in eight bales and three barrels. It did not easily find a purchaser, being of a longer staple than the cotton then in use. In his old age he became an ardent Abolitionist, and in 1788 he and his son were among the first eighteen members of the Liverpool branch of the Society for the Abolition of the Slave Trade. This was at a time when the trade was regarded as the mainspring of the prosperity of the port, and it was predicted that if the Abolitionists succeeded, the grass would soon grow in the streets of the town. On his death in 1789 he was succeeded by his son, the fourth William Rathbone. He was essentially a fighter, and was one of the Liverpool "Friends of Freedom," their leader being Roscoe. He incurred much odium among his fellow-citizens on account of his opposition to the slave trade. He also denounced the war. The Society of Friends took offence at a book he published, and "a testimony of disunion was brought against him." Christianity he considered "of all subjects the most proper for a strictly rigorous and rational examination. Its pretensions are high, and its evidences should therefore be strong." He was always far from being robust, and he died at the early age of fifty-one, after months of terrible suffering; but his spirit remained unsubdued, and within a few days of the end, while perfectly resigned, he said with energy, "But I love the world, and should have wished to stay longer in it." His widow, who survived him thirty years, resided after his death at Green Bank, and Chorley, in his autobiography, gives an account of his visit there in 1819, and remembered through life her welcome to "the awkward, scared, nervous child who entered her home": "It is to me one of the recollections which mark a life, as having decided its aims, by encouraging its sympathies." Her son Mr. Benson Rathbone also gave him timely sympathy, and his friendship, until his premature death, was most helpful. Chorley never forgot his kindness, and he left the bulk of his property to the son of his old friend. Writing to him on December 29th, 1855, he states, "You would not find it easy to believe how often and how affectionately I think of you and your happy household." The affection with which he always regarded the Rathbone family was so great that it is hardly in good taste for the writer of this memoir to refer to Chorley's description as being "couched in a style of whimsically affectionate eulogy."

William Rathbone, the subject of the memoir, was born on February 11th, 1819. He was for three years apprenticed to Nicol, Duckworth & Co., merchants in the Bombay and Mediterranean trade, and afterwards went to study at Heidelberg. On his return to England, in order that he might see something of business in a large London house, he was taken into the office of Messrs. Baring Bros. With Mr. Bates, then the senior partner, he visited America, and on his return entered the Rathbone firm. He was a man of

"impulsive and dynamic temperament, high principled and unselfish of purpose; he had no taste for personal luxury, and a strong sense of frugality. At the same time he observed the weight given to a man's words or principles was greatly determined by the skill which he had shown in the management of his own affairs."

The memoir gives full record of his useful life. The services he rendered to Liverpool will be held in lasting remembrance. On March 6th, 1902, he passed quietly away, a little less than a month after his eighty-third birthday. His last words were, "Never, never, anything but kindness and generosity from all my friends." The book is illustrated by many characteristic portraits.

MESSRS. DUCKWORTH & Co. publish an English edition of Dr. William Everett's lectures, delivered at the Lowell Institute of Boston, on The Italian Poets since Dante. The subject is a good one; for though probably no other literature can show a single name as far greater than all others as Italian can do in Dante by comparison with all who have followed him, the mass of literature in that language is considerable, and many of its poets, though far from the first rank in the whole world's list, must be reckoned with by any one who would take anything approaching to an adequate survey of European literature.

Dr. Everett's survey, indeed, embraces only about a dozen names, and treats those for the most part rather sketchily; but it may have served the modest purpose professed by the author of leading some lovers of Italian to read those whom he does not name. When, however, he tells us that no attempt has been made to recast the lectures in a less rhetorical form, we are tempted to ask, Why not? Mild jokes like the suggestion that the Ferrar of the old romance was a direct ancestor of Admiral Farragut, or that the enchanted armour "renews itself like Mayflower furniture," hardly deserve a permanent form; nor is the author's opinion of 'Leaves of Grass' exactly called for in a criticism of Pulci. There are more passages than one of which the English is very questionable; and there are too many positive blunders, which revision might have removed. "The sack of Rome by Bourbon," for example, seems to imply oblivion of the fact that Cellini's lucky shot had prevented the famous traitor from taking a hand in the subsequent proceedings of his army. Alexander de' Medici is not commonly supposed to have died by poison; nor had Berni's death any connexion with his. Berni himself is not known to have employed the ottava rima to any great extent, except in his rifacimento of Boiardo's poem, a work which, in spite of certain very interesting passages, we should not agree with Dr. Everett in considering more inspired than the original. The following sentence, referring to Torquato Tasso, contains more blunders than lines:—

"In his childhood his father left his home, out of loyalty to a friend who had been exiled for a political uprising, and departed with him to the Court of France, as a result of which Bernardo Tasso was deprived of his property and his civic rights."

There was no uprising; Sanseverino was not exiled, but transferred his services from the Imperial to the French cause of himself; Tasso went to France, not with him, but as his agent; and his property had been confiscated at least four years before he went there. Since more space is allotted to Tasso than to any other writer treated of in the volume, his father's history might have been more carefully got up. Ariosto was born at Reggio, not at Modena—the fact was perhaps not unimportant as turning his thoughts to the Orlando story which a governor of Reggio had begun—and neither Modena nor Reggio is in Romagna, nor was either ever "invaded" by Caesar Borgia. Dr. Everett tells us, no doubt with perfect truth, that the poems which he discusses have been read by him entire and in their native text. That is all to the good, and he is scholar enough to know the value of it. But there is a scholarship in history also, and to the student of a literature it is of great importance to get the "environment" accurately. Why has Dr. Everett killed Prof. Carducci? So far from having died in the spring of 1904, we have the best authority for believing that he was alive and well a few weeks ago.

Dr. William Everett is considered, by many who have heard him, to be as great an orator as was his father, Edward Everett, the American statesman. Oratory, like poetry, is not one of the accurate arts. He doubtless loves his heroes, and we must not hold him more closely to the texts than Homeric scholars held Gladstone.

FROM Messrs. Williams & Norgate comes a cheap and revised edition of Herbert Spencer's Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. We are glad to see that the forty-six thousandth copy has been reached. The cheap edition was first issued in 1878, owing to the success which had attended the original issue, and the demand for it in translations abroad; and the present edition includes the author's last corrections, made within a year of his death. Spencer's views on education are well known, and it may be claimed for him that he was the pioneer of the modern exponents of education, represented by such writers as Sir Oliver Lodge. His standpoint was steadfastly practical, and entirely divorced from sentimental considerations; and the explanation of the popularity of his treatise is its foundation on common sense. Spencer's methods, indeed, are the triumph of common sense. For example, how characteristic is this passage:—

"Not long since we had frequently to hear the reprimands visited on a little girl who was scarcely ever ready in time for the daily walk.....the governess and the other children had almost invariably to wait; and from the mamma there almost invariably came the same scolding. Utterly as this system failed, it never occurred to the mamma to let Constance experience the natural penalty.....In the world unreadiness entails the loss of some advantage that would else have been gained: the train is gone; or the steamboat is just leaving its moorings; or the best things in the market are sold.....Is not the inference obvious? Should not the prospective deprivations control a child's conduct also? If Constance is not ready at the appointed time, the natural result is that of being left behind and losing her walk."

A MORE elaborate family pedigree it would be impossible to find than that which forms the appendix of Leaves from the Past (Arrow-smith), which is in effect the six months' diary of one John Allen, sometime brewer of Wapping, edited by his great-grandson, Clement Young Sturge. All the branches of the Allen family are here piously set down and enumerated. The work has clearly demanded much research and more patience. It seems estimably done, and if all the Allens and their agnates are interested enough to purchase this book, it should have a great success. But, to say the truth, it is of no public interest. John Allen seems to have been an honest brewer and a good Quaker, but his diary is not illuminating, consisting as it does constantly of such items of information as "dried brown malt most of this day," or "Brewd ale this day and had a deal work to do." The book is nicely got up, and, as a family record, is above reproach.

It is clear that we are invited to accept Mrs. Edith Barnett's A Garden of Eden (Constable) as autobiographical. The book is dedicated to "my dear old nurse and to my sister, who have begged me to write this book for them"; and its sub-title is topographically explanatory: "Kempton Park once upon a time." We gather, then, that once upon a time—forty years ago, it would appear—the author and a sister inhabited as children a piece of Middlesex over which many changes have passed. It is the aim of this narrative to recall and rebuild that Eden of childish fancy. How far away and how different are the eyes of childhood from the eyes of maturity! Did what these little girls, Adam and Eve, saw in their enchanted garden really exist? It is astonishing how disproportionate are facts to the mirage of them in one's memory. Yet when we read that in those days Middlesex still boasted much common land, we are face to face with veritable facts. "Eve can well remember that ague was not an unknown complaint up near the common." Forty years over, let Michaelmas pass, and you shall witness a revolution; and

There where the long street roars has been
The stillness of the central sea.

This winnowing from the past is a pleasant recreation, and a sad, for it has its pains. Can Mrs. Barnett bear to look on Kempton Park now, on a bright Bank Holiday, with the roaring crowd she remembers even in those pristine days on Molesey Heath? The past wins its glory from being far, but we are glad that the nurse and the sister had their way. For they have inspired a delightful little book, full of charm and tender sentiment.

MR. W. W. WEECH'S Lothian Essay on Urban VIII. (Constable) shows considerable research, but very little originality of mind. It presents a clear view of the activities of this exceedingly active Pope, and rather minimizes his French leanings. It certainly deserved the prize. We are not so sure that it was worth publication. But it can "do no one any harm" to read it, as Creighton once remarked of a somewhat similar effort.

WE are pleased to see a cheap edition of the late Mr. Vandam's excellent translation of Sastrow's Journal, describing social life in the age of the Reformation. Messrs. Constable are to be congratulated on the success of this book, and the introduction of Mr. Herbert Fisher will help the uninformed.

Stories of King Arthur and his Knights: retold from Malory's 'Morte Darthur.' By U. Waldo Cutler. (Harrap.)—Mr. Cutler's summary of Malory is a very satisfactory retelling of the old story, having regard to the audience he sets before himself, and we can recommend it heartily as a gift-book. The cover is well designed, and the book is illustrated by well-chosen reproductions from Rossetti, Burne-Jones, Watts, and Mr. Frank T. Merrill, and by photographs of Mr. Forbes-Robertson (as Lancelot), of the Round Table at Winchester, of Glastonbury, &c. Young readers will find some difficulty in reconciling the Rossetti drawing of 1858, labelled 'Queen Guenever,' with the frontispiece labelled 'Guenever,' the inclusion of which, indeed, excites some wonder at the editor's catholicity of taste.

MESSRS. DENT & CO. have added Villette, 2 vols., to their attractive illustrated edition of the Brontë novels.

ONE volume in Mr. Fisher Unwin's Shilling Reprints of Standard Novels is occupied by two stories by Mrs. Craigie, A Study in Temptation and A Bundle of Life. They make an excellent shillingworth, being good examples of that bitter-sweet style which is the author's secret.

MR. HEINEMANN should secure a large sale for The Rivals, School for Scandal, and The Critic in his "Favourite Classics" series. The little volumes are tasteful in appearance, and each has an introduction by Mr. Gosse and a portrait. What more could be expected for sixpence, even in the new Utopia, we do not know.

Printers' Pie, which is sold for the benefit of the Printers' Pension Corporation, is the third annual volume of the sort, and needs no commendation by this time. It is published at the offices of The Sphere and The Tatler, and Mr. W. Hugh Spottiswoode, who is responsible for its contents, has secured a galaxy of authors and artists. It should be bought as well as talked about—in fact, one can do good to a charity by getting an article at far below cost price, surely a remarkable chance of evading the doctrine that virtue is its own punishment.

WE have received a copy of a Field Service Pocket-Book (Harrison & Sons), which is thoroughly suited to its purpose. The author, who is, we are told, a mounted infantryman of the Inns of Court V.R.C., has turned to account his own experience. The book is literally not too big for the pocket of a uniform: between its covers of waterproof canvas (or of pigskin for those who can afford leathern luxury) you shall find all you need for march and manœuvre—a sufficiency (not, as usual, an encyclopædia) of printed information, and, in a booklet that can be removed and renewed, 100 leaves of good tough paper (manufactured by the O.W. Paper and Arts Company) for notes and orders, with carbon sheets for duplication, and a case for the official envelopes. We commend it in all honesty to the pockets of practical soldiers, for it is as cheap and durable as it is portable.

WE have on our table Catalog of the Gardiner Greene Hubbard Collection of Engravings presented to the Library of Congress, compiled by A. J. Parsons (Washington, U.S. Government Printing Office).—The Bahama Islands, edited by G. B. Shattuck (Macmillan).—The Country Gentleman's Estate Book, 1905, edited by W. Broomhall (2, Waterloo Place, S.W.).—The History of Pembroke Dock, by Mrs. Stuart Peters (Stock).—The United States of America, by E. E. Sparks, Part I. (Putnam).—Kummer's Quartic Surface, by R. W. H. T. Hudson (Cambridge, University Press).—Problems of the Panama Canal, by Brigadier-General H. L. Abbot (Macmillan).—Graphs for Beginners, by W. Jamieson, (Blackie).—The Simplest Cure, by F. M. Burnett (Lawrence & Bullen).—The Trade Policy of Great Britain and her Colonies since 1860, by C. J. Fuchs, translated by C. H. M. Archibald (Macmillan).—Technical Education in Evening Schools, by C. H. Creasey (Sonnenschein).—The Mysteries of Schoedering Hall, by Mrs. Ensell (Burleigh).—The Evolution of the World and of Man, by G. E. Boxall (Fisher Unwin).—Journals of the Continental Congress, 1774-1789, edited from the original records in the Library of Congress, 2 vols. (Washington, U.S. Government Printing Office).—The Century Magazine, Vol. XLVII. (Macmillan).—Free Opinions, by Marie Corelli (Constable).—Ground Ivy, by M. Swan (Brown & Langham).—The Fate of Ralph Erard, by C. Fleming (Digby & Long).—Marjorie's Mistake, by Bertha Miniken (Edinburgh, Morton).—First in the Field, by Ellen A. Smith (Digby & Long).—The Story of Fatmah, by M. J. Street and Sorella (S.S.U.).—A Girl's Garden, by M. M. Rankin (Melrose).—The Intellect and the Heart, and other Sermons, by the Right Rev. G. A. Chadwick (Nisbet).—Truth in Conflict with the Creeds, by J. A. Bowman (Simpkin).—A New Medea: a Drama in Blank Verse, by T. Pinkerton (Sonnenschein).—Mahasena: a Play in Three Acts, by M. Baring (Oxford, Blackwell).—Mon Féminisme, by S. Poirson (Paris, Bernard).—and N. Hawthorne, sa Vie et son Œuvre, by L. Dhaleine (Paris, Hachette). Among New Editions we have Modern Civic Art; or, the City made Beautiful, by C. M. Robinson (Putnam).—A School Manual of English Grammar, with Exercises and Examination Questions, by T. D. Hall (Murray).—Remarkable Comets, by W. T. Lynn (Low).—A Book of Prayers and Hymns for Private Use (S.P.C.K.).—Bible Light on Holy Sleepers, by E. J. A. (Thynne).—Immortality, and other Sermons, by the Rev. A. W. Momerie (Allenson).—and Taken from the Enemy, by H. Newbolt (Chatto & Windus).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Charlesworth (G.), Sermonic Suggestions, cr. 8vo, 3/ net.
Hazlitt (W. C.), Man considered in Relation to God and a Church, 8vo, 6/
McClure (J. G. K.), Loyalty the Soul of Religion, 3/6 net.
Ottley (R. L.), The Religion of Israel, cr. 8vo, 4/
Stimson (H. A.), The Right Life and How to Live It, 3/6 net.
Talling (M. P.), Intercommunion with God, 3/6 net.
Wirgman (A. T.), The Blessed Virgin and all the Company of Heaven, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Fowler (R.) and Thomas (E.), Beautiful Wales, 8vo, 20/ net.
Ivories, by A. Maskell, roy. 8vo, 25/ net.
Raphael, by A. R. Dryhurst, 16mo, 2/6 net.
Walters (H. B.), History of Ancient Pottery: Greek, Etruscan, and Roman, based on Samuel Birch, 2 vols. illustrated, roy. 8vo, 63/ net.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Kennedy (M. L. B.), St. John the Baptist, and other Poems, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.

Music.

- Gilman (L.), Phases of Modern Music, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.

History and Biography.

- Fairlee (J. A.), The National Administration of the United States of America, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Gower (Hon. F. Leveson), Bygone Years, 8vo, 12/ net.
Haggard (A. C. P.), The Regent of the Roués, 8vo, 16/ net.
Leicester (Records of the Borough of), edited by M. Bateson, revised by W. H. Stevenson and J. E. Stocks, Vol. 3, roy. 8vo, 25/ net.
McKenzie (F. A.), From Tokyo to Tiflis, 8vo, 7/6 net.
Times' History of the War in South Africa (The), 1899-1902, edited by L. S. Amery, Vol. 3, 8vo, 21/ net (sets only).

Geography and Travel.

- Kelly's Directory of Herefordshire and Shropshire, 1905, 20/ St. Lawrence Basin and its Border Lands, by S. E. Dawson, 8vo, 7/6

Sports and Pastimes.

- Beason (E. F.) and Miles (E. H.), Diversions Day by Day, 4/ Vardon (H.), The Complete Golfer, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Philology.

- Forbes (A. R.), Gaelic Names of Beasts (Mammalia), Birds, Fishes, &c.: I. Gaelic-English; II. English-Gaelic, 8vo, 12/6 net.

Science.

- Archives of the Middlesex Hospital, Vol. 5, sewed, 5/ net.
Heath (T. E.), Our Stellar Universe, narrow 8vo, 3/ net.
Heller (W. M.) and Ingold (E. G.), Elementary Experimental Science, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Prelini (C.), Earth and Rock Excavation, roy. 8vo, 16/ net.

General Literature.

- Alexander (W.), The Life Insurance Company, 6/ net.
Bancroft's Americans in London, 1905, edited by W. B. Bancroft, cr. 8vo, 5/
Baring (M.), A Doctor in Corduroy, cr. 8vo, 6/
Beddoe (D. M.), The Honour of Henri De Valois, cr. 8vo, 6/
Bradby (G. F.), The Marquis's Eye, cr. 8vo, 6/
Dawe (C.), The Grand Duke, cr. 8vo, 6/
Diehl (A. M.), Bread upon the Waters, cr. 8vo, 6/
Fletcher (J. S.), Grand Relations, cr. 8vo, 6/
Forbes (Lady H.), It's a Way they have in the Army, 6/
Furniss (H.), Poverty Bay, illustrated by the Author, extra cr. 8vo, 6/
Gallon (T.), Lagden's Luck, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Greenwood (J.), Among the Cranks, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Hobbes (John Oliver), The Flute of Pan, cr. 8vo, 6/
Holmes (A. H.), The Pride of Mrs. Bruelle, cr. 8vo, 6/
Howard (K.), Love in June, cr. 8vo, 6/
Hume (F.), The Scarlet Bat, cr. 8vo, 6/
Kenyon (B. C.), The Heroes of Moss Hall School, extra cr. 8vo, 3/6
Mason (C. M.), Ourselves, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Meadows (A. M.), I Charge You Both, cr. 8vo, 6/
More (P. E.), Shelburne Essays, Second Series, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
My Garden in the City of Gardens, cr. 8vo, 6/
Phipson (C. B.), Britain's Destiny, Growth or Decay, 3/6
Pollock (D.), The Shipbuilding Industry, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Printers' Pie, 1to, sewed, 1/ net.
Scalen (K.), Stories and Essays, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Sheil (M. P.), The Yellow Wave, cr. 8vo, 6/
Shorter (D. S.), The Country House Party, ex. cr. 8vo, 6/
Syrett (N.), The Day's Journey, cr. 8vo, 6/
Wagner (C.), The Better Way, trans. by M. L. Hendee, 3/6

FOREIGN.

Theology.

- Zwolowski (S.), De Bibliis Polonicis usque ad Initium Sæculi XVII., 3m.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Furtwängler (A.) u. Reichhold (K.), Griechische Vasenmalerei, Part 1, 40m.
Mauclair (C.), De Watteau à Whistler, 3fr. 50.
Nouvelles Constructions de Nancy, 35fr.

Philosophy.

- Gourmont (R. de), Promenades Philosophiques, 3fr. 50.

History and Biography.

- Bourgin (H.), Fourier, 12fr.
Daragon (H.), S.M. Alphonse XIII. à Paris, 4fr.
Gomel (C.), Histoire Financière de la Législative et de la Convention, Vol. 2, 7fr. 50.
Hofmann (R.), Dr. Georg Agricola, 3m.
Lenotre (G.), Le Drame de Varennes, Juin, 1791, 5fr.
Levison (W.), Vita Sancti Bonifatii, Archiepiscopi Moguntini, 5m.
Maillard (F.), La Cité des Intellectuels, 3fr. 50.
Pagès (G.), Le Grand Electeur et Louis XIV., 1660-88, 10fr. ; Contributions à l'Histoire de la Politique Française en Allemagne sous Louis XIV., 3fr.
Vèze (R.), La Galanterie Parisienne au XVIII. Siècle, 15fr.

Geography and Travel.

- Gayet (A.), Coins d'Égypte Ignorés, 3fr. 50.
Huert (J.), En Amérique: de San Francisco au Canada, 3fr. 50.

Philology.

- Blach (S.), Die Schriftsprache in der Londoner Paulsschule zu Anfang des XVI. Jahrh., 2m.
Wagner (C.), Beiträge zur lateinischen Grammatik u. zur Erklärung lateinischer Schriftsteller, Part 1, 1m. 50.

Science.

- Demeny (G.), Physiologie des Professions: Le Violoniste, 2fr. 50.
Gautier (E.), Le Phonographe, 2fr. 50.
Noahat (H.), Les Torpilles et les Mines Sous-marines, 8fr.
Ray (E. Le), Du Rôle de la Végétation dans l'Évolution du Paludisme, 14fr.

General Literature.

- Chevalier (O.), Le Chevalier Jehan des Vignes, 3fr. 50.
Gilbert (E.), France et Belgique: Études Littéraires, 3fr. 50.
Herbeville (M. d'), Messieurs les Disciples de Saint Hubert: Récits de Chasse, 3fr. 50.
Noailles (Comtesse M. de), La Domination, 3fr. 50.
Pouvillon (E.), Petites Gens, 3fr. 50.
Russier (H.), Le Partage de l'Océanie, 7fr. 50.
Thiery (M.), Mr. Marcel, 3fr. 50.

LAMB'S LETTERS.

YOUR reviewer counts it to me for a virtue that I have supplied the true reading "pruna varia," instead of the impossible "pruna nana," in Lamb's Latin letter to Barton. Alas! I must accept the praise with gratification dashed by knowledge and doubt. Lamb may have meant to write "pruna varia," and I hope he did; but what he wrote was certainly "pruna nana," even as all the editors have it, save one. That one saw reason to pause over a piece of mystical Latinity, and invoked the learned to interpret it if they could. His appeal brought forth responses generous and ingenious, none of them, however, claiming to be satisfactory. In the midst of these consultations "varia" occurred to the editor himself as a likely original for "nana," and some circumstances that need not be gone into here favoured the surmise. Therefore he entered that emendation upon the proof provisionally, intending to make a special journey to examine the MS. with his own eyes, and so "mak sikkar" as to that word before passing the last proof. The too summary closing of his labours precluded doing this; and so what he regarded as merely a forcible private memorandum, a subjective and provisional conjecture of his own, was rapt into literature—or at least surprised into print—where your reviewer has found it, among the accidents of an editor.

But the accident being cancelled, the mystery reappears: What did Lamb mean by "pruna nana"? Further on in the same letter he says: "Ænigma mihi hoc solvas, et Œdipus fies"—and the dictum seems, under the circumstances, clean wasted on the simple and inferior riddle which there follows. I am disposed, upon the whole, to find Œdipus in the Cambridge savant (personally unknown to me) who modestly submits that Lamb may have intended to suggest some sympathetic lapse into nursery language, some infantile expression of naïve gusto, by reduplicating the ultimate of "pruna": as who should say, in English, "plum-um-ms." What tells against this conjecture is the fact that the two words are not hyphenated in the manuscript, "nana" being separately written with painful precision. Again, were it not that the one word is plural and the other singular, we might have supposed Lamb was amusing himself by writing a sort of English-Latin, making a noun in apposition have the value of an adjective: as we say "spring cabbage," "dwarf rose." In that case we might suppose that his secret soul was rejoicing in the thought of a new version unsuspected by B. B., viz., "He put in his Thumbkin And drew out a Plumkin," &c. But this, I confess, is very bad; so I leave the business to Œdipus.

As to the 'American Farmer,' your reviewer is right in his identification of the book, and yet confuses the book with another of the same (or a similar) name in a curious way. First, there were the famous letters signed "Farmer," which began to appear in a Pennsylvania newspaper in the later part of 1767. They were not written by Franklin, but by a former opponent of his, John Dickinson. Franklin had them published in this country in 1768, and wrote a commendatory preface. Lord Hillsborough, the Colonial Secretary, had angrily accused him of being the writer of the 'Letters'; but in March, 1768, Franklin did not even know who the writer was, nor did he quite share his views. In the following year a translation appeared in France, where the tendency to detect the pen of Franklin in any notable pro-American article or pamphlet was even stronger than in England. As to the second book, the brief version of its very long title is "Letters of an American Farmer," by J. Hector St. John." This was the book which Hazlitt praised, and which Mary Lamb wanted to read. Crèvecoeur was not a pseudonym, but the author's real name, which never appeared upon the book. The book was published (in London) in 1782, and was one of the most widely famed books of its time, and influential withal.

W. MACDONALD.

Epworth.

HIPPOCRAS is undoubtedly "a medicinal drink," as Mr. Lucas says in his edition of Lamb's 'Letters'; and though, as compared with the fabled hippocrène, it may be also "a strong drink," it certainly has not very much alcoholic strength if made according to any of the formulæ known to me. That in Alleyne's 'Dispensary,' 1733, called 'Bates's Hippocras,' is recommended "in paralytic and apoplectic dispositions"; and, indeed, in all nervous cases."

C. C. BELL.

*.* We have to thank Mr. Macdonald for clearing up the confusion in our account of the 'American Farmer':—a mistake due to the misconstruction of an ambiguous passage in Hazlitt's article on 'American Literature' (Edin. Rev., Oct., 1829), where the names Franklin and Hector St. John occur in close juxtaposition. It is sad to learn that varia is, after all, but an unsupported conjecture: sure enough, nana appears in the autograph. Possibly Lamb meant to write rara, but inadvertently suffered his pen automatically to repeat the na of the preceding pruna. However this may be, a bracketed sic should surely follow nana in the printed texts. We tender the proper apologies to Mr. Lucas.

CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS.

Mount Verdon House, Cork, May 30th, 1905.

THE discussion on the above has wandered not a little from the interesting point raised by your first correspondent, viz., Is it a fact that in certain West Indian islands there is current among the coloured inhabitants a dialect containing debased Gaelic elements—not, of course, English with a droll Irish brogue, as the guide-book quoted by your correspondent puts it—which Gaelic elements were introduced by the Irish women and children sold into slavery by the Cromwellian Government? The belief that such is the case is widespread in Ireland, and not unknown to seamen.

As to the facts of the deportation of many Irish to the West Indies, Prendergast in his 'Cromwellian Settlement' gives specific instances which show, if his authorities are reliable, that many were actually deported. Thus on p. 323 (edition of 1875) he quotes a letter, dated December 8th, 1655, from the Commissioners for Ireland to the Governor of Barbadoes, "advising him of the approach of a ship with a cargo of proprietors deprived of their lands, and then seized for not transplanting [i.e., Irish landlords!], or banished for having no visible means of support." Again (p. 338), because two men were murdered near the castle of Lackagh, in Kildare, Mr. Henry Fitzgerald, of Lackagh, and his wife Margery (both of the house of Kildare), their son Maurice, their daughters Margery and Bridget, and Mary, widow of their eldest son Henry, and all the rest of the inhabitants of Lackagh, in all twenty-one women and sixteen men, were seized and delivered to Capt. Coleman of the Wexford frigate for transportation to Barbadoes. They were assigned to the correspondents of Mr. Norton, a Bristol merchant. This is given on the contemporary authority of Fr. Peter Walsh, and seems pretty circumstantial. Fr. Walsh says that Mr. and Mrs. Fitzgerald were four score years of age and upwards.

On p. 90 he quotes Morison's 'Threnodia Hiberno-Catholica' for the fate of the three beautiful daughters of Mr. Daniel Connery, of Claro, who in Morison's presence was banished by Ingoldsby in 1657 for harbouring a priest. The daughters were sent to Barbadoes.

Mr. Gardiner, after discussing the evidence for the transportation, holds that there is no proof that some of the projects were carried out; for instance, the order made in October, 1655, to transport one thousand boys and one thousand "wenches" from Galway to Jamaica, cited by Prendergast on p. 93. Nor does Prendergast give any authority for his statement on p. 92 that 6,400 Irish in all were transported. But that there was some transportation, especially of the upper classes,* and of young women seems clear from the other cases he gives.

No doubt by a printer's error, Dr. Mahaffy is made to refer to "crowds of Irish peasants" as being the persons thus shipped, or supposed to be shipped, to the West Indies.

The Cromwellian Government was too busy dealing with landlords and "swordmen" to have time or inclination to meddle with the lower orders, unless they were vagrants or destitute persons. The constant tradition in Ireland is that those sold into slavery in the West Indies belonged largely to the upper classes.

W. BUTLER.

Vienna, 1. Parkring, 4, May 29th, 1905.

MR. DENNEHY has not apparently followed Prof. Mahaffy's well-meant advice to read Gardiner's 'History of the Commonwealth.' Had he done so he would soon have convinced himself that it was not a question of "views." On the contrary, he would have found all the evidence we possess on the subject carefully weighed by a trained historian, and he would probably have agreed with his conclusion that there is no reason to doubt that, in common with English and Scottish prisoners, numbers of Irish men and women, boys and girls, were transported to the island of Barbados by the Government of the Commonwealth, partly as reprieved individuals, partly under the pretext of vagabondage. On this point, therefore, there is no difference between him and Petty. The only question is whether they were sent as slaves or as servants. Technically the evidence is in favour of the latter view, but Gardiner admits that in any case their lot was a hard one. Here it may be remarked that Prendergast damaged his account of the business by certain insinuations which are the real cause of ill-feeling on the subject. Of a transportation to Jamaica before 1655 there was, and could be, no question. The order addressed in that year to the Irish Government for 1,000 boys and 1,000 girls to be sent thither as settlers had its parallel in Scotland. In the latter country the project was quashed by Broghill; and all the evidence we possess goes to show that not a single soul left Ireland for Jamaica in consequence of that order.

The questions raised by Mr. Stockley in his letter of April 29th (The Athenæum, No. 4044) that originated this correspondence are of some interest. There was no doubt considerable passing to and fro among the settlers in the Windward Islands both during the Commonwealth period and afterwards, extending even to the mainland of America, which would easily account for Irish families being found in Montserrat. The fact (if it be one) rather confirms Gardiner's view that the transported persons were treated as servants.

By the way, Mr. Dennehy should verify his references. I have read the letter from Ormonde to Byron (Carte, 'Original Letters,' ii. 412) to which he refers in his letter of May 13th (The Athenæum, No. 4046), and there is nothing in it about the "thirty survivors" of the sack of Drogheda being "shipped to the West Indies to be sold as slaves." Moreover I would point out that the correspondence to which he refers as being preserved in Dublin

* See also pp. 145 and 146 of Prendergast for an order dated 1658 re the transporting to Barbadoes of 80 or 100 persons refusing to "transplant," and the letter consigning 12 of them to a certain Mr. Edward Smyth or his assigns.

Castle has years ago been transferred to the Public Record Office in the Four Courts. I think I can conscientiously say I have read every word of it, and endorse everything that Gardiner has written on the subject.

ROBERT DUNLOP.

CANNING.

THE reviewer of Mr. Temperley's 'Canning' writes:—

"I need hardly say that I had no thought of imputing literary dishonesty to Mr. Temperley. Life is short. The mass of literature relating to Canning is great, and a young writer may be excused for making his selection to some extent on the judgment of his predecessors. Hill's words are: 'An anonymous work, "Memoirs of the Right Hon. George Canning," published in 1828, apparently as a bookseller's speculation..... is a fairly executed compilation from his speeches from the "Annual Register." Mr. Temperley has: "The Memoirs of George Canning," a bookseller's venture, consisting chiefly of press-cuttings (1828).' Neither gives the title with absolute accuracy, but Hill is nearest; and it is clear that Mr. Temperley's description might have been written with no further knowledge than that derived from Hill.

"As to the 'Sôt Privé,' I had, for the moment, forgotten the letter of December 14th, 1824. But it does not convince me that the joke was not of home manufacture. To make it himself, and ascribe it to 'the French,' is quite in Canning's manner. It occurs again in a letter of three days later to Lord Granville, where, indeed, Augustus Stapleton annotates 'A Paris joke'; but Lady Granville, in whose letters, if anywhere, we should expect to find it recorded, does not allude to it. My '[sic]' of course referred to the misspelling, which may have been Canning's own, or may have been E. J. Stapleton's. Augustus Stapleton has it right."

'DICTIONARY OF INDIAN BIOGRAPHY.'

(Fourth List.)

May 27th, 1905.

By the courtesy of the Editor of The Athenæum, I have been permitted to publish the following list of names of the deceased persons (901-1150) who have been provisionally selected for inclusion in the 'Dictionary of Indian Biography,' to be published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. in the autumn. This work is intended to contain biographical notices of about 2,000 to 2,500 persons, living or dead, Europeans or natives of India, connected with India since about the year 1750 A.D. Suggestions are invited, and it is hoped that readers of The Athenæum will bring any important omissions to my notice, and state where materials for short biographies can be obtained. Letters should be addressed to 61, Cornwall Gardens, S. Kensington, S.W.

C. E. BUCKLAND, Editor 'D.I.B.'

Macpherson, John, Inspector-General of Hospitals, 1817-90
Macpherson, Samuel Charteris, Major, Political, 1806-90
Macpherson, William, Legal Adviser to the India Office, 1812-93
Maddock, Sir Thomas Herbert, Member of the Supreme Council, 1790-1870
Mahmud, Syad, Judge of the High Court, N.W.P., ?-1903
Maine, Sir Henry James Sumner, Member of the Supreme Council, 1822-88
Maitland, Sir Frederick Lewis, Naval Commander-in-Chief in India, 1777-1839
Maitland, Sir Peregrine, General, Commander-in-Chief, Madras, 1777-1854
Maitland, Richard, Major, Captured Surat, 1714?-63
Malan, Rev. Cesar Jean Salomon, Oriental Scholar, 1812-94
Malcolm, Sir George, General, 1818-97
Malcolm, Sir John, Governor of Bombay, 1769-1833
Malet, Arthur, Member of Council, Bombay, 1806-88
Malet, Sir Charles Warre, Baronet, Member of Council, Bombay, 1752-1815
Malet, George Grenville, Lieutenant-Colonel, Author, 1804-56
Malkin, Sir Benjamin Heath, Judge, Calcutta, 1797-1837
Mallison, George Bruce, Colonel, Historian, 1825-98
Mallet, Sir Louis, Under Secretary of State for India, 1823-90
Malthus, Rev. Thomas Robert, Professor of History and Political Economy, 1766-1834
Mandlik, Visvanath Narayan, Rao Sahib, Government Pleader, Bombay, 1833-89
Mangles, Ross Donnelly, Member of the Council of India, 1801-77
Mangles, Ross Lewis, Indian Civil Service, Bengal, V.C., 1823-1905
Mani Begam, Guardian of the Nawab Nazim, ?-1802
Manning, Thomas, First to visit Lhasa, 1772-1840

Mansel, Charles Greville, Resident at Nagpur, 1806-86
Mansfield, Samuel, Member of Council, Bombay, 1815-93
Margary, Henry Joshua, Major-General, 1811-76
Markham, Frederick, Lieutenant-General, 1805-55
Marsden, William, E.I.Co.'s Service in Sumatra, Author, 1754-1836
Marshman, Hannah, Missionary, 1767-1847
Marshman, John Clark, Missionary, Historian, 1794-1877
Marshman, Rev. Dr. Joshua, Baptist Missionary, 1768-1837
Martin, Sir James Ranald, Inspector-General Army Hospitals, 1793-1874
Martin, Robert Montgomery, Traveller and Author, 1803?-1868
Martindell, Sir Gabriel, Lieutenant-General, 1756?-1831
Martine, Claude, General, 1735-1800
Martyn, Rev. Henry, Missionary, 1781-1812
Mason, Rev. Francis, Missionary in Burma, 1799-1874
Mason, George Henry Monek, Political, 1825-57
Mason, John Charles, Secretary at the India House, 1798-1881
Massey, William Nathaniel, Member of the Supreme Council, 1809-81
Master, Charles Gilbert, Member of Council, Madras, 1833-1903
Mather, Rev. Robert Cotton, Missionary, 1808-77
Matthew, Right Rev. Henry James, Bishop of Lahore, 1837-98
Maude, Francis Cornwallis, Lieutenant-Colonel, V.C., 1828-1900
Maude, Sir Frederick Francis, General, V.C., 1821-97
Maurice, Rev. Thomas, Writer on India, 1784-1824
Mayne, William, Colonel, 1818-55
Mayo, Richard Southwell Bourke, sixth Earl of, Viceroy and Governor-General, 1822-72
McBean, William, Major-General, ?-1878
McCabe, Robert Blair, Indian Civil Service, Assam, ?-1897
McCaskill, Sir John, General, ?-1845
McCleverty, William Anson, Commander-in-Chief, Madras, 1806-97
McChuer, Commander Bombay Marine, Hydrographer, ?-1794?
McCulloch, Lieutenant-Colonel, Political, 1816-85
McDonnell, William Fraser, Indian Civil Service, V.C., 1829-94
McGrigor, James, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1819-63
McLeod, Sir Donald Friell, Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, 1810-72
McMahon, Charles Alexander, Major-General, 1830-94
McMahon, Sir Thomas, Baronet, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1779-1860
McMurdo, Sir William Montagu Scott, General, 1819-94
Meade, Sir Richard John, Political, 1821-94
Medlicott, Henry Benedict, Director of Geological Survey, 1820-1905
Medows, Sir William, Governor of Bombay, 1738-1813
Melvill, Rev. Henry, Principal of Haileybury, 1798-1871
Melvill, Sir James Cosmo, Chief Secretary India Office, 1792-1861
Melvill, Sir Maxwell, Member of Council, Bombay, 1834-87
Melvill, Sir Peter Melvill, Major-General, 1803-95
Melville, Henry Dundas, first Viscount, President Board of Control, 1742-1811
Melville, Henry Dundas, third Viscount, General, 1801-76
Merewether, Sir William Lockyer, Member of the Council of India, 1825-80
Merivale, Herman, Under Secretary of State for India, 1806-74
Metcalfe, Charles Theophilus, Baron, Acting Governor-General, 1785-1846
Metcalfe, James, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1817-1888
Metcalfe, Sir Theophilus John, Baronet, Indian Civil Service, 1828-83
Michel, Sir John, Field Marshal, 1804-86
Middleton, Right Rev. Thomas Fanshaw, Bishop of Calcutta, 1769-1822
Mill, James, Historian, in the India Office, 1773-1836
Mill, John Stuart, Chief of the Office, in the India Office, 1806-73
Mill, Rev. William Hodge, Principal, Bishop's College, 1792?-1853
Miller, Sir Alexander Edward, Member of the Supreme Council, 1828-1903
Miller, William Henry, Major-General, 1805-73
Mills, Sir Charles, Baronet, Member of the Council of India, 1792-1872
Milman, Right Rev. Robert, Bishop of Calcutta, 1816-76
Minto, Sir Gilbert Elliot, first Earl of, Governor-General, 1751-1814
Mir Izzet Ullah, Traveller, ?-?
Mir Jafar, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, 1691-1765
Mir Kasim, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, ?-1777
Mitchell, Rev. Dr. J. Murray, Missionary, 1814-1904
Mitra, Raja Digambar, Sheriff of Calcutta, 1817-79
Mitra, Dina Bandhu, Rai Bahadur, 1829-73
Mitra, Dwarkanath, High Court Judge, Calcutta, 1833-74
Mitra, Kisor Chand, Social Reformer, Journalist, 1822-73
Mitra, Piri Chand, Littérateur, Theosophist, 1814-83
Mitra, Raja Rajendra Lal, Antiquary, Author, 1824-91
Mitra, Trailokya Nath, Law Lecturer and Professor, 1844-1895
Mitter, Sir Romesh Chander, High Court Judge, Calcutta, 1840-99
Mohl, Julius, Professor, Orientalist, 1800-76
Money, Sir Alonzo, Indian Civil Service, Bengal, 1723-1900
Monier-Williams, Sir Monier, Professor of Sanskrit, Author, 1819-99
Monson, Hon. George, Member of Supreme Council of India, 1730-76
Monson, Hon. William, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1760-1807
Montagu, Edward, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1755-99
Monteith, William, Lieutenant-General, 1790-1864
Montgomerie, Sir Patrick, General, 1793-1872
Montgomerie, Thomas George, Colonel, of the G. T. Survey, 1830-78
Montgomery, Sir Henry Conyngham, Baronet, Member of the Council of India, 1803-78
Montgomery, Sir Robert, Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, 1803-87
Moor, Edward, Major, Writer on India, 1771-1848
Moorecroft, William, Traveller, 1765?-1825
Moore, Sir William James, Surgeon-General, 1828-96
Morehead, Charles, Bombay Medical Service, 1807-82

Morehead, William Ambrose, Member of Council, Madras, 1805-62
More-Molynaux, George Hand, Major-General, 1851-1903
Morland, Sir Henry, Captain, Indian Marine, Bombay, 1837-91
Morris, John Carnac, Indian Civil Service, Madras, 1798-1858
Mountain, Armine Simcoe Henry, Brigadier-General, 1797-1854
Mudaliar, Pandi Runganada, Professor and Teacher, 1847-93
Muhammad Azimulla Khan, Adviser of Nana Sahib, ?-?
Muhammad Bahadur Shah, last Emperor of Delhi, ?-1862
Muhammad Hayat Khan, Nawab, of the Punjab Commission, ?-1901
Muir, John, Indian Civil Service, Sanskrit Scholar, 1810-82
Muir, Sir John, Baronet, Merchant, 1828-1903
Muir, Sir William Mure, Director-General, A.M.D., 1817-85
Mukerji, Anukul Chandra, High Court Judge, Calcutta, 1829-71
Mukerji, Bhudeb, Educationist, Bengal, 1825-94
Mukerji, Raja Dakhinaram, Philanthropist and Patriot, Oudh, 1814-78
Mukerji, Harish Chandra, Journalist, 1824-61
Mukerji, Joy Kissen, Landowner, Bengal, 1808-88
Mukerji, Ray Bahadur Kanti Chandra, Prime Minister, Jaipur, 1835-99
Mukerji, Sambhu Chandra, Journalist and Author, 1839-94
Mulji, Damodar Thackersey, Merchant, Bombay, 1847-93
Mulji, Kursandas, Merchant and Reformer, 1832-75
Müller, Friedrich Max, Oriental Scholar, 1823-1900
Munro, Sir Hector, General, 1726-1805
Munro, Sir Thomas, Baronet, Governor of Madras, 1761-1827
Munro, William, General, Botanist, 1818-80
Munster, George Augustus Frederick Fitzelarence, first Earl of, 1794-1842
Murdoch, John, Philanthropist, 1819-1904
Murray, Sir John Irvine, General, ?-1902
Murslidabad, Mansur Ali Faridun Jah, Nawab Nazim of, 1829-84
Mysore, Maharaja Sir Chama Rajendra Woddyar of, 1863-94
Mysore, Kristna Raj Wadiar, Maharaja of, 1796-1868
Naba Krishna, Maharaja Bahadur, 1732?-97
Nairne, Sir Charles Edward, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1836-99
Nana Farnavis, Minister of the Peshwa, 1741-1800
Nana Sahib, chief rebel leader in the Mutiny, 1820?-59?
Napier, Sir Charles James, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1782-1853
Napier, Francis, ninth Baron of Merchistoun, first Baron Ettrick of Ettrick, Acting Viceroy and Governor-General, 1819-98
Napier, of Magdala, Robert Cornelis, first Baron, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1810-90
Narain, Pandit Sarup, Political, ?-1903
Nathubhoy, Sir Mangaldas, Social Reformer, Philanthropist, 1832-90
Natore, Rani Bhabani of, 1716?-95
Neill, James George Smith, Brigadier-General, 1810-57
Nelson, Sir Alexander Abercromby, Lieutenant-General, 1816-93
Nelson, Horatio, Viscount, and Duke of Bronte, 1758-1805
Nepean, Sir Evan, Baronet, Governor of Bombay, 1751-1822
Newbold, Thomas John, Oriental Scholar, 1807-50
Nicholson, John, Brigadier-General, 1821-57
Nicholson, Sir Lothian, Lieutenant-General, 1827-93
Nicolls, Sir Jasper, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1778-1849
Nightingall, Sir Miles, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1768-1829
Noble, Rev. Robert Turlington, Missionary, 1809-65
Noer, Prince Frederic Christian Charles, &c., Count von, 1830-88
Norman, Sir Francis Booth, Lieutenant-General, 1830-1901
Norman, Sir Henry Radford, General, 1818-99
Norman, Sir Henry Wylie, Field-Marshal, 1826-1904
Norman, John Paxton, Officiating Chief Justice, Calcutta, 1819-72
Northbrook, Thomas George Baring, first Earl of, Viceroy and Governor-General, 1826-1904
Norton, John Bruce, Advocate-General, Madras, 1815-83
Norton, Sir John David, Judge, Madras, 1787-1843
Nott, Sir William, Major-General, 1782-1845
Nugent, Sir George, Baronet, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1757-1849
Nugent, John, Member of Council, Bombay, ?-1900
Nuttall, Sir James Mansfield, Major-General, 1823-97
Nuttall, Thomas, Lieutenant-General, 1828-90
Oakeley, Sir Charles, Baronet, Governor of Madras, 1751-1826
Oakes, Sir Henry, Baronet, Lieutenant-General, 1756-1827
O'Callaghan, Hon. Sir Robert William, Acting Commander-in-Chief in India, 1777-1840
Ochterlony, Sir David, Baronet, Major-General, 1758-1825
O'Halloran, Sir Joseph, Major-General, 1783-1843
O'Kinealy, James, Indian Civil Service Judge, Calcutta, 1837-1903
Oldham, Thomas, Superintendent, Geological Survey, 1816-78
Oliver, William, Member of Council, Madras, ?-1846
Olpherts, Sir William, General, V.C., 1822-1902
Omicheand, Principal Contractor of the E.I.Co., ?-1758
Orme, Robert, Member of Council, Madras, Historian, 1728-1801
Osborn, Robert Durie, Lieutenant-Colonel, Author, 1835-89
Osborne, John William Willoughby, Lieutenant-Colonel, Political, 1833-81
O'Shaughnessy, Sir William Brooke, Director-General of Telegraphs, 1809-89
Oswell, William Cotton, Linguist, Sportsman, 1818-93
Oudh, Shuja-ud-daula, Nawab Wazir of, 1731-75
Ouseley, Sir Gore, Baronet, Political, Oriental Scholar, 1770-1844
Ouseley, Joseph W. J., Colonel, Professor, Linguist, 1800-1889
Outram, Sir James, Baronet, Member of the Supreme Council, 1803-63
Ozanne, Edward Charles, Indian Civil Service, Bombay, 1850-1905
Paget, Hon. Sir Edward, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1775-1849
Paikpara, Pratap Chandra Singh, Raja Bahadur of, ?-1868

Palk, Sir Robert, Baronet, Governor of Madras, 1717-1798
 Palliser, Sir Charles Henry, Lieutenant-General, 1830-95
 Palmer, Sir Arthur Power, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1840-1904
 Palmer, Edward Henry, Oriental Linguist, 1840-82
 Palmer, John, the "Prince of British Merchants," 1767-1836
 Palmer, William, Lieutenant-General, ?-1811
 Parke, Sir William, General, 1822-97
 Parker, Sir George, Judge, Madras, Indian Civilian, 1843-1900
 Parker, Henry Meredith, Bengal Civil Service, 1796?-1868
 Parlbry, Brook Bridges, General, 1783-1873
 Parsons, Abraham, Merchant, Traveller, ?-1785
 Patechappa, Conjevaram Mudaliar, Merchant, Philanthropist, 1754-94
 Patiala, Maharaja Sir Narindar Singh of, 1823-62
 Patiali, Maharaja Bahadur Sir Rajendra Singh Mahendra of, 1872-1900
 Paton, John Stafford, General, 1821-89
 Paul, Sir Gregory Charles, Advocate-General, Bengal, 1831-1900
 Payn, Sir William, General, 1823-93
 Peacock, Sir Barnes, Chief Justice of Bengal, 1810-90
 Peacock, Frederick Barnes, Indian Civil Service, Bengal, 1836-94
 Peacock, Thomas Love, Chief Examiner, India Office, Novelist, 1785-1866
 Pears, Sir Thomas Townsend, Major-General, 1809-92
 Pearce, Thomas Deane, Colonel, 1738?-89
 Pearson, Thomas Hooke, General, 1806-92
 Peel, Sir Lawrence, Chief Justice of Bengal, 1799-1881
 Peel, Sir William, Captain, V.C., 1824-58
 Pellieu, Sir Fleetwood Broughton Reynolds, Admiral, 1789-1861
 Pelly, Sir Lewis, Political, 1825-92
 Pelly, Saville Marriott, Inspector-General of Hospitals, 1819-95
 Pemberton, Robert Boileau, Captain, Envoy to Bhutan, 1798-1840
 Penny, Nicholas, Major-General, 1790-1858
 Pennycuik, John, Lieutenant-Colonel, ?-1849
 Perkins, Sir Rheas, Colonel-Commandant, Royal Engineers, 1834-1901
 Perron, General, 1755-1834
 Perry, Sir Thomas Erskine, Chief Justice, Bombay, 1806-1882
 Peterson, Peter, Professor of Sanskrit, Bombay, 1847-99
 Petit, Sir Dinshaw Manackji, Philanthropist, 1823-1901
 Phayre, Sir Arthur Purves, Chief Commissioner of British Burma, 1812-85
 Phayre, Sir Robert, General, 1820-97
 Phear, Sir John Budd, Chief Justice, Ceylon, 1825-1905
 Piddington, Henry, Commander, Meteorologist, 1797-1858
 Pierson, William Henry, Major, 1839-81
 Pigot, George, Baron, Governor of Madras, 1719-77
 Platts, John Thompson, Linguist, Teacher, 1830-1904
 Playfair, Sir Hugh Lyon, Captain, 1786-1861
 Playfair, Sir Robert Lambert, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1828-1899
 Pocock, Sir George, Admiral, 1706-92
 Pogson, N. R., Astronomer, Madras, 1828?-91
 Polehampton, Rev. Henry Stedman, Chaplain, 1824-57
 Pollock, Sir David, Chief Justice, Bombay, 1780-1847
 Pollock, Sir Frederick Richard, Major-General, 1827-99
 Pollock, Sir George, Baronet, Field Marshal, 1786-1872
 Popham, Sir Home Riggs, Admiral, 1762-1820

SALES.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE sold in their sale of the 1st to 3rd inst. the following rare and valuable books and MSS.: Two Miniature Paintings of the Nativity and Crucifixion, attributed to Simon Bening, early sixteenth century, 605*l.* Horæ, on vellum, Anglo-French, fifteen miniatures, Sæc. XV., 100*l.* The Countesse of Pembroke's Tragedie of Antonie, 1595, and Discourse of Death, 1600, 560*l.* Books from the Library of Napoleon I. at St. Helena (twenty-nine), 130*l.* Roger Williams on the Language of America, 1643, 50*l.* Blake's Book of Thel, original issue, 67*l.*; Visions of the Daughters of Albion, original edition, 1793, 105*l.*; Marriage of Heaven and Hell, original edition, 150*l.* Psalterium Davidis, Anglo-Celtic MS., Sæc. XIII., 341*l.* Scott's Memoranda of Agreement as to Copyright of Waverley, &c., 89*l.* Horæ, on vellum, Dutch illuminated MS., fifteenth century (1489), 22 miniatures, 164*l.* Two large illuminated Miniatures of the French School, attributed to Jean Bourdichon (12 inches square), 142*l.* Thackeray's Lectures on the English Humourists (Congreve and Addison), 115*l.* Rolle's The Pricke of Conscience, MS., fourteenth century, 50*l.* Biblia Sacra Vulgata, MS., Anglo-French, illuminated, Sæc. XIV., 200*l.* Misale, Festivitates Sanctorum, illuminated Anglo-French MS., Sæc. XIV., 510*l.*

Messrs. Hodgson & Co. included in their sale last week several scarce first editions of seventeenth and eighteenth century writers, many of which were in the original sewn condition as issued. The following were the most important items: Waller's Poem on St. James's Park, 1661, 32*l.* Dryden, To my Lord Chancellor, presented on New Year's Day by John Dryden, 1662, 19*l.* 10*s.* Congreve's The Birth of a Muse, 1698, 14*l.* Pope's Windsor Forest, 1713, 40*l.*; Of the Use of Riches, 1732, 15*l.*; Of the Knowledge and Characters of Men, 1733, 5*l.*; Court Poems: The Basset-Table (by Pope), The Drawing-Room, and The Toilet, 1706 (should be 1716), 15*l.* Addison's The Campaign, 1705, 15*l.* Gay's The Fan, 1714, 5*l.* There were also included Hennepin's New Discovery of a Vast Country in America, 1693, 12*l.* 15*s.* Joutel's Journey to the Gulf of Mexico, 1714, 8*l.* 10*s.* Houbraken and Vertue's Heads, 2 vols., large paper, 13*l.* Holbein's Portraits of Illustrious Persons of the Court of Henry VIII., 12*l.* 10*s.*

Literary Gossip.

MISS ELEANOR G. HAYDEN'S new novel, 'Rose of Lone Farm,' will be published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. on the 16th of this month. It is a story of rural life and love, a striking episode of which is the description of tramp life in the West Country and New Forest, when Rose—suddenly cast out of the home she imagined to be her own—goes forth on foot to search for the poor vagabond, broken down in mind and body, who is really her mother.

ON August 14th Messrs. Methuen will publish Mr. Marriott Watson's new novel, 'Twisted Eglantine,' which has already appeared in serial form in The Graphic. It is a romance of the year 1809, and touches the ill-fated Walcheren expedition in that year. But the main interest of the book centres in the struggle of two men for the affections of a woman. The tale includes an elaborate study of a beau of the period. It will be illustrated by Mr. Frank Craig.

MR. UNWIN has arranged to publish a new book by Mr. Eugene Lee-Hamilton, author of 'Sonnets of the Wingless Hours.' It is entitled 'The Fountain of Youth,' and is a romance of love and adventure in the days of Spanish rule in the Indies.

THE second and third volumes of "The Gentleman's Magazine Library" on 'London' will be published during the present month by Mr. Elliot Stock. These volumes will complete the entire work, which has been running, under the editorship of Mr. G. L. Gomme, for twenty years. It comprises twenty-nine volumes in all, and is a most valuable collection.

THE Oxford University Gazette announces the munificent gift by the Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths of London to the Delegates of the University Press of 5,000*l.* towards the cost of production of the next volume of the 'New English Dictionary.' It is well known that the expense of this great work is a heavy strain upon the resources of the Press, and thus of the University, and this handsome contribution will be much appreciated. If only two or three other wealthy companies or wealthy men would follow the example of the Goldsmiths' Company, by assisting the production of the remaining volumes, we have no doubt that the much-to-be-desired completion of the work would be greatly accelerated. We are glad to hear that Dr. Murray has now passed the middle of vol. vii. (O—P), and that the double section to be issued on October 1st will complete another half-volume, at the end of P, and leave the second half-volume to begin with the distinct section or sub-letter Ph. We understand that nearly the whole of the Ph-words are also already in type. The issue on July 1st will be a double section of M by Dr. Bradley.

THE Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland, as already announced, are making Edinburgh their playground this week-end, where they are being generously entertained by their northern brethren. Some leading members of the London publishing trade have been tempted thither also. The interesting feature concerning the early Edinburgh booksellers is that they struck out a line of their own and became distinguished publishers. The new or second-hand bookshop developed into the publishing firm. This was the case with William Blackwood, William and Robert Chambers, Adam Black, and Thomas Nelson, all of whom founded still flourishing firms, beginning on a slender basis, and gradually expanding into larger transactions. Archibald Constable, than whom there was no abler bookseller and publisher at the beginning of last century, confounded Paternoster Row with the greatness of his schemes and bargains while he had Scott as a patron. Edinburgh has since specialized in publishing, and if there is less general literature produced, a great deal of London printing is done there, and school-books and encyclopædias are a feature of its book production.

THE valuable and extensive portion of Mr. Joseph Knight's library, which Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge will sell on June 19th and five following days, is one of the most interesting of its kind which has appeared in the market for some years. There are no great monuments of the early printers, early quarto Shakespeares, or other sport of the wealthy man, though some Elzevirs and Aldines are likely to attract attention; but as a reference library of a busy and many-sided journalist it is probably the most comprehensive and varied ever formed. It contains works not only by the best-known English and French writers of poetry, literature, and the drama of the sixteenth and the three succeeding centuries, but also by others, eminent in their day and generation, if now forgotten by the public. Many of the books have a personal interest, in that they are presentation copies; and others are much more difficult to obtain than far higher-priced books. There are in all 2,007 lots, which comprise probably not much fewer than 30,000 volumes and booklets.

THE annual meeting of the members of the London Library will be held on the 22nd inst. We are glad to see from the report that the society continues in a prosperous condition, and that the preparation of the Subject Catalogue has been started in earnest. After careful consideration, the Committee has decided to set aside 500*l.* a year for this work, and it is calculated that it will take about five years to complete.

Books and Pictures: a Quarterly Record and Review of Books and Pictures mainly Religious, is the title of a periodical announced by Messrs. A. R. Mowbray & Co., the aim of which is to supply a complete record of all publications issued in Great Britain or America which, by reason of their subject or their author, are of special interest to Church people. If the publication can only give some idea of the theology worth reading among the mass of books issued, it will be doing a great service.

THE library of John Stuart Mill, consisting of about fifteen hundred volumes, contained in the cottage at Avignon where he lived from 1858 to the time of his death in 1873, was sold by public auction on May 21st to 28th, and bought by Madame Roumanille, the widow of Joseph Roumanille, who was a publisher and bookseller, as well as poet and "paire di felibre." The library contains first editions of Carlyle, Spencer, Malthus, Darwin, Hume, &c., including many presentation copies, which are covered with Mill's annotations. There are tirages à part of Carlyle, made up from Fraser's Magazine; there is a Pickering Coleridge filled with marks and underlinings; and there are a considerable number of manuscripts, some of them containing the first drafts of essays and books. The catalogue is to be printed in London.

MR. SIDNEY APPLETON announces that, in view of the recent extension of his business, he has taken into partnership Mr. H. H. Warner Circuit. No change will be made in the name of the firm, which will remain Sidney Appleton, as heretofore.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS will publish the second of the promised Stevenson volumes in July, and the third in September. The second volume will be 'Tales and Fantasies,' comprising 'The Misadventures of John Nicholson,' 'The Body-Snatcher,' and 'The Story of a Lie.' The third volume will contain seven papers on literary subjects. A protest has been raised in the daily press against the alleged breach of faith with the subscribers to the "Edinburgh Edition" caused by this issue. But the publishers deny that there was any understanding that the material now announced for publication should be confined to that edition. The statement, however, was made over the initials C. B., which should stand for the man who was personally responsible for the "Edinburgh Edition." It would be interesting to see how the two views can be reconciled.

THE publication of the Ibsen letters, delayed by an accident to which we referred some weeks since, has now been definitively put off till the autumn.

MESSRS. DENT & Co. write:—

"We notice in The Athenæum of the 3rd inst., in your review of 'Paul et Virginie,' that you place Messrs. Putnam's Sons' name first, and ours second. We fear this will give readers the idea that 'Les Classiques Français,' the series of which 'Paul et Virginie' forms one volume, is an importation from America. We should be glad if you would make it known that such is not the case, but that the book is produced here and sent to America."

AN International Congress for the reproduction of facsimiles of valuable historical manuscripts is to be held on August 21st to 23rd, in connexion with the exhibition at Liège. The Librarian of Brussels University, M. Sury, intends to bring forward proposals for the establishment of national bureaux, and a central bureau in Brussels; while M. Gaillard, the head of the Belgian archivists, will deal with the importance of erecting a museum in connexion with the chief State archives, but in a separate building, to minimize the risk from fire.

WE notice the death of the German author Balduin Möllhausen, born in Bonn in 1825. He wrote a number of popular novels and descriptions based on his travels and exploration in the Rocky Mountains in the forties and fifties of last century.

A PROPOSAL has been started to celebrate the 400th anniversary of Columbus's death by erecting a monument to him in the neighbourhood of the Vatican. A committee has been formed at Turin, under the presidency of the archbishop, and an appeal for subscriptions is to be made to all Roman Catholics.

THE Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques has awarded the Prix Drouyn de Lhuys, of the value of 3,000fr., to M. Richard Waddington, for his 'Histoire Diplomatique et Militaire de la Guerre de Sept Ans.'

THE Parliamentary Papers of most general interest this week are Scotch Education, Continuation Classes, Reports, Statistics, &c. ( $2\frac{1}{2}d.$ ); Statute made by the Governing Body of St. John's College, Oxford ( $\frac{1}{2}d.$ ); and the Annual Report of the Comptroller-General of Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks ( $3d.$ ).

SCIENCE

RESEARCH NOTES.

MR. McCLELLAND'S researches into the secondary rays given off by bodies exposed to the Beta and Gamma rays of radium are now fully published, and throw a little more light on the question of atomic structure. Mr. McClelland thinks the active part of the primary radiation consists of the negative corpuscles, every one of which is to be regarded as colliding with or coming within the sphere of action of another negative corpuscle within the substance emitting the secondary radiation. This corresponds with what he before discovered (see The Athenæum, No. 4038) as to the strength of the secondary radiation increasing with the atomic weight of the substance emitting it, because the heavier the substance, the greater is the disturbance produced within the atom, and the greater the chance of detaching negative corpuscles from it. But he now sees reason to think that the irregularities in the rate of this increase correspond fairly with the periods of Mendeléeff, so that, as we pass through each series, the secondary radiation is proportional to the rise in atomic weight. When the series changes, however, the increase is much less marked, although it begins to rise again immediately. Hence, he argues, in passing from one series to the next, the additional corpuscles must be added on to the atom in some different way from that in which it receives additions so long as only one series is under observation. On the whole, he thinks this supports the views of Prof. J. J. Thomson, many times mentioned in The Athenæum, according to which the removable corpuscles may be detached from either the inner or the outer shell of the atom. It may be noted also that he finds the secondary radiation from uranium is in no way abnormal, but proceeds in exactly the way that might be expected from an element of its high atomic weight.

Further researches into the relations between the various radio-active metals have also been made by the Hon. R. J. Strutt. He finds that, so far as can yet be traced, thorium never occurs without both radium and uranium in association, and his tests show uranium in minerals such as monazite, where its presence had hitherto been unsuspected. Moreover, he agrees with the American chemist Mr. Boltwood in concluding that the amount of radium in a mineral is roughly proportional to the uranium it contains. Now as all radio-active metals are supposed to be changing into something else, the question arises as to which is here the primitive form. Radium, for many reasons, may be considered the youngest of the group, and uranium, whose rate of disintegration is comparatively very slow, the next. Is, then, thorium the parent of the group? The most serious objection to this view—that is, the low atomic weight of thorium (232) in comparison with that of uranium (239)—may be got rid of by the supposition of Prof. Baskerville that thorium, as we know it, contains some element, hitherto unseparated, of an atomic weight of at least 256, and therefore much higher than any other element known. But Mr. Strutt is not positive about this, and thinks it possible that one of the cerium metals may take the place of uranium as the next descendant of thorium. To the whole group he attributes an age of thirty million years.

In the June number of The Philosophical Magazine will be found an article by Mr. Soddy, in which he gives in detail his experiments of the last eighteen months with the disintegration products of the radio-active elements. These will probably leave no doubt with competent minds that radium is itself the product of uranium, and that polonium is its last radio-active form. But into what element does it finally change? Probably, says Mr. Soddy, into lead, which always plays a conspicuous part in the composition of radio-active minerals. If this be so, the problem of the transmutation of metals, though not yet solved, has advanced a long step towards solution.

Some part of Mr. Strutt's experiments were carried out by means of thorianite, the new radio-active mineral from Ceylon, a considerable quantity of which has been put at the disposal of Sir William Ramsay. Dr. O. Hahn has also studied thorianite independently of Mr. Strutt, and has come to the conclusion that it contains some substance nearly 250,000 times as active as an equal weight of thorium nitrate, although he is still doubtful whether it is a new element or not. He imagines that this is present in the soil to a considerable extent, and this agrees with Herren Elster and Geitel's experiments upon the mud of the "Ursprung" at Baden-Baden, which is said, like the new substance, to evolve the same emanation as thorium, though containing no detectable trace of the metal itself. All this, of course, could be accounted for by supposing, as Dr. Hahn is loth to suppose, that thorium changes into another substance which remains radio-active for a long time. After two months the new product, which is a crystalline precipitate thrown down by treating the ore, after elimination of the silica, lead, and as far as possible iron, with ammonium oxalate, still remains luminous in the dark.

The relationship of helium to thorium has also received attention. According to Mr. Strutt, helium has never been found in any mineral that is not radio-active, and Sir William Ramsay's experiments have established that sooner or later the emanation of radium becomes converted into this gas; but Mr. Strutt now suggests that helium is chiefly a product of thorium, and that it appears in the greatest quantity in certain minerals like Brazilian monazite, which, though rich in thorium, hardly contains more than a trace of radium. As helium undergoes no further change, it may have accumulated for a lengthened period in the mineral in which it is found, and this vitiates the argument from mere quantity. Mr. Strutt shows, however, that at the rate at present observed, it would take radium about two thousand million years to produce the quantity of helium found in association with it. He does not think that it is ever found, except in infinitesimal quantities, in any mineral which does not contain thorium. Sir William Ramsay has also attempted of late to estimate the proportion of helium in atmospheric air, and has determined it as '00000056 per cent. by weight, and '0000040 per cent. by volume. This agrees fairly well with his former guess that the proportion was one or two parts in a million. He used in his experiments the absorptive property of coconut charcoal cooled by liquid hydrogen, as suggested by Sir James Dewar.

Possibly the slow rate of dissociation of the radium atom indicated by the figures given by Mr. Strutt helps to account for the fact that there is any radium left on the earth at all. Had it a radio-active life as short as that of most other metals of its kind, it ought to have dissipated its radio-activity some time since, and it has been suggested that the enormous pressure to which the rocks in which it occurs have been exposed may have had something to do with this. As pressure has been known in other cases to arrest chemical changes like dissociation, Dr. W. E. Wilson lately exposed a small quantity of radium bromide to a pressure of 300 atmospheres, but its radio-activity, as shown by its action upon a barium platino-cyanide screen, was not in any way affected throughout the whole course of the experiment.

One mystery with regard to the physico-chemical action of radium has been cleared up by the experiments of Dr. Dixon and Dr. Wigham, working in conjunction at Dublin. From its action both on growing plants and on bacterial cultures, they conclude that its effect in stopping growth is due to the Beta rays or negative corpuscles emitted by it, which, according to them, attach themselves to the positive ions of the subject, and thus cause the water in the protoplasm of the plants or bacteria to become alkaline. Now it is known that the action of the enzymes or ferments on which the metabolism of the cells depends is arrested in an alkaline solution, and this may explain the sterility produced by both radium and the X rays not only in plants, but also in animals. F. L.

THE ROYAL OBSERVATORY, GREENWICH.

THE Board of Visitors met at the Observatory last Saturday under the chairmanship of the venerable Sir William Huggins, President of the Royal Society, and the Astronomer Royal's usual Report was presented, but, we regret to say, not by himself, on account of indisposition. We have been accustomed for so many years to read of extensions of the buildings, and additions to the instrumental equipment, that it seems something of a change on this occasion to have a report chiefly dealing with details of work accomplished with the means now provided. It may be interesting to remark that this year is the fiftieth since the late Sir George Airy, then Astronomer Royal, provided the Observatory with an equatorial of what was then considered large size. This was nearly five years after, under his directions, the present meridian instrument was constructed, which only those who have used it can judge in comparison with those previously employed. Profiting by the solidity and strength of the foundation-piers of the great equatorial, and altering the shape of the revolving dome, Sir William Christie placed a much larger instrument in the same building. It is unnecessary here to go over the many other subsequent additions and alterations effected during his rule, which have greatly changed the outward appearance of the Observatory, and enabled the staff to take part in the modern requirements of astronomy, and make (as Prof. Turner well remarks in his work on 'Modern Astronomy') a revolution in the science. The most important and interesting of these additions is the photographic equatorial, presented some years ago by the late Sir Henry Thompson.

But little is said on this subject or on that of the grounds, &c., in the present Report. The Astronomer Royal proceeds to state that the transit circle has been in regular use as heretofore, applied to the observation of the sun, the moon, the large planets, and fundamental stars. Very great progress has been made in the observation of the reference stars for the Greenwich section of the Astrographic Catalogue, which includes the stars from 65° of north declination to the north pole. It is proposed to begin next year a new nine-year catalogue of the stars of the ninth magnitude and brighter which are situated between the limits 24° and 32° of north declination, these being the boundaries of the Oxford astrographic zone, for which they serve as reference stars. The corrections for variation of latitude (kindly communicated in advance by Prof. Albrecht) have been applied to the planetary observations for 1904, and are being applied to those of stars. The comparison between theory and the Greenwich meridian observations of the moon from 1750 to the present time, undertaken by Mr. Cowell, one of the Chief Assistants, has been completed for the longitudes, and is in progress for the latitudes. It was mentioned in the last Report that the re-reduction of the stars in Groombridge's catalogue had been completed; the present speaks of the rapid advance of the printing of the results. The altazimuth, under the charge of Mr. Crommelin, has been in continuous use according to the new scheme; and the reflex zenith tube has been applied to several other stars besides  $\gamma$  Draconis. Casual phenomena have been carefully attended to with the equatorials, and the plan of occultation observations has been extended. The great 28-inch refractor has been employed, under the superintendence of Mr. Lewis, upon micrometric observations of double stars; the Thompson equatorial on photographs of Neptune and his satellite, comets, and small planets, particularly Eros, of which a large number of plates have been taken and measured. Mr. Maunder has regularly pursued the observations of solar spots and other phenomena with the photo-heliograph. Mr. Hollis has continued the work still necessary for the Greenwich section of the great Astrographic Catalogue, now nearly completed. No spectroscopic observations have been made.

The magnetical and meteorological department is under Mr. Bryant. During 1904 there were no days of great magnetic disturbance, but eight of lesser disturbance. The mean magnetic declination was 16° 15' 0" west; the mean dip, 66° 57' 11". The following meteorological details may be of interest. The mean temperature for the year 1904 was 49° 8', or 0° 3' above the average for the fifty years 1841-90. During the twelve months ending on April 30th the highest shade temperature (on the open stand in the Magnetic Pavilion) was 91° 0" on August 4th; that in the Observatory was 89° 7'. The lowest temperature recorded in that year was 19° 5' on January 1st. The mean daily horizontal movement of the air was 280 miles, which is two miles below the average for the preceding thirty-seven years. The greatest recorded daily movement was 867 miles on November 9th; the least, 49 miles on December 22nd, a day which will be remembered for the dense fog in and near London. The greatest recorded pressure of the wind was 23.5 lb. on the square foot on March 12th, and the greatest hourly velocity 45 miles on December 30th. The number of hours of bright sunshine recorded during the same period by the Campbell-Stokes instrument was 1,486 out of 4,457 hours during which the sun was above the horizon, so that the mean proportion of sunshine for the year was 0.333, constant sunshine being represented by unity.

The rainfall for the same twelve months (ending on April 30th) was 20.21 in., being 4.33 in. less than the average of the fifty years 1841-90. This contrasts strongly with the heavy fall in the corresponding period of last year, which amounted to 35.42 in. The fall for the twelve months ending March 1st, 1904, was over 37 in.; for that ending on the same day in 1905, less than 17½ in. But the fall in March exceeded 3½ in., the greatest recorded in March since 1851.

The Astronomer Royal and Mr. Dyson hope to proceed to Sfax, in Tunisia, to observe the total eclipse on August 30th, taking instruments specially adapted to photograph the details and extension of the corona. Mr. Maunder has been invited by the Canadian Government to take part in an expedition to observe the eclipse at the other end of the track in the early part of the eclipse's course, on the coast of Labrador, and purposes, in concert with his wife (who is to accompany him), to obtain photographs of the corona there. We hope all the parties will be favoured by the weather, and that the health of the Astronomer Royal may be re-established and enable him to take a full part in the programme.

SOCIETIES.

BRITISH ACADEMY.—May 25.—Lord Reay, President, in the chair.—Prof. Rhys (Fellow of the Academy) read a paper on 'Celtæ and Galli.' The paper began with a description of the fragments of a Celtic calendar of the first century of our era, found in 1897 at Coligny, in the neighbourhood of Lyons, and was devoted to its elucidation, especially the sentences which it contains. It proves to be not in Gaulish, but in a Celtic language resembling ancient Goidelic; so the principal help to the interpretation is supplied by comparisons with Old Irish. The second part of the paper was devoted to two inscriptions dating some two centuries later, and found in an old well at Rom (in the Department of the Deux Sèvres), the ancient town of Rauranum, in the country of the Pictones or Pictavians. The two have been read with great difficulty by M. Camille Jullian, of Bordeaux, who published them in the Revue Celtique for 1898: he regards them as both belonging to the class of magic incantations or prayers known to scholars by the general name of defixiones, found, for instance, in considerable numbers in Attic tombs. The language of the Coligny calendar is supposed to have been that of the Sequani, and that of the Rom inscriptions a dialect of the same as spoken by the ancient Pictones in the west of Gaul. In connexion with the Rom documents one or two other Celtic inscriptions found in Gaul were discussed; and attention was again directed to a Celtic formula occurring in the text of Marcellus of Bordeaux, and discussed recently by Mr. Nicholson in his 'Celtic Researches,' a work repeatedly cited in the course of the paper, as was also an article by Dr. Thurneysen in Meyer and Sern's Zeitschrift für Celtische Philologie. It is remarkable as to Marcellus of Bordeaux that Zeuss, in his preface to the 'Grammatica Celtica,' says, in reference to his text and certain other sources which he names, that the reader would find nothing cited from them in the 'Gram. Celtica': for, as he drily remarks, "in his omnibus enim eisdem nec inveni vocem celticam nec invenio." This was definitive to most philologists except Jacob Grimm, who stuck to his conviction that Marcellus does give some Celtic, and he proceeded to prove it: Zeuss is found to have been wrong, and Grimm to have been right, though he was badly equipped for the discussion of details in a matter so far out of his own field of study. Grimm finally got the assistance of M. Pictet in analyzing and interpreting Marcellus's Celtic formulae. The third and last portion of the paper dealt with the bearing of the documents interpreted on the ethnology of ancient Gaul, especially the question whether Celtæ and Galli were merely two names for a people which had been one from the beginning of their history. Caesar's words practically embodying that view were discussed and negatived.—Prof. Ridgeway (Fellow of the Academy) read a paper on 'The Date of the First Shaping of the Oldest Irish Epic Cycle,' that which centres round Conchobar Mac Nessa, 'the tall, fair-haired, grey-eyed' king of Ulster, and Cuchulainn Mac Sualtann, whose exploits are laid in the first century B.C. As these poems are the oldest literary remains which still survive of the peoples north of the Alps, it is all the more desirable to ascertain their date. The most important of them, the 'Tain Bo Cualgne,' in the shape preserved in the 'Yellow Book of Lecan,' goes back to the seventh century A.D., for it agrees in linguistic forms with the oldest Irish glosses, whilst tradition declares that it was recovered from oblivion by the bard Senchan Torpeist, who lived in the latter part of that century. The poem itself is thoroughly pagan, and the tradition that St. Patrick called up a vision of Cuchulainn in his chariot to convince King Loighaire of the truth of Christianity shows that it was believed to go back considerably before the fifth century A.D. Moreover, as has been often observed, the Cuchulainn Saga seems distinctly older than the Ossianic cycle, assigned by tradition to the fifth century, for whilst in the latter poems the warriors fight on horseback, in the Cuchulainn cycle horses are not ridden, but the war-chariot is universal. Now as the war-chariot was in use amongst the Gauls till at least the second century B.C., and was still used along with cavalry by the Belgæ of South-Eastern Britain in Cæsar's day, and was employed solely still later by the Mæatae and Caledones of Northern Britain, there is a prima facie probability that the Cuchulainn Saga represents the same period, that commonly known as the La Tène, which was characterized by long iron swords of a well-defined type, an oblong shield, the use of the war-chariot, a costume differing completely from that of mediæval Ireland, the use of brooches of a peculiar character and that elegant form of decoration called "late Celtic," and by the cremation of the dead. This culture is found not only on the Continent, but also in Britain (e.g., the cemetery at Aylesford), and its existence in Ireland can be proved, e.g., by swords of La Tène type, oblong shield, Gallic helmet, cremation, gold ornaments and carved stones with "late Celtic" ornament, and six brooches of undoubted La Tène type, four of which were found at Navan Rath, the ancient Emain Macha, the capital of Conchobar himself. As the La Tène culture had perished in Gaul by A.D. 1, and in England by A.D. 100, it is not likely that the same culture survived much later than the second century A.D. in Ireland. Prof. Ridgeway then pointed out that the Cuchulainn Saga shows not only the use of war-chariots, iron swords, cremation (which never got much hold in Ireland), but that the heroes wear cloaks fastened with brooches clearly of the La Tène type. Thus Conchobar's son wore a "leaf-shaped brooch" (dealg n-duillech), which cannot refer to a brooch of the ordinary penannular type used later in Ireland, but exactly describes one of the four brooches found at Emain Macha itself, a sure proof that that place had been a seat of La Tène culture. He submitted that from these and other arguments of dress, physical characteristics, &c., the poems were first shaped in the La Tène period, and therefore probably in the century before or after Christ. As to the question of writing in the poems there was no difficulty, for the Helvetii and the other Gauls were writing freely in Cæsar's time, and the Belgæ of Britain used letters commonly on their coins. If fair-haired invaders from Gaul had passed, as tradition avers, into Ireland in the centuries immediately before Christ, they would have brought their own alphabet with them.—A discussion ensued, in which Sir Henry Howorth, Mr. Alfred Nutt, Prof. Rhys, and others took part.

May 31.—Prof. Stout (Fellow of the Academy) read a paper on 'The Material World and Sensible Appearance.' From one point of view, material things coalesce in an inseparable unity with their sensible appearances. From another, the sensible appearances have an actual existence and history distinct from the history and existence of the things. Our problem is to harmonize these views, while doing justice to both. The distinction between matter and sensible appearance is not a special case of the distinction between appearance and reality. Both are co-ordinately real. Sensible appearance is not merely the appearing of matter; nor is it matter as apprehended in a fragmentary and partially erroneous way. It has a distinct existence and a positive nature of its own. Our problem is in part solved by the theory, Kantian in its origin, that matter is an ideal construction from material supplied by sense, but proceeding according to universal principles of synthesis which are independent of the coming and going of sensations in the private history of the individual. This accounts for the unity or interpenetration of matter and its sensible appearance. But it fails to explain the distinct existence of matter. It makes the distinct being of matter consist in a distinct order which is merely an order of the content of sensation separated from its actual existence. But matter, as we know it, is not such a conceptual scheme; matter, as we know it, is a system of actual existences enduring, changing, and interacting with each other. The ideal construction must, therefore, be regarded as a construing in terms of sensation of the nature and behaviour of a system of actual existences other than sensation or any immediate experiences of the individual. Let us call this actual existence the independent not-self. The independent not-self is known to us, however imperfectly. Knowledge of it does not involve a transcending of experience in any other sense than that in which all knowledge transcends experience. In all knowledge, what is immediately experienced is known only as related to what at the moment is not immediately experienced; and what is not immediately experienced is determined for thought by its relatedness to what is immediately experienced. In principle there is no ground for affirming that what in this peculiar sense is mediately known or represented must be a past future or possible immediate experience of the individual known. On the contrary, such a limitation is impossible. The features of immediate experience which by their essentially fragmentary nature point beyond themselves to an independent not-self are the immediate element in our experience of passiveness in undergoing sensations together with the immediate element in our experience of activity in determining what sensations we shall undergo. Thus from the outset of mental life we are knowingly dealing with an independent not-self in relation to which we are constantly both active and passive, and which is constantly both passive and active in relation to us. The nature of this independent existence is, from the outset, qualified by its relation to sense-experience. Inasmuch as it is thus qualified, it is what we know as matter. But the independent not-self is also known as continuous in nature and existence with our own being. So far as this is the case, it is known not as matter, but as mind.—Sir Frederick Pollock, Dr. S. H. Hodgson, and Prof. Bosanquet took part in the discussion.

GEOLOGICAL.—May 24.—Dr. J. E. Marr, President, in the chair.—The following communications were read: 'On the Igneous Rocks occurring between St. David's Head and Strumble Head, Pembrokeshire,' by Mr. J. V. Elsdon, and 'The Rhaetic and Contiguous Deposits of Glamorganshire,' and 'On the Occurrence of Rhaetic Rocks at Berrow Hill, near Tewkesbury, Gloucestershire,' by Mr. Linsdall Richardson.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—May 18.—Mr. C. H. Read in the chair.—Mr. Cyril Davenport read some notes on enamelled bookbindings, illustrated by coloured lantern-slides.—Mr. A. T. Martin communicated an account of excavations on the Roman town at Caerwent in 1904.

May 25.—Sir E. M. Thompson, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. E. A. Webb read a paper on 'The Augustinian Priory of St. Bartholomew, West Smithfield.' In the course of the paper an unpublished bull of Pope Celestinus, A.D. 1191, was quoted in confirmation of the statement by FitzStephen that Smithfield, a portion of which was granted by the king to Rahere for his church and hospital of St. Bartholomew, was not only the king's market, but more especially also a horse market. An interesting agreement of 1210-12 was also referred to, made by Fitzailwin, the first Mayor of London, with the Prior of St. Bartholomew's and the Master of the Hospital, during the great interdict in the reign of King John, whereby the citizens were allowed to fence off a portion of the east side of the hospital ground to form a burying-place for use until interment in consecrated ground should be once more allowed. By this document it appears that the brethren and poor of the hospital were exempt from the interdict. The complete history of the disputes between the priory and the hospital as regards the election of master and other matters has been traced. In this connexion ordinances were issued by no fewer than four Bishops of London (viz., Richard de Ely in 1197, Eustace de Fauconbridge in 1224, Simon of Sudbury in 1373, and Richard de Clifford in 1420) and by as many Popes (viz., Lucius III. in 1182, Celestinus III. in 1191, Honorius III. in 1216, and Martin V. in 1425). The building of the priory church, commenced by Rahere in 1123, went on continuously until the latter part of the thirteenth century. Alterations began about 1336 with a new Lady Chapel; this was followed about sixty years later by the building of Bishop Walden's chantry chapel on the north side of the quire; and ten years later the great restoration commenced, which Stow calls the rebuilding of 1410. The recently published grant of indulgences by Pope Alexander V. in 1409 to all who offered alms for this restoration gives a graphic account of the state of the monastery at that time; its buildings in great part destroyed or ruined by age, its income reduced, the calls on its hospitality ever increasing, and a heavy debt caused by the rebuilding, by the prior John Watford, of the cloister, bell tower, high altar, and chapter-house. Three bays of the east cloister have recently been recovered by the present Restoration Committee, and they show the Perpendicular work of this rebuilding in conjunction with the earlier Norman work. By a piece of good fortune the original cloister doors have been found, and rehung in the archway leading from the church into the cloister. Lord Rich, who acquired the monastery at the Dissolution, regranted, among other parts of the church, the cloister to Queen Mary, who put in the Dominicans, and traces of this occupation have been found in the cloister. This grant by Rich gives a very exact description not only of the cloister, but also of the frater and the position of the library above at the north end, adjoining the dormitories. In some early Chancery proceedings in 1596 a description has been found of the thirteenth-century arch which leads from the church into Smithfield, and by this it would seem that it was originally a gateway with rooms over it, as now, and led into the precincts of the priory, and not directly into the church. By the particulars for sale of the priory to Rich in the Record Office, and by the aid of a rental of Sir Henry Rich, made in 1616, also in the Record Office, a map has been drawn showing the situation of many of the monastic buildings, and by whom they were occupied in the early seventeenth century. Lord Abergavenny was living in the "dorter," now the City Union offices; Sir Thomas Neale in a portion of the frater; Sir Percival Hart was in the Lady Chapel, with the crypt for a cellar, and the north triforium for "a chapel chamber... opening into the church within a reasonable distance of the pulpit"; subsequently the chapel chamber became the parochial schools, and the Lady Chapel a fringe-maker's shop. Arthur Jarvis, a Clerk of the Pipe, occupied the prior's house, with the chapter-house in the rear. The office of the Pipe was kept in one of the rooms. Later on, in 1636-40, this house was occupied by the Earl of Middlesex; and after that as a Nonconformist meeting-house, with a Nonconformist school on the first floor, which extended over the south triforium of the church, and many celebrated Nonconformist divines used the chapter-house as a place of worship. It was, with the schools, destroyed by the fire of 1830. The street names of 1616 are also shown on the map; all are different from the present names, excepting Cloth Fair. Each side of the streets had different names. The leases of the houses in Cloth Fair had a clause reserving the shop on St. Bartholomew's Day, three days before, and three days after to be let by Lord Holland as a booth in Bartholomew Fair. The position of the parish chapel in the monastery and the origin of the present parochial bells were fully described.—Mr. F. T. Elworthy read a paper on the 'Mæo Pantea,' or so-called "Votive Hand," and exhibited two typical specimens, recently found in excavations at Tusculum and Gaeta, which he believes to be the only ones at present in a private collection, though many are to be seen in the British Museum and other European museums. The peculiar features of these vestiges of ancient Rome are: (a) All, without exception, are of the same material—bronze. (b) Every one represents the same peculiar manual gesture, a fact of great importance, being precisely that used in the Latin Church, by the Pope alone, in the act of benediction, and not to be found among the multitude of others used by gesticulating Neapolitans. (c) Though all are similar—and Mr. Elworthy has brought together ('Horns of Honour') and illustrated a large number—no two are alike, which shows they were designed and modelled separately. (d) Notwithstanding the great variety of symbols sacred to the gods embossed upon them, no Mano Pantea is without a serpent, often the most important object upon it: an evidence of the inordinate anxiety of the Romans about their health—that of all the gods they worshipped, Esculapius was never omitted. The age when these remarkable hands were in fashion is limited to 150 B.C. to 150 A.D., and they are thus an object-lesson in the well-known adoption of Egyptian and Phrygian deities into the Roman pantheon during the early Empire. A curious fact is that, though so many are still in existence as to prove them to have been quite common and familiar (one of those exhibited may possibly have belonged to Cicero himself), yet no contemporary author, not even Juvenal, has left any reference to them. The few modern writers who have dealt with the subject have accepted them without question as "votive hands," but beyond one or two special inscriptions there is no sort of evidence that they were ever made to be offered in thanksgiving; on the contrary, evidence all points the other way. Mr. Elworthy contended that they were distinctly domestic accessories, intended to be prophylactic and propitiatory, appealing for protection to powerful deities; that in fact they were veritable penates of the houses wherein alone they have been found. As to the original meaning of the special gesture—adopted, like many others, into Christianity—nothing at present can be safely maintained. The only known fact is that it came to Rome with Sabazius, the Phrygian Jove.

SOCIETY OF ENGINEERS.—June 5.—Mr. N. J. West, President, in the chair.—A paper was read on 'The Improvement of London Traffic,' by Mr. C. S. Meik and Mr. W. Beer.

ARISTOTELIAN.—May 1.—Mr. Shadworth Hodgson, V.P., in the chair.—A paper by Mr. Clement C. J. Webb on 'The Personal Element in Philosophy' was read, and a discussion followed.

June 5.—Mr. Shadworth Hodgson, V.P., in the chair.—The Report for the twenty-sixth session was read.—The officers for the ensuing session were elected:—President, Dr. Hastings Rashdall; Vice-Presidents, Prof. G. D. Hicks, Mr. G. E. Moore, and Prof. W. R. Sorley; Treasurer, Mr. A. Boutwood; and Honorary Secretary, Mr. H. W. Carr.—A paper was read by Mr. Carr on 'The Metaphysical Criterion and its Implications.' A discussion followed.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- WED. Royal, 43.—'El Ingenio Hidalgo Don Quixote de la Mancha: the Book and its Author,' Mr. P. H. Newman.
- Chemical, 53.—'Influence of Various Sodium Salts on the Solubility of Sparingly Soluble Acids,' Mr. J. C. Phillip; 'The Dielectric Constants of Phenols and their Ethers dissolved in Benzene and m-Xylene,' Mr. J. C. Phillip and Miss D. Haynes; 'Synthesis by means of the Silent Electric Discharge,' Mr. J. N. Collie; 'The Ultra-Violet Absorption Spectra of Benzene and certain of the Mono-Substituted Derivatives,' Messrs. E. C. C. Baly and J. N. Collie; 'Association in Mixed Solvents,' Mr. G. Barger; 'The Ultra-Violet Absorption Spectra of Derivatives of Benzene: Part II. The Phenols,' Mr. E. C. C. Baly and Miss E. K. Ewbank; and other Papers.
- THURS. Historical, 5.—'The Beginnings of the Cistercian Order,' Mr. W. A. Parker Mason.
- Linnæan, 8.—'Biscayan Plankton: Part VI. Colloid Radiolaria,' Dr. R. N. Wolfenden; 'Biscayan Plankton: Part VII. Mollusca,' Dr. P. Pelsener; 'Longitudinal Nerves and Transverse Vessels in Bamboos,' and 'Some Indian Undershrubs,' Sir D. Brandis; 'Notes on a Skeleton of the Musk-Duck, Bizurda lobata,' Mr. W. P. Pyecraft.
- FRI. Physical, 8.—'On the Ratio between the Mean Spherical and Mean Horizontal Candle-Power of Incandescent Lamps,' Dr. J. A. Fleming; 'The Electrical Conductivity of Flames,' Dr. K. A. Wilson; 'Contact with Dielectrics,' Mr. R. Appleyard; 'The Pendulum Accelerometer, an Instrument for the Direct Measurement and Recording of Acceleration,' Mr. E. Lancaster; 'A New Form of Pyrometer,' Mr. N. V. Stanford; 'Exhibition of a Refractometer,' Mr. R. Appleyard.

Science Gossip.

THE recent earthquake in India is responsible for delay in the proposed improvement of the Hindustan-Tibet road by which trade with Gartok viâ Simla was to be fostered. The sappers assigned for the work have been diverted to the Kulu Valley, where they will repair the damaged roads. At least a year will elapse before the Tibetan route can be taken in hand, as the needs created by the earthquake will absorb all available funds. All traffic with Gartok will consequently follow the pilgrim route viâ Almora during the present and next season.

PROF. W. H. WAGSTAFF is giving at Gresham College four lectures on 'The Infinitesimal Calculus' (third series) from Tuesday to Friday next inclusive.

THE Anthropological Institute has arranged with Mr. J. J. Harrison to publish a full scientific report upon the physical and psychophysical characteristics of the Pygmies whom the latter has brought to this country. For this purpose the Council of the Institute has appointed a select committee of competent anthropologists and medical men.

THE small planet discovered by Dr. Götz at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg, on January 8th last has received the name Peraga.

FINE ARTS

Painted Tombs in the Necropolis of Marissa.
By John P. Peters and Herman Thiersch.
(Palestine Exploration Fund.)

DR. PETERS, the first American explorer of Babylonia, and Dr. Thiersch, of Munich, were in Jerusalem in 1902, when they were told that the natives had discovered some wonderful tombs at Beit Jibrin, the site of the ancient Marissa. Although rather sceptical on the subject, they allowed a Nubian, who seemed well acquainted with

Dr. Bliss's excavations at Tell Sandahannah, to lead them to the spot, and they were shown a couple of tombs cut in the living rock, and possessing carvings and painted frescoes of great importance. With the help of sketches made on the spot by Father Lagrange and the other Dominicans of the École Biblique set up in Palestine by the convent of St. Étienne, these are here presented in colour, and form a handsome volume. There can be no doubt, from the names given, that the authors are right in attributing them to the work of a Sidonian colony settled at Marissa during the time when the Ptolemies ruled over Palestine, and the very probable date assigned to them is 274 to 175 B.C. They are valuable not only from their historical interest, but also showing the extremely composite character of later Phœnician art, and as an example of the way in which an essentially Semitic people picked up the customs, even in such matters as burials, of the different nations among whom they were cast.

The more important of the tombs seems to have been originally fashioned for Apollophanes, the headman of the Sidonian colony at Marissa. It consists of a tau-shaped central chamber having an altar at the junction of the longer limb with the dexter of the two shorter ones, while loculi or smaller chambers are driven on both sides of this central chamber throughout. On the right of the main door is a fine representation of the three-headed Cerberus, and above the altar is figured a cock, which the authors claim, with apparent justice, as having a Chthonic significance. But the great feature of the tomb is a frieze painted with figures of animals, and running virtually all round it. On this we find, depicted in brilliant colours and with some attention to natural details, a sort of procession, beginning with a trumpeter blowing into a long straight instrument, and a horseman, assisted by two dogs, spearing a she leopard. Then follow a lion, a bull attacked by a python, a wild boar, an oryx, a giraffe, a rhinoceros, a hippopotamus, a crocodile, an ibis, a porcupine, two fishes, a lynx, and a wild ass gnawing a serpent. These may be taken for representations of animals more or less familiar to the artist, and although the authors point out that one or two—notably the rhinoceros and the giraffe—seem to have been drawn from description only, they are, at any rate, intended for known animals, and not for monsters. Mingled with these, however, are representations of a griffin or lion with an eagle's head, a lion with a man's face, and another most extraordinary animal, rather resembling a wolf, but with upright ears so long that they might easily be mistaken for horns. The Greek letters which appear over most of the animals are too mutilated to be intelligible, and we are therefore left to our powers of guessing for their significance.

These, however, form the main puzzle of the tomb. Dr. Peters conjectures that Apollophanes was a purveyor of wild animals, either for the arena or, perhaps, for the museum of the Ptolemies at Alexandria, and that these pictures were, therefore, put in as illustrating the occupation of the dead. But how, then, can we account for fabulous animals, such as the griffin and man-faced lion, being included among existing ones? The same problem confronts us in the tombs of Beni Hassan in Upper Egypt, where, among the hunting scenes showing antelopes, gazelles, dogs, and the like, are figured monstrous leopards with snakes' necks and an animal with a human head and bird's wings rising out of a feline body, which the artist certainly never drew from the life. The best explanation, perhaps, is that the Egyptians fancied that such monsters inhabited the desert, in which the town-dwellers thought almost anything might happen, and that the Jamrach and Hagenbecks of the time believed themselves to be always on the point of securing one of them for the delectation of their royal patrons. The fact that the style of art employed in this instance is, like the language of the inscriptions, Greek, serves to illustrate the extraordinary adaptability of the Semites above mentioned.

The second tomb is less rich in paintings, showing only a fresco of a male and a female musician, playing the double flute and a harp respectively. The dresses and attitudes here are also distinctly Greek, and can be matched by the figures on hundreds of well-known Greek vases. They apparently once formed part of some religious scene now destroyed, and the contention of Dr. Peters and Dr. Thiersch that they are here depicted as descending into the tomb to cheer the dead with music seems justified. All the paintings have been much damaged by fanatics in recent times, but, on the other hand, they are covered with graffiti and other inscriptions made before they were abandoned. Some of these are very curious, including one which one of the authors considers to be a love-letter containing an assignation, while the other looks upon it as a funeral inscription relating to the mystic marriage of the dead with the queen of the underworld so often referred to in Greek literature. All these should be studied in the volume itself, which proves to be the most interesting and important that the society beloved by Walter Besant and other scholars has issued for some time.

THE SALONS.

THE general impression of a visit to the Salons is that the Old Salon is less interesting than ever—that as much as our Academy, or even more, it plays to the vulgar fashionable public. The portraits of M. Flameng, the son of the etcher, which have scored a great success, are in intention precisely similar to the coloured enlargements supplied by photographers. It is only in the smartness and chic of the execution that they can claim superiority. And these are typical of the great mass of portrait work to be seen at the older institution. A certain pathetic interest attaches to the efforts of octogenarians like Hébert and Bouguereau; but it would be hardly kind to criticize these in detail. Nor is the landscape work at the Old Salon more interesting. There are, of course, successes, such as Bastida's immense picture of bulls on the sea-shore, in which the power and effectiveness are undeniable, but they have no more real connexion with art than the failures. Their creators only go with more assurance in a direction which will never lead to real beauty or genuine expression.

On the other hand, the younger society, which for convenience we may still call that of the Champ de Mars, makes a better show this season than we have seen for some years. It is true that the group of which M. Cottet is the centre, and which generally contributes an important element to the exhibition, does not present signs of improvement. M. Simon's great portrait group of a réunion in the studio shows great talent, but is hard in the chiaroscuro and not agreeably composed, though the individual figures have unmistakable character and vitality. M. Ménard repeats himself too exactly, but his idyll of two figures in a sentimental classic landscape has charm, and M. Cottet himself has certainly done more striking work before. Another and more recent reputation—that of M. Caro-Delville—is by no means sustained this year. His portraits are heavy in handling, and, strangely enough when one recalls the almost too delicate and attractive harmonies of his last year's exhibits, crudely and flatly coloured.

M. Besnard exhibits part of a ceiling decoration for the Théâtre Français, a vast whirlpool of violet clouds and orange heavens in which struggle Apollo's steeds and attendant Hours. But in spite of the fact that he has accepted the usual seventeenth-century rhetorical conventions for such a theme, M. Besnard here shows at his best. He has never been a close observer or a subtle interpreter of nature, and is most agreeable when, instead of attempting this, he gives rein to a somewhat florid and extravagant fancy. His really remarkable power of constructing forms in all kinds of unlikely positions, and in the most difficult perspective, then makes itself seen. In this and in the wealth of his invention he resembles Willette, who also sends a charming decorative extravaganza on the streets of Paris with a phantom omnibus looming in the air through a crowd of gamins and pierrots. But M. Besnard has none of Willette's humour, nor any touch of his poetry, nor his taste in colour. M. Anquetin, who has shown remarkable power as a decorative painter, exhibits this year only small pieces. A head of a man laughing, slightly reminiscent of Jordaens, is modelled with the certainty of touch of the older masters; and a brilliant little park scene shows once more that M. Anquetin, alone of modern French artists, has arrived at a really scholarly understanding of the technique of oil paint. It is by no means perfect in colour, but, as far as the quality of the paint goes, it is comparable with the finest work of the eighteenth century. The same artist's Trumeau shows a certain reminiscence of Watteau's picture of Antiope; but while the Watteau is idyllic and tender, M. Anquetin's conception displays a temperamental harshness, almost a brutality, which affects all that he does. His humour is too ironical for such a subject; but, for all that, the picture interests on account of the scholarly and scientific treatment it displays. It has the elements of design as they were understood by the great masters.

No greater contrast to M. Anquetin's work can be imagined than that of a young painter, M. Maurice Denis. Whereas M. Anquetin uses all the technical science of the past to express a peculiarly modern bitterness of humour, M. Denis uses all the most modern effects of colouring, and unfortunately the modern crudity of handling, to express a really primitive naïveté and pious simplicity of feeling. The result is very curious. At first one is repelled by the barbaric crudity of the colour, the rawness of the surface, but the more one looks, the more one finds to admire—the less to excuse. One ends by being not merely charmed with the delicacy and tenderness of M. Denis's feeling, but also by finding a certain strange decorative beauty in his curious compositions. In one, a portrait of a lady and her three children, we have an entirely new and modern rendering of a Vierge à la donatrice. To the left the Virgin, with the Child lying on her lap, faces the spectator, but inclines towards the group of children, the two elder girls standing demurely, almost stiffly, with bright animal eyes turned towards the Virgin, while to the right the mother kneels to present the baby, who holds out its hands towards the outstretched arm of the Christ child. It is impossible in a description to convey an idea of the singular combination of archaic symmetry with the utmost naturalness and vivacity in the poses, or to explain how penetrating and sympathetic is the observation of childhood. Very similar in idea, though entirely new in composition, is the Hommage à l'Enfant Jésus (No. 405), where the background of vine trellises, seen against a distant hill, is reminiscent of primitive Italian art, and the treatment and effect of light are essentially modern. One sees clearly in M. Denis's work the influence of Puvion de Chavannes, but his feeling for colour and form is distinct, and his treatment is more intimate and more naïve. The Adoration of the Magi (406) is a strange composition, almost grotesque in parts, but redeemed by the extraordinary beauty and freshness of the conception of the Virgin, the dramatic appropriateness of her pose. The great relief that one feels in looking at such work, in spite of much that is odd and at first displeasing, is due to the fact that here at least the artist has something to say of which he is definitely convinced, and is not merely displaying the apparatus of an elaborate rhetoric because he happens to have learnt it.

Another artist who is equally decided in his attitude to life, though it happens to be a very different one, is M. Veber, whose work we have always found admirable. M. Veber's is, of course, the art of the "gutter press," but it so happens that in Paris this is a real living art, and as such, whatever its origins and aspirations, must be welcomed. Veber has surpassed himself this year in a little piece called Fermentation, the irony of which it would be useless, and perhaps scarcely delicate, to translate into words. It is painted with extraordinary skill, and has almost the beauty of a Brouwer and something of the larger poetical sense of a Breughel. Here is surely a man to whom future ages will look for a clear interpretation of the humorous disillusionment of modern life. His Casino de Frontière (1184) is more of a caricature, but still a brilliant study of contemporary manners. The hands of the players stretched out to grasp their winnings, or closed heavily upon what they have got, are alone a proof of M. Veber's psychological insight. Even more caricatured are M. Truchet's pictures of cafés chantants. They lack, too, the poetical imagination of M. Veber's pictures, though they show great power of observation and expressive design. M. Zuloaga sends this year one of his usual pictures, Mes Cousines, with violent over-accentuation of the expression and capricious light and colour; but he also exhibits a full-length portrait of An Old Toreador (1236) which shows how genuine a talent he mars by adopting mannerisms which aim only at attracting attention. This is not merely superficially like Goya, it has something of his cruel incisiveness and directness of vision. It is certainly the most sincere and deliberate work by this artist that we have seen. M. de la Gandara is more or less in the same category as M. Zuloaga, in that it is always a question whether he will choose to be a genuine artist or a brilliant poseur. His exhibits this year do not solve the problem, but they are decidedly better than his too successful pieces of last year.

Among the landscapes, Dauchez's Tournant de Rivière (355) is a remarkable interpretation of the effect of low sunlight. He is certainly one of the strongest of the younger landscape painters, and his pictures, even though they are rather brutal in execution, always have a certain poetical intention.

M. Baudouin's landscapes in fresco are also remarkable. His interpretation is always in the direction of large decorative effect, and his sense of design is so vigorous that he ought, one thinks, to succeed in decorative landscape on a large scale. In his work, as well as in M. Denis's and that of several of the younger men, there is a notable tendency to revert to a primitive simplicity of vision and directness of statement which may perhaps mark the beginnings of a new movement in French art.

Among the drawings there is much excellent work. M. Guignet, when he draws simply, and does not affect a foolish mannerism of innumerable hatched strokes, is admirable; so, too, are the sanguines of M. Perrichon and the water-colours of M. Lottin.

In the sculpture, the most important things are two by Meunier, whose death is a serious loss to modern art, for he never did better work than these two bronzes: one a seated figure of a miner, the other an ideal head of an old man, rather like Michaelangelo, called Philosophy. Rodin sends only some mutilated plaster fragments, which have, however, his invariable power of arousing the suggestion of life inspiring the forms and expressing itself in the movement. He also sends a bronze bust. M. Fix-Masseau's Éducation de Faune is a finely composed group, and his Blanche, in enamelled earthenware, is a brilliant rendering of intensely squalid and ugly forms, relieved by the same kind of humour that one finds in Japanese art. M. Injalbert's large vase, with nymphs and satyrs forming a free pattern round it, is very fine in detail, but wanting in the larger architectural lines.

FRENCH AND DUTCH PICTURES AT MESSRS. OBACH'S.

THE so-called Barbizon painters and the kindred masters of Holland occupy a curious position. With one or two notable exceptions, they are men of moderate—or rather, strictly limited—talent, which rarely ventures beyond a somewhat narrow range of subject, emotional appeal, and creative endeavour. Nor have they, either as a group or singly, that overwhelming mastery of technique which arrests the attention and dazzles the eye, even when lavished upon things not intrinsically precious or even interesting.

Nevertheless, the ordeal of the sale-room proves that their popularity is steadily on the increase, and the test of exhibition after exhibition does not make them stale. Corot, Fantin-Latour, Daubigny—none of these deviates from a certain normal type of work to the degree that a good English painter is wont to do. An exhibition of Crome and Gainsborough, not to mention a born experimentalist like Turner, would provide a succession of surprises, each picture differing from its neighbour not only in colour and composition, but in artistic attitude as well. At Messrs. Obach's the bulk of a representative little exhibition is made up of things the like of which has been seen before time after time; yet the show as a whole still strikes a note of freshness, if not of positive novelty.

The charm of the Barbizon painters is generally explained as the result of their sincerity, of the intimacy and frankness with which they approached nature. Certainly, in the case of men of inferior power, such as Mauve, the absence of this sincerity annuls all the man's deftness of hand and cleverness of arrangement, and leaves only an impression of dexterous dullness. James Maris, too, fails often from a similar cause, though in the View of Dordrecht (No. 5) he approaches his subject, a group of buildings such as Rembrandt might have drawn, with a gravity befitting his great reputation. One other quality, however, in the making of the fame of the Barbizon painters has been hardly less important than their sincerity, namely, their sense of balance and proportion. What they say may be simple, but they not only say it sincerely: they say it at just the right length. No artists understand better the just proportion of space to subject. They work on a scale exactly adapted to the matter in hand, neither stretching a triviality on a large canvas, nor crowding an important subject into a small one. They paint just so much detail as is required for perfect representation of the whole effect, and so hold a middle course between surplusage and emptiness. Even their slighter works, although they may hold out no very definite or powerful attraction, are thus, in a sense, satisfactory pictures, from the exact correspondence of their matter with their form.

Messrs. Obach's exhibition, however, contains a good many works that rise above this normal type. The Villeneuve St. Germain of Daubigny (4), for instance, has an air of precision and cool gravity that suggests almost the early painting of Corot. The landscape, too, by De Boek (11) is rendered with far more real feeling than that clever painter often shows, while the Water Picnic (18) of Monticelli displays that master in the mood of Watteau, or rather of Fragonard. The artist will probably prefer Monticelli in his more dazzling world of jewelled pageantry, since with the increase of definition there comes an apparent decrease in creativeness. But with the public the picture should be popular, because it reflects the gaieties of eighteenth-century France, which are now in fashion, with some added fervour of real sunlight.

The Fishing Village, by Corot (26), is less conventional in arrangement than the larger picture which hangs next to it. But Daubigny's Sunrise (28) is still more interesting. The scene recalls the wonderful little 'Sunset' by Rubens in the National Gallery. A wide, misty landscape, viewed through willow trees from a slight eminence, is lighted by the sun rising over it through a single rosy cloud, set in a pearly sky, which passes above into clear turquoise blue. The whole has an indescribable freshness, while the flush on the cloud by the sun gives a curious sense of reality to the scene, apart from its value in an exquisite colour harmony. Diaz, too, an artist of far less consistent taste and talent than Daubigny, is shown to unusual advantage in an important painting (32), in which black stormclouds advance over a heath, revealing through their rifts flashes of pure white and deep blue. An excellent little Forest of Fontainebleau (84), by Rousseau, in which a burst of sunlight illuminates recesses of a massive oak, also deserves notice, although, while the recollection of the splendid picture at the Grafton Gallery is still in our minds, it cannot, perhaps, be considered as a specimen of Rousseau's genius in the rare moments when it attains complete mastery.

THE TWEEDMOUTH SALE.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE'S sale on Saturday last was of singular interest, although Lord Tweedmouth's collection could hardly rank as one of high order. The total of 49,548*l.* 12*s.* realized by the fifty-two pictures was, however, unexpected, and was due largely to the amazing prices paid for the Raeburns. Three pictures by this artist, which cost 1,520 gs., now produced 16,800 gs., so that Lord Tweedmouth's investment in paint and canvas will rank as one of the most splendid of its kind to be found in the annals of modern picture sales. There were in all seven Raeburns. Lady Raeburn, wife of the artist, whole-length, in white and brown dress and white headdress, seated in a landscape, reached 8,700 gs. Its previous sales were: Raeburn collection, 1877, 950 gs.; John Heugh collection, 1878, 610 gs.; and Sir William Patrick Andrew collection, 1887, 810 gs. Portrait of the Artist, a version of the National Portrait Gallery picture, in dark coat with roll collar, yellow vest, and white stock, his left hand raised to his chin, 4,500 gs., purchased by Messrs. Agnew for the National Gallery of Scotland. At the sale of the Raeburn collection in 1877 it brought 510 gs., and a similar sum at the dispersal of the collection of Sir William Patrick Andrew in 1887. Both these fine portraits are reproduced in Sir Walter Armstrong's 'Raeburn,' that of the artist forming the frontispiece. The portrait of Lucy Johnstone, daughter of Col. Johnstone, of Hutton Hall, and wife of Mr. Oswald, of Auchinervie, a head and shoulders, in white dress, with gold earrings, 3,600 gs. At the J. T. Gibson-Craig sale in 1887 this realized 200 gs. Portrait of Sir Walter Scott when a young man, a bust, in brown coat with pink vest and white stock, 1,000 gs. This was formerly in the possession of Campbell the poet, and at William Russell's sale in 1884 sold for 150 gs. The Hon. Mrs. King of Duniva, in grey dress with black lace fichu and a flowered cloak round her arms, 760 gs. One of several Raeburn portraits of Henry Mackenzie, author of 'The Man of Feeling,' in dark dress with white stock, 220 gs.; and David Haliburton, of Bushey, in brown coat and vest, 200 gs.

The Reynoldses included a not particularly pleasing whole-length of Emilia, Countess of Bellamont (she married Charles, Earl of Bellamont, in 1774, and died in 1818), in lilac dress trimmed with ermine and knots of gold braid. This was painted in 1778, the artist receiving 150 gs. for it; it remained in the family until 1875, when Sir C. Coote sold it at Christie's for 2,400 gs. Mr. Graves, the purchaser, sold it to the Countess of Chesterfield for 2,520 gs.; it afterwards passed privately into the collection of Lord Carnarvon, and thence into Lord Tweedmouth's, and now sold for the very high figure of 6,600 gs. The version of Simplicity (of which the undoubted original is now at Waddesdon), a portrait of Miss Theophila Gwatkin, in white dress with blue sash, seated under trees, holding some flowers in her lap, realized 2,000 gs., as against the 160 gs. paid for it at the William Russell sale in December, 1884. This charming little picture is not in its original "pure" state, and the very high price paid for it caused general surprise. The portrait of Miss Anne Dutton, daughter of Lord Sherborne, and wife of Mr. Blackwell, of Ampney Park, Gloucester, in white dress with blue sash, embroidered with gold, seated, resting her elbow upon a pedestal, fetched 1,800 gs.; and that of Viscount Ligonier, as it is catalogued, a sketch for the whole-length portrait, in military uniform, standing in a landscape by the side of his horse, went for 440 gs. At W. Russell's sale in 1884 it brought only 22*l.*

Hogarth's "conversation piece," An Assembly at Wanstead House, with portraits of Richard Child, Earl Tylney, his wife, children, tenants, and friends, is a composition with twenty-six small whole-length figures and said to be the earliest known picture by the artist; it was painted for Lord Castlemaine in 1728, when Hogarth was thirty-one years of age. In the course of some 'Memoirs of the late ingenious Mr. William Hogarth,' published in one of the newspapers, of which an excerpt is now in the possession of the present writer, there is a most interesting reference to this picture. After referring to Hogarth's early struggles, the writer, who was evidently intimately acquainted with the artist, says: "The first piece in which he distinguished himself as a painter was in the figures of the Wandsworth [evidently a misprint for Wanstead] Assembly. These are drawn from the life, and without any circumstances of his burlesque manner. The faces are said to be extremely like, and the colouring is rather better than in some of his best subsequent pieces." It may be mentioned that an account (with a view) of Wanstead House appears in The Gentleman's Magazine of June, 1830. The picture of Hogarth brought 2,750 gs.

Morland's well-known picture of dancing dogs, engraved by T. Gauguin in 1790, fetched the very high price of 4,000 gs. The three examples of Henry Robert Morland, father of the greater George, and himself the son of an artist, were interesting replicas of pictures which created a mild storm of enthusiasm in the latter half of the eighteenth century. They are portraits of women ironing, washing, and churning respectively. The first two were engraved by P. Dawe, and several pictures with these titles were exhibited by Henry Morland at the Free Society of Artists from 1769 to 1776. The demand for replicas appears to have been great, as there are many in existence still: the two engraved portraits are doubtless those now in the National Gallery. The picture called Churning does not appear to have been exhibited or engraved, and the association of the Miss Gunnings with the portraits in the pictures will not bear investigation. The three pictures now realized 480 gs., 350 gs., and 200 gs. respectively. The two family portraits by Hoppner, a lady in white dress with blue sash and long gloves, and her husband in brown coat with white stock, sold for 3,750 gs. and 105 gs. respectively.

Other early English pictures included: R. Cosway and W. Hodges, Mrs. Cosway in white dress, seated at the window of her breakfast-room in Pall Mall, looking at a view of the Mall and Westminster Abbey, the King's procession to open Parliament passing along the Mall, engraved by W. Birch, 1789, 510 gs. Allan Ramsay, Two Children (afterwards Mrs. Malcolm and Lady Campbell) of the Artist, the elder in white dress with pink sash, embracing her baby sister, 120 gs. Two by G. Stubbs, Portrait of Josiah Wedgwood in grey dress, mounted on a white horse, in a landscape, painted on a plaque of wedgwood, 520 gs. (this was bought in for Lord Tweedmouth); and a gyrfalcon, 1780, 290 gs. Landseer, The Forest in October, pastel, 720 gs. R. Ansdell, The New Family, 1860, 110 gs. G. F. Watts, Portrait of Russell Gurney, Recorder of London, 550 gs. (Rickards sale, 1887, 265 gs.).

The old masters included: A. Canaletto, The Piazza of St. Mark's, Venice, with numerous figures, 460 gs. M. Hondcoeter, a cock and hen, with ducks and ducklings near a pond in the foreground, signed and dated 1681, 780 gs.

The second portion of the sale comprised pictures from various sources. The very indifferent portrait by Alexander Nasmyth of Robert Burns, which the Scottish and other newspapers have so extensively "boomed" during the last few weeks, was "knocked down" (which is not always the same thing as sold) at 1,600 gs. Its pedigree is fully given in the sale catalogue; but we have often noticed in connexion with pictures that the longer the pedigree the poorer the picture as a work of art. The finest portrait in this portion of the sale was a superb example of Hoppner, a bust of a lady in white dress, with black lace shawl thrown over her left arm, 5,800 gs. Raeburn's Portrait of Anna Maria, Countess of Minto, in dark dress, with white kerchief round her neck, 1,550 gs. Reynolds's Portrait of Lady Waldegrave, afterwards Duchess of Gloucester, in grey silk dress with crimson cord sash, a replica of the portrait at Nuneham, 1,270 gs. A very Cotes-like portrait, catalogued as by Reynolds, of Miss Milles, in white silk dress with blue and gold sash, holding a bouquet of flowers in her left hand, 660 gs. These two were the property of Earl Soudes. There were four early Reynoldses in Mr. Aubrey Cartwright's collection: Mrs. Elizabeth Channey, in plum-coloured dress with white lace ruffles, 480 gs.; Richard Channey, in brown dress, with white stock, lace ruffles, powdered wig, 105 gs.; William Henry Channey, in similar style, with a wig, 105 gs.; and a portrait of the artist, in red coat, white stock, and black hat, from Sir Thomas Lawrence's collection, 310 gs.

The only other pictures of note were: R. L. Tournières, Portrait of a French Nobleman, in rich brown dress, with crimson cloak, 690 gs. J. Downman, Mrs. Hunter, wife of John Hunter, in white dress and large lace cap, 115 gs.; Mrs. Downman (née Charlotte Goodsend), wife of Francis Downman, attorney, in white lace cap, black ribbon round her neck, 120 gs. N. Maes, Portrait of a Gentleman, in brown dress with white sleeves and collar, 720 gs. Sir W. Beecher, George III., in dark coat with star of the Garter, 360 gs. J. Opie, The Cornish Girl, portrait of a girl in dark dress, her left hand holding a gold chain which is round her neck, 460 gs. Lady Garrow, wife of Sir William Garrow, in dark dress, with white muslin at the neck, 830 gs. J. Raysdael, Woody Landscape, with a peasant and dogs on a sandy road, 560 gs. Gainsborough, A Bay Scene, with two fishing-boats on the left, peasants seated in the foreground, 250 gs.

The day's sale of 116 lots realized 67,815*l.* 16*s.*

SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 6th inst the following prints and engravings: After Morland: The Turnpike Gate, by W. Ward, 25*l.*; Guinea Pig, and Dancing Dogs, both by Gauguin, 91*l.* After Reynolds: Lady Beauchamp, by W. Nutter, 26*l.*; Mrs. Carnac, by J. R. Smith, 37*l.* After Cosway: A Lady as a Gipsy Woman, carrying a Child, by J. Agar, 26*l.*

Messrs. Knight, Frank & Rutley sold on the 7th inst. Whistler's etchings The Kitchen, 31*l.* and The Lime-Burner, with pencil inscription "For Mother from J. Whistler," 52*l.*

Fine-Art Cossip.

TO-DAY at Messrs. H. Graves & Co.'s Galleries the London Sketch Club Exhibition is open to private view.

THE Fine-Art Society are showing a collection of sculpture by Onslow Ford and Irish water-colours by Miss Mary Burton.

At the Baillie Gallery next Thursday is the opening day of an exhibition of water-colour drawings by Mary Hogarth; drawings by Lewis Baumer; and paintings by Katharine Cameron, Annie French, and others.

THE arrangement of the bequest of G. F. Watts's pictures, including, as it does, several important centres outside London, will be received with general satisfaction.

VOL. III. No. 3 of The Museum of Fine Arts Bulletin (Boston, U.S.) is an interesting report of facts and opinions concerning the new Velazquez, acquired in Madrid by Dr. D. W. Ross in the autumn of 1904. The Report shows a preponderance of opinion in favour of the genuineness of the picture, which has been examined by some English experts. Illustrated articles embodying the same opinion have recently appeared in The Burlington Magazine and The Art Journal.

A NEW museum has, after many years of agitation, been added to the many already existing in Paris—the Musée of the Union Centrale des Arts Décoratifs, which recently opened its doors at the Pavillon de Marsan. The installation has cost the Union Centrale a sum of over three million francs, and the museum will not pass into the possession of the State for fifteen years. The value of the objects now exposed to the public in a fitting manner has been estimated at eleven million francs, and the successful inauguration is due largely to the continued efforts of M. Georges Berger, President of the Union Centrale.

THE Antwerp Museum has acquired, at the cost of 20,000fr., an interesting and important picture by Jean Prevost of the beheading of St. Catherine. Prevost was a native of Mons, and after residing at Bruges for some time went to Antwerp in 1515, where he became a friend of Albert Dürer, who painted his portrait. The picture by Prevost is described as of excellent quality and of rich colouring.

THE programme of the Sixty-Second Annual Congress of the British Archaeological Association, which will be held at Reading from July 17th to 22nd, has just been issued. Among other places of antiquarian interest to be visited will be the Reading Museum, famous for its Roman objects, found not far off at Silchester, the site of that city itself, Pamber Church, Aldermaston Church, Upton Court (a fine Elizabethan mansion), Newbury, Lambourn, Wayland-Smith's Cave, Uffington Castle, the White Horse, Childrey, Wantage, Wallingford, Crommarsh-Gifford Castle, Sutton-Courtenay Grange, Abingdon, and Donnington Castle. During the week papers will be read on 'The Tenth Iter of Antoninus and Roman Stations in the North,' 'The Palimpsest Brass at St. Lawrence, Reading,' 'The History of Wallingford,' 'The Walls of Wallingford,' and 'The History of Abingdon.'

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

COVENT GARDEN.—Les Huguenots; Faust; Lohengrin.

THE revival of 'Les Huguenots' at Covent Garden is welcome. The performance was, on the whole, very good; but, especially in the first two acts, there were signs that it would have been better for further rehearsal. The rôle of Valentine suits Mlle. Destinn, and in the two duets she was impressive; in the second and greater both she and Signor Caruso, as Raoul, were most effective. Mlle. Selma Kurz sang the florid Margarita music with all skill and effect. Signor Mancinelli conducted admirably. There were the usual cuts, and the omission of the last act. It would be decidedly interesting, and certainly fair to the composer, to give, if only once, a performance of the work in its entirety, beginning, as is done with Wagner's works, earlier than usual. The fine singing in 'Les Huguenots' last Saturday frequently aroused loud applause.

Of other performances we can only just mention the first performance this season of 'Faust,' with Madame Melba as Marguerite and M. Dalmore as Faust; and the favourable first appearances of Fräulein Delsarta and Herr Menzinsky in 'Lohengrin.'

WALDORF.—Don Pasquale; Norma; Fiorella.

A VERY good performance was given of Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale' last week at the Waldorf Theatre. Madame Alice Nielsen and Messrs. Bonci, Pini-Corsi, and Angelini-Fornari entered thoroughly into the spirit of the amusing piece. This comic opera will, no doubt, prove a draw during the present season.—Last Saturday was revived Bellini's 'Norma,' an opera once popular by reason of the great vocalists who sang in it.

Mr. Amherst Webber's 'Fiorella' was produced on Wednesday evening. M. Sardou's "lyric comedy, in one act," of which the English version is by S. A. and C. H., is artificial, and has not that touch of nature which creates interest and sympathy. Mr. Webber has, however, written some clever music. The brief instrumental introduction, the duet for soprano and tenor, and the concerted music near the end show talent. The music is after the manner of Mascagni and Leoncavallo; and the orchestration is often very effective. Madame de Cisneros, Mlle. Ferraris, and Signori Pini-Corsi, Pezzutti, and Angelini-Fornari were the interpreters, but the piece had not received its final touches in rehearsal. Signor Conti conducted, however, with marked tact.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Hillier Festival.

MR. LOUIS HILLIER'S musical festival at the Queen's Hall—which began last Thursday week, and concluded last Thursday—was one of considerable interest. The large Kursaal Orchestra from Ostend displayed excellent qualities, while M. Léon Rinskoﬀ proved himself an intelligent and able conductor. Some of the performances were better than others, but in the last two movements of Beethoven's Symphony in A there were exceptional vigour and brilliancy, while in M. Rabaud's charming 'Divertissement on Russian Airs,' and particularly in César Franck's 'Psyché,' there were marked delicacy and refinement. Mr. Hillier introduced novelties into all his programmes, but in these, to judge from the comparatively small audiences, the public unfortunately took little interest. The first of these novelties, 'La Mer, Esquisses Symphoniques,' by P. Gilson, was certainly not striking. Some of the music was graceful, and the scoring was good; of individuality, however, there was little trace. M. Rabaud's 'Divertissement' is simple, but characteristic Russian themes are treated with skill and refinement. Mr. J. Holbrooke's orchestral variations on 'The Girl I Left behind Me' proved somewhat erratic. There was no lack of skill, and the effort to produce something out of the common order was evident—perhaps too much so. It is, however, fair to Mr. Holbrooke to state that his music is by no means comfortable to play, and although there was entente cordiale between the English composer and the Belgian players, there was not complete understanding. César Franck's 'Psyché,' arranged in suite form by the composer from his symphonic poem with choral ending, proved a welcome novelty. It is really astonishing that music of such poetry, charm, and delicacy should not have been heard before now in London.

Musical Gossip.

A SPECIAL orchestral concert was given at the Bechstein Hall on Monday evening. The programme consisted of works rarely heard. It opened with Méhul's Overture to 'Stratonice,' a one-act Comédie Héroïque, produced at Paris in 1792; but Paisiello's bright Overture to his opera 'Nina, o la pazza per amore,' proved far more interesting; the music, though old (1789), is fresh and attractive. The rendering of Haydn's 'Paukenwirbel' Symphony in E flat, under the direction of Mr. Thomas Beecham, was sound, but too stiff and heavy. Miss Fanny Davies gave an excellent performance of the solo part of Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, written in 1786, a work of strength and beauty, which, especially in its first movement, foreshadows his great successor. In the earliest notice of Beethoven's 'Sonate Pathétique' the reviewer refers to the theme of its Rondo as somewhat too reminiscent, meaning, evidently, of the Rondo theme in the concerto in question. The orchestral accompaniment was given with good effect by Mr. Beecham. Mr. Frederic Austin, who has a strong voice, sang Mr. Cyril Scott's clever setting of the ballad 'Helen of Kirkconnel,' given with orchestra for the first time in London. A series of concerts on similar lines may be given next winter.

A VERY brief notice must be given of the excellent London Symphony Concert at Queen's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. Miss Maud MacCarthy's rendering of the solo part of Tschai-kowsky's Violin Concerto was technically perfect, and as regards interpretation most refined. The programme ended with Tschai-kowsky's 'Pathetic.' The power and earnestness with which the music was interpreted under the direction of Herr Nikisch seemed to give it new life. The first movement was too slow; but the conductor follows no tradition; he only gives out the music as he feels it. The whole performance was most impressive; Herr Nikisch is undoubtedly the interpreter par excellence of Tschai-kowsky.

THE series of performances now being given by Madame Yvette Guilbert at the Haymarket are most enjoyable. As an exponent of the 'Chansons Pompadour' and 'Chansons Crino-line' this artist has no rival, and the accompaniments, admirably played by Mlle. Marguerite Delcourt on a harpsichord and on an old pianoforte, add much to the charm and character of the songs. But there is another feature of these concerts which more immediately concerns us. The Nouvelle Société des Instruments Anciens, M. Henri Casadesus and his associates, whose instruments are the quinton, viola d'amour, viola da gamba, contrabass, and clavecin, are performing various old works of exceptional interest. They are all accomplished artists, and ought to give a series of concerts in the autumn, when more notice could be taken of them.

THE festival held at Eisenach on the 26th and 27th of last month for the fund which is being raised to purchase the house in which Johann Sebastian Bach was born passed off successfully. The 'St. John' Passion was performed on the first day in the Georgenkirche. On the second day there was a concert, in which Profs. Joachim and Halir took part. The festival concluded with the 'St. Matthew' Passion. The Berlin Singakademie and the Philharmonic orchestra were under the direction of Georg Schumann. The church and collegiate choir of Eisenach, under the direction of Prof. Thureau, sang the chorale in the opening chorus of the 'St. Matthew' Passion.

MADAME PATTI gave a successful concert at the Albert Hall on June 1st, the programme consisting of familiar items.

JULY 12TH is fixed for the benefit, at Covent Garden, of Mlle. Bauermeister, who has been for forty years before the public. Madame Melba, Signor Caruso, and other notable artists will appear.

MR. N. VERT, the well-known concert agent, died on June 3rd, after a long illness. For many years he was connected with the Richter Concerts.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |   |
|--------|---|
| SUN.   | Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.                   |
| MON.   | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                               |
| TUES.  | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                               |
|        | Grand Opera, Waldorf Theatre.                             |
| WED.   | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                               |
|        | Grand Opera, Waldorf Theatre.                             |
| THURS. | Miss Rogers and Herr Kuhn's Song Recital, 3, Eolian Hall. |
|        | Irish Folk-Song Society, 330, Londonderry House.          |
|        | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                               |
|        | Grand Opera, Waldorf Theatre.                             |
| FRI.   | Mlle. Hélène Luquiens's Concert, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.    |
|        | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                               |
|        | Grand Opera, Matinée and Evening, Waldorf Theatre.        |
| SAT.   | Mr. John Thomas's Harp Recital, 3, Empress Rooms.         |
|        | Mozart Society, 3, Portman Rooms.                         |
|        | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                               |
|        | Grand Opera, Matinée, Waldorf Theatre.                    |

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

HAYMARKET.—Revival of The Cabinet Minister: a Farce in Four Acts. By A. W. Pinero.

AT its first production at the Court Theatre on April 23rd, 1890, Mr. Pinero's four-act farce 'The Cabinet Minister' encountered considerable opposition. On its revival on the 1st inst. at the Haymarket a complete change of reception seems indicative of a corresponding alteration in public sentiment. The piece has undergone no modification, and is not better acted. It retains its old merits, which are conspicuous, and its faults, which are inconsiderable. Its meek hero still seeks solace from political worry in abortive attempts to play the flute, and its heroine finds an issue from her troubles by gambling successfully on the Stock Exchange on the strength of knowledge, furtively obtained, of Cabinet secrets. Fifteen years ago the blending of frivolity and serious matter bred something like resentment, and it is only in recent years we have reconciled ourselves to theories of Mr. Pinero concerning the distinction between comedy and farce which have enlarged the borders of one order of entertainment, if they have not provided us with another. Circumstance is, as Mr. Pinero conceives, the leading influence in comedy as it is in tragedy, and his view that amusement should spring from the exaggerations and extravagances of real and recognizable people is defensible—has, indeed, won acceptance. Real enough are the characters in 'The Cabinet Minister,' while many of them are drawn with the skill of a trained and admirable humourist. Figures more genuinely comic than the Macphails have rarely been put upon the stage, and the Drumdurrises, with their feud concerning the future of their infant son, are conceived in a spirit of admirable satire. Some exaggeration attends the characters of Mrs. Gaylustre and her brother Joseph Lebanon; but through the caricature it is possible to recognize real traits. At any rate, the play proved wholly diverting, and conveyed an idea that the earlier audience must have been unreasonable or exigent. Miss Winifred Emery succeeded Mrs. John Wood as the Minister's good-hearted, but extravagant and passably unscrupulous wife, and played with much comic spirit, though with a less transparent enjoyment of her own extravagance. Her boxing of her son's ears was less delightfully vigorous and emphatic. Mr. Cyril Maude gave a good specimen of a Jew moneylender of the highly plausible type, and was most artistically odious and repellent. Mr. Norman Forbes assigned a true Gaelic physiognomy to the Macphail, whose heroic and imaginative mother was played by Miss Carlotta Addison. We cannot deal with the various features of an interpretation comic throughout, and can only say that the success of the experiment suggests the expediency of further revivals of the same kind.

LYRIC.—The Breed of the Treshams: a Drama in Four Acts. By John Rutherford.

A CURIOUS product of amateur effort is 'The Breed of the Treshams,' a four-act work which first (in 1903) saw the light at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and was subsequently given for a few days at Kennington. It shows a certain measure of familiarity with history, and is in some respects original in conception, but strives to compound by bustle and bloodshed for the absence of dramatic sense. What is best about it is its title, with its suggestion of Browning. Its story is, however, frankly unintelligible, and its incidents recall a score of pieces, including 'Don Caesar de Bazan' and 'La Tosca.' The period of action may be put somewhere near 164—, at the time when the fortunes of Charles I. were on the wane, and depicts the proceedings in a royalist regiment. For some reason not easily grasped, the officers, headed by the colonel, are occupied with a plot to yield up to the Parliamentarians the Castle of Faversham which they garrison, while the body of the regiment is on the point of mutiny, presumably for want of pay. These things give rise to much melodramatic and not very significant incident, including a considerable amount of bloodshed and some approach to rape. By these things the public was greatly stirred, and the piece must be pronounced a popular success. The central figure in it, a Lieut. Reresby, generally known as "the Rat," is a soldier of fortune, a compound of Cyrano de Bergerac, Don Caesar de Bazan, Dugald Dalgetty, and other characters of fiction, who, amidst many qualities commending him to a drumhead court martial, a long rope, and a short shrift, has capacities for exemplary devotion and self-sacrifice. This character is played with vivacity by Mr. Martin Harvey, and is warmly greeted by the public. Other characters are assigned Mr. Charles Glenney, Miss Maud Milton, Miss Coleridge, and Miss N. de Silva. The whole would be better placed at the Adelphi than in its present home, but will probably last through the season.

TERRY'S.—Season of Madame Réjane.—L'Age d'Aimer: en Quatre Actes. Par Pierre Wolff.

SOME abridgment of delight is involved in the fact that in visiting London with one of the best members of her company and the latest and most considerable additions to her repertory, Madame Réjane has been compelled to resort to a house such as Terry's, the stage of which is scarcely adequate to her requirements. The occasion has, however, attractiveness and value. In opening with her latest novelty, 'L'Age d'Aimer' of M. Pierre Wolff, a piece produced at the Gymnase on the 1st of April, she has chosen to appear in a part totally different from the line in which she is ordinarily seen. 'L'Age d'Aimer,' though announced as a comedy, has scarcely more claims to be so described than has 'La Dame aux Camélias,' with which it has, indeed, something in common. It paints a world to which nothing at the service of the dramatist corresponds in this kingdom—a world in which the amant supplants le mari, and in which a temporary union, or what is called collage, is treated with as much seriousness and respect as espousal—a world, moreover, into which no coarseness and little levity intrude. Accepting the advances of Maurice Gérard, a good-hearted volatile youth of twenty-nine years, by whom she is coveted and adored, Geneviève Clarens (Madame Réjane), the femme de quarante ans, discovers, after living for a few months on honeycomb, that her lover is inconstant, and is leaving her, not for the first time, for Colette, a girl of twenty-five, who, on her part, is also betraying a jealous, worthy, and devoted lover of fifty-five. No room is presented in the part of Geneviève for what is humorous or essentially Parisian in the art of Madame Réjane. She has, with aching heart, to pardon his escapades, eat her soul out in patience, break with him when his infidelity is too patent, and ultimately, in answer to his penitence, to concede a reconciliation which guarantees nothing but renewed torture. This she does with consummate art and with poignant sincerity, showing complete mastery in the exposition of the tragic aspects of modern existence. Of the brilliant company by which she was supported at the Gymnase, Madame Réjane brings over two: Mlle. Renée Felyne, the exponent of a mannequin, or wearer of clothes in the shop of a modiste, and M. Huguenet, an unrivalled representative of a grumbling, good-hearted lover. A trace of caricature is to be found in a performance which, however, is undeniably diverting.

ADELPHI.—Under which King? a Play in Four Acts. By James Bernard Fagan.

Pistol's famous adjuration, "Under which king? Bezonian, speak or die," has suggested, apparently, to Mr. Fagan something more than the title of his new Adelphi production. There is in the play but one Bezonian—a fine specimen of the race—and he is almost the only person in it who dies. Speech could scarcely, however, have saved him, since he is a deaf mute; and though it is alleged that he could and did write, and so imperilled the life of Prince Charles Edward Stuart, those who see him and know the epoch are justified in questioning the assertion. 'Under which King?' deals with the adventures of Charles Edward during the wanderings which followed the defeat at Culloden. It introduces the Young Pretender himself, who, without an effort at disguise, enters the house of one of his adherents, a Cameron, where, with unpardonable rashness, he allows himself to be addressed as Royal Highness, and receives all compromising forms of homage. As the lady of the house, Helen Cameron, is young and lovely, an expert horsewoman, addicted to masquerading in male attire, and an ardent devotee of the house of Stuart, she is expected by the spectator to undertake some such escort as was accomplished in the Hebrides by Flora Macdonald. Nothing of the kind comes off; and though Helen Cameron rides alone through the glens at midnight, it is to save the honour and life of her lover, who is in the service of King George, and is the unconscious bearer of a document betraying the whereabouts of the fugitive prince. The Hanoverian colonel to whom she hands this is madly in love with her. So soon as he realizes its import, he offers her in exchange for her embraces the life of her lover, now hopelessly imperilled. This invitation she rejects with scorn. When she finds out, however, that she is herself the betrayer of the young prince, and when immunity for him is proffered as the payment for her favours, she is for a while disposed to treat. Such is in the end her influence over the colonel that he betrays his trust for the sake of ungratified love. Not in the least convincing is this, but it escapes the charge of being commonplace. The scenes between Helen and the colonel have some strength. It is, however, impossible in interpretation to charge them with that amount of passion absolutely unbridled which alone could vindicate them. Though the piece accordingly pleases an unsophisticated public, it is not entitled to rank as considerable. Miss Lily Brayton must resist a tendency to exaggeration in facial play. In the scenes between herself as the heroine and Mr. Oscar Asche as the Hanoverian colonel, a point of some intensity is reached. Mr. Walter Hampden is picturesque as her lover; and Mr. Lyall Swete, Mr. Alfred Brydone, and Mr. Charles Rock play well. The introduction of a character such as M. Latour is not to be defended.

DRURY LANE.—Waterloo; Louis XI.

WITH his appearance on Monday as Gregory Brewster in 'Waterloo,' as 'A Story of Waterloo' is now renamed, and on Tuesday as Louis XI., the promised programme of Sir Henry Irving is complete. If to the four pieces in which he has been seen we add 'Hamlet,' the revival of which is not now to be anticipated, the high-water mark of his accomplishment is indicated. Charles I., Mathias, Mephistopheles, Wolsey, King Arthur, and other parts spring up in the memory; but those given during the present season are fully representative, and constitute in themselves a noble repertory. Corporal Gregory Brewster is one of those genre pictures which we class with the Noel ('La Joie fait Peur') of Regnier and the Rip van Winkle of Jefferson, as in their way unequalled. In the minds of those who recall it—as what English playgoer does not?—it remains unsurpassable.

In Louis XI. Sir Henry had a predecessor whom none now remembers, but whose performance was comparable with his own. On the occasion of a revival for a day or two only it is superfluous to indulge in comparison or contrast. Louis XI. is one of Sir Henry's great characters, psychologically the most interesting, and in every way the grimmest. In the presentation of cruelty, malignancy, cowardice, and cunning, we know nothing on the stage that may be compared to it. Separate scenes retain their former hold upon the imagination, and excite or torment us as before. Sir Henry's reception has throughout been passionate and overwhelming, proving that there is no shrinkage of power, and that the influence of the actor over the public is one of the strongest of forces.

Dramatic Gossip.

So clumsy are the arrangements in connexion with the foreign artists now in our midst that it is impossible to devote to them the attention which they solicit and merit. Signora Duse has thus appeared at the Waldorf in 'La Femme de Claude,' 'La Locandiera,' 'Visite de Noces,' and 'Adrienne Lecouvreur'; Madame Réjane at Terry's in 'L'Age d'aimer,' 'La Petite Marquise,' 'L'Écuyère,' and 'L'Hirondelle'; and MM. Coquelin at the Shaftesbury in 'L'Abbé Constantin,' 'Les Romanesques,' 'Les Précieuses Ridicules,' 'Notre Jeunesse,' and monologues. This combination, to deal with which is obviously impossible, takes place during a week in which novelties are presented at the Adelphi and the Criterion, and in which Sir Henry Irving at Drury Lane demands two or more evenings.

MR. PATRICK KIRWAN promises at the Botanical Gardens, with his company of Idyllic Players, a series of outdoor performances, including three of Shakspeare's plays, 'The Tempest,' 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' and 'Love's Labour's Lost,' and—thus we read—'La Marquise,' a play of John Lyly unseen on the modern stage. What this last name signifies baffles conjecture.

THE Mermaid Repertory Theatre is to reopen on September 4th with 'The Duchess of Malfi,' to be followed by 'Love for Love,' 'Bellafront,' a verse play by Mr. Laurence Binyon, and the cycle of Shakspeare's historical plays, including, we must presume, the three parts of 'King Henry VI.'

THE Pioneers is the title of yet one more society established for the purpose of producing new plays and revolutionizing, it may be assumed, the conditions of the stage.

'LE DÉDALE' has been adapted by Mr. W. L. Courtney for Miss Olga Nethersole, who will appear in it in New York and subsequently bring it to the West-End.

'THE TEMPTATION,' a comedy-drama in four acts by Mrs. T. P. O'Connor, has been successfully produced by Mr. Laurence Irving at the Shakspeare Theatre, Liverpool.

At the Kennington Theatre 'Human Hearts,' a comedy-drama which has enjoyed eleven years' run in America, was produced on Monday for the first time in London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS—J. E. P.—E. D.—H. A. V.—T. F.—E. B. B.—F. H. F. B.—received. V. B.—Many thanks.

MESSRS. BELL'S

L I S T.

Catalogue sent post free on application.

CHEAPER REISSUE. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE EVE OF THE REFORMATION.

Studies in the Religious Life and Thought of the English People in the Period preceding the Rejection of the Romish Jurisdiction by Henry VIII.

By the Right Rev. Abbot GASQUET, D.D.

"Dr. Gasquet has produced a book which will set many men thinking. He has done an excellent piece of work, and has offered to students of history a highly interesting problem. He writes, as usual, in a lucid and attractive style. The controversial element is so subordinated to the scholarly setting forth of simple facts and the adroit marshalling of evidence, that one might read the volume through without being tempted to ask what the author's creed is, or whether he has any, and when one gets to the end one is inclined to wish that there were a little more."—Athenæum.

CHEAPER REISSUE. 1s. net.

THE ANGEL IN THE HOUSE.

By COVENTRY PATMORE.

[Ready June 14.]

THE POCKET HORACE.

HORACE.

The Latin Text, with Conington's Translation on Opposite Pages.

Complete in 1 vol. printed on thin paper for the pocket, bound in stamped sheepskin, 5s. net; or limp cloth, 4s. net.

** Also in Two Parts: 'The ODES and CARMEN SECULARE.' Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; limp leather, cut flush, 2s. net. 'The SATIRES, EPISTLES, and ART OF POETRY.' Cloth, 2s. net; limp leather, cut flush, 2s. 6d. net.

FOURTH EDITION, post 8vo, 5s. net.

HOW TO LOOK AT PICTURES.

By ROBERT CLERMONT WITT, M.A.

With 35 Illustrations.

"This book, which we have read with great pleasure, shows that the author has both wide sympathy and knowledge, and it cannot but be largely helpful to those who wish to increase their interest in pictures. A better gift for people who are dimly 'fond of pictures,' but who regret that they 'know nothing about them,' could not be found."—Spectator.

FRENCH ART IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

By the late LADY DILKE.

In 4 vols. imperial 8vo, with numerous Illustrations. 28s. net each.

Vol. I. PAINTERS.

Vol. II. ARCHITECTS and SCULPTORS.

Vol. III. DECORATIONS and FURNITURE.

Vol. IV. ENGRAVERS and DRAUGHTSMEN.

** Each Volume can be had separately, and is complete in itself.

"A very thorough and accurate account of one of the most important departments of art history that Europe has seen since the Renaissance."—Times.

"Author of the four noble volumes on 'French Art in the Eighteenth Century,' who by their achievement alone placed herself in the foremost rank of historical art critics of any age or country."—Athenæum.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S LIST.

POPULAR NEW FICTION.

THE MASTER MUMMER.

By E. P. OPPENHEIM.

6s.

ILLUSTRATED MAIL.—"A delightful and fascinating story."

BIRMINGHAM POST.—"Well and forcibly written."

DAILY EXPRESS.—"Is equal to the author's best."

WESTERN MORNING NEWS.—"Like Sam Weller's valentine, it makes the reader 'wish there was more.'"

LIVERPOOL COURIER.—"As engrossing a work of fiction as this gifted author has ever penned."

LEEDS MERCURY.—"The interest increases at every chapter."

THE JACKAL.

By COULSON KERNAHAN.

6s.

SUNDAY TIMES.—"Not even in those allegorical prose poems of his which have won him his greatest popularity has Mr. Kernahan written with such studied care and yet such vivid descriptive power as in his exciting yarn of 'The Jackal' and ingenious as was the plot of 'Scoundrels and Co.', that of his new book is a yet happier stroke of invention, and its interest is much better sustained."

MILLIONS OF MISCHIEF.

By HEADON HILL.

6s.

MORNING LEADER.—"Mr. Hill has seldom put greater finish into his work, and the result is a striking and vigorous book."

DAILY MAIL.—"Wild beyond extravagance, but ingenious through that wildness."

A PRINCE OF LOVERS.

By Sir WILLIAM MAGNAY, Bart.

6s.

LLOYD'S NEWS.—"Sir William Magnay's latest story, 'A Prince of Lovers,' should bring him added repute..... adventure enough to satisfy the most ardent lover of exciting romance."

PORTSMOUTH TIMES.—"A brilliant romance, crowded with stirring incident, and is never for a moment dull."

THE CRIMSON BLIND.

By FRED M. WHITE.

6s.

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.—"One of the most ingeniously conceived detective stories. Each chapter holds some new and separate excitement. The pace is kept with such vigour that the reader arrives breathless at the last stage."

RAINBOW CHASERS.

By JOHN H. WHITSON, Author of 'Barbara,' 'A Woman of the West,' &c.

6s.

Presents with striking vividness a picture of the rise and fall of a boom town.

THE YELLOW WAVE.

By M. P. SHIEL.

6s.

Deals with the present Russo-Japanese war. There is every possibility of peace being proclaimed, but one of the most terrible Secret Societies seeks to fan the expiring embers into a new flame, and to envelope the world in an awful struggle. How this was done Mr. Shiel tells with extraordinary power and vividness.

VIGOROUS DAUNT: Billionaire.

By AMBROSE PRATT, Author of 'The Great Push Experiment,' 'Franks, Duellist,' &c.

6s.

THE ROOT.

By ORME AGNUS, Author of 'Sarah Taldon,' 'Jan Oxber,' 'Love in Our Village,' &c.

6s.

TO-DAY.—"Mr. Orme Agnus writes with a very genius of insight of the people of the West Country.....The inimitable humour of the chapters is as sly and sure almost as anything in Mr. W. W. Jacobs's 'Light Cargoes.'"

ROGER TREWINION.

By JOSEPH HOCKING.

3s. 6d.

TO-DAY.—"One of Mr. Hocking's most absorbing stories."

MORNING LEADER.—"The tale is a good sound one, wholesome in tone and rapid in movement."

MANCHESTER COURIER.—"Mr. Hocking is at his best in West Country stories, and 'Roger Trewinion' contains some of his most attractive work."

READY SHORTLY.

THE WEIRD PICTURE.

By JOHN R. CARLING, Author of 'The Shadow of the Czar,' &c.

6s.

Another ingenious and interest-compelling romance, in which the love affairs of the principals centre around the realistic work of a frenzied artist.

THE PIERROTS ON THE PIER.

By PAUL HERRING.

3s. 6d.

THE GIRL WHO HAD NOTHING.

By Mrs. C. N. WILLIAMSON.

3s. 6d.

FAMOUS

SHILLING

GUIDE-BOOKS.

Cloth bound, round corners.

SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED.

FURNISHED WITH EXCELLENT MAPS AND PLANS.

Printed in clear type, on good paper.

"BETTER GUIDE-BOOKS ONE COULD NOT WISH FOR."—Graphic.

ENGLAND AND WALES.

|                   |                     |
|-------------------|---------------------|
| ALDEBURGH.        | LLANDRINDOD         |
| BATH.             | WELLS.              |
| BEXHILL.          | LONDON.             |
| BIDEFORD.         | LOWESTOFT.          |
| BLACKPOOL.        | LYME REGIS.         |
| BOURNEMOUTH.      | LYNTON and LYN-     |
| BRIDLINGTON and   | MOUTH.              |
| FILEY.            | MARGATE.            |
| BRIGHTON and      | MATLOCK.            |
| HOVE.             | NEWQUAY.            |
| BROADSTAIRS.      | NORTH WALES         |
| BUXTON.           | (Northern Section). |
| CANTERBURY.       | NORTH WALES         |
| CHANNEL           | (Southern Section). |
| ISLANDS.          | PENZANCE.           |
| CLIFTON, BRISTOL. | PLYMOUTH.           |
| CROMER.           | PORTSMOUTH.         |
| DARTMOOR.         | RAMSGATE.           |
| DAWLISH.          | SCARBOROUGH.        |
| DEAL.             | SHERWOOD            |
| DOVER.            | FOREST.             |
| EASTBOURNE.       | SIDMOUTH.           |
| ENGLISH LAKE      | SKEGNESS.           |
| DISTRICT.         | SOUTHSEA.           |
| EXETER.           | SOUTHWOLD.          |
| EXMOUTH.          | STRATFORD-UPON-     |
| FALMOUTH.         | AVON.               |
| FELIXSTOWE.       | SUTTON-ON-SEA.      |
| FOLKESTONE.       | SWANAGE.            |
| HARROGATE.        | TEIGNMOUTH.         |
| HASTINGS.         | TORQUAY.            |
| HERNE BAY.        | WESTON - SUPER -    |
| ILFRACOMBE.       | MARE.               |
| ILKLEY.           | WEYMOUTH.           |
| ISLE of MAN.      | WHITBY.             |
| ISLE of WIGHT.    | WOODHALL SPA.       |
| LEAMINGTON.       | WYE VALLEY.         |
| LIVERPOOL.        | YARMOUTH and the    |
|                   | BROADS.             |

List of Scotch, Irish, and Continental Guides

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

TOURIST SEASON, 1905.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOKS FOR TRAVELLERS.

"The pioneers in their own particular class."

JUST PUBLISHED.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK OF TRAVEL-TALK:

Being a Collection of Questions, Phrases, and Vocabularies in English, French,
German, and Italian.

NINETEENTH EDITION.

Revised, Augmented, and Brought up to Date, with New Introductory Section on Pronunciation.

Size, 5 in. by 3½ by ¾ in., cloth, rounded corners, 752 pp., thin paper; weight, 1½ oz., 3s. 6d.

Prospectus, with Specimen Page, gratis.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK FOR SWITZERLAND.

NINETEENTH EDITION. Remodelled and thoroughly
Revised, with 34 Maps and Plans, 664 pp. (thin paper), crown 8vo, 10s.

"The best Swiss guide-book published in English."
Manchester Guardian.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK FOR SCOTLAND.

EIGHTH EDITION, Remodelled, Enlarged, and thoroughly
Revised. Edited by SCOTT MONCRIEFF PENNEY, M.A.
550 pp. (thin paper), 57 Maps and Plans, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Contains all that the traveller in Scotland requires to know."—Scotsman.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK FOR IRELAND.

SIXTH EDITION. Edited by JOHN COOKE, M.A.
43 Maps and Plans, crown 8vo, 9s.

"The very best guide to Ireland."—Freeman's Journal

Complete List of English and Foreign Handbooks, with Specimen Map and Plan, gratis on application.

1905 EDITION.

TOURISTS' CATALOGUE.

STANFORD'S CATALOGUE of MAPS and BOOKS for TOURISTS post free on application.

London: EDWARD STANFORD,
12, 13, and 14, Long Acre, W.C.
Geographer to His Majesty the King.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION

Estab.] FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE. (1835.)

|                          |     |     |             |
|--------------------------|-----|-----|-------------|
| Accumulated Fund over    | ... | ... | £6,000,000  |
| Paid in Claims more than | ... | ... | £12,400,000 |

PROFITS.

These are divided every five years solely amongst the Assured. At the 1902 Division a Cash Profit of £761,602 was apportioned amongst the members, being considerably more than one-third of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years.

ENDOWMENT-ASSURANCE

Policies are issued, combining Life Assurance at minimum cost with provision for old age, and are singularly advantageous.

L. F. HOVIL,

Actuary and Secretary.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA

The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN,
GOUT,

And INDIGESTION.

And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

ESTABLISHED 1824.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Assets over FOUR MILLIONS Sterling.

BONUS DIVIDED 1902, £597,415.

TO SHARE IN NEXT BONUS

APPLY NOW OR BEFORE JUNE 30 TO

CHIEF OFFICE: 15, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW LIST.

THE WORLD'S NAVIES IN THE BOXER REBELLION (CHINA, 1900).

By Lieut. C. C. DIX, R.N.

With numerous Photographs. 7s. 6d. net.

"Abounds in interest and excitement."—Evening Standard

"An excellent book... which should be read."—Daily Mail

"A valuable addition to the history of the campaign."—Graphic

"The narrative of Lieut. Dix is exceptionally valuable... The book makes an important contribution to the records of international policy."—Glasgow Herald.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

A VILLAGE CHRONICLE. By Katharine S.
MACQUOID. With Illustrations by FORESTIER.

A GUARDSMAN JAPANESE. By Sadi
GRANT. Author of 'A Japanese House Party,' &c.

"This brightly written Japanese story will be popular. The authoress has certainly written a tale about the Japanese on novel lines, and her study of the Japanese character is distinctly out of the common."—Glasgow Herald.

A RAW PROBATIONER. By Ellis Dean,

Author of 'A Strange Honeymoon,' &c.

"A distinctly clever book."—Birmingham Post.

"A book which is charmingly written."—Yorkshire Herald.

The DOLL'S DANCE. By C. Forestier-

WALKER. Author of 'The Chameleon,' &c.

[Second Edition.]

"The novel is so well written that from first to last the reader is left in suspense as to the ultimate issue."—Punch.

VIRGINIA. By L. T. Meade.

With 4 Full-Page Illustrations

[Second Edition.]

"An exciting novel."—Dundee Courier.

"A charming story."—Sheffield Independent.

"A stirring story."—Morning Advertiser.

The ADVENTURES of a NAVAL OFFICER.

By Capt CHAS. HUNTER, R.N. Edited by Sir SPENSER
ST. JOHN, G.C.M.G.

"Is delightful reading from beginning to end."—Morning Post.

"The book is thoroughly enjoyable."—Athenæum.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d. net.

The DIVINA COMMEDIA of DANTE.

Translated into English Verse by C. POTTER.

"A translation to be read with pleasure and profit... From it one may obtain a view of the great creation of the poet by no means unworthy of one of the great poems of the world."—Aberdeen Press.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. net.

YSEULT. By M. R. Lange.

"Mr. Lange's verse is musical, and full of feeling and colour. His characters are living and breathe the fulness of life—the sensuousness of Yseult, the responsive eagerness of Tristan, and the noble nature of the old king."—Dundee Courier.

London: DIGBY, LONG & CO.
18, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,
ACCIDENT AND DISEASE

(SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID, DIPHTHERIA, APPENDICITIS, &c.)

BURGLARY AND FIDELITY INSURANCE.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.
Established 1849.

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

GENERAL INDEXES.

THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

|                |    |    |    |
|----------------|----|----|----|
| GENERAL INDEX, | £. | s. | d. |
|----------------|----|----|----|

|               |     |   |   |   |
|---------------|-----|---|---|---|
| FOURTH SERIES | ... | 3 | 3 | 0 |
|---------------|-----|---|---|---|

|                |  |  |  |  |
|----------------|--|--|--|--|
| GENERAL INDEX, |  |  |  |  |
|----------------|--|--|--|--|

|              |     |   |   |   |
|--------------|-----|---|---|---|
| SIXTH SERIES | ... | 0 | 6 | 0 |
|--------------|-----|---|---|---|

|                |  |  |  |  |
|----------------|--|--|--|--|
| GENERAL INDEX, |  |  |  |  |
|----------------|--|--|--|--|

|                |     |   |   |   |
|----------------|-----|---|---|---|
| SEVENTH SERIES | ... | 0 | 6 | 0 |
|----------------|-----|---|---|---|

|                |  |  |  |  |
|----------------|--|--|--|--|
| GENERAL INDEX, |  |  |  |  |
|----------------|--|--|--|--|

|               |     |   |   |   |
|---------------|-----|---|---|---|
| EIGHTH SERIES | ... | 0 | 6 | 0 |
|---------------|-----|---|---|---|

For Copies by post an additional Threepence is charged.

JOHN C. FRANCIS,

Notes and Queries Office,

11, Bream's Building, Chancery Lane, E.C.

THE BOOK OF THE SEASON.

PRINTERS'

PIE, 1905.

EDITED BY

W. HUGH SPOTTISWOODE,

PUBLISHED

ON THE FIRST OF JUNE.

Every Copy sold helps one of the best-managed Charities in the Country—The Printers' Pension Corporation. President for 1905, Mr. C. ARTHUR PEARSON.

CONTENTS:

STORIES, &amp;c.

BY

W. L. ALDEN.
F. ANSTAY.
DUKE of ARGYLL.
G. B. BURGIN.
Lieut.-Col. NEWNHAM-DAVIS.
Major - Gen. Sir A. G. FRENCH.
TOM GALLON.
G. L. GRAVES.
J. K. JEROME.
E. V. LUCAS.
H. W. LUCY.
BARRY PAIN.
Major - Gen. B A D E N-POWELL.
C. ARTHUR PEARSON.
MOSTYN PIGOTT.
WM. LE QUEUX.
W. PETT RIDGE.
ADRIAN ROSS.
LORD STANLEY.
G. R. SIMS.
KATHARINE TYNAN.
I. ZANGWILL.

&amp;c. &amp;c.

DRAWINGS, &amp;c.

BY

CECIL ALDIN.
C. A. BUCHEL.
E. M. CROXTON.
C. DANA GIBSON.
DUDLEY HARDY.
JOHN HASSALL.
L. RAVEN HILL.
GUNNING KING.
PHIL MAY.
WILL OWEN.
CHAS. PEARS.
F. PEGRAM.
L. THACKERAY.
F. H. TOWNSEND.
DAVID WILSON.
LAWSON WOOD.
STARR WOOD.

&amp;c. &amp;c.

1s. net.

Of all W. H. SMITH & SON'S Bookstalls,
And of all Booksellers and Newsagents.

Published by THE SPHERE and TATLER, Ltd.,
Great New Street, London, E.C.

DAVID NUTT,

57-59, LONG ACRE.

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. XIX. JUNE, 1905, No. 5, 1s. 6d. net.

Contents.

EDITORIAL and GENERAL:—

The Place and Time of Homer. D. B. MONRO.

ORIGINAL CONTRIBUTIONS:—

On 'Iliad' I. 418—A Reply. MORTIMER LAMSON EARLE.

Notes on certain Forms of the Greek Dialects. CARL DARLING BUCK.

Demosthenes's Nickname ἀργῆς. MORTIMER LAMSON EARLE.

On Dionysius of Halicarnassus. H. RICHARDS.

Longinus on the Rhythm of Demosthenes. A. W. VERRALL.

'Pharsalia Nostra.' J. P. POSTGATE.

On the New Fragment of the so-called Laudatio Turiae ('C.I.L.' VI. 1527). W. WARDE FOWLER.

SHORTER NOTES.

REVIEWS:—

Jacoby's 'Marmor Parium.' J. A. R. MUNRO.

Two Anthologies from the Greek. J. H. VINCE.

Marx's 'Lucilius.' W. M. LINDSAY.

Giarratano's 'Valerius Flaccus.' WALTER C. SUMMERS.

BRIEFER NOTICES.

VERSION:—

From 'Paradise Lost.' W. J. GOODRICH.

ARCHÆOLOGY:—

Miss Ransom's 'Studies in Ancient Furniture.' F. H. MARSHALL.

Monthly Record. F. H. MARSHALL.

Numismatic Summaries. WARWICK WROTH.

SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

BOOKS FOR CONTINENTAL TRAVEL.

NUTT'S

CONVERSATION DICTIONARIES.

By R. JASCHKE.

1. ENGLISH-FRENCH.
2. ENGLISH-GERMAN.
3. ENGLISH-ITALIAN.

Each with Revised Vocabulary at the end. 32mo. Upwards of 450 pp. Printed by Constable on the finest opaque paper. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

4. ENGLISH-SPANISH. 3s. 6d.

In the short space during which this admirable series of Travellers' Pocket Dictionaries has been before the public many thousands of copies have been sold. They combine all the qualities of a dictionary and a conversational guide-book. The Publisher has received hundreds of unsolicited testimonials.

The POCKET INTERPRETER.

Dialogues for Travellers in English, French, German, and Norwegian-Danish. By V. CULMSEB. Square 32mo, flexible cloth. 1s.

* * * The only Pocket Conversation Book for Denmark and Norway.

PHONETIC SERIES.

By H. SWAN.

PRACTICAL HANDBOOKS for

ENGLISH - SPEAKING TRAVELLERS and STUDENTS. With the Exact Pronunciation indicated phonetically upon a new Series.

1. COLLOQUIAL FRENCH. Sixth Edition, with Appendix for Cyclists and Amateur Photographers. 1s.
2. COLLOQUIAL GERMAN. Third Edition, with Appendices for Cyclists and Photographers. 1s. 6d.
3. COLLOQUIAL ITALIAN. Second Edition. 1s. 6d.
4. COLLOQUIAL SPANISH. 1s. 6d.

A SIMPLIFIED FRENCH CONVER-

SATIONAL MANUAL; or, How to Converse in French whilst Travelling, at the Hotel, Restaurant, Shopping, with the Principal Routes to Paris and Places of Interest. By LOUISE LITTA. 12mo, 160 pp. Limp cloth, 1s. 6d.

* * * Equally suited for the traveller or for use in the class-room.

GREMLI'S FLORA of SWITZER-

LAND for TOURISTS and FIELD BOTANISTS. Translated by L. W. PAITSON. Crown 8vo, xxiv-454 pp. Limp cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

* * * The Standard Alpine Flora for advanced Botanists.

MR. MURRAY'S

NEW BOOKS.

THE YEAR OF TRAFALGAR.

Being an Account of the Battle and of the Events which led up to it, with a Collection of the Poems and Ballads written thereupon between 1805 and 1805. By HENRY NEWBOLT, Author of 'The Sailing of the Longships,' 'Admirals All,' &c. With Portrait of Lord Nelson, Maps, and Plans. Large crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"A stirring and a pathetic record; clear and sympathetic in its narrative portions, and usefully comprehensive in its tactical details. The book fulfils its purpose excellently, and, apart from the success it may achieve among adults, it will be popular as a gift for English boys who have that love of the sea and its heroes which ought to be their hereditary dower."—Globe.

THE BOOK OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

By the late Lady DILKE. With a Memoir of the Author by the Right Hon. Sir CHARLES DILKE, Bart., M.P. With Portraits and Illustrations. Square demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"The memoir which Sir Charles Dilke has prefixed to Lady Dilke's posthumous 'Book of the Spiritual Life,' together with the book itself, gives us some fuller insight into an element of her rich nature of which the world had as yet only been given rare and passing glimpses."

Manchester Guardian.

"No one could miss without loss this intimate study of a personality of singular originality and interest, and of a mind and character which rendered their possessor by no means the least notable feminine figure in the intellectual society of her time....in this affectionate tribute her exceptional qualities of mind and character are deservedly and worthily commemorated."—World.

BYGONE YEARS.

Personal Reminiscences. By the Hon. FREDERICK LEVESON-GOWER. With a Photogravure Portrait. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

MEMORIES OF LIFE AT OXFORD,

and EXPERIENCES in ITALY, GREECE, TURKEY, GERMANY, SPAIN, and ELSEWHERE. By FREDERICK MEYRICK, M.A., Prebendary of Lincoln and Rector of Blickling. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

A HISTORY OF ANCIENT POTTERY.

Greek, Etruscan, and Roman. Based on Samuel Birch's Famous Work. By HENRY B. WALTERS, M.A., Assistant in the Department of Greek and Roman Antiquities, British Museum. With numerous Illustrations. 2 vols. medium 8vo, 2l. 3s. net.

ROMANO LAVO LIL;

Or, the Word Book of the Gypsy Language. By the late GEORGE BORROW. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

This book has been out of print for many years, but the revived interest in Borrow's writings has called for a reprint.

A CHEAP EDITION.

KOREA AND HER NEIGHBOURS.

By Mrs. BISHOP (Isabella L. Bird). With Maps and Illustrations. 1 vol. 5s. net.

A CHEAP EDITION.

THE RISE AND EXPANSION OF THE BRITISH DOMINION IN INDIA.

By Sir ALFRED LYALL, P.C., Author of 'Asiatic Studies,' 'Life of the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava.' With 5 Maps. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

A CHEAP EDITION.

SINAI AND PALESTINE IN CONNECTION WITH THEIR HISTORY.

By the late Dean STANLEY. With Coloured Maps. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

MARY DEANE'S NEW NOVEL.

THE LITTLE NEIGHBOUR.

By MARY DEANE, Author of 'The Rose Spinner,' 'Treasure and Heart.' 6s.

JOHN MURRAY, Abemarle Street, W.

MR. JOHN LONG'S NEW LIST.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS NEARLY READY.

- A LOST CAUSE. By GUY THORNE, Author of 'When it was Dark.' (90th Thousand.)
- The MAID of the RIVER. By MRS. CAMPBELL PRAED, Author of 'Fugitive Anne,' 'The Other Mrs. Jacobs,' &c.
- ALIX of the GLEN. By CURTIS YORKE, Author of 'Delphine,' 'The Girl in Grey,' 'Olive Kinsella,' &c.
- The WHITE LADY. By MAY CROMMELIN, Author of 'Partners Three,' &c.
- HIS MASCOT. By L. T. MEADE, Author of 'Little Wife Hester,' &c.
- The CHOICE of EMELIA. By ADELINE SERGEANT, Author of 'The Waters of Oblivion,' &c.
- ST. ELIZABETH of LONDON. By LUCAS CLEEVE, Author of 'Eileen,' &c.
- The TERROR BY NIGHT. By JAMES MACLAREN COBBAN, Author of 'A Soldier and a Gentleman,' &c.
- The HARVEST of LOVE. By C. RANGER-GULL, Author of 'The Serf,' 'The Hypocrite,' &c.
- The OPAL SERPENT. By FERGUS HUME, Author of 'The Mystery of a Hansom Cab,' &c.
- ALTON of SOMASCO. By HAROLD BINDLOSS, Author of 'The League of the Leopard,' &c.
- The REBEL PRINCE. By SETH COOK COMSTOCK, Author of 'Monsieur le Capitaine Douay.' With Photogravure Frontispiece from a Drawing by HAROLD COPPING.
- The ROOK'S NEST. By G. W. APPLETON, Author of 'The Mysterious Miss Cass,' &c.
- JANE SHORE; a Romance of History. By J. E. MUDDOCK, Author of 'Sweet "Doll" of Haddon Hall,' &c. With Frontispiece of the Heroine, after Bartolozzi's famous Picture.
- CHILDREN of EARTH. By SIDNEY PATERNOSTER, Author of 'Gutter Tragedies,' 'The Motor Pirate,' &c.
- A DAUGHTER of the MANSE. By SARAH TYTLER, Author of 'Citoyenne Jacqueline,' &c.
- WHO WAS LADY THURNE? By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of 'The House on the Marsh,' 'The Face in the Flashlight,' &c.
- The TENDERFOOT. By W. J. SHEPPARD.
A thrilling tale of the Australian Bush, by a new author.
- The SOUL of a VILLAIN. By MRS. HUGHES-GIBB.
A powerful and engrossing tale of West-Country life, by a new author.

The SUBURBANS. By T. W. H. CROSLAND, Author of 'The Unspeakable Scot,' 'Lovely Women,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. [Shortly.]

Contents.—Their Origin—Their Country—How to Get There—The Male Suburban—Their Young—Their Loves and Marriages—The Great of Clapham—Tooting, the Bled—Kilburn, the Golden—'Appy' Ampstead—Naughty St. John's Wood—Nonconformity—Shops—Architecture—Horticulture—The Great Servant Question—The Theatre—Chamber-Music—Paint and Pictures—The Future.

HORSES I HAVE KNOWN. By "G. G." (H. G. HARPER), Author of 'The Chaser's Luck,' 'A Fairy in the Pigskin,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—Mr. JOHN LONG has much pleasure in announcing that ALL MR. NAT GOULD'S NEW STORIES will be published by him. The first is entitled ONE of a MOB, and will be ready at once, to be followed in August by The SELLING PLATER, and in the Autumn by The LADY TRAINER. Others will be announced at stated intervals. 2s. each, illustrated boards, or 2s. 6d. each, cloth, crown 8vo.

NAT GOULD'S ANNUAL. Price 1s. Medium 8vo.

This favourite Annual will be published in the late Autumn.

JOHN LONG'S CARLTON CLASSICS.

Prices: decorative wrapper, 3d. net; artistic cloth gilt, 6d. net; leather, gilt top, gold-blocked back and side, 1s. net. Size, 6in. by 4in. by 1½in. It is the aim of this Series to present in tasteful and artistic form the world's favourite little masterpieces in prose and verse, and the Publisher believes that these Classics will be considered new and distinctive, and surpass any series at present before the public in the beauty of their printing and the daintiness of their format. Each Volume contains a Biographical Introduction by the Editor, Mr. HANNAFORD BENNETT. The first Twelve Volumes are:—

CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE. LORD BYRON.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. SHAKESPEARE.
The FOUR GEORGES. W. M. THACKERAY.
WARREN HASTINGS. LORD MACAULAY.
TALES (Selected). EDGAR ALLAN POE.
CHRISTABEL, and other Poems. S. T. COLERIDGE.

A SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY. LAURENCE STERNE.
The LIFE of NELSON (Double Vol.) ROBERT SOUTHNEY.
The BLESSED DAMOZEL, and other Poems. DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.
ON HEROES and HERO WORSHIP. THOMAS CARLYLE.
SONNETS. SHAKESPEARE.
RASSELAS. SAMUEL JOHNSON.

NEW VOLUME IN THE "LIBRARY OF MODERN CLASSICS."

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS. By THOMAS HUGHES. With Photogravure Portrait, and 16 Illustrations by A. TALBOT SMITH. Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 3s. net; classic half-vellum, 5s. net. [Nearly ready.]

CHEAP EDITION OF A FAMOUS NOVEL. Crown 8vo, 1s.

The STORM of LONDON. By F. DICKBERRY.

TRUTH.—"Amusing as it is audacious in its pictures of society compelled to adopt the primitive attire of an Edenic age."

ATHENÆUM.—"Very amusing, audacious, clever, and diverting."

DAILY EXPRESS.—"An extraordinary book, daring and remarkable."

JOHN LONG'S SIXPENNY COPYRIGHT NOVELS.—NEW VOLUMES FOR 1905.

The WORLD MASTERS. GEORGE GRIFFITH.
BENEATH the VEIL. ADELINE SERGEANT.
The BURDEN of HER YOUTH. L. T. MEADE.
SWEET "DOLL" of HADDON HALL. J. E. MUDDOCK.
LE SELVE. OUIDA.

[Ready.
[Ready.
[Ready.
[Ready.]

NO. 3, the SQUARE. FLORENCE WARDEN.
MIDSUMMER MADNESS. MRS. LOVETT CAMERON.
The LADY of the ISLAND. GUY BOOTHBY.
The MAGNETIC GIRL. RICHARD MARSH.
The JADE EYE. FERGUS HUME.

* * KINDLY WRITE TO MR. JOHN LONG FOR HIS COMPLETE SPRING AND SUMMER LIST.

London: JOHN LONG, 13 and 14, Norris Street, Haymarket.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4051.

SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE.

MEETING IN SOUTH AFRICA, 1905.

APPLICATIONS for MEMBERSHIP, for the purpose of attending the MEETING in SOUTH AFRICA, must, in accordance with the special regulations passed by the Council, now be made in person to the Local Secretaries at Cape Town and Johannesburg, or to Dr. GIBBONS, Secretary of the Central Organizing Committee for South Africa, South African Museum Buildings, Cape Town.
A. SILVA WHITE, Assistant Secretary.
Burlington House, London, June 15, 1905.

BRITISH ARCHAEOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION,
32, SACKVILLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.—MEETING,
JUNE 21, 1905, 8 P.M. The following Paper will be read:—Notes on the INCH lter of Antoninus, with special reference to the Sites of Venta Icenorum and Setonagus, by Rev. Dr. ASTLEY, Editorial Secretary.
GEO. PATRICK, A.R.I.B.A., Hon. Sec.

THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.—The CONCLUDING MEETING of the SESSION will be held at 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, on WEDNESDAY, June 21, at 8 P.M., when a Paper, entitled 'Notes on the Legend of Merlin and on Joseph of Arimathea and his connexion with Britain,' will be read by Dr. GASTER.
Mr. A. R. WRIGHT will also exhibit some Chinese and Japanese Charms.
F. A. MILNE, Secretary.
11, Old Square, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

R.W.S.—LAST TWO WEEKS of the 136th EXHIBITION of the ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS, 54, Pall Mall East.
F. W. HAYWARD BUTT, Secretary.

CARFAX & CO., LTD.,
24, BURY STREET, ST. JAMES, S.W.
EXHIBITION of WORK by the SOCIETY of PAINTERS in TEMPERA, OPEN DAILY, including Saturdays, 10 to 6. Admission, 1s.

O B A C H & C O.
EXHIBITION of PICTURES by FRENCH and DUTCH
MASTERS of the NINETEENTH CENTURY.
NOW OPEN at 168, NEW BOND STREET, W.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S
SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY,
No. 27, King Street, St. James's.

ST. PAUL'S GIRLS' SCHOOL,
BROOK GREEN, HAMMERSMITH, W.
TEN FOUNDATION SCHOLARSHIPS, which exempt the holders from payment of Tuition Fees, will be AWARDED on the results of an EXAMINATION which will be held at the SCHOOL on TUESDAY, July 4, and on Following Days.
Particulars and Forms of Registration may be obtained from the HEAD MISTRESS.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINA-
TION will be held on JUNE 28, 29, and 30 to FILL UP not less than EIGHT RESIDENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS, THREE NON-RESI-DENTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS, and SOME EXHIBITIONS.—For particulars apply to the HEAD MASTER, 19, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

F O L K E S T O N E.
WOODLANDS PREPARATORY SCHOOL.
Rev. HENRY T. J. COGGIN, M.A. Cantab.

THE BUSHEY SCHOOL of PAINTING,
BUSHEY, HERTS.
For the Study of the Human Figure and Animal Painting from the Living Model.
Principal.—Miss LUCY KEMP-WELCH, R.B.A.
Assistant Master.—HOWLAND WHEELWRIGHT.
Master of the Life-Class.—J. W. WHITELEY.
For Prospectus, apply to the SECRETARY.

PARIS.—19, RUE DES FOSSÉS ST. JACQUES.
—Le Docteur et Madame ROUSSEAU peuvent RECEVOIR
QUELQUES PENSIONNAIRES ou FAMILLES dans leur INTÉRIEUR très confortable. Quartier du Luxembourg. Références: Dr. P.
Chapman, Hereford.

EDUCATION.
Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORS in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GARRITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

QUEEN'S COLLEGES, IRELAND.
The PROFESSORSHIP of LATIN in the QUEEN'S COLLEGE,
CORK, will become VACANT on OCTOBER 6, 1905.
Candidates for that Office are requested to forward their Testimonials to the UNDER SECRETARY, Dublin Castle, on or before JULY 4 NEXT, in order that the same may be submitted to his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant.
Dublin Castle, June 9, 1905.

GUY'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL.
Applications are invited for the post of LECTURER on PHYSICS.
Duties to commence on OCTOBER 1.
Particulars as to tenure of appointment, remuneration, &c., may be obtained from the DEAN.
Applications, stating age, training, and qualifications, with copies of Testimonials, should be sent to the TREASURER, Guy's Hospital, S.E., on or before JULY 8.

UNIVERSITY of SHEFFIELD.

The COUNCIL will require, at the BEGINNING of OCTOBER NEXT, the services of—

1. A LECTURER in CLASSICS. Salary 200l. per annum.
2. A LECTURER in HISTORY. Salary 200l. per annum.
3. A LECTURER in ENGLISH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
Salary 200l. per annum.
4. An ASSISTANT LECTURER in MATHEMATICS. Salary 120l.
per annum.

Applications to reach the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained, by JULY 1.

W. M. GIBBONS, Registrar.

THE UNIVERSITY of LIVERPOOL.

CHAIR OF FRENCH.

The COUNCIL invite applications for the CHAIR of FRENCH. The emoluments of the Chair are derived from a fixed stipend and a share of the Fees, and are guaranteed to be not less than 600l. per annum.
Applications, with References and, if Candidates desire, Testimonials, must be forwarded not later than JUNE 24.—For further details apply to the REGISTRAR, the University of Liverpool.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the post of DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in GEOLOGY.

Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials (which need not be printed), must be sent on or before TUESDAY, July 4, 1905.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.

June 6, 1905.

KHEDIVIAL LAW SCHOOL, CAIRO.

LAW LECTURESHIPS.

The EGYPTIAN MINISTRY of PUBLIC INSTRUCTION invites applications for TWO POSTS of LECTURERS in the ENGLISH
SECTION of the above-mentioned School. Salary 615l. rising to 820l.
Candidates must be University Men, having either a Law Degree or other legal qualification, and must have a moderate knowledge of French. They will be required in the first instance to Lecture (in English) on Jurisprudence, Roman Law, or Political Economy.—Applications, stating age and qualifications, accompanied by copies only of Testimonials, should be made by letter to M. SHILLON AMOS, Esq. If posted in London not later than June 17, 1905 they should be addressed to the Native Court of First Instance, Cairo. Later applications should be addressed to St. Ermin's Hotel, Westminster.

COUNTY of LONDON.

PADDINGTON TECHNICAL INSTITUTE, SALTRAM CRESCENT, W.
APPOINTMENT OF PRINCIPAL.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the post of PRINCIPAL of the PADDINGTON TECHNICAL INSTITUTE,
SALTRAM CRESCENT, W.

The Institute provides instruction in Mechanical and Electrical Engineering, Physics, Chemistry, and Biological Science, Art and Artistic Crafts. Other Technological Subjects will be added in due course.

The Principal will be required to take up his duties in SEPTEMBER NEXT, and to give his whole time to the work of the Institute. He will in other respects be subject to the usual conditions attaching to the Council's service.

The commencing Salary will be 500l. a year.
Applications should be made on the official form, to be obtained from the Clerk of the Council, Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C., to whom they must be returned not later than 10 A.M. on Monday, July 3, 1905, accompanied by one copy of six Testimonials of recent date. Persons applying through the post for the Form of Application must enclose a stamped and addressed envelope.
Candidates other than successful Candidates invited to attend the Committee will be allowed third-class return railway fare, but no other expenses.

Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be considered a disqualification.
G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.
Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C.
June, 1905.

COUNTY COUNCIL of DURHAM.

SECONDARY SCHOOLS AND PUPIL-TEACHERS' CENTRES.
HEAD AND ASSISTANT TEACHERS REQUIRED.

A number of TEACHERS (MALE and FEMALE) are REQUIRED for SECONDARY SCHOOLS and PUPIL-TEACHERS' CENTRES.
Full particulars, with Forms of Application, are now obtainable.—
Applications must be delivered before 10 A.M. on JUNE 26, 1905, to "The Secretary for Higher Education, Shire Hall, Durham."

MUNICIPAL SECONDARY DAY SCHOOL and PUPIL-TEACHERS' CENTRE for GIRLS, LEAMINGTON, to be opened in SEPTEMBER NEXT. The COMMITTEE invite applications for the post of HEAD MISTRESS of the above School. Applicants should have a University Degree or its equivalent qualification, and must have had suitable experience in a good Secondary Day School.
Salary 200l. per annum, together with a Capitation Fee of 1l. per Pupil on all Pupils above One Hundred. (230l. guaranteed for the first year.)
Forms of Application, and conditions of appointment, may be obtained from the DIRECTOR, Technical School, Leamington.—Applications, accompanied by not more than three recent Testimonials, to be forwarded to the DIRECTOR, endorsed "Application for Appointment of Head Mistress," on or before SATURDAY, June 24, 1905. Personal canvassing will be considered a disqualification.
LEO. RAWLINSON, Clerk to the Education Authority.
June 7, 1905.

DUDLEY JOINT P.T. CENTRE for GIRLS.

LADY PRINCIPAL REQUIRED for above CENTRE, to be opened at the TECHNICAL SCHOOL, DUDLEY, EARLY SEPTEMBER NEXT.
Candidates must be registered (or qualified for registration) in Column B. Salary 175l. Canvassing will disqualify. Further particulars sent on application.—Forms of Application obtained from, and returned, not later than JUNE 19, to,
J. M. WYNNE,
Education Offices, Dudley, Worc.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

GOSPORT and ALVERSTOKE SECONDARY SCHOOL.

An ASSISTANT MISTRESS is REQUIRED, to commence duties in SEPTEMBER NEXT.

Candidates should be well qualified by training and experience to teach Practical Natural Science. The Salary will commence at 110l. per annum, and will come under a scale of salaries to be adopted shortly.

Further particulars can be obtained from the HEAD MASTER, by whom applications should be received not later than SATURDAY, July 8 next.

JUNIOR SCIENCE MISTRESS REQUIRED in SEPTEMBER for MUNICIPAL HIGH SCHOOL for GIRLS, DONCASTER.

Special Subjects: Physics, Botany. The Mistress appointed would have charge of a Form, and be required to take some ordinary Form Subjects. Salary 100l., non-resident.—Apply, before JUNE 22, HEAD MISTRESS.

COUNTY of LONDON

EDUCATION ACTS, 1870 to 1902

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for Two Appointments of ASSISTANT INSPECTORS under the Chief Inspector (Education). They will be required to assist the Council's District Inspectors in the Inspection of Public Elementary Day Schools and Evening Schools, and, if required, any other Educational Institutions within the areas allotted to them.

The salary in each case is 250l. a year, rising by annual increments of 15l. to a maximum salary of 400l. a year.

The persons appointed will be under the control of the Chief Inspector, and will be required to give their whole time to the duties of the office, and will in other respects be subject to the usual conditions attaching to the Council's service, particulars of which are contained in the Form of Application.

In connexion with these appointments there is no restriction with regard to sex.

Applications should be made on the official form, to be obtained from the Clerk of the London County Council at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W., or at the Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C. The applications must be sent in not later than 10 A.M. on SATURDAY, June 24, 1905, addressed to the Clerk of the Council, at the Education Offices as above, accompanied by Copies of not more than three recent Testimonials.

Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for appointment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.
The County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W.,
June 7, 1905.

HARRIS INSTITUTE, PRESTON.

The COUNCIL require a HEAD ART MASTER, whose duty will be, with competent Assistants, to undertake the General Work and Management of the School of Art. He will also advise with the Director of Education for the Borough on the Art Instruction in the Elementary Day Schools, and possibly supervise such instruction, and also arrange and conduct Art Classes for the instruction of Teachers.
Salary 250l. per annum. Candidates must be qualified as Art Masters according to the rules and regulations of the Board of Education, and must have had experience in teaching Design and Modelling. The Gentleman appointed will enter upon his duties in SEPTEMBER NEXT.—Applications before JUNE 26. Form of Application may be obtained from
T. R. JOLLY, Secretary and Registrar.

BRISTOL DAY TRAINING COLLEGE.

The LOCAL COMMITTEE of the BRISTOL DAY TRAINING
COLLEGE invite applications for the post of ASSISTANT MASTER.
Salary 140l., rising to 160l. Candidates should have good qualifications in Science, Mathematics (and perhaps French or German), and a thorough acquaintance with the work of Elementary Schools, so as to render assistance to the Master of Method. Applications, with four typed or printed copies of three recent Testimonials, should be sent in on or before FRIDAY, June 30, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

JAMES RAFTER, Secretary, University College, Bristol.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN

(University of London).

YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, W.

The COUNCIL will appoint a RESIDENT LIBRARIAN for NEXT SESSION. Candidates must hold a Degree or its equivalent.

Six copies of applications, and of not more than three recent Testimonials, must be sent not later than JULY 7 to the Secretary of the College, from whom all information may be obtained.

H. WALTON, Secretary.

LIBRARIAN WANTED for the TOYNBEE

HALL LIBRARY, WHITECHAPEL.

Evening Work only. Lady preferred. Keen interest in Books and experience of Library Work desirable. Salary according to qualifications.

Address Mr. LEON SIMON, 33, Leinster Square, W.

WANTED, SITUATION in LIBRARY, BOOK- SELLER'S, or STATIONER'S by LADY 22.

Six years' experience. W., W.C., or S.W. London preferred. Salary about 25s.
E. B., 60, Lysias Road, Balham, S.W.

YOUNG FRENCHMAN, 27 years of age, Pro- ficient in French, Italian, and Latin, desires post as TUTOR in an ENGLISH FAMILY.—Address M. de JAMES, Pasteur, Bordeaux, Gironde, France.

PRINTERS—AUTHORS.—Experienced READER

(especially in News Work) seeks EMPLOY as SUB-EDITOR, or whole or partial work Reading. Disengaged Authors' MS. prepared and revised for the Press. Printers and Publishers provided. Translations obtained from French and German. Terms moderate.—Write, in first instance, W. C. RUMFORD, 52, West Square, St. George's Road, Southwark, S.E.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL

WORK and INDEXING.—Apply Miss FRIERBRIDGE (Nat. Sec.
Tripos), 52a, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MONOCHROME COPIES

BY THE

PERMANENT AUTOTYPE CARBON PROCESS OF PICTURES BY OLD MASTERS

From the Principal Collections of Note.

NUMEROUS EXAMPLES OF WORKS BY MODERN ARTISTS.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY'S Processes of Permanent Photographic Reproduction are extensively employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Local Government Board, many of the Learned Societies, and leading Publishers.

Copies of Coins, Seals, Medals, MSS., Drawings, Engravings, Art Objects, Microscopic Work, &c.

Inquiries are invited from those requiring Book Illustrations of the very highest quality. Specimens and Estimates submitted.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

Open Free Daily, 10 to 6.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., SCIENTIFIC, and of all Descriptions, COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Dictation Rooms (Shorthand or Type-writing). Usual Terms.—Misses E. B. and I. FARRAN, Donington House, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, London.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICE. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Circulars, &c., duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established twelve years.—SIXES & SIXES, 229, Hammersmith Road, W. (Private Address: 13, Wolverton Gardens, Hammersmith.)

TYPE-WRITER.—PLAYS and MSS. of every description. Carbon and other Duplicate or Multifold Copies.—Miss E. M. TIGAN, 61, Maitland Park Road, Haverstock Hill, N.W. Established 1884.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BROADBENT, 34, Paternoster Row.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application. Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

Catalogues.

CATALOGUE No. 43.—Etchings by Whistler and Samuel Palmer—Engravings after Turner—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Drawings of the Early English School—scarce illustrated MSS.—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence.—Wm. Wann, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

H. H. PEACH, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 11 contains Illuminated, Historical, Classical MSS.—Collections of Autographs—Books on Art—Early and Modern Presses—Broadside—Bibliography—Emblems, &c.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROSE & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 140, containing a Special Article, entitled 'THE RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS,' by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the New Edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters and Engravers,' &c. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NOGATE, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

GLAISHER'S REMAINDER BOOK CATALOGUE.

JUNE SUPPLEMENT NOW READY, Comprising all most recent Purchases in PUBLISHERS' REMAINDER STOCK. Books in NEW condition, at REDUCED Prices.

WILLIAM GLAISHER,

Remainder and Discount Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London.

LEIGHTON'S

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 Illustrations, price 2s JUST ISSUED. Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

BOOK-PLATES.

Medieval and Modern Styles Designed and Engraved.

Write for ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET free.

THOMAS MORING, Engraver, Stationer, Printer, &c., 257, High Holborn, W.C.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquaries are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—Spink & Son, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

Sales by Auction.

Rare and Valuable Books, including a Selection from an Old Country Library.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 21, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, rare and valuable BOOKS, including an interesting Copy of Anne Killigrew's Poems, 1686, with the rare Portrait—White's Selborne, First Edition—a fine Copy of the Original Edition of Ackermann's Microcosm, 3 vols., and Cambridge University, 2 vols., and other Books with Coloured Plates—valuable Sporting Books in sumptuous bindings—Early Works relating to America—Heaton's Furniture and Decoration in England, 2 vols.—Planche's Cyclopaedia of Costume, 2 vols.—Austin Dobson's Hogarth, Edition de Luxe, 2 vols., and other beautiful Modern Fine-Art and Illustrated Books—handsome Library Editions of Scott, Dickens, Thackeray, Whyte-Melville, Lady Jackson, Carlyle, and others, many in fine call or morocco bindings—Brinkley's History of Japan, 12 vols.—Yule's Cathay, 2 vols., Hakluyt Society, and other valuable Standard Books—First Editions and Presentation Copies of Modern Authors, including Rossetti's Hand and Soul, and Browning's Gold Hair, the Privately Printed Issues, and a Copy of Keats's Poems, with Marginal Notes by D. G. Rossetti. Also an extensive Collection of Books on Mathematics, Chemistry, Astronomy, and Physics, including a Copy of the Editio Princeps of Gilbert on the Magnet, 1600, and a Selection of Books in Early English Literature from an Old Country Library, comprising such Rare Volumes as Parkinson's Paradisi in Sole, 1656, and Theatre of Plants, 1640—Stoddard's Pacata Hibernia, 1633, &c., with several Collections of Seventeenth and Eighteenth Century Tracts and Pamphlets, the whole in the original calf bindings.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

Valuable Law Books, including the Library of the late Sir JOHN BUDD PHEAR (formerly Chief Justice of Ceylon), removed from Marpool Hall, Exmouth, by Order of the Executors.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., at the end of JUNE, valuable LAW BOOKS, including the above LIBRARY and other Properties, comprising Complete Set of the Law Reports from the Commencement to 1905—another Series to 1883—Works in Legal History—Text Books, &c. Catalogues are prepari g.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. beg to ANNOUNCE that they will hold several SALES of RARE and VALUABLE BOOKS during the NEXT FEW WEEKS, prior to the Close of their Season about the middle of July. They would therefore respectfully advise those having Libraries or Collections of Books to dispose of, to communicate as to the Sale of the same with as little delay as possible, in order to ensure the Property being offered this Season.

Valuable Books, including a Library removed from Shropshire.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on TUESDAY, June 27, and Following Day, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS, including Specimens of the Aldine and other Early Presses—Bikon Basilike, 1648—Bindings with Arms of former Owners—Phillips, The Perfect Path to Paradise, 1590—Manuscripts on Vellum, with Miniatures—Chardin's Travels, 2 vols., old red morocco—Blomfield's Norfolk—Dryden's Hind and the Panther, 1687—Early Tracts and Pamphlets—Franco-Venetian Costume—Funeral of James Stuart, the Old Pretender, 1706—Works of James I., 1616—Poynell's Shakespeare, 9 vols. morocco gilt—Poynell's Shakespeare Gallery, 2 vols.—Hamerton's Etching and Engraving, in 10 folio size, in 7 vols., extra-illustrated with numerous plates—Lear's Parrots, Coloured Plates—Standard Editions of Works on Biography, Travel, Theology, Science, &c.—First Editions of Modern Poets and Novelists, Ex-Libris, &c.

Curiosities.

MR. J. C. STEVENS' NEXT SALE of CURIOS will take place on TUESDAY, June 20, and will include a great variety of ARMS and WEAPONS from various parts—a portion of King John's Saddle and Horse taken from his body when found in Worcester Cathedral—a Wellington Relic in the shape of a Stuffed Pigeon—China—Bronzes—Pictures—and the usual Miscellaneous Assortment.

On view day prior 10 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Books.

WEDNESDAY, June 21, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by AUCTION, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., an important LIBRARY of WORKS on NATURAL HISTORY, comprising Meyer's Coloured Illustrations of British Birds and their Eggs, 7 vols.—Yarrell's History of British Birds, with Manuscript Additions—Lord Lilford's Birds of the British Islands, 7 vols.—British Museum Catalogue of Birds, 26 vols.—The Ibis, a Complete Set—Proceedings of the Zoological Society, 53 vols.—Dresser's Birds of Europe, 9 vols.—Gray's Genera of Birds, 3 vols.—Smith's Illustrations of the Zoology of South Africa, 5 vols.—a Set of Notes and Queries, &c.

Catalogues on application.

Photographic Apparatus, Scientific Instruments, &c.

FRIDAY, June 23, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., PHOTOGRAPHIC CAMERAS, LENSES, by Best Makers—Microscopes and Slides—Astronomical and Field Telescopes—fine Binocular Glasses—superior Household Furniture—Tools, Lathes, &c.—and a large quantity of valuable Miscellaneous Property.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Curiosities.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., on TUESDAY, June 27, PORCELAIN, CLOISONNE WARE, and BRONZES from JAPAN—Curiosities and Weapons from Africa, India, and other parts—Engravings, Paintings, &c.

On view day prior 10 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Plates from the Liber Studiorum, the Property of a Lady.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 19, at 1 o'clock precisely, PLATES from the LIBER STUDIORUM and other ENGRAVINGS, by and after J. M. W. Turner, the Property of a LADY.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The THIRD FORTION of the valuable Library of JOSEPH KNIGHT, Esq., F.S.A., &c.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 19, and Five Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the THIRD PORTION of the valuable and interesting LIBRARY of JOSEPH KNIGHT, Esq., F.S.A., &c. (Editor of 'Notes and Queries'), consisting chiefly of Works by the best-known English and French Writers on Poetry, Literature, and the Drama of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Eighteenth, and Nineteenth Centuries, including Ancient and Rare Editions of the 'Contents' of the Period—a large number of Dramatic Pieces, Biographies, Anecdotes, &c., of the English Stage in the Eighteenth Century—Reprints and Private Limited Issues of very Rare Works—Series of Scarce Editions of Bacon, Boccaccio, Cervantes, Chaucer, Corneille, Diderot, Dryden, D'Urfey, Froissart, La Fontaine, Longus, Marguerite de Valois, Marat, Milton, Molière, Montaigne, Wm. Morris, Duchess of Newcastle, Rabelais, Récit de las Bretonnes, Ronsard, D. G. Rossetti, Rousseau, Scarron, Shakespeare, Sheridan, Spenser, Suckling, Symonds, Tabourat, Uxanne, Voltaire, Withers—Works on Bibliography—a Series of Elzevir Editions—Theatrical Costumes—Out-of-Print Periodicals—a large number of Plays by various Writers—Publications of the Kilmiscott and other Presses, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

A Collection of Engravings of the English Schools, including The Cries of London and The Liber Studiorum.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on FRIDAY, June 23, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS (in the portfolio), comprising Stipple Engravings of the English School, by P. Bartolozzi, J. R. Cipriani, A. Kaufman, W. Hamilton, W. W. Ryland, P. W. Tomkins, and others, including a complete Set of The Cries of London, after F. Wheatley—a Collection of the Works of Richard Cosway, including several from the Series of Full-Length Portraits of Ladies by J. S. Agar, J. Conde, A. Cardon, A. Freschi, and others—a set of J. M. W. Turner's Liber Studiorum, and Engravings after J. B. Greuze.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Engravings and Drawings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 26, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS and DRAWINGS, comprising a nearly complete Collection of Tickets, Cards, Book-marks, &c., by Bartolozzi, for the most part Engraver's Proofs—Early Impressions of Liber Studiorum Prints, an unusually fine Set of Proofs before all letters of the Rivers of England and River Scenery—Portraits after Sir T. Lawrence, by F. C. Lewis, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A Collection of Engravings and Drawings, formed for Illustrating Pennant's History of London.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, June 27, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS and DRAWINGS of VIEWS, PORTRAITS, &c., formed during the early part of the nineteenth century by a GENTLEMAN resident in the South of England for illustrating Pennant's History of London, and including many Engravings of considerable rarity, Mezzotints, and other Portraits—an extensive Series of Water-Colour Drawings by G. Shepherd, specially executed by him during the years 1809-1814 for the purpose of this Collection—Drawings of Portraits by G. P. Harding, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Coins and Medals, including the Collection of GEORGE HODGES, Esq., and the Collection of Tokens of WILLIAM NORMAN, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, June 27, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, COINS and MEDALS, including the Collection of Greek, Roman, and English Coins, &c., Coin Cabinets, and Old Paper Money, the Property of GEORGE HODGES, Esq., of Lambham House, Thornbury, Gloucestershire; also a Collection of TRADESMEN'S COPPER TOKENS of the Nineteenth Century, including the rare Birmingham Sixpence, the Douglas Copper Shilling, the Jersey Halfpenny, and many Patterns and Proofs, the Property of WILLIAM NORMAN, Esq., of Newcastle-on-Tyne, Member of the British Numismatic Society, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Valuable Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 29, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including a Valuable Collection of Alpine Books, the Property of C. E. MATHEWS, Esq. (sometime President of the Alpine Club, who is giving up collecting), comprising The Alpine Journal, 22 vols.—Hall's Peaks, Passes, and Glaciers, 3 vols.—Moore's Alps in 1864—The Scottish Mountaineering Journal, 7 vols., and other Works on Mountaineering. The CHOICE LIBRARY of NEVILLE CROSS, Esq., including a remarkably fine Collection of the Writings of Charles Dickens and Books relating to him. First Editions, chiefly in Morocco, by Riviere—the Works of Charles Lever, 52 vols., First Editions, in Morocco, by Riviere—Capt. Marryat's Novels, 82 vols., First Editions, call extra, by Riviere. A PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late H. F. HORNBY, Esq., and the late K. C. HORNBY, Esq. (of Sandown, Waverley, Liverpool), containing Curtis's British Entomology, 8 vols.—The Ibis, 1850-1891—Lillford's British Birds, 7 vols., First Edition—Fowler's Coleoptera, 5 vols.—Gould's Humming Birds, 6 vols.—Audubon's Birds of America, 7 vols., and other Scientific Works—Shakespeare's Works, Second Folio. Other Properties, comprising Ackermann's Microcosm of London, 3 vols.—Smith's Mezzotint Portraits, 4 vols., with Plates—Works by and Relating to Shakespeare—Byron's Poems on Various Occasions, First Edition, uncut—Elizabethan Literature—Cicero's Cat. Major, Franklin, 1711, and other Scarce Americana—Autograph Letters—Illuminated Horn—Scott's Waverley, First Edition, 3 vols., uncut—Shelley's Queen Mab, First Edition, with Manuscript Notes—First Editions of the Writings of John Milton, Books of Prints, &c.—Original Drawings by W. M. Thackeray, for 'The Book of Snobs,' a Sketch-Book of his, and an Autograph Manuscript Compendium of German History, written in 1831.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The valuable Library of an English Gentleman, recently deceased.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, July 5, at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable LIBRARY of an ENGLISH GENTLEMAN, recently deceased, removed from France, comprising French Illustrated Books, principally of the Eighteenth Century—Old English Plays—Smith's Catalogue Raisonné, 9 vols.—The Writings of Molière, La Fontaine, and other French Classical Authors—Bibliography—Genealogy and Heraldry—Armorial Bookbindings, including Examples from the Libraries of the Comtesse de Verrue, L. H. de Bourbon Condé, Madame de Pompadour, Duc de Choiseul, Comtesse d'Artois, Duc de Grammont, and other well-known Collectors—Specimens of Binding by Petit, Masson-Debonnelle, Cuzin, Marius Michel, Chambolle-Duru, Hardy Mennil, &c.—Works on Art, Pottery, and Porcelain—Topography, comprising Brand's Newcastle upon Tyne—Surtees's Durham—Whitaker's Richmondshire—Nicholson and Burns's Westmoreland and Cumberland; the Property of a CLERGYMAN, containing Montesquieu, Le Temple de Gnide, 1793, Large Paper, Proof Plates—Bauhin, Idylles and Romances, Large Paper—The Plates to Banier's Ovid—Les Emaux de Petitot, 2 vols., &c.—and a Copy of the excessively rare Play The True Chronicle History of King Lear and his Three Daughters, 1605, being the precursor of Shakespeare's famous Tragedy.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A Further Portion of the choice Library of EDWARD J. STANLEY, Esq., M.P.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, July 6, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, a FURTHER PORTION of the choice LIBRARY of EDWARD J. STANLEY, Esq., M.P., containing Biblical and Liturgical Literature—French Illustrated Books of the Eighteenth Century—the Cabinets Choiseul et Basan, Proofs—Billings's Baronial Antiquities—Musée de Peinture, 28 vols.—Musée Français, Proofs before Letters—Portraits, and other Books of Prints—Serial Publications—Dugdale's Monasticon, Large Paper—Spanish and Italian Literature—Publications of the Percy, Philobiblon, and other Societies—Shaw's Dresses and Decorations, Large Paper—Alken's National Sports—French Armorial Bindings, including Books with the Arms of the Comte de Maurepas, the Comtesse de Verrue, Madame de Pompadour, the Duchesse d'Aiguillon, Count Hoym, Duc de Fronsac, Long-pierre, Marie Antoinette, and other Royal Arms, &c.—Fine Specimens of French and English Bindings, including Examples of Nicolas Eve, Pasdeloup, Derome, Hardy, Trautz-Bauzonnet, Francis Bedford, Smith, Lewis, Riviere, &c.—Classical Literature—Books of Reference—Voyages—Heraldry—Genealogy—History, &c. All in fine condition.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, June 19, WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS of the late C. H. T. HAWKINS, Esq., and PICTURES and DRAWINGS from the COLLECTION of the late THOMAS STATTER, Esq.

On TUESDAY, June 20, the COLLECTION of PORCELAIN formed by the late THOMAS STATTER, Esq.

On WEDNESDAY, June 21, fine ENGRAVINGS of the EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL.

On WEDNESDAY, June 21, OBJECTS of ART from numerous Sources, and COINS of the late WILLIAM N. FURNIVAL, Esq.

On THURSDAY, June 22, OLD ENGLISH SILVER PLATE.

On FRIDAY, June 23, PORCELAIN of the Rev. EDMUND LORD, deceased, and PORCELAIN, OBJECTS of ART, and DECORATIVE FURNITURE.

On SATURDAY, June 24, MONDAY, June 26, and TUESDAY, June 27, the COLLECTION of PICTURES and DRAWINGS of the late CHARLES J. GALLOWAY, Esq.

IPSWICH.—Eighty Works in Water-Colour and Oil by F. G. Cotman, R.I., including three large Canvases, several exhibited at the Royal Academy and Institute.

GARROD, TURNER & SON will SELL the above by AUCTION at the SALOON, 5, TAVERN STREET, IPSWICH, on FRIDAY, June 23, 1905, at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Catalogues of the Auctioneers, Ipswich.

INITIAL BRAILLE (6 dots in an 8-dot cell). 243 signs. 8 with One Dot; 28 with Two Dots; 55 with Three Dots; 70 with Four Dots; 56 with Five Dots; 28 with Six Dots. With a Code of 246 Words. Fewest Dots given to the commonest signs. 1s. post free.

Published by R. Diver, 21, Sidney Street, Cambridge.

EARLY MURAL PAINTING; Architecture at the Royal Academy (111.); The Decay and Preservation of Stone; Monument to the late Marchioness of Lothian, Blacking; University College Hospital Medical School; Houses at Chislehurst and Cambridge; Casket presented to H.M. the King of Spain; a Bronze and Marble Fountain; Typical Structures in Concrete-Steel (Student's column), &c.—See the BUILDER of June 17 (4d.); by post, 4d.). Through any Newscaster or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London W.C.

A LIST OF

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S
STANDARD WORKS.

STUDIES in COLONIAL NATIONALISM. By RICHARD JEBB. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

The EAST AFRICA PROTECTORATE. By Sir CHARLES ELIOT, K.C.M.G., late H.M. Commissioner for the Protectorate. With Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

TURKEY in EUROPE. By "Odysseus" (Sir CHARLES ELIOT, K.C.M.G.). Demy 8vo, 16s.

IMPERIUM et LIBERTAS: a History of the Growth of the Imperial Idea. By BERNARD HOLLAND. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

ECONOMIC METHOD and ECONOMIC FALLACIES. By W. W. CARLILE, M.A. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

STUDIES in VIRGIL. By T. R. GLOVER, Author of 'Life and Letters of the Fourth Century.' Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

The HOUSE of SELEUCUS. By E. R. BEVAN, M.A. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 30s. net.

STYLE. By Walter Raleigh, Professor of English Literature in the University of Oxford. Fifth Impression. Crown 8vo, 5s.

MILTON. By Walter Raleigh. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

WORDSWORTH. By Walter Raleigh. Crown 8vo, 6s.

OLD ENGLISH GLASSES. By A. HARTSHORNE, F.S.A. With Hundreds of Illustrations. Super-royal 4to, 3l. 3s. net.

ALESSANDRO SCARLATTI: His Life and Works. By E. J. DENT. Royal 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

ASTRONOMICAL DISCOVERY. By H. H. TURNER, D.Sc., Savilian Professor of Astronomy in the University of Oxford. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

An INTRODUCTION to the THEORY of OPTICS. By ARTHUR SCHUSTER, Ph.D. F.R.S., Professor of Physics, Manchester University. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

The BECQUEREL RAYS and the PROPERTIES of RADIUM. By the Hon. R. J. STRUTT. Demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

The CHEMICAL SYNTHESIS of VITAL PRODUCTS and the INTER-RELATIONS BETWEEN ORGANIC COMPOUNDS. By Prof. R. MELDOLA, F.R.S. Vol. I. Super-royal 8vo, 21s. net.

The BALANCING of ENGINES. By W. E. DALBY, M.A. B.Sc. M.Inst.C.E. M.I.M.E., Professor of Engineering, City and Guilds of London Central Technical College. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

ENGLISH ESTATE FORESTRY. By A. C. FORBES, Lecturer in Forestry, Armstrong College, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

The PRINCIPLES of LANDED ESTATE MANAGEMENT. By HENRY HERBERT SMITH, Agent to the Marquis of Lansdowne, K.G. Demy 8vo, 16s.

FOOD and the PRINCIPLES of DIETETICS. By ROBERT HUTCHISON, M.D. Edin. F.R.C.P. Sixth Edition. Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

The EVOLUTION THEORY. By AUGUST WEISMANN. Translated by Prof. J. ARTHUR THOMSON and MARGARET THOMSON. With numerous Illustrations and Coloured Plates. 2 vols. royal 8vo, 32s. net.

HABIT and INSTINCT. By C. Lloyd MORGAN, LL.D. F.R.S. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

The CHANCES of DEATH, and other Studies in Evolution. By KARL PEARSON, F.R.S. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 25s. net.

Kindly write for latest Catalogues.

London:

EDWARD ARNOLD, 41 and 43, Maddox Street, W.

FROM

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S
LIST.

CROWN THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY.

READY IN A FEW DAYS, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE CHILD AND RELIGION.
Eleven Essays.

The CHILD and HEREDITY. By Prof. HENRY JONES, M.A. LL.D.

The CHILD and ITS ENVIRONMENT. By C. F. G. MASTERMAN, M.A.

The CHILD'S CAPACITY for RELIGION. By Prof. GEORGE T. LADD, D.D. LL.D., University of Yale.

The CHILD and SIN. By Rev. F. R. TENNANT, M.A. B.Sc. Hulsean Lecturer.

The CHILD CONVERSION. By Rev. J. CYNDDYLAN JONES, D.D.

The CHILD'S RELIGIOUS TRAINING in the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By Rev. Canon HENSLEY HENSON, M.A.

The CHILD'S RELIGIOUS TRAINING in the FREE CHURCHES. By Rev. ROBERT F. HORTON, M.A. D.D.

The BAPTISTS and the CHILDREN. By Rev. G. H. HILL, M.A. D.D.

RELIGIOUS TRAINING in the NEW CHURCH. By Rev. J. J. THORNTON.

RELIGIOUS TRAINING AMONG the JEWS. By Rev. Rabbi A. A. GREEN.

The CHILD and the BIBLE. By Prof. JOSEPH AGAR BEET, D.D.

NOW READY, cloth 3s. 6d.

THE EARLY CHRISTIAN CONCEPTION OF CHRIST:

Its Value and Significance in the History of Religion.

By OTTO PFLEIDERER, D.D.,

Professor of Practical Theology in the University of Berlin. "It would be difficult to name any recent English work which could compare with this brilliant essay as a concise but lucid presentation of the attitude of the more advanced school of German theologians to the Founder of the Christian religion."—Spectator.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION LIBRARY.
VOL. II. COMPLETING THE WORK.

ALMOST READY, 10s. 6d.

THE EXPANSION OF CHRISTIANITY IN THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES.

By ADOLF HARNACK,

Professor of Church History in the University of Berlin, and Member of the Royal Prussian Academy.

Translated and Edited by JAMES MOFFATT, B.D. D.D. (St. Andrews).

"When people who are wearied of the disputes of theologians take up the volumes in which Prof. Harnack throws the light of history on religious questions, they are usually surprised at the facility with which he rouses their interest and arrests their attention. He succeeds in putting life into the dry bones of dead controversies. The secret of his success is that he writes with impartiality and hope."—Pall Mall Gazette.

JUST READY, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

SCHOOL TEACHING AND SCHOOL REFORM.

A Course of Four Lectures on SCHOOL CURRICULA AND METHODS Delivered to Secondary Teachers and Teachers in Training at Birmingham, during February, 1905.

By Sir OLIVER LODGE,

Principal of the University of Birmingham.

"The work of a sensible iconoclast, who does not pull down for the sake of mere destruction, but is anxious to set up something more worthy in place of the medievalism he attacks."—Outlook.

JUST ISSUED, royal 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net; 13s. post free.

THE AMERICANS.

By HUGO MÜNSTERBERG,

Professor of Psychology at Harvard University.

Translated by EDWIN B. HOLT, Ph.D., Instructor at Harvard University.

"Though Professor Münsterberg by no means professes to offer an exhaustive survey, and regards his facts and figures as purely illustrative, his selection has been so comprehensive that it may safely be asserted that an intelligent European is likely to ask a few questions to which an answer, supported by authoritative information, cannot be provided out of this volume."—Manchester Guardian.

SECOND EDITION, JUST PUBLISHED.

With Coloured Plates and 100 Figures in Text. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

THE PRACTICAL STUDY OF MALARIA AND OTHER
BLOOD PARASITES.

By J. W. W. STEPHENS, M.D. Cantab. D.P.H., and S. R. CHRISTOPHERS, M.B. Viet. I.M.S.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

14, Henrietta Street, London, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S

NEW BOOKS.

NORWAY
AND THE UNION WITH SWEDEN.By FRIDTJOF NANSEN.
Crown 8vo, 2s. net.THE LIFE OF ST. PATRICK,
AND HIS PLACE IN HISTORY.By J. B. BURY, M.A. Hon.D.Litt. Hon.LL.D., Regius
Professor of Modern History, Cambridge University. 8vo,
12s. net. [Tuesday.]ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.—New Series.
EDWARD FITZGERALD.

By A. C. BENSON. Crown 8vo, 2s. net.

PHILOSOPHICAL STUDIES.By DAVID G. RITCHIE, M.A. LL.D., sometime Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in the University of St. Andrews.
Edited, with a Memoir, by Prof. ROBERT LATTA, M.A.
D.Phil. 8vo, 10s. net. [Tuesday.]HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.
NEW VOLUME.*DERBYSHIRE.By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICH-
SEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.ITALIAN BACKGROUNDS.By EDITH WHARTON. Illustrated by E. C. PEIXOTTO.
Royal 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.BY THE LATE F. J. A. HORT.
VILLAGE SERMONS.Second Series. By the late F. J. A. HORT, D.D. D.C.L.
LL.D. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW IMPRESSION NOW READY.

THE SEVEN WEEKS' WAR:Its Antecedents and its Incidents. By Col. Sir H. M.
HOZIER, K.C.B. Crown 8vo, 6s.MACMILLAN'S NEW NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

FOND ADVENTURES.

Tales of the Youth of the World.

By MAURICE HEWLETT.

MRS. DARRELL.

A Novel of the Social Life of Washington.

By FOXCROFT DAVIS.

POCKET EDITIONS

OF THE NOVELS OF

SCOTT, DICKENS, & THACKERAY.

Fcap. 8vo, limp cloth, 2s. net; limp leather, 3s. net each.

LATEST ADDITIONS.

The HEART of MIDLOTHIAN—BARNABY
RUDGE—LOVEL the WIDOWER, and other Stories.MENDELISM.By R. C. PUNNETT, Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. 16mo, 2s. net.A Brief Account of Mendel and his Experiments with Plant Hybridization, and his Discovery in Heredity.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LIMITED, London.

MESSRS. HURST & BLACKETT beg to announce the publication of Mr. F. A. McKEN-
ZIE'S New Work.In 1 vol. demy 8vo, with Illustrations, Plans, and a Map, price 7s. 6d. net.FROM TOKYO TO TIFLIS.

Uncensored Letters from the War.

By F. A. McKENZIE,

Special Correspondent of the Daily Mail."If the man must have a heart of stone who can read these sidelights on war without feeling their tragedy, he must be devoid of human pride who can read them without being thrilled by the courage and devotion they record."
*St. James's Gazette.NEW AND INTERESTING BOOK.In 1 vol. demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, Maps, &c., price 7s. 6d. net.ZANZIBAR IN CONTEMPORARY TIMES.

By R. N. LYNE.

NEW VOLUME BY JEROME K. JEROME.NOW READY, in 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.IDLE IDEAS IN 1905.

By JEROME K. JEROME,

Author of 'Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow,'
'Three Men in a Boat,' &c.NEW VOLUME OF STORIES.READY JUNE 26, in 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.A COUNTRY BUNCH.

By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY,

Author of 'Folly Corner.'

NEW NOVEL BY EDWIN PUGH.READY JUNE 26, in 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.THE PURPLE HEAD.

By EDWIN PUGH,

Author of 'Tony Drum,' &amp;c.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.*NATURE and MAN. The Romanes
Lecture, 1905. By EDWIN RAY LANKESTER, M.A.
Hon.D.Sc. F.R.S. Delivered in the Sheldonian Theatre,
Oxford, June 14, 1905. 8vo, paper covers, 2s. net.The HERBERT SPENCER LEC-TURE delivered at Oxford on March 9, 1905, by FREDERIC HARRISON, M.A. 8vo, paper covers,
2s. net.CORPS de DROIT OTTOMAN.Recueil des Codes, Lois, Règlements, Ordonnances et Actes les plus importants du Droit intérieur, et d'Études sur le Droit Coutumier de l'Empire Ottoman.
Par GEORGE YOUNG, Deuxième Secrétaire de l'Ambassade d'Angleterre.

In Two Parts. Part I. (Vols. I.-III.) immediately.

Part II. (Vols. IV. to VII.) in the course of the year.

The Complete Work, in cloth, 4l. 14s. 6d. net; in paper covers, 4l. 4s. net. Part I. in cloth, 2l. 17s. 6d. net; in paper covers, 2l. 12s. 6d. net.*Prospectus on application.DEMETER. A Mask. By RobertBRIDGES. Crown 8vo, 1s. net in paper; 1s. 6d. net in cloth. Also MUSIC to DEMETER. By Mr. W. H.
HADOW. Crown 4to, paper covers, 2s. 6d. net.ADADEMY.—"The cunning of Mr. Bridges' invention and the dignity of the result seem to us to make his the version which, more than any other, can be enjoyed to-day."MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"A very beautiful piece of work."The FAROES and ICELAND:Studies in Island Life. By NELSON ANNANDALE.
With 24 Illustrations, and an Appendix on the Celtic Pony by F. H. A. MARSHALL, D.Sc. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d. net. [Immediately.]ORGANOGRAPHY of PLANTS,Especially of the Archegoniatae and Spermatophyta. By Dr. K. GOEBEL. Authorized English Edition by ISAAC BAYLEY BALFOUR, M.A. M.D. F.R.S.
Second Part (Special Organography), with 417 Woodcuts. Royal 8vo, 21s. net in cloth; 24s. net in half-morocco.The NEW TESTAMENT in theAPOSTOLIC FATHERS. By a Committee of the Oxford Society of Historical Theology. 8vo, cloth,
6s. net.The OXYRHYNCHUS SAYINGS ofJESUS. Found in 1903. With the Sayings called "Logia," found in 1897. A Lecture by CHARLES
TAYLOR, D.D. LL.D. 8vo, paper covers, 2s. net.ALSO PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE*AUTHOR and PRINTER. A Guidefor Authors, Editors, Printers, Correctors of the Press, Compositors, and Typists, with Full List of Abbreviations. An Attempt to Codify the Best Typographical Practices of the Present Day by F. HOWARD
COLLINS, with the Assistance of many Authors,
Editors, Printers, and Correctors of the Press. Second Impression. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. net; leather back and corners, cloth sides, gilt top, 6s. 6d. net.ATHENÆUM.—"The volume will be found a means of shortening many researches which the careful writer or editor has to make almost daily if he wishes to be accurate."LECTURES on the HISTORIANSof BOHEMIA. Being the Hichester Lectures for the Year 1904. By the COUNT LUIZOW. Crown 8vo, buckram, 5s. net.ATHENÆUM.—"We hope that this excellent book will carry out the object for which it has been published, and that the English reader will learn to sympathize with the gallant little nation which has seen such triumphs, but also such humiliations."A DICTIONARY of ENGLISH andWELSH SURNAMES, with Special American Instances. By the late C. W. BARDSLEY. Small 4to, cloth, 1l. 1s. net.London: HENRY FROWDE,
Oxford University Press Warehouse,
Amen Corner, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|  | PAGE    |
|--|---------|
| MEMORIES OF OXFORD ... ..  | 741     |
| THE UPTON LETTERS ... ..   | 742     |
| LANGUAGE AND FOLK-LORE OF THE MASAI ... ..   | 742     |
| SOME EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY CORRESPONDENCE... ..   | 743     |
| BEWAYS IN THE CLASSICS ... ..  | 744     |
| NEW NOVELS (The Flute of Pan; The Golden Hope; The Silence of Mrs. Harrold; A Prince of Lovers; The Adventures of an Equerry; A Woman and her Talent; The Middle Wall; The King's Friend; Avant l'Heure) ... ..  | 745-747 |
| RUSSIA AND THE TSAR... ..  | 747     |
| TRANSLATIONS ... ..  | 748     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Carthusian Memories; Spring in a Shropshire Abbey; Lectures on the British Army; La France en Afrique; Admiral George Johnson; The "Log" Series; The Old Shipmasters of Salem; John Howes' MS., 1582; A Second Latin Course; Helen Murdoch; Reprints and New Editions; The Mosaic) ... .. | 749-751 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..   | 752     |
| STEVENSON'S OCCASIONAL PAPERS; 'FROM TOKYO TO TIFLIS'; THE MYSTERY OF TILSIT; THE SHERBORNE PAGEANT; HOTHAM AND NAPOLEON; LAMB'S LETTERS ... ..  | 752-754 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..   | 755     |
| SCIENCE—MODERN PHYSICS; ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..  | 755-758 |
| FINE ARTS—LETHABY ON MEDIEVAL ART; PARADISE LOST; MURAL PAINTING; ENGLISH EMBROIDERY; ALPHABETS AND NUMERALS; GERMAN BOOKS; ARCHEOLOGICAL NOTES; GOSSIP ... ..   | 758-761 |
| MUSIC—HILLIER FESTIVAL; PHILHARMONIC CONCERT; SONGS FROM DAVID HERD'S MANUSCRIPTS; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..   | 761-762 |
| DRAMA—ELEONORA DUSE; MADAME RÉJANE; THE MAN OF THE MOMENT; SHAKSPEAREANA; GOSSIP ... ..  | 762-764 |
| MISCELLANEA—THE PEDIGREE OF THE BRUCES ... ..  | 764     |

LITERATURE

Memories of Life at Oxford and Elsewhere.
By Rev. Frederick Meyrick, Rector of Blickling. (Murray.)

"'Tis opportune," says Sir Thomas Brown, "to look back upon old times: great examples grow thin, and to be fetched from the passed world." So thinks Mr. Meyrick, as he recalls the academic giants of his youth, and surveys the ætas pejor avis on which his waning years have fallen. When he gained a Trinity scholarship in 1843, Achilles, to be sure, was sulking in his Littlemore tent, but his myrmidons were still loyal to the cause from which he had begun to quail. Outside their ranks Clough was tutor at Oriel; Stanley was raising University out of the mire, and had just published his unsurpassable biography; Ward's 'Ideal' was fresh from the press; William Palmer was coquetting with the Orthodox Church; "Tommy" Greswell, drawn out by a precocious young Macmullen, was spouting Greek and Latin inscriptions in Corpus common room; Manning was a Select Preacher; Guille-mard and Church were the non-placeting proctors of the year; Sewell was lecturing on Plato in Exeter College hall; Foulkes's red head was to be seen daily in the Turl; while men foredoomed to future fame, Freeman, Thorold Rogers, Stubbs, Goldwin Smith, were in their larva stage as undergraduates. Crowned after a time with a First Class and a Fellowship of Trinity, young Meyrick gained personal acquaintance with many or all of these; had access also to a higher social set, being private tutor to Lord Lothian and his brother Schomberg Kerr, intimate through them with Lord Robert Cecil, looked up to as guide, philosopher, and friend by all the better specimens of la jeunesse surdorée then resident. So, though the motive of his book and the bulk of its contents are controversial, he seasons it for us, like Horace's blandi doctores, with crustula in the form of personal reminiscences.

Personalia depend for acceptance on crisp epigrammatic handling, on the prominence of men and events described—above all, on dexterous marshalling. "Let an old man," Kinglake was wont to say, "gather his recollections, and glance at them under the right angle, and his life is full of pantomime transformation scenes." Not all of Mr. Meyrick's retrospects are adequate: we would gladly hear more of his pupil Lothian, whose portrait looks sadly out from its Bodleian canvas to remind us of his extraordinary promise and untimely death; of Burgon, vicious and winning, intolerable and irresistible; of Patterson, musical and chatty, who followed afterwards in the Manning wake, and died only the other day as Bishop of Emmaus. The inception of The Guardian newspaper—the "Beadle" it was long profanely called—might have been more fully told. Its founders, besides Frederick Rogers and Thomas Haddan, were Church, James Mozley, and Bernard. The last was for many years its editor, writing always the opening page, unequalled at the time, it was said, in journalistic literary performance. Of Short, tutor in his own college, and for half a century the most amusing man in Oxford, our remembrancer tells us only that he drank after dinner "his two glasses of port" and played whist for sixpenny points, a statement to which the writer of this notice, having, in the forties, watched his play and passed the bottle to him at dessert, ventures to demur. He ruled the College as vice-president well and firmly, lenient to venial trespasses, savagely severe on black-guardism; was a foe to ascetic practices, on which "I threw not only cold, but dirty water"; insisting on external devotion and decorum. "Men do not attend Holy Communion now as they did when I was Dean," he late in life remarked; "to be sure," he added thoughtfully, "they would have been gated if they had stayed away." On the other hand, we are grateful for Mr. Meyrick's sketch of that strange, brilliant paradox William Palmer of Magdalen; for James Riddell's Greek jeux d'esprit; for the story of Mackonochie's appointment to St. Alban's, Holborn, through a mistake on the part of Hubbard; for the proctorization of Jacobson the well-beloved; for Pusey's unspeakably delicious dispensation to the insubordinate members of the Holy Trinity Brotherhood.

All this, however, may be called merely "crustulan"; the main scope of the book is theological controversy. Not the Synod of Dort, nor the Marprelate shocks of strife, nor the Hoadly, Hampden, Gorham scandals spawned such a brood of tracts and essays as did the Newmania, in its storm and in its after-swell. And to these Mr. Meyrick contributed at least his share: his bibliography reckons more than fifty pamphlets, articles, reviews; twenty-five papers in religious journals, English and continental; eighteen editings of seventeenth-century and other treatises. A wide traveller, accomplished linguist, and practised disputant, he wrote on the Church of Spain, on the morality of Liguori, on Italian clerical legends, on Vaticanism, on Irish Church missions. A staunch upholder of the English Church, as at once Catholic and Protestant, primitive and reformed, he set up an Anglo-Continental Society for the enlightenment of foreign Catholics, and co-operated vigorously with Dr. Döllinger in his protests against Papal infallibility. He was a vehement opponent of Manning, on moral even more than on ecclesiastical grounds, revolted by the things which the Cardinal's biographer and friend revealed to all the world; but in attributing the Cardinal's Socialism to selfish motives, he is unaware of the passionate anguish over human suffering, which was as acute in Manning as in Mazzini.

"He never spoke of it [the proletarian wretchedness of London] without a sound in his voice and a light in his eyes which meant depth of restrained passion," says one who knew his altruistic fervour, while combating his metaphysics and repudiating his priestly assumption. Mr. Meyrick is, we think, even more unjust to Newman. He interposed when a young man in the famous duel between Newman and Kingsley, criticizing with an ability which won Gladstone's approval the adroit logic of the Cardinal and poor Kingsley's impar congressio. Probably the antipathy then generated makes him less than judicial now in his narrative of Newman's subsequent attitude towards Manning. No doubt English Romanists would be glad if that quarrel could be forgotten—but for the sake of Manning's memory, not of Newman's. So, again, his ferocious attack on Mark Pattison seems to us alike unnecessary and unfair: it recalls something of Burgon's malevolence without his wit: the vilipending of a man dead and gone, unless sustained and softened by the saving grace of humour, leaves an unpleasant taste. The comment on Dr. Pusey's 'Eirenicon' will be new to most of us; we are told that in those three now forgotten letters, which destroyed the universal popularity gained for Pusey by his paper at the Norwich Congress, the marked tenderness displayed towards Rome was due to his love for Newman. "Non tali auxilio!"

We should like to know why the author of these matterful though not sparkling pages has remained a country parson. His youthful friend, afterwards Lord Salisbury, quarrelled with him when in 1865 he voted for Gladstone at Oxford, and the deep resentment shown in his letter written at the time was possibly permanent. But what was Gladstone about, in his numerous episcopal creations, to pass over a man so active, learned, pious, so sober, and, above all, so safe? No one ever followed the workings of that strangely convoluted brain. Perhaps it was as well for Mr. Meyrick: endowment with mitral trappings might not have compensated for deterioration of moral fibre; anyhow, he remains Vicar of Blickling to the end. The theological alarms and excursions of his middle age have long lost vitality; but for him even in their ashes live their wonted fires, and he discourses on them to a shoulder-shrugging generation with unwearied fervour. His closing note is sad; he is vexed by a twofold animosity: the intelligent few amongst the clergy he sees committed to what are conceived to be the spectral potentialities of the Higher Criticism, while the unthinking, unreasoning majority is absorbed by neo-ritualism, a Jannes and Jambres rabble labouring to imitate Rome as the magicians imitated Moses. These things, however, are the cakes and ale of a diocesan-collegiate breed; in defiance of virtuous elders they will continue to be consumed.

With sincere hope that the book may pass into a second edition, we venture to point out a few errata. The princely Primate of Ireland in the fifties was Lord John Beresford. Charles Wordsworth had resigned the Second Mastership of Winchester some time before Gladstone, to the great loss of the Church and the community, persuaded him to relinquish for the Wardenship of Glenalmond an offered Deanery of Rochester. The prosaic truth as to Sewell's cremation of Froude's book is given, from Froude's lips, in Max Müller's 'Auld Lang Syne.' Let Mr. Meyrick look out Marvell's 'Horatian Ode,' and rectify his misquotation of a noble line. The movement from within for university reform did not begin with Mr. Goldwin Smith's rejection for a fellowship; it had gone on developing ever since Tait's famous pamphlet in 1839. Short did not die in Trinity; college rooms, he used to say, were very good to live in, but very bad to die in; and, as the end drew near, he had himself removed to a place near Birmingham. Lastly, we recommend a revision of the index: for several names and incidents demanding mention the reviewer has been compelled to hunt laboriously through the pages of the book.

---

The Upton Letters. By T. B. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THE anonymous writer of this book says in his preface that the letters were returned to him, shortly after the death of the friend to whom they were written, by his widow, and apologizes for the literary shortcomings with which hurried compositions abound. Although it is hardly our province to inquire into the personality of the author, or the reality of his friend, it seems highly probable that the friend is a fiction, and that the letter form is merely a convenient device for giving expression to a number of short detached essays. The fiction, if it is such, is well sustained, although the reader's interest is centred in the character of the writer. If we may hazard a conjecture, he is a retired schoolmaster, falling back on the resources of a well-kept diary. His attractive style, which is the chief charm of these pages, proves that for many years literature has been to him a vital and practical interest, and in this way he is a pattern to his class. For by such occupation the schoolmaster may keep the current of his mind—apt to stagnate in the long levels of boyish associations—flowing smoothly on, and bring into the class-room a wholesome breeze wafted from pleasant places. The good all-round man the public expects to find in a schoolmaster may, in his fourth or fifth decade, feel himself falling away from his Periclean versatility; what more natural—if he can find the time, and this is the problem—than that he should devote himself to studies in which his early career, and even his daily tasks to some extent, give him some chance of excelling, and which bring him more closely into that contact with maturer minds which his daily work tends to deny him? It is possible that such interests will diminish his chances of or desire for scholastic preferment, but they will secure him some meed of happiness. It is of a man so disposed that T. B. presents either an autobiographic or imaginative account in 'The Upton Letters.' Considering the education of schoolmasters, one may wonder that the list of schoolmaster writers is so small. But T. B. naturally falls into this select company.

We are greatly attracted by T. B.'s personality as revealed in these frank outpourings of his innermost thoughts. If he has a gospel to preach, it is that of simplicity and reality, of sincerity and hatred of pose. He admires naturalness in living and the swift writing of a frank man. Hence we find him writing, "Wordsworth is all pose and self-absorption, Scott all simplicity and disregard of fame," and preferring Scott accordingly. In literature he insistently demands lucidity and purity: George Meredith is not a favourite of his. He confesses to an "insatiable appetite for trifles," is a lover of the ultimate fact, and recognizes that "precision is the essence of diarising." To be worth saying, a thing must be conceived in perfect sincerity; it need not be original or new, but must have the impress of one's own inmost mind. T. B.'s pet aversion is conventionality—"sheep-like grazing—forty feeding like one"; and he has little tolerance for the appetite for recognition. Two prominent tenets of his philosophy are that we should aim more at simply living; and that only in independence, after the barest claims of conventionality have been satisfied, is happiness to be found. His cast of mind is deeply religious, but not dependent on doctrine and dogma. However, his extreme openness to delicate impressions makes him, to use his own words, "absurdly sensitive, ill fitted to cope with unpopularity and disapproval." Various symptoms suggest that he is overworked; indeed, his own account of the manner in which he snatches time from the intervals of his school tasks shows why he is so sensitive and easily irritated. We detect in him at his worst moments an affectation of the superiority he so much deprecates. Thus, when arguing on the classical system of education as it exists, he says pettishly that his colleagues say all the stock things, and a few moments later we find him rebutting their arguments by complacently urging points equally trite. T. B., in short, is a lonely man, and, in spite of his conviction that he is a better schoolmaster for being unmarried, we could heartily wish him the possession of a wife and children, a garden, and a more genial feeling towards golf.

In these pages he has a threefold theme—criticisms of public-school life, criticisms of current literature, and descriptions of character and scenery. He is equally happy in each department. He knows boy nature thoroughly, and it is difficult to abstain from quoting some of the shrewdest of his sayings on this subject. Most of his attacks on the present public-school system are more remarkable for their evident sincerity than for their originality. Thus he hammers away at the indictment that the public schools tend to develop a type and to suppress originality and intellectual interests; he cannot forget "the hideous insistence of the athletic craze"; his opinion is that "the majority of boys educated on classical lines are models of intellectual debility." Still, he occasionally offers excellent suggestions, e.g., on school chapels and school sermons, the exaggerated horror of priggishness, and the necessity of improving the moral code of big schools. On the side of literary criticism T. B. attracts rather by felicity of expression than by freshness of thought. The most interesting of his contributions in this way are some pages on modern novelists, the pattern school story, and an attack on Mr. Kipling for writing 'Stalky & Co.,' and so giving schoolmasters "a push back into the ugly slough of usherdom." In fiction he demands, above all, the "quality of hard reality," and accordingly we find him setting Mr. George Moore on a very high pinnacle. There is a suggestive letter in which Herbert Spencer and Farrar are contrasted as two types of egotism. T. E. Brown, as a poseur, he finds disappointing. One "landscape-letter" shows descriptive power of a high order; our author does not "disable the benefits of his country," but is a convinced lover of the rich and comfortable peace of tranquil, healthy, prosperous England.

So far as the public schools are concerned, he is silent on what, after all, is the greatest fallacy of the traditional system—the house-master who is chiefly remunerated by the privilege of catering. The comments on certain aspects of modern life are always very readable, sometimes valuable; but the book is notable mainly for its poetical outlook and unflinching facility of expression.

---

The Masai, their Language and Folk-lore. By A. C. Hollis. With Introduction by Sir Charles Eliot. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

THE Masai were, to all intents and purposes, first made known to the reading public twenty years ago through the now classic work of Joseph Thomson, the first European to penetrate their territory. Krapf and Erhardt had long before heard of them, and come sufficiently in contact with individuals of the race to prepare vocabularies of what were then erroneously considered as two separate languages—Masai and "Kwafi" (Kwavi). Very little was known about the language for many years, beyond the fact that it was not Bantu. Mrs. Hinde's 'Grammar,' published in 1901, advanced matters a step further; and considerable attention was devoted to the language and its affinities in Sir H. H. Johnston's 'The Uganda Protectorate.' Mr. Hollis's is the fullest study yet made, and comprises not only a very clear and excellent grammar, but also a number of texts, some of which are made doubly useful by an interlinear translation.

Masai was provisionally placed by F. Müller in his "Nuba-Fulah Group"—really a receptacle for languages not otherwise classifiable. Prof. Meinhof is positive in regarding it as Hamitic, while Capt. Merker—whose full and careful monograph is worthy of serious attention, whatever may be thought of his theories—considers it Semitic. What appears to be certain is that its nearest relationships are with the Bari and Latuka tongues on the Upper Nile, and with the languages spoken by the as yet little-known Turkana and Nandi.

Masai is distinguished at once from the Bantu languages by the possession of grammatical gender and the absence of inflexion by prefixes. There are masculine and feminine articles, which assume different forms through the action of phonetic laws. Gender is indicated for the first and second persons, as well as the third. As in Bantu, real adjectives are very scarce, but, by way of compensation, "almost any part of the verb can [by prefixing the relative] be turned into an attribute or relative sentence."

There are no fewer than six ways of forming the plural—not counting exceptions—which entail the division of nouns into as many classes. In one of these, comprising

"the names of tribes, a few communities of people, most insects, some birds and small animals, and a number of words which were probably first known in their collective form,..... the singular appears to be formed from the plural by adding i or ni."

The "Lumbwa Masai" (Il-Oikop, sing. Ol-Oikopani), together with the Dorobo and many others, were thus, as it were, only individualized by an afterthought. Other authorities, by the by, will have none of the assertion that "the Lumbwa," or "German Masai," "call themselves 'l-Oikop,'" maintaining that the latter is only a term of abuse in the mouths of those who dislike them, and means (Merker, 'Die Masai,' p. 9) "Totschläger, rohe, gewalt-same Menschen."

The traditions gathered by Mr. Hollis seem to assume that the "helot tribe" of the Dorobo (Wandorobbo) have been a different race from the beginning. More than one story sets forth how, wanting the sense to appreciate the gifts of a bountiful Providence, they were deprived of them by the more wideawake Masai, who, of course, are the "chosen people," and attract property to themselves by virtue of their inherent superiority. Consequently, when cattle or other desirable possessions are found, at the present day, in the hands of the despised Il-Meek (El-mēg = heathens—the Bantu tribes), they are clearly in the wrong place, and the only course open is to rectify matters by "the good old rule, the simple plan." The original Dorobo, says Justin Ol-omeni—a Lumbwa and a convert of the C.M.S., from whom Mr. Hollis derived much interesting information—behaved with the greatest baseness to his coevals, the serpent and the elephant. Notwithstanding this, he had another chance given him, which he threw away—apparently by want of promptitude, for the Masai was first on the spot, and got the cattle. Napisyeki, an elder of the Aiser clan, gave a slightly different version of this affair:—

"The Masai were formerly Dorobo, and had no cattle; it was the Dorobo who possessed the cattle. Naiteru-kop came one day and said to a Dorobo: 'Come early to-morrow morning, I have something to tell you.' The Dorobo replied, 'Very well,' and went to sleep. A Masai named Le-eyo, having heard what had been said to the Dorobo, arose during the night, and waited near the spot where Naiteru-kop was. When it dawned, he went to Naiteru-kop, who said to him, 'Who are you?' On Le-eyo telling him his name, Naiteru-kop asked where the Dorobo was. Le-eyo replied that he did not know. Naiteru-kop then dropped one end of a piece of hide from the heavens, and let cattle down one by one until the Masai told him to stop. The Masai cattle wandered off, and as they went the cattle which belonged to the Dorobo mingled with them. The Dorobo were unable to recognize their beasts again, and they lost them. After this the Dorobo shot away the cord by which the cattle had descended, and God [eng-Ai] moved and went far off. When the Dorobo were left without their cattle, they had to shoot wild beasts for their food."

According to Justin Ol-omeni, it was eng-Ai who let the strip of hide down, and the Masai who cut off the supply of cattle by uttering "an exclamation of astonishment" after the kraal was filled. Had he not done so their arrival would have gone on indefinitely. Naiteru-kop (Neiterkob, Naiterogob) seems to be regarded as a kind of Demiurgus, but in some accounts he is the first man, or even (as related to Capt. Merker) the first woman. This writer maintains that the Dorobo are really Masai who have lost their cattle and been forced to take to hunting, an occupation almost as greatly despised as agriculture and the smith's craft. They belong to all three branches of the Masai nation (it appears that there were three waves of immigration: the Asa, the Kwavi, and the Masai proper), but some of them have an admixture of Tatoga and other blood. Their language is archaic Masai, adulterated with Tatoga and Bantu elements.

With regard to the smiths, the information obtained by Mr. Hollis amounts to little more than the following:—

"All Masai do not know how to make spears and swords; this is the work of the smiths. It is they who make the weapons, and the others purchase from them..... Every clan has its smiths; but there is one clan, the Kipuyoni, to which most men of this class belong. The other Masai do not marry the daughters of the smiths, for it is not considered correct. The smiths marry amongst themselves. If a Masai takes in his hand a spear or sword or other thing which a smith has held, he first of all oils his hand, for it is considered improper for him to take it in his bare hand. The smiths are not rich in cattle, like other Masai. They have no luck with cattle. If you find one possessing forty head, it is a very large number. The smiths have their own language, which, although a corruption of the Masai, is not understood by the ordinary Masai. Not all of them can speak this language; it is only a certain number of them who know it."

This, so far as it goes, does not necessarily imply that the smiths are not merely separate (and perhaps dreaded as conversant with occult arts), but also despised and abhorred as unclean. Yet that such is the case is emphatically asserted by Capt. Merker

(pp. 110-11), who further adds, on the authority of the Masai themselves, that they are accursed because their trade—the making of weapons—is a direct contravention of the Divine command against bloodshed, while their ill-luck with cattle is a constantly repeated manifestation of the Divine displeasure. Considering the light in which the warrior's occupation is looked upon by the Masai at large, we cannot help thinking this somewhat far-fetched, and wishing that Capt. Merker had followed the same plan as Mr. Hollis, and quoted the exact words of his native informants with a literal translation.

It is impossible to do justice in the course of an ordinary notice to this exceedingly interesting book, which is, moreover, absolutely free from padding of the ordinary kind. The stories will at once attract every student of folk-lore. They nearly all contain elements frequently to be found in the tales of Bantu Africa, but usually in novel combinations or a fresh setting. Thus we have the hare outwitting the elephant, and getting the foolish hyena into trouble; the transformed crow who married a woman; and the "devil" who, his thumb and little finger being cut off, restored to life the people and animals he had eaten. The enigmas and proverbs are also worth note, and the numerous photographs will help to give definiteness to the reader's notions of a curious and interesting people.

Memoirs of a Royal Chaplain, 1729-1763: the Correspondence of Edmund Pyle, D.D., Chaplain in Ordinary to George II., with Samuel Kerrich, D.D. Annotated and edited by Albert Hartshorne. (Lane.)

We learn from Mr. Hartshorne's preface that the family papers from which he has quarried the Chaplain's memoirs form a collection of seven thousand letters, filling twenty-eight folio volumes. They came to him through his mother, who was a Kerrich and descendant of pluralist Pyle's pluralist correspondent, the Vicar of Dersingham and Rector of Wolferton and West Newton, Norfolk. Certainly they could not have fallen into better hands. The editing of them has evidently been a labour of love, and the only question which suggests itself is how soon we are to have more of the collection printed. The present work is made up only of the Pyle papers, with occasional extracts from other letters to Dr. Samuel Kerrich, of whom as well as of his friend the chaplain the editor has drawn up a memoir. Kerrich's son Thomas's correspondence is, we are told, "replete with artistic and antiquarian information" (he left two volumes of letters from Francis Douce); and an earlier batch of letters includes many addressed to John Postlethwayt, Chief Master (High Master?) of St. Paul's School, who numbered among his friends John Evelyn, and among his pupils Addison's intimate, John Wallis. Meanwhile we must be grateful for what we have got. Pyle's father was a friend of Bishop Hoadly, and he himself was proud to call that able controversialist his patron. "My Lord of Winchester" took him to live with him in the capacity of "Friend and Companion" in his house at Chelsea (then, as the editor reminds us, separated from Westminster by fields), and obtained for him a royal chaplaincy and a prebendal stall in his own cathedral. This last piece of preferment did not come till late in life; but with the chaplaincy were held livings in Norfolk and Lincolnshire, and some years later their holder became also Archdeacon of York. He judiciously declined the Mastership of St. Cross, which went to his "Patron's" son, and seems, on the whole, to have thought he had done well for himself, though he still from time to time cherished hopes of further recompense for his "eighteen years' service at Court." He gives Kerrich in 1756 his "scheme of abode, if I outlive my patron." It runs:—

"May, June, July, August, at York and my livings [a fairly liberal allowance for the last in those days]; thence to the end of January at Winton, the other 3 months in London."

Pyle's life at Chelsea, as recounted to the Vicar of Dersingham three years earlier, does not appear to have been exacting:—

"My life passes here in a most delightful manner both within doors and without; for riding in the King's Road is exceedingly pleasant, and so is Hyde Park, on account of the company one sees, as well as the goodness of the country. I go little to London, though now the time of my waiting comes on I shall be there daily till the middle of May [it was then March 27th] I shall match you then for sauntering and not reading, which last—God forgive me!—I do very little of here, notwithstanding the temptation of a fine library. When Mrs. Hoadly has not ladies with her (which is very seldom) the Bishop makes me read to him in an evening Burnet's History—or some such book; his observations upon which are worth more than my pains. He is going to put forth a volume or two of Sermons, which will go through my hands, before and after they have been at the press. I believe Mr. Knapton must pay well for the copy, for 'tis certain they will sell fast enough. And I believe also that the money will be given in charity to some grandchildren of Bishop Burnet, who, by the death of the judge, their uncle, are left in distress. But this is what I am not sure of—nor must be quoted for, if I was sure."

The last sentence is characteristic. Contact with courtiers had taught the clerical gossip caution, and he often repeats similar admonitions. By the by, Mr. Hartshorne in his annotations on this letter relating to the episcopal historian of his own time is for once at fault. Burnet may have been "the ablest prelate of his day," but he was certainly not "a consistent high churchman, both in politics and doctrine." The other notes to the same letter are, however, models of what such things should be.

Prebendary Pyle's letters do not, as a rule, breathe a deeply religious spirit. The atmosphere was charged rather with restless calculations of the chances of promotion than with anything approaching the devotional. The Bangorian bishop's pupil comes out in such things as his satisfaction at "my Lord of London's comparison of popish absolution to a dram," with the addition that he had himself always considered it "as the very humpty dumpty of divinity." His definition of an archdeacon as "a joint (almost the last) in the tail of the body ecclesiastico-political" has humour, and is less open to objection on other grounds. The nearest approach to unction is his account of the impression produced upon his mind by the sight of the Hessian camp near Winchester:—

"The discipline as well as the structure of it is delightful. Of 8,000 men living surrounded by fields of corn, not a man has dared to step over a hedge or pluck an ear. Their evening's devotion, which is by singing and prayer, in a vast circle (I should have said two circles, one of Lutherans, the other of Calvinists), is decent and edifying to the last degree. Woe to the man that is without a book or behaves remissly. The Psalm is reared by a sergeant of grenadiers, a stately fellow, with a vast pair of whiskers, and part is born [sic] in it, from the general to the lowest private man. One of the general officers (Fustemberg) who is a papist never fails to attend. It is not to be thought how far the minister's voice is heard in his praying, yet he does not strain."

The Prebendary goes on to say that the example had produced a "very slovenly" imitation in the English camp near Blandford, and adds: "You can scarcely imagine how much the officers and poor soldiers of Hesse are cheated by the good subjects of Great Britain," who had called them in to repel the threatened French invasion.

The staple subject of the correspondence is, as we have said, the struggle for the loaves and fishes of the Establishment. Here is a typical specimen:—

"My Lord of London has left this dirty planet since you wrote.....who will succeed bishop Sherlock, of the two candidates, Rochester or Norwich, is a point I think not yet settled. The latter is beyond all doubt the fittest person for that see. But he has great opponents. Yet I hope he'll carry it. The Duke of Newcastle is against him tooth and nail. The Archbishop of Canterbury is against him certainly, tho' not professedly—because a bishop of London is (as such) so often concerned with any Ministry and has so many opportunities of ingratiating himself with those at the helm, that if he is a man of address and parts, and understands business, he'll quickly make a cypher of an Archbishop of Canterbury. This Gibson did by Wake, and he knew that Sherlock would have done the same by him, and therefore ever (in Sir R. Walpole's and Queen Caroline's time) laboured against his promotion to the primacy. The same two persons are strenuous to serve the bishop of Rochester. Newcastle wants Rochester and the Deanery of Westminster for his favourite Young, bishop of Bristol. My lord of Canterbury wants a quiet hum-drum man who cannot make himself a competitor with him for power and influence. And besides these Lord Bath (who, I'm sorry to say it, goes up the backstairs at St. James's when he pleases) will leave no stone unturned to serve his old friend Scarse. And on the other side Hayter has a good assistant in that wicked fellow Lord Talbot. These are the hinges upon which the affairs—the spiritual affairs—of this world turn. God be praised! I have nothing to do with 'em."

It is satisfactory to know that the better man won ("by Lord Talbot's influence with Lord Bute and the P. Dowager"), though Bishop Hayter did not live long to enjoy his succession to Hoadly's old antagonist.

Pyle gives Kerrich several anecdotes of the eccentric Bishop Mawson, some of them not over choice. We hear much, also, of his predecessor in the see of Ely, Sir Thomas Gooch, who was also Master of Caius. He was a fair type of the eighteenth-century bishop, and took good care of his relations; but he wore his own hair instead of a wig.

On the whole, the Church dignitaries of the day do not gain by familiarity, and there can be little doubt that King George II. had some justification for telling Archbishop Potter that he was "a Man of a little dirty Heart."

We must find room for one more excerpt from the lively chaplain. He passes on to the Vicar of Dersingham a story told by a Winchester colleague of a "little Bishop.....reading a First Lesson in a hot summer afternoon about the gods of Hamath and of Arpad—the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena and Ivah—as if it had been the very pith and marrow of all holy writ—and his father, old Lynch, a snoring, to a degree that diverted the reader from the Lesson, to that object—with a 'Good Luck! it is my cousin Lynch.'"

Mr. Hartshorne, in commenting on this, aptly recalls how South, preaching before Charles II., had to call out to rouse the Earl of Lauderdale, who, he said, "snored so loudly he would wake the king." The editor's notes are almost too abundant for enjoyment, but constitute a mine of information not infrequently brightened by dry humour. Thus, in expressing a preference for even the "sordid eighteenth-century apathy" with regard to architectural matters rather than the ignorance of nineteenth-century "restorers," he falls thus sharply upon the latter:—

"All know the sorry picture of the climax, with the gaping congregations glammed by the shiny tiles, the pitch-pine seats, the gaudy organ, and the lawn sleeves, rejoicing, in their simplicity, that all things are become new!"

Of the few slips we have noticed we need only mention that Compton, the suspended Bishop of London, was not one of the seven bishops, and that Wrington, Hannah More's village, is not in the Vale of Cheddar. For the rest, Mr. Hartshorne does not seem altogether fair to the first Marquis Townshend (whose life, published a few years ago by a descendant, he does not appear to have seen); and his note on Francis and "Junius" will scarcely be found adequate by readers of The Athenæum. But these slight blemishes detract little from the value of a book which is tastefully illustrated and carefully edited. East Anglians, in particular, will find it a storehouse of interesting family history.

---

Byways in the Classics, including 'Alia.' By Hugh E. P. Platt. (Oxford, Blackwell; London, Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

WE have here a collection of proverbs with parallels and various jottings on the classics, some of which, being mere notes on single passages or idioms, seem a little trivial for inclusion in a book. But Mr. Platt's divagations are very pleasant to a scholar, or, indeed, to any one who cares for Latin. Of great interest are the thirty-six pages on 'Some Modern Applications of the Classics,' in which he presents many English passages introducing classical quotations, a form of allusion which now possesses the charm of an old-world art. Parliament offers, perhaps, the best-remembered applications of Virgil and Horace. Such are rare nowadays, and the last we remember (from Sir William Harcourt, was it not?) was printed the next day in so odd a form—it was "solvuntur tabula rasa" in one great newspaper which has scholars on its staff—as to be hardly recognizable. Learned legislators may well shrink from the perils of a press which mangles their efforts or omits them.

He speaks Latin,
And that would daunt the devil, was all very well in Beaumont and Fletcher's day; but now it only daunts reporters, and almost carries with it an implication of inefficiency, of tampering with useless studies not fondled by sociologists like Mr. Carnegie or Mr. H. G. Wells, or those self-appointed and popular quasi-experts on all questions, the novelists of the present day. In the fifties it was different. We take up at random a popular and sensational novel concerning the sad, wild hero of those days, and find in it Homer and Æschylus both quoted in the original, the former three times, not to speak of Horace and Virgil, and numerous allusions to classical mythology. Ouida, too, in earlier days, ventured into Latin. 'Strathmore' held a worldling whose motto was "not pro Deo, but pro ego," and in 'Tricotrion' was a gentleman who "interpolated with Aristotelian terseness" a sentence that has floored our powers of translation for ten years or so: "Qui respiciunt ad pauca di facili pronuntiant."

This terseness, at any rate, is a sound point in the classics, and an age which is in a hurry might reconsider the advantage of saying so much in so few words. Take "Neque semper arcum," for instance. Who or what could convey all that these three words do to the initiated with such admirable brevity and point? It is to be feared that the favourite way of saying things neatly nowadays is minor verse, which calls forth a responsive chord in a very limited circle.

Mr. Platt deals largely with Parliament in his 'Modern Applications' above mentioned. He quotes Fox's rule for such occasions: "No Greek; as much Latin as you like; no French; no English poet who has not completed his century." Greek is excluded as not easily apprehended. Something like a debauch of Greek lament is quoted from the end of Beaconsfield's 'Life of Lord George Bentinck,' but a much more interesting passage is the following, which our note-book records as from a speech by that statesman at Glasgow University, November 19th, 1872:—

"A fine writer of antiquity, perhaps the finest, has recorded in a passage his belief in Divine providence, and in the necessity of universal toleration:—

Ἐγὼ μὲν οὖν καὶ τὰ πάντα καὶ τὰ πάντα ἀεὶ
Φάσκοιμι' ἂν ἀνθρώποισι μηχανᾶν θεός·
Ὅτι μὴ τὰ δὲ ἐστὶν ἐν γνώμῃ φίλα,
Καὶνός τ' ἐκείνα στεργέτω, καὶ γὰρ τὰδε.

These lines were written more than two thousand years ago, by the most Attic of Athenian poets. In the perplexities of life I have sometimes found them a solace and a satisfaction; and I now deliver them to you, to guide your consciences and to guard your lives."

The lines are, in fact, of special interest as showing the spirit of religious toleration which is sometimes wildly stated to be a Christian invention. Disraeli knew the dignity of Latin when he paraphrased out of Tacitus his "Imperium et Libertas," but the frigid jest of Robert Lowe "ex luce lucellum" did not avail to bolster up his tax on matches, or lucifers, as they were then styled.

Mr. Platt hazards the opinion that quotations in the House of Commons will be confined in future to the Bible and Shakspeare. There is a third source of quotation which ought to be coupled with these—Dickens. As a matter of fact, he is more quoted by public speakers than either, possibly because he supplies humour ready made, or because he is much better known to the average Englishman than either the Bible or Shakspeare. Most men of letters love the Vulgate, which is, as a famous scholar said, not dog Latin, but lion Latin. Somebody might do for Horace and Virgil what Mr. R. E. Prothero has done for the Psalms, and make a book of the occasions on which they have supplied consolation or encouragement. Thus "Fortuna læto sæva negotio," &c., mentioned in a famous speech by Pitt (p. 64), was also a favourite sentiment with Thackeray, and dramatically repeated before Frederick the Great at Leipsic in 1757, at a time when it was most suitable to his temper and fortunes. As to "Nonumque prematur in annum," it is noted that "Cowper.....thinks one year is enough." We allow ourselves to recall a longer comment by Heine which is amusing. It is from his 'Ideen,' chap. xiv.:—

"When Horace gave the author his celebrated rule to let his work lie in his desk nine years, he should at the same time have given him the recipe for getting through nine years without eating. When Horace evolved this rule, he was sitting, perhaps, at the table of Mæcenæ, and eating roast turkey with truffles, pheasant puddings with venison sauce, ribs of larks with braised turnips, peacocks' tongues, Indian birds' nests, and the Lord knows what else—all gratis. But we, the unlucky later generation, live in different times. Our Mæcenæses have altogether different principles; they believe that authors and medlars do best when they have lain some time on straw."

We have mentioned first what is probably the most popular application of the classics, if any can be so called, but the preceding classical proverbs with modern equivalents and variants in English and occasionally French in 'Alia' are also very good reading. We may note that Tacitus can be widely paralleled in French, where his terse wit has found its happiest imitators. Many of Mr. Platt's examples will be familiar to the lover of such things, but he has found much that is modern in a little-read author, Petronius, and floored some modern slang by the aid of Lucian, Plautus, and Terence. Pleasant are the occasional reminiscences of English scholars, such as Sir Robert Peel, who, being set on at "Suave mari magno" "in Viva Voce for Greats, began in true parliamentary style, 'It is a source of melancholy satisfaction.'" Did not Cyril Jackson, another famous Oxford scholar, render Trōés ῥα, in Homer, "The Trojans, God bless 'em!"? To "Cherchez la femme" one might add Juvenal vi. 242. A nearer Latin equivalent to "shutting the stable-door, etc.," is "Maxima pars pecore amisso præsepia claudit," in the 'Zodiacus Vitæ' of Manzoni. Of course, such commonplaces appear in many languages. Against a remark by Mrs. Gamp we have written passages due to Simonides and Seneca of similar import.

'Some Mottoes,' which follow, include pretty things, like

Miscueruntque herbas et non innoxia verba for golf, communicated by Mr. A. D. Thorburn, and for spring cleaning, the excellent

Et si nullus erit pulvis, tamen excute nullum, due to Mr. S. P. Platt. Many similar specimens could be gathered from The Cambridge Review, which has allowed itself such learned levity for many years on the festival of St. Valentine; but wit of the sort, like some of Mr. Platt's Oxford lore, is too local to appeal to a large audience. The jest, moreover, which rises to a special occasion, seldom keeps its aroma. We remember a friend saying when Madame Albani had been announced to appear at a concert and did not: "At tu dictis, Albane, maneres." For an editor who "restores" the text of a classic "Improbe facit qui in alieno libro ingeniosus est" (Martian) is neatly quoted by Mr. Platt. Amazed at the confidence of such innovators, we have been impelled to quote the Æschylean maxim, τὸ γὰρ τοπαῖζειν τοῦ σαφ' εἰδέναι δόξα.

The adversaria on various passages which abound in the volume are all interesting, but we have not space to consider them in detail, though they lead up to many delightful, if secluded paths. Principles of rhythm in English and Latin prose, and euphony in English and Latin verse, are mentioned, and both subjects would repay investigation, for we know no thorough treatment of them. Tennyson, we may note, was proud of his successful endeavours to reduce the hissing s in his poems, or, as he said, "to cast out the geese," which Mr. Platt notes in Ἐρωσά σ', ὡς ἴσασιν Ἕλληρῶν ὄσοι, Eur. 'Med.', 463. We find suggestive little skeleton essays on the right of kissing in the Roman world, Roman poets as lovers, and Roman comedy, with special reference to the licence of the stage. The possible prototype of Uncle Toby's famous oath in 'Tristram Shandy' (p. 115) has nothing to do with the ancient classics, but there is generally a thread of connexion by which interesting English passages or translations are brought in. Mr. Platt is occasionally too brief to state a case fairly, and a larger range of quotation or argument is needed. We are amused by the unfair paraphrase of "Nemo repente fuit turpissimus," "it takes five years to make a solicitor." Scholars have, it is said, a lively way of correcting the errors of other scholars (p. 123); in fact, are pronounced ruder than lawyers on such occasions. In modern days there is no harvest of mistakes such as old philologists used to reap. Bentley, if he were alive, could hardly find an Arch-Blunderer again. Macaulay was kind enough to make a conjecture which saved Chatham from inaccuracy in his Latin lines on the Cæsar "who loved nothing but punch and fat women." Here, however, is an instance of severe castigation. Bernardakis, in the introduction to the Teubner Plutarch, 'Moralia,' vol. ii., retorts thus on a famous scholar who had criticized him severely:—

"En optativus προσπίπτει ab Ud. Wilamowitzio inventus. Ὁ Ζεὺς καὶ θεοί! Quis cum hoc sermonis Græci testimonium, quod litterarum Græcarum professor publice omnibus coram dedit et quod certissime neque ulli librario debetur neque typothetæ, sed ipsi viro clarissimo, legerit, mihi non concesserit statum Udalicum de Wilamowitz-Moellendorf illotis manibus scriptores Græcos attricare?"

Mr. Platt strikes us as original as well as ingenious, and so we rather wonder that he should think it worth while to reproduce hints on Latin prose from Potts, whose work is known to most classical scholars, and some elementary remarks concerning English and Latin phrasing.

However, we have got so much pleasure out of his collection that we do not mind some "crambe repetita." But we have the right, we think, to censure Mr. Platt for a want of practical sense which reduces the value of his diverting book. He calls his admirable injunction at the end, to "read the classics rather than books about the classics," his "last crime." But there is a later, and heinous crime of omission: he has actually given us no index, though most of his quips, quotations, and obiter dicta are not numbered in any way, and the table of contents is meagre. If, as we hope, another edition is called for, he should preserve classical traditions by repairing this odd deficiency. And, if we had our way, we should add a little bibliography of articles and books bearing on the subject, such as Bishop Welldon's paper mentioned in the introduction, without place or date (The Nineteenth Century, April). Some of the books are out of print in an illiterate age, others are comprehensive but curious. One renders, for example, "Fallentis semita vitæ," "The pathway of my decaying years." The translation should not be taken on trust by modern quoters of Latin who have not time to investigate the meaning of the words, for the original conveys a sentiment out of date and repute.

NEW NOVELS.

The Flute of Pan. By John Oliver Hobbes. (Fisher Unwin.)

THE conversion of a play into a novel has been tried many times, but we do not remember that the experiment has ever been an unqualified success. Perhaps the best-known instance is 'Peg Woffington.' And recently Mr. and Mrs. Egerton Castle made a story of 'The Secret Orchard,' which had already been seen on the stage. The fact is that the unities which are observed by drama are out of place in fiction, and, rendered in it, give an air of unreality, of constriction, of unnecessary artifice. The author declares that she was so greatly pleased by a story relating to an hereditary princess that she made it into both a comedy and a romance. "There are things," she says in her introduction,

"in the romance which are omitted from the comedy, and there are things in the comedy which are omitted from the romance, and each must be regarded as a work quite independent of the other."

We hardly think this claim can be made. The tale has been dressed up in two ways, but the features of the stage comedy are conspicuous in the romance. For one thing, the comedy is built on a misunderstanding that would hold nowhere except on the stage. For another the characters bear the hallmarks of the stage. It is, indeed, impossible to criticize 'The Flute of Pan' away from the footlights. Its plot is thin, and it may be styled a comedy of intrigue. But it is very readable, and bright and pleasant.

The Golden Hope: a Story of the Time of Alexander the Great. By Robert H. Fuller. (New York, the Macmillan Company.)

'THE GOLDEN HOPE' is well and carefully written, and a good deal of conscientious study has evidently gone to the making of it, while at the same time it avoids several of the faults common to novels of its class, such as the obtrusive display of technical knowledge and the introduction of irritating archaisms. Yet in a work of fiction these are more or less negative merits, and we are bound to add that it is by no means so strong in the more essential qualities of romance. The characters are conventional, the plot is laboured, and an air of unreality hangs about the whole. The plan of the book reminds one somewhat of 'The Three Musketeers.' A trio of friends—an Athenian, a Theban, and a Spartan—share a multitude of dangers and adventures while they track an abducted maiden and accompany Alexander on his march against the Persians, taking part by the way in the battles of the Granicus and the Issus, and aiding at the siege of Tyre. The incident is piled up mountain high. Plots and counter-plots, battle, murder, and sudden death succeed each other so rapidly that the reader finally grows weary and bewildered, the more so as many of the scenes strain his credulity to the utmost. A greater moderation, both in the quantity and the quality of hairbreadth 'scapes, would have benefited the novel, which, as a matter of fact, is at its best in its more sober passages. Several of the scenes in which the writer follows historical authority, and does not do violence to his imagination, are distinctly successful, and go far to redeem the exaggerations of the rest.

The Silence of Mrs. Harrold. By Samuel M. Gardenhire. (Harper & Brothers.)

MRS. VIOLET MAY, an attractive young widow, consents to marry Mr. John Harrold, a New York lawyer, on condition that he never asks any questions as to her past. After faithfully observing the condition for several years, he is tortured by whispers against his wife's fair name, and presses upon her the inquiries he swore he would never make. Her only reply is to accuse him of being false to the pledge that was the basis of their union. Husband and wife part, to be reunited in the closing chapter, in which Mrs. Harrold's silence is satisfactorily explained by one of those benevolent bachelors who exist—in fiction and in drama—to heal the differences of married folk. Many other characters figure in the forty-three chapters to which the story runs. More than one millionaire moves through these pages, speaking the language of Wall Street. A New York actor, of the stage stagey, maintains a melodramatic pose through the greater part of the book. All the characters, as if to make up for the silence of Mrs. Harrold, talk at prodigious length, and even Mrs. Harrold is very rhetorical on every subject except her past. That Mr. Gardenhire is not wanting in power is proved by the scene in which husband and wife part. What he chiefly lacks is restraint. Had it been half as long, 'The Silence of Mrs. Harrold' might have been twice as good.

A Prince of Lovers. By Sir William Magnay. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

SIR WILLIAM MAGNAY wafts us away to the realms of pure romance, where the hard facts of a prosaic century are forgotten in the Hercynian Forest of two hundred years ago. The princess is loveliest of the lovely, the villains craftiest of the crafty; gallant deeds are done and gallant words are spoken, and the whole flows smoothly on to a happy conclusion, leaving the reader under a debt of gratitude for a pleasing entertainment. All our old friends of the small German principality are here, but Sir William Magnay invests them all with so much freshness and charm that one is glad to renew the acquaintance.

The Adventures of an Equerry. By Morice Gerard. (Cassell & Co.)

THOSE readers who are fond of meeting in the pages of a novel the famous men and women of other days have ample reason to be grateful to the writer. His canvas is crowded. Among the chief figures in 'The Adventures of an Equerry' are Charles II., Lady Castlemaine, James II., the Duke of Montrose, Lady Wentworth, William of Orange, Lord Rochester, the Duke of Marlborough, and Sarah Jennings. The story opens with an attack on a coach on the Oxford road, from which Francis Lesterne, a young country gentleman, rescues Lady Castlemaine, who immediately sends him with an important message to Col. Churchill. With two faithful serving men—most heroes have to be satisfied with one such prodigy of fidelity and strength—Lesterne follows the famous soldier, whose equerry he becomes, through perilous campaigns in France, exciting adventures in Holland, and dangerous intrigues at Whitehall. Some of the incidents have no relation to the main thread of the story, but that is a defect not uncommon in tales of adventure. The narrative, if episodic, is brisk, and the characters, if conventional, are carefully drawn. The Duke of Marlborough—with whose marriage to Sarah Jennings the story ends—is a particularly good piece of portraiture. One strange omission the author has been guilty of—strange, that is, in such a story: he has omitted to provide a heroine.

A Woman and her Talent. By Louise J. Miln. (Blackwood & Sons.)

Books of so half-baked a kind appear that they stir in one a sense of sheer surprise, almost of dismay. These "poor brave things" of fiction are pitifully unready to face the fierce light that beats on publicity, but their makers and publishers (even the better sort of these) have apparently no qualms over their ventures. The present story is of this disconcerting kind. The spelling even is not corrected. Perhaps it was not worth while to put it right, since absurdities of thought, construction, and expression are also numerous. An added strangeness is that the story is not only American, but also written in Americanese of an esoteric sort not easily understood. Here and there we detect a glimmering kind of talent.

The Middle Wall. By Edward Marshall. (Hutchinson & Co.)

WE had great hopes that this story was going to give us a nautical 'David Harum,' which would have been worth reading; but the sea-captain grows rather wearisome, his humour becomes forced and thin, and as we have no fancy for a pseudo-Irish heroine who is always saying "Faith!" and indulges in a great deal of kissing, or the somewhat farcical barrister-villain, we found the story tedious and commonplace, though wholly inoffensive.

The King's Friend. By Dugald Ferguson. (Paisley, Gardner.)

IN the present case eccentricities of style are so numerous as to spoil one's pleasure in reading the book, which is a conscientious and occasionally successful attempt to found a novel of the historical sort on the works of Blind Harry, Wyntoun, and Barbour. Had the writer concentrated his efforts either on Wallace or Bruce, instead of raking together a heap of incidents, legendary or otherwise, derived from the whole course of the War of Independence, his task would have been easier. As it is, he makes his hero, Archibald Sinclair, bear a charmed life of consistent patriotism from the outset of Wallace's career to the death of David II. The character is somewhat too modern for probability, therein resembling some of Scott's examples of enlightened partisans. There is a characteristic touch of modern Scotland in making the fourteenth-century warrior acquire his education from a priest whose views of the rites of the Church were "of a considerable [sic] enlightened character." Again, we feel at home when we find that at the secret meeting between Wallace and Bruce "spirits were produced, of which, however, all partook sparingly." Sinclair, at any rate, is a fine fellow and a man of his hands, and his fund of moral admonition may be forgiven him. The battle pieces are much better than the rest of the narrative, and we have many glimpses of the heroes we first loved in the 'Tales of a Grandfather,' though some figures, of course, are not historical. The printing is badly done.

Avant l'Heure. By Louise Cruppi. (Paris, Ollendorff.)

'AVANT L'HEURE' is a powerful description of the life of a French musician of the modern school, for whom France provides, according to the author, no real public.

He dies at the moment when the desperate efforts of his wife have succeeded in making him fashionable, if not really appreciated except in Germany. The horrible tragedy is told with extraordinary power; but we have never come across a more gloomy book. The lives of Berlioz and of Bizet have here and there been in the writer's mind; but there was no such tragedy in either, and we do not know that this story of despair can be said to be founded upon any actual case among Frenchmen of true musical genius.

RUSSIA AND THE TSAR.

MR. FISHER UNWIN publishes Russia under the Great Shadow, by Luigi Villari, we believe a correspondent of The Times. The book is so good that we find little to say about it. The author describes the hackneyed round in Russia, and visits and photographs all the places to which all British tourists go. But his observation is accurate and his teaching sound, and his book is valuable, both to read here and also as a companion for the usual Russian tour. The author's judgment upon the matters which are of the most political interest at the moment gives the prevailing Russian opinion on the war as being that it is a misfortune which will last so long as may please God. With regard to the chances of revolution he rightly holds that the Emperor is still, for the peasants, a benevolent divinity "who would heal all their ills if only he knew them." But the mass is so indifferent and so sheepish that Mr. Villari thinks it possible, perhaps probable, that a constitutional revolution, neither understood nor wanted by the peasants, may be won by the action of the small minority in the towns without any action of the peasantry. He decides, however, and records the statement in his preface, that Russia will probably have to go through a long period of turmoil and unrest. An interesting subject on which our author writes concerns the Russian garrison in Central Asia and its reinforcement before the war, which has been the subject of much alarm, real or affected, in some of the Indian newspapers. Mr. Villari forms the opinion, on the whole, that the large army always stationed in Central Asia, partly to hold it, and partly to strengthen Russian diplomacy against us, may have been added to before and during the war "from the fear of a native rising" provoked by rumours about Japan. The only point upon which we find Mr. Villari inclined to go wrong concerns the defects of the Eastern Church. In one passage he calls its Orthodox or Russian branch "the Greek faith," an expression which we are sure that on reflection he will feel to be improper, though unfortunately common in the literature of the Western countries. Mr. Villari gives a very long description of superstitious observances connected with the dry bodies of mediæval saints; but these are as common in the Western as in the Eastern Church. The very practices which he describes as existing at Kiev, and which the writer of the present notice has seen there for himself, are to be met with at Assisi, in connexion with St. Clare, and throughout large parts of Italy and Spain. It is a pity that Mr. Villari, who writes so judiciously on Russia, should go out of his way to make a somewhat crude attack upon "British pro-Boers," ascribing to that unpopular and possibly mistaken party sentiments which men like Mr. Lloyd George and others whom Mr. Villari has in view would be the first to repudiate with indignation.

The tone of exaggeration which pervades Mr. "Carl Joubert's" The Fall of Tsardom (Nash) tends to disguise those of the observations and reflections of the author which might otherwise have been thought of value. Our own view of the probable future of Russia is indeed different from that of Mr. Joubert, but we may admit that the public of most countries outside Russia agrees with him, and not with us. He thinks that "constitutional reform" is possible, if not probable, in Russia. We continue to doubt whether the peasantry who form the overwhelming mass of the Russian population wish for anything in the least resembling a parliamentary, or, as they would say, "European" constitutional system. In our belief, however dissatisfied Russian public opinion may be with the present Emperor, and even with the Imperial family and the officials, dissatisfaction does not lead it to reject the principle of autocracy, or, as Mr. Joubert would call it, "Tsardom." In his present volume he writes in the name of the Russian revolutionary party. The "we" in the sentence of the preface, "We seek liberty for the Russian people," is followed in the body of the book by a long account of the present action of "the executive committee." We do not believe the statement that such a committee are at the present moment

"devoting their energies to buying and storing the munitions of war; to preparing reliable maps for their generals and officers; to the accumulation of stores for the army which is waiting their call to take the field."

We again observe in the present volume of our author a curious want of attention to earlier aspects of the revolutionary movement in Russia, and we are startled at his statement:—

"A little more than a year ago no man in England, America, France, or Germany would have lent his ear for a moment to the reports of corruption, oppression and infamy which are the characteristics of Tsardom."

It is, on the contrary, difficult to find any moment since the Crimean war when there has not been the same knowledge abroad of corruption and of oppression in Russia as exists now. Books without number, and books much read, have related the adventures of prisoners arrested without trial, the story of their internment in distant portions of the empire, and of their escapes; and there is a whole library of volumes on the Russian prison system, in which there appear, incidentally, complete accounts of the Russian revolutionary movement since 1869. Another passage which fills us with wonder is that which informs us that after the term "Nihilism" was used by Bazaroff in 'Fathers and Sons,' "the appellation was bitterly resented." On the contrary, about 1870 the term was proudly used by great numbers of the "little nobility," who at that time throw themselves into the revolutionary movement. Yet at a later page Mr. Joubert shows that he has heard of the history of that period, and he gives indeed a view of it which, though in contradiction with much else that he has written, is powerful and accurate. In another chapter again he relates the appearance of the facts "in fiction only," but tells a story, and tells it well, which, even if it be fiction—and it may be true—illustrates the very history which in other parts of his book Mr. Joubert seems to question. Mr. Joubert's account of the present Emperor proceeds on the basis that "in his ridiculous vanity he really believes in his semi-divine personality." Of Alexander III. he thinks still worse, but overshoots the mark when he styles that emperor "a rullian." It may be remembered that in our notice of a previous volume from his pen we had to criticize with severity expressions far less defensible, when applied to the same emperor, and to his widow, the sister of our Queen. Mr. Joubert appears to regret the smoothing-over of the Dogger Bank incident by our Government, and also doubts, with regard to Japan, if "we are doing our duty by our ally." When we come to a chapter on Japan we are surprised by the statement that "the Japanese lady compresses her feet."

TRANSLATIONS.

WE welcome the appearance of an admirable translation by Miss Constance Archibald of the well-known work of Prof. Fuchs on the fiscal question. Mr. Parker Smith, M.P., who is thought to have succeeded the late Mr. Powell Williams as the principal adviser of Mr. Chamberlain in his campaign, and who, like Mr. Law, the Secretary of the Board of Trade, possesses a scientific knowledge of foreign protectionist writings to which Mr. Powell Williams did not pretend, contributes a preface of much interest. The Trade Policy of Great Britain and her Colonies since 1860, which is published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., will no doubt figure largely in the controversies of the next few months. The drawback to the book, which is not concealed by the author, who has written a new preface, nor by Mr. Parker Smith, is that the original was published in 1893, and that the figures are out of date. We should have thought—but feel that Prof. Fuchs and Mr. Parker Smith are more fit to judge—that it would have been better either to put in the newest figures or to suppress the figures altogether, and refer to the places where the new ones can be found. The fact of the argument being illustrated by, and in some cases based upon, figures which are out of date, plays into the hands of those who will turn the book against its friends, and detracts from the chance of the volume receiving the impartial scientific treatment which it deserves.

It is pleasant to find that, although the book is published in this country at this moment for use in a hot fight, there is no trace of any unfairness in the treatment of its theme. We wish that we could think that such impartiality will attend the use that may be made of it on either side, and the parliamentary or platform contests to which it may give rise. Mr. Parker Smith, analyzing the volume in his preface, states its doctrine on colonial preference as admitting that the stumbling-block to the British people is "that this system is decidedly protective, not from the point of view of Great Britain, but from that of the Empire.....The chief difficulty is a practical one, that it threatens wool and wheat, the chief raw material and foodstuff of the British people, with a rise in price."

In the text, colonial preference is traced from Mr. Hofmeyr's scheme to Lord Dunraven, who brought the matter before the House of Lords, February 12th, 1891,

"adding, however, a third item—retaliatory duties against foreign protective States. Lord Salisbury's answer, though graciously worded, was a decided rejection of the proposal.....he pointed out the insuperable difficulties which, in his opinion, stood in the way of such a conference."

The motion brought forward February 17th, 1891, by Sir Howard Vincent, supported by the late Mr. James Lowther, and opposed on behalf of the Conservative Government by the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, is next described. When Prof. Fuchs comes to detail he examines the extent of the rise of price in wheat which would be caused by preference, and discusses the possibility of doing without a duty upon wool. He states incidentally that by far the greater part of the wool consumed by us is supplied from within the Empire. Prof. Fuchs, however, does not point out that we import nearly twice as much wool as we use, and deal largely in mixed wools; and that not only the raw material for home use, but also the whole of the wool imported, has to be considered. He admits that

"the colonies.....would have to go.....far in their concessions.....There is no doubt that the colonies would have, under this scheme, the larger and more immediate economic advantages; the mother country, in return, would even have to make sacrifices."

Prof. Fuchs then goes into the argument, which has since been made use of by Mr. Chamberlain, as to the effect of preference on grain in the case of naval war. Light is about to be shed on this subject by the publication of the evidence taken in a recent inquiry; but we doubt whether the strategic view which underlies the argument of Prof. Fuchs and Mr. Chamberlain is tenable. It is difficult to form an opinion without considering the special cases of possible wars. We think that in any really dangerous complications in which we were involved the United States and the Argentina would be more likely than not to be friendly neutrals, and in that case we doubt whether colonial preference would be to our advantage.

In his interesting account of the various negotiations of the United Kingdom for commercial treaties, Prof. Fuchs, alluding to the concessions offered by France in 1881, thinks that the breaking-off of negotiations by the British Commission was mainly based upon the insufficiency of the French concessions as regards cotton goods. The concessions made in cotton yarns were very large indeed; and when Prof. Fuchs is made to name "cotton goods" as our "most important export to France," we believe that he includes yarns, and that the translator has used a term which technically excludes them. There was a contest over the insufficiency of the concessions on fancy cotton goods largely exported by Manchester to Algeria. But after the concessions made to the British negotiators had been given to Switzerland and to Belgium, who were negotiating "behind them," the proposed treaty, on the whole, as regards the cotton trade, formed an improvement upon the previously existing state of things. The breakdown really occurred mainly upon cutlery. But the British Government and Parliament were by no means anxious for a treaty, and the figures of our exports to France from 1883 go to show that Prof. Fuchs exaggerates the effect of the change from ad valorem into specific duties. There was a slight rise in the export of British and Irish produce and manufactures to France, although a slight drop in the export of colonial products to France, some of our colonies, on account of their own protective system, coming not, like the mother country, under the first, but under the second category of the French tariff.

Another point in which we think that Prof. Fuchs has gone wrong, though it is not essential to his argument, concerns his belief that gold-mining in Victoria has "sunk to an unimportant point." This slip illustrates the need, of which we have written above, for a revision of the figures in the volume. It may be remembered that there has been a controversy between Mr. Chamberlain and the Cobden Club as to its foreign members; and we note that Prof. Fuchs, writing, of course, long before that storm arose, was under the impression that the colonial members of the club are in some way dishonoured by being put with foreigners, "the two being characteristically placed on the same footing." As the passage follows a statement which suggests that the Cobden Club advocates the complete abandonment of the colonies, it is well, in the interests of scientific truth, to state the facts as revealed by an examination of the documents made use of in the controversy. The Cobden Club has several sorts of members, but in its lists they are mainly divided into two—those who pay, and those who receive the publications of the club without contributing to its funds. The latter are the "honorary members," and these consist not unnaturally of foreigners, inhabitants of British possessions, and Britons usually residing in foreign countries. Membership of the Cobden Club by the late W. E. Forster, and by many other of the strongest supporters of the colonial system, and even of the doctrine of Imperial federation, shows that upon this point Prof. Fuchs is mistaken, and might with propriety have been corrected. We repeat, however, that, with the exception of a few blemishes, the book is one which it was right to translate, and that the work of translation and editing has been admirably performed.

Messrs. Chatto & Windus publish Cloclo, by Gyp, translated by Nora M. Statham, a volume which reads pleasantly, and which we were much inclined to praise until we came to two or three sad lapses into French idiom. That slang should be used is well enough, inasmuch as Gyp habitually puts it into the mouths of her characters. Where, however, she is writing in her own person, she writes good French, and we suggest that on these occasions she should not be rendered by slipshod English, such as "put in, quite philosophically, ten months." But it is of idioms that we have to complain. If there are readers who require French translations of Gyp, because, we suppose, they cannot read her in the original, the need must be for English which they can understand. The context sometimes overcomes all difficulty. When we are told of the lady who "could not suffer" another, the stupidest reader can see the meaning which is intended. But "his meals served in the office" is a sentence which is not in the same position, and it must have been carelessness which caused the translator to avoid rendering "office" by "servants' hall." On the whole, however, the translation is readable and beyond the average, which unfortunately is not high.

The eleventh and penultimate volume of The Works of Heinrich Heine (Heinemann) contains 'Germany' and the first and second books of the 'Romancero,' and is translated by Margaret Armour. The fame of Heine's 'Lieder' has kept the rest of his verse somewhat in the background, which is a pity, for the 'Romancero' contains much of his finest and most brilliant work, and 'Germany' is full of good things. Miss Armour's translation, as we noted before, has many excellent qualities and some defects, the latter being, we fancy, rather more pronounced in this than in the previous volume. Chief among them is a failure to follow the original with sufficient scrupulousness. Of course considerable freedom is often necessary in verse translation, but there are certain cases in which it is forbidden, and Miss Armour sometimes sacrifices the literal rendering without adequate justification and with disastrous effects. We may illustrate what we mean by quoting a stanza from the famous poem of 'The Asra.' Heine has:—

Eines Abends trat die Fürstin
Auf ihn zu mit raschen Worten:
Deinen Namen will ich wissen,
Deine Heimat, deine Sippschaft, which is rendered thus:—

Till one eve the lovely princess
Paused and asked him on a sudden:
I would know thy name and country,
I would know thy home and kindred.

The magic is gone. The unhappy and unwarrantable introduction of the word "paused" would alone destroy the swift rush of passion, while the tame repetition in the fourth line, though doubtless difficult to avoid, and therefore more excusable, is terribly weak compared with the three breathless demands, stroke upon stroke, of the original. Apart from faults of this nature, most of the versions are fresh and spirited, and can be read with pleasure. One unfortunate mistranslation is probably due to the printer: Heine's line on the "singenden Fiammen" of Dante's hell is well known, and it is a shock to find that fine epithet rendered by "surging." Certain other inaccuracies in the case of proper names suggest that the proofs have not been read so carefully as they might have been.

Cantonese Love-Songs. Translated, with Introduction and Notes, by Cecil Clementi. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)—This book of 'Cantonese Love-Songs' is an example of the useful literary work which may be done by the officials whom Britain sends out to administer her Eastern Empire—work which may be done not only when those officials have retired, but also during the years of toil. For it is less than ten years since Mr. Clementi was a demy of Magdalen College, Oxford; and now we get, fittingly issued by the Clarendon Press, this study of a branch of Chinese literature neglected not merely by European scholars, but also, as the translator says, by the "sedate old age and high officialdom" of China itself. Despised though these love-songs have been, they are well worthy of introduction to the wider circle which is opened to them now. Concerning the poetry of the present dynasty in China as a whole, we have the verdict of Prof. H. A. Giles (in his 'History of Chinese Literature') that it is "nothing more than artificial verse, with the art not even concealed, but grossly patent to the dullest observer." Such are the poems which in their own country are considered worthy of praise and honour. These songs are very different. They are the popular songs, especially in the Kwangtung province of China and in the great city of Canton—songs not for the learned, but for the people, women as well as men. They are not, however, songs of the class which we should call "popular" in the West. Here comes in the difference of the character of the Chinese, the one people in the world which, in however mistaken a fashion, ranks learning where other nations sometimes profess to rank it. Thus, though written in simple style, the songs are full of allusions to "history, mythology, and novel literature—allusions which are not always familiar even to well-read Chinamen." The author, indeed, Chiu Tz-yung, was an official who rose to be prefect in the early part of the nineteenth century. But he composed his verses in provincial speech, and dealt with the common theme of love, so that we have herein a presentment of an aspect of Chinese life hardly known to us at all except through novels. And what European reads Chinese novels?

Mr. Clementi comes to his task with the advantages of classical scholarship, which enables him to compare Greek and Latin with Chinese lyricism; of a knowledge of Sanskrit which allows him to trace the influence of corrupted Buddhism which runs through the poems; and, of course, of acquaintance with Chinese literature and thought. The result is that his introduction is a series of short essays throwing light on the various aspects of his subject, and full of the sympathy required to interest the reader in a strange foreign production. For the production is strange. The love of these songs, it must be understood, is not honourable love, which, as the writer says, is hardly ever a theme of Chinese poetry, but the love of Willow Lane and Flower Street, in the Chinese euphemistic phrase. Yet, if we must agree that "it is a sad picture, with the pathos of an intense realism," it is redeemed by the nature-love so prominent in the Chinese and by much delicacy of thought. And there is, too, a special interest in the poetry, in its very unlikeness to any love-verse of the West. This is pointed out by the translator, who finds the nearest analogy in Hebrew love-poetry. The manner in which the translation has been done deserves high commendation. Wisely refusing to attempt a verse rendering, Mr. Clementi gives an excellent version in prose, keeping as close to the original as is possible with regard to lucidity. We may, perhaps, quarrel with him slightly for his occasional use of an unnecessarily Latin word, as in "Flowers in themselves are gay: from the moon advenes their sorrow" (p. 46). But apart from such eccentricities as these, and from the order of "to cunningly describe" on p. 20, we have no fault to find with the rendering. The explanations in the notes are of interest, though, of course, mainly to Chinese scholars, and show proof of the pains taken to make the book complete. In translating, as he does on p. 146, the word Tathāgata "one who in [? whose] coming into the world is like the coming of his predecessors," Mr. Clementi supports an interpretation of one of the most frequent epithets of the Buddha which fails to find favour with a number of Buddhist scholars; but the point is admittedly obscure. Again, in speaking in his introduction of Nirvāna as the "extinction of knowledge," Mr. Clementi is at least open to misconception. If Nirvāna is attainable during life by the Arahāt or Buddhist saint, extinction of knowledge is certainly not a primary attribute, whereas extinction of passion is. But such criticisms are no reflection on the general merits of this edition of 'Cantonese Love-Songs.'

The Chinese text, it may be added, is bound uniformly with the translation, though it may be bought separately, and is printed by Messrs. Noronha & Co., of Hongkong. It has a useful subject-index in Chinese and English.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Carthusian Memories, by Dr. William Haig Brown (Longmans), is a little volume of occasional and other verses by the late head master of Charterhouse, collected by his daughter. These verses represent some of the thoughtful hours of ease crowning days of toil, and reflect a gentle, kindly man whether in serious or more humorous moods. The general impression produced by reading many of the poems resembles that suggested by George Herbert. These pages contain no mere jingling rhymes, although they show the light touch of an accomplished versifier, the work being invariably easy and natural. Dr. Haig Brown is equally at home in English or Latin, French or Greek or German. As an example of a tour de force in Latin may be mentioned a hexameter translation of Euclid, Book I. Prop. 1. 'The Recipe for Old Age' is one of the happiest pieces in the book. The many specimens of prologues for Old Carthusian theatricals show a pen as facile as that of Dryden, and the four-foot rhyming Latin lines might have come from a skilful mediæval monk. There are five versions of a spirited 'School Song for Christ's Hospital,' in English, Latin, Greek, French, and German, and of these the Latin version goes best in usage. Of many good things we will mention only three which seem to us of outstanding merit: the first, an excellent Latin elegiac verse translation of an old English ballad, 'The Babes in the Wood'; the second, a similar version of Mr. Watson's poem on Wordsworth's grave; and the third an impressive rendering into English blank verse of a French passage from Macterlinck.

Spring in a Shropshire Abbey. By Lady C. Milnes Gaskell. (Smith, Elder & Co.)—The title is rather misleading, for the reason that there is very little about Wenlock Priory and a great deal about matters other than spring. The book is, in fact, the diary of a lady of leisure, in which she chats, pleasantly enough at times, on any subject that suggests itself to her cultivated and versatile mind.

Lady Catherine Gaskell has an easy style when at her best, and occasionally reaches a high level of thought and expression, some of the descriptions, especially when she writes of the country lanes, being of considerable force and charm. The whole book, however, is far too long, and becomes very wearisome before the end. If the writer had been content to restrict herself to one-third the space, the result would have been a notable book; but as it stands it cannot be pronounced a success. The style, though easy and pleasant as a rule, is marred by occasional lapses, probably due to carelessness, but it is hard to speak temperately of such phrases as "like there is," and the use of modern slang in unexpected places often jars on the ear.

There are few things more difficult than to write poetry in prose, especially when the poetry deals with the common things of the daily life. Perhaps this is partly due to the fact that the realm of bathos is always perilously close. Certainly Lady Catherine Gaskell trips woefully at times. What can be said of such a passage as the following, from a chapter dealing with the reveries of an invalid confined to her bed?—

"What a true joy beautiful memories are, the real jewels of the soul that no robber can steal and that no moth or rust can corrupt, the great education of sense and heart. Then I took my books and enjoyed a browse. What a good thing leisure is, leisure to read and think. Nobody interrupted me, only the chimings of the old parish church told me the hour from time to time. With measured cadence, drowsily and melodiously they sounded across the snow-bound earth. 'Time to dream, time to dream,' they seemed to say. Later on came my luncheon, cutlets with onion chips and jelly."

And this interesting picture can be filled out still further for the curious in such things, since we learn that at least two cutlets were consumed, for we are told that "Mouse (a great Dane) got the bones" (in the plural) and proceeded to "crack them on the floor," mercifully not on the bed, where the huge dog seems to have spent most of the morning.

The true artist imparts his lessons unnoticed, and there are few things more irritating for a reader than to feel he is having pills in his jam. Lady Catherine Gaskell is always slipping little pieces of garden lore or historical fact, not always above suspicion as to accuracy, into her reveries. At times this method of imparting information is exasperating; for example, when, in the midst of a soliloquy, we are recommended to apply to Messrs. Barr & Veitch for the best variety of butter beans. A fault akin to this is that of loading up a sentence with adjectives in an endeavour to convey several impressions at once. The book is well and tastefully printed, and the views of Wenlock Priory are admirable.

The British Army, 1783-1802. Lectures delivered at the Staff College and Cavalry School. By the Hon. J. W. Fortescue. (Macmillan.)—There must be a good many Englishmen—the more the better—who have read with pleasure and profit Mr. Fortescue's three volumes on the history of the British Army. He has deserved well of soldiers and civilians alike, not only for his fairness and frankness, but for his unerring appreciation of national characteristics, and his insistence upon the essential conditions of military efficiency.

The present volume is evidence that those who know trust Mr. Fortescue as one who knows. In the first two lectures a brief survey of the administration—mostly mal-administration—of our standing army during the first century of its existence is followed by a special consideration of the younger Pitt's attitude and influence in military matters. Pitt's incapacity for war is shown to be as great as his capacity for finance. Basing his hopes upon a preconception of peace—and peace was not to be his portion—he obstinately wasted good men over rash West Indian schemes, subordinated the needs of the army to the exigencies of party politics, and made havoc altogether of the militia. We are urged not to forgive him, or any Minister, “the scandalous neglect which plunges the country unprepared into war.” What that unpreparedness means we ought to know well enough, for over and over again—“invariably,” says Mr. Fortescue—we have begun campaigns under such auspices.

While Pitt is condemned for lack at once of humanity and common sense in military matters, the character of the Duke of York for efficiency and thoroughness is strongly defended. By his efforts, when he became commander-in-chief, a workable system was produced out of the chaos of civilian mismanagement and unscrupulous brokerage:—

“With all his faults in private life, with all his failings in the field, with all his defects of character, the Duke of York did more for the Army than any one man did during the first two centuries of its existence.”

In the third and fourth lectures (an historical sketch of the British cavalry to 1815) the author shows anew the qualities which have made his larger history so eminently readable. In a clear and rapid survey of the main features he rarely neglects the little touches of detail which are so dear to the soldier and to the student of soldiers. Thus he reminds Highlanders that they were originally light infantrymen, and “they might have monopolized that splendid service, and gained an even greater name, if possible, than they now enjoy.” He tells officers of to-day something about the education of their eighteenth-century predecessors. He lays due emphasis upon the all-important lessons so painfully learnt in the American War of Independence, and lightly forgotten through “the prejudices of officers,” or, it may be, through “the caprices of inspecting generals and the fancies of some members of the Royal Family.” Those lessons, if applied throughout the nineteenth century, would have shortened not a few of our wars, and have left us with little to learn from the Boers in South Africa. But, as General Money wrote in 1798, in his pamphlet on light infantry and light cavalry,

“till this new system of horse-chasseurs be adopted by Austria and Prussia, whom we copy in most things, and have done for a century past, I suppose we shall remain as we are.”

It is ever the same in our military story; we copy, without always assimilating, the methods of other countries, and disregard the history of our own army, which is far more varied and at least as valuable.

In the fifth paper an account is given of a brilliant little action in St. Lucia (1778), in which the power of well-trained light infantry was strikingly exemplified. On the Vigie height five companies of British chasseurs polished off two French battalions, with a decisive completeness that reminds one of Iphicrates and the Spartan mora. The last paper is a serviceable summary of the methods adopted for transport and supply in the various periods of our military history.

Although the book has to do with military problems, it deserves far more than merely professional recognition, for it contains many an observation that any Englishman may well take to account. The author tells us at the outset that he does not think it right “for a civilian to dogmatize to soldiers as to the value of military facts”; but in the wealth of his experience he has every right to bring civilians to a closer and more comprehensive study of the army which has done, and still does, their fighting for them.

COMMANDANT EDMOND FERRY publishes, through the Librairie Armand Colin, La

France en Afrique, a singularly interesting volume. The author's doctrine is that France is a great Mohammedan power, having a strong interest in uniting under her guidance, and apart from Turkish influence, the various Mohammedan groups of her African empire, and should proclaim herself the protector of these groups from the religious as well as from the political point of view. Commandant Ferry's suggestion is that France should make common cause with the Senoussi movement. The author admits, however, that there is still serious risk of a combined Mohammedan movement against France; and that, although the excommunicated reformed Senoussi could not act under the Turks, the Orthodox and the dissenting Mohammedans of Africa might attack on parallel lines.

The book opens with a full account of Bonaparte's pro-Mohammedan policy, and the historical value of this part is as considerable as the political value of the later chapters. The volume, and especially the earlier or historical part, is marked by much hostility to our country, and speeches of Mr. Dundas (called “M. Dundar”) in 1798 are raked-up and set by the side of speeches by Mr. Chamberlain in 1900 to prove the insatiable greed, the insolence, and the duplicity of Great Britain. In almost every French book which deals with such questions, as we have recently had occasion to point out, we are charged with intending at the present moment to support the Arab movement against the Sultan. It is, we suppose, useless to repeat that for half a century at least the Mohammedan religious authorities of Mecca and of Arabia generally have continually been shouting in the deaf ears of our Foreign Office their wish that we should lead them, or at least protect them, against the Turks. Our author desires for France a similar policy to that which he ascribes to us, and wishes that France should put herself at the head of those curious secret societies of Northern Africa which were, we think, described many years ago in a learned little pamphlet by Baron d'Estournelles, after he had left the French Embassy in London to serve at the Residency in Tunis under M. Cambon, the present Ambassador at the Court of St. James.

The portion of the volume before us which deals most closely with current international affairs concerns the arrangements with Italy as to the eventual future of the interior of Tripoli. It appears, however, that the Turks are very strong in Tripoli. A German officer lent by the Kaiser has 15,000 regular troops, always paid, and as well looked after as are the Sultan's Guards in Constantinople. This general has also organized a local militia of two years' service, which gives another force of 15,000 men. The author evidently thinks that the result of the inquiry of a French mission recently sent to Tripoli is to show that the conquest of the Regency would be a difficult matter, and, although he does not say so, he is, no doubt, inclined to see the intervention of the German Emperor in Tripoli, as in Morocco. It is, indeed, a little difficult to understand how Great Britain, Germany, and France are all to be Commanders of the Faithful. The volume before us leads up to the general view that we are to head the Arabian faithful in the name of the largest section of the Mohammedan world, which as regards population we already possess, that France is to head the fanatical Mohammedan Nonconformists, and that Germany is to support the Padishah. Armageddon will, in that case, be a triangular battle in which no Christian flag will fly.

Admiral George Johnson, Autobiography and Memoir, 1809-93 (Burleigh), edited and written by the admiral's widow for his children, and announced as “sold for the benefit of Miss Weston's Sailors' Rest, and the Missions to Seamen's Society,” without containing anything very new or very exciting, does bring up before the reader the story of the navy in the early years of last century, when Johnson was a midshipman and mate, getting into little scrapes, as midshipmen will do, and getting out of them with a midshipman's usual good luck. A great deal of his time was served in small craft, but he was a mate of the Thunderer at Acre, and was promoted for that great diplomatic victory to be a lieutenant of the flagship. His little adventures are simply told, and the autobiography ends with his retirement as commander at the age of forty-five. The short memoir of a useful and blameless life, written by his widow, which follows, concludes a pleasant and interesting little book.

The Commission of H.M.S. Retribution, North American and West Indies Station, 1902-4, by W. H. Watts, P.O. 2 (Westminster Press), is No. 17 of the excellent “Log” series, but the first from the North American Station. It gives in the form of a diary a mention of the various incidents of the commission, including, in this case, “the doings of the fleet during the trouble in Venezuela, 1902,” and that in a pleasant, chatty manner, which will enable the members of the ship's company in years to come to revive old memories. It is impossible to over-estimate the good which may result from this series of “logs,” not only in thus keeping alive the interest of the men in their work, and in letting their fellows on other stations more clearly understand what is going on, but also in teaching the common or “garden” shore-going reader what the “garden matloe” talks about, thinks about, and does. It is a peep behind the scenes, or a glimpse into the interior of a piece of national clockwork.

It is a pity that the task of writing the history of The Old Shipmasters of Salem (Putnam's Sons) did not fall into more competent hands than those of Mr. C. E. Trow, who may, indeed, be assumed to know something about Salem itself, but seems to know little of its connexion with English or American history. His first sentence implies what is not fact—that in 1750 Salem was carrying on an extensive trade with the East Indies; and the second—that at that time the port of Boston was of little count as compared with Salem—which would not, we think, be admitted by historians of Boston. That Salem had an early importance is true; but Mr. Trow does not seem to know that the trade in which lay its wealth was the illicit trade with the West Indies; and in that it did run its competitors—Boston and Rhode Island—very close. In the War of Independence, which their misdeeds had done so much to cause, the smugglers became privateers, and later the fathers of privateers who did excellent service for the United States in the war of “1812”; though Mr. Trow betrays an ignorance nothing less than astounding when he heads a chapter with ‘The British Navy crippled by American Privateers,’ and in the text tells how “England had to employ most of her navy in convoying her merchant ships.” When the author leaves naval war alone, he becomes interesting and instructive, and his accounts of some of the old-time men and houses of Salem have real merit.

AMONG the most interesting of the ancient archives of Christ's Hospital is John Howes' MS., 1582. It is the earliest history of the three royal hospitals of Christ, Bridewell, and St. Thomas. It is bound in white vellum, and written in clear black ink. A century after it was written its contents were known and valued, but between 1680 and 1888 it was forgotten, and was only rediscovered at the latter date. It has now been privately reproduced and printed in handsome style at the charges of Mr. Septimus Vaughan Morgan, a governor of Christ's Hospital, and edited by Mr. William Lempriere, Senior Assistant Clerk of Christ's Hospital. A facsimile is given on the left-hand page, with the transcription opposite, the latter comprising some seventy-eight pages.

The writer was an assistant to Richard Grafton, the first Treasurer-General of Christ's Hospital. As "Renter" for collecting the rents of the lands, he remained a resident within the hospital precincts, and was intimately acquainted with all details of the foundation and management of the house. In an address to the treasurer and governors, John Howes professes that he has no desire to have his brief notes "published or made known to the world, for that were not convenient," and apologizes for his "rude unpolished style." He further promises to "put into writing certain abuses in the government of the poor in this present time, with sundry devices for remedy of the same." This book, we are told by Mr. Lempriere, whose work is a good specimen of careful and judicious editing, was finished in 1587, and contained, inter alia, suggestions for preventing the entry of "the beggars of England" into the City. The present work is cast in the form of a friendly dialogue between Dignity and Duty, the former presumably the treasurer, who plays the part of a very inept chorus in a Greek drama, the latter John Howes, the treasurer's assistant. He makes his master pat him on the back very frequently. Dignity opens by commenting on the number of beggars in the City, and it does not seem promising when Duty, to explain the situation, reverts to the Norman Conquest. However, his next epoch is the Wars of the Roses, and the third the reign of Henry VIII. He then discloses the plan formed by the citizens of London "to take oute of the streates all the fatherles children.....and to bringe them to the late dissolved house of the Greie fryers," and to keep "the sucking children" in the country. The lame and aged were to be conveyed to the Hospital of St. Thomas; while "the ydell and lustie roges" were to be "compellde to labour." Another recommendation was "that no Countrey beggers shoulde come yn to anoye or putt the Cytie to any farther charge." Dignity's comment on this is unusually shrewd: "A very good pollecie, for without that the rest had bene nothing."

He proceeds to show what sums of money were raised and by what means. The committee of thirty "fyrste thoughte good to begynne with themselves," and opened a subscription list with about 750l. Then the king was approached to see if any buildings could be granted for housing purposes. The "Grey-friers.....stood voyde and emptie, only a number of hooures and Roges harbored therein all night." A number of officers were chosen for the reception of the children, 380 of whom made the first company. "A number of the children being taken from the dunghill, when they came to swete and cleane keping and to a pure dyett, dyed downe righte." Once the school was started,

"there was allso for the poore children of the free scoole a place made to dispute with the schollers of other free schooles, and sylver pennes and garlands provyded towards the rewarding of suche as best deserved."

Explaining why Edward VI. made over Bridewell to be a sort of workhouse, Howes says that the palace was "not without an infynite chardge," and its situation was so bad that "there was no coming to yt but throughe stincking lanes or over a fylthy dytche"; and the Savoy was made over with equal readiness, because it had become "nothing ells but a nurserye of all villanie." In order to get the means to make St. Thomas's Hospital into an asylum for wayfaring men, the committee determined to borrow (i.e., beg) from the City halls and companies. The last pages are interesting for their account of Queen Mary's dealings with the hospitals. On her arrival from Norfolk in London the governors and children of Christ's Hospital were waiting on a stage to receive the queen, "but when shee came nere unto them shee cast hir eie another waie and never stayed nor gave any countenance to them." Dignity here remarks that he perceives "shee did not lyke of the blewe boyes, but yf they had bene so manye Greyefryers shee woulde have gyven them better countenance." It was a critical time for the hospitals. Friars Peto and Perin worked hard to get the monks re-established; Friar John, a Spaniard, was the champion of the children, as also was Christoferson, Bishop of Chichester and confessor to the queen. The governors felt their way very cautiously, but it did them no good when Bishop "Gardener clapte Mr Grafton fast in the filete for twoe daies because he suffered the children to learne ye Englyshe Prymer when they shoulde have learned the Lattin Abseies," i.e., A B C's or Catechisms. However, Christ's Hospital weathered the storm, and was bountifully maintained by the liberal devotion of the citizens to such good purpose, that the present rent roll of the foundation is 69,000l. a year. Messrs. Vaughan Morgan and Lempriere are to be thanked for making a perusal of this most interesting document possible, even for a limited public.

A Second Latin Course, by E. H. Scott and Frank Jones (Blackie), is intended to follow on the authors' 'First Latin Course.' The principle followed is to take a portion of Caesar's 'Gallic War,' Book I., and from this construct a few very simple sentences, given in a section called 'Preparatio.' The next section gives the same matter in a more continuous and difficult form as a translation lesson. In the next section, called 'Interrogatio,' a number of simple questions is propounded to be answered viva voce in Latin by the pupils, answers of one word of course being discouraged. A fourth section sketches out a small grammatical drill on the words used in the text; and finally apposite proverbs or an exercitium are given to round off the lesson. At the end of the book are found exercises for translation from English into Latin adapted to the several sections. Long quantities are mostly marked. It is a complete book, perhaps too complete for most form masters. The authors have meant well, but we doubt the wisdom of prescribing the form work at every little turn. Where is the teacher's interest to show itself? Solely in seeing that these ingenious exercises are gone through? Men of ordinary initiative will not be so fettered; at any rate, the book is so arranged that a resourceless teacher cannot go very far wrong.

Helen Murdoch, by Alice Jane Home (Religious Tract Society), is hardly, we think, up to the standard of the Society's publications in its "Girl's Library." The heroine is discovered on the point of exchanging her ancestral home, a Tudor mansion, for boarding-school, where, as her brother puts it, she will associate with "ladylike" girls. Her subsequent experiences as pupil, guest at a Scotch country house, governess, and affianced bride, occupy the volume. The three men who mould her character—brother, tutor, lover—are too much given to exhortation to be at all true to life. It is surely a mistake to suppose that religious influence is powerful only in proportion to its direct verbal expression. But the book is well meant, and unimpeachable in tone.

MESSRS. METHUEN & Co. have added to their "Illustrated Pocket Library of Plain and Coloured Books" Pierce Egan's Real Life in London, with the illustrations by Heath, Alken, Rowlandson, and others which helped to make the book famous. The reprint is from the edition of 1821, and is handsome and serviceable, being in two neat volumes. There is no doubt that Egan rode his hobby to death; there is an exasperating sameness about his work, and the modern reader, at any rate, gets weary of Bob Tallyhos and Corinthian Toms. But the value of the book resides in the light it throws on later Georgian life. It must have reflected a certain amount of that life, although we hope that future generations will not imagine that the works of our novelists to-day always faithfully reflect life in the early twentieth century.

THE form and style of Messrs. Bell's "York Library" have already won commendation from expert book-lovers. An addition to it, which is rather off the usual lines, but of great interest, is Arthur Young's Travels in France, which has been fitly edited by Miss Betham-Edwards.

MR. LANE has added Venetia to his "New Pocket Library." The figure representing Shelley in it is, as the Earl of Idlesleigh points out in his introduction, very shadowy, but Disraeli's idea of Byron as Cadurcis is of real interest, and may keep a book alive which is not too vivacious. Writing with the knowledge of to-day, one might almost say that Byron was condemned from his cradle, for his forbears were, as Mr. J. M. Bulloch has pointed out, a rotten stock.

IN "The Poets and the Poetry of the Nineteenth Century" Charles Kingsley to James Thomson has now been published by Messrs. Routledge. The frontispiece is not a happy picture of Matthew Arnold, but this should not prevent the judicious reader from buying a collection of exceptional interest, including work by the author of 'Ionica,' W. B. Rands, Mortimer Collins, T. E. Brown, and several men of wider reputations.

The Mosaic (Oxford, the Holywell Press) is the first number of one of the papers which spring up at this period in academic circles. No editor is named, and there is no introduction beyond a single Greek word. Its appearance has an air of selectness and taste which the contents justify. The writers are not concerned with local matters, but rather with literature and art, on which they write well enough to make us hope that The Mosaic will last.

WE have on our table The National Administration of the United States of America, by J. A. Fairlie (Macmillan),—German Grammar, by A. Meyer (Blackie),—Huntingdon and the Great Ouse with St. Neots and St. Ives, by H. L. Jackson and G. R. H. Shafto (The Homeland Association),—Preliminary Geometry, by R. Roberts (Blackie),—Aristophanes: The Acharnians, edited by C. E. Graves (Cambridge, University Press),—Elementary Plane Geometry, by V. M. Turnbull (Blackie),—Trigonometry, by S. L. Loney (Cambridge, University Press),—Macaulay's England in 1685, by H. C. Notcutt (Blackie),—Latin Course, Part III., by W. H. Spragge (Longmans),—Tales of Hans C. Andersen, by H. J. Chaytor (Blackie),—The Citizen, by N. S. Shaler (Constable),—Britain's Destiny, by the late C. B. Phipson, edited by Mark B. F. Major (Cassell),—Diversions Day by Day, by E. F. Benson and E. H. Miles (Hurst & Blackett),—Publications of West Hendon House Observatory, Sunderland: No. III. Observations of Variable Stars, 1866-1904, by T. W. Backhouse (Sunderland, Hills & Co.),—Professional Papers of the Corps of Royal Engineers, edited by Major A. T. Moore, R.E., Vol. XXX. (Chatham, Mackay),—Lagden's Luck, by Tom Gallon (Simpkin),—Just as It Was, by John Strange Winter (F. V. White),—Who Giveth this Woman? by W. Le Queux (Hodder & Stoughton),—Bread upon the Waters, by Alice M. Diehl (Hurst & Blackett), — De Flagello Myrteo (Elkin Mathews), — and Odette d'Antrevernes, and A Study in Temperament, by A. A. R. Firbank (Elkin Mathews).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Andrews (S. J.), Man and the Incarnation, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Hort (F. J. A.), Village Sermons, Second Series, cr. 8vo, 6/
Knox (John), the Hero of the Scottish Reformation, by H. Cowan, cr. 8vo, 6/
Oxford Conferences on Faith, Summer Term, 1903, by V. McNab, cr. 8vo, 3/ net.
Wesley (John), Evangelist, by R. Green, 8vo, 6/ net.

Law.

Dicey (A. V.), Lectures on the Relation between Law and Public Opinion in England during the Nineteenth Century, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Renouf (Sir P. le Page), Life Work: First Series, Egyptological and Philological Essays, Vol. 2, edited by E. Naville and W. H. Rylands, roy. 8vo, 25/ net.
Richards (J. C.), The Gum-Bichromate Process, cr. 8vo, 2/6
Royal Academy Pictures, 1905, 4to, 7/6
Watts (G. F.), Reminiscences, by Mrs. R. Barrington, 4to, 21/ net.

Poetry and the Drama.

Bacon (H.), Poems, New Edition, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Bridges (R.), Demeter, cr. 8vo, sewed, 1/ net; with Incidental Music by W. H. Hadow, 4to, sewed, 2/6 net.
Carmichael (A.), Deirdre and the Lay of the Children of Uisne, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Romaine (L.), Tea-Table Rhymes and Others, 16mo, 2/6 net.
Swinburne (A. C.), Tragedies: Vol. 1, cr. 8vo, 30/ net (sets only, 5 vols.).
Waight (J. F.), William the Conqueror, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Political Economy.

Report of the Tariff Commission: Vol. 2, Part 1, The Cotton Industry, with Appendix, 4to, limp, 2/6 net.

History and Biography.

Bruce (Michael), Poet of Loch Leven, by J. Mackenzie, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Burleigh (B.), Empire of the East, cr. 8vo, 6/
Chesterton (G. K.), Heretics, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
House of Letters (A.), edited by E. Betham, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Hozier (Sir H. M.), The Seven Weeks' War, cr. 8vo, 6/
Johnstone (A.), Recollections of R. L. Stevenson in the Pacific, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Maria Sophia, Queen of Naples, by C. Tschudi, translated by E. H. Hearn, 8vo, 7/6
Mirabeau and the French Revolution, by C. F. Warwick, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Pitcairn (C.), The History of the Fife Pitcairns, with Transcripts from Old Charters, 8vo, 42/ net.
Snowden (C. E.), A Brief Survey of British History, 4/6
Villari (L.), Russia under the Great Shadow, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Geography and Travel.

Gould (S. Baring-), A Book of South Wales, cr. 8vo, 6/
Stevenson (R. L.), Essays of Travel, cr. 8vo, 6/
Wharton (B.), Italian Backgrounds, illustrated by E. C. Peizotto, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Sports and Pastimes.

Tierathan (C. E.), The American Thoroughbred, 8/6 net.

Science.

Borchardt (W. G.), Key to a New Trigonometry for Schools, Part 1, 12mo, 5/ net.
Cassell's Concise Natural History, by E. P. Wright, roy. 8vo, 6/
Goodsall (D. H.), Diseases of the Anus and Rectum, Part 2, 8vo, 6/ net.
Heck (R. C. H.), The Steam-Engine, and other Steam Motors, Vol. 1, 8vo, 14/ net.
Pattin (H. C.), The Ritual of Temperance and State Hygiene, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Russell (Hon. R.), Strength and Diet, 8vo, 12/6 net.
Waller (A. D.) and Symes (W. L.), Exercises in Practical Physiology, Part 2, 8vo, 2/6 net.
Woolwich Mathematical Papers, 1895-1904, edited by E. J. Brooksmith, cr. 8vo, 6/

General Literature.

Adams (A.), The Outlet, cr. 8vo, 6/
Annual Charities Register and Digest, 1905, 8vo, 5/ net.
Austin (M.), Isidro, cr. 8vo, 6/
Bennet (R. A.), For the White Christ, 8vo, 6/
Bois (W. E. B. du), The Souls of Black Folk, 8vo, 5/ net.
Burnham (C. L.), Jewel's Story-Book, cr. 8vo, 6/
Coke (D. F. T.), The Dog from Clarkson's, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Darlington (H. A.), The Rockliffes, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Davis (F.), Mrs. Darrell, cr. 8vo, 6/
Deane (M.), The Little Neighbour, cr. 8vo, 6/
Henry (A.), The Unwritten Law, cr. 8vo, 6/
Moore (S. H.), The Story of Etain and Otnel, 4to, 3/6 net.
Pratt (A.), Vigorous Daunt, Billionaire, cr. 8vo, 6/
Tilton (D.), My Lady Laughter, cr. 8vo, 6/
Truth about Man (The), by a Spinster, cr. 8vo, 5/
Valentine (E. U.), Hecla Sandwith, cr. 8vo, 6/
Wynne (M.), The Temptation of Philip Carr, cr. 8vo, 6/

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Goyau (G.), L'Allemagne Religieuse: le Catholicisme, 1800-48, 7fr.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Reinach (S.), Répertoire de Peintures, 1250-1550, Vol. 1, 10fr.

History and Biography.

Bonnal (Général H.), La Manœuvre de Landshut, 10fr.
Faure-Biguet (Général G.), Histoire de l'Afrique Septentrionale, sous la Domination Musulmane, 7fr. 50.
Guétary (J.), Un Grand Méconnu: Napoléon III, 3fr. 50.
Lajoux (E.), Mes Souvenirs d'Espionnage, 3fr. 50.

Lemaitre (J.), En Marge des Vieux Livres, 3fr. 50.
Müller (S.), Urgeschichte Europas, 6m.
Usâma Ibn Munkidh, Memoiren e. syr. Emirs aus der Zeit der Kreuzzüge, 9m.
Zurlinden (Général), Hautes Études de Guerre, 3fr.

Science.

Berthelot (M.), Science et Libre Pensée, 7fr. 50.
Fritzsche (H.), Die jährliche u. tägliche Periode der erdmagnetischen Elemente, 4m.

General Literature.

Datin (H.), En Wagon, 3fr. 50.
Nyevelt (H. de Z. de), L'Impossible Sincérité, 3fr. 50.
Sorel (A. E.), Peut-être, 3fr. 50.
Waliszewski (R.), Les Carrosses du Roi, 3fr. 50.

STEVENSON'S OCCASIONAL PAPERS.

WITH reference to the note on this subject which was printed in the 'Literary Gossip' of The Athenæum for June 10th, it will be seen on reference to the original prospectus of 'The Edinburgh Edition,' of which a copy was reprinted in my 'Bibliography of Robert Louis Stevenson,' pp. 211-213, that Messrs. Chatto & Windus, who were the selling agents of that edition, are perfectly right in asserting that no engagement was made with the subscribers that any material whatever should be confined to that edition. The prospectus was signed by Mr. Charles Baxter, of Edinburgh, and Mr. Sidney Colvin, of London, and unless these gentlemen gave some private undertaking on the subject, it is difficult to see how there can be any breach of faith with the subscribers.

Messrs. Chatto & Windus, however, state in their prospectus of this new issue that "none of the contents of these three volumes have before been printed in book form, excepting in 'The Edinburgh Edition.'" It is impossible to reconcile this statement with the facts of the case. Most of the essays and stories were printed in 'The Thistle Edition,' which was a kind of American counterpart of 'The Edinburgh Edition.' Of the twenty-one papers included in the first and third volumes, fourteen, including the four letters on Davos contributed by Stevenson to The Pall Mall Gazette, were included in the charming little volume 'Essays and Criticisms,' published last year by Herbert B. Turner & Co., of Boston, in their series of 'Reprints.' The three 'Tales and Fantasies,' included in the second volume, were also printed in the same series later on in the year. But if Messrs. Chatto & Windus reply that their meaning was that none of the papers had before been printed in book form in England, they are still open to the charge of inaccuracy. So far as the papers printed in their first volume are concerned, they are correct, but of those comprised under the head of 'Essays in the Art of Writing,' 'Books which have Influenced Me' was included in the volume bearing that title which was published at the office of The British Weekly in 1887; 'My First Book' formed a portion of the volume of that name which was published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus in 1894; and since July, 1898, the Preface to 'The Master of Ballantrae' has been prefixed to Messrs. Cassell & Co.'s editions of that book, of which it now forms a part. In writing this I have no wish to detract from the merit of the three volumes now in course of publication by Messrs. Chatto & Windus, who have, I think, rendered a service to literature by giving a wider circulation to their contents. I only wish they could have seen their way to adding a few more of Stevenson's uncollected pieces. W. F. PRIDEAUX.

'FROM TOKYO TO TIFLIS.'

9, Russell Square Mansions, W.C., June 13th, 1905.

THE generous and sympathetic tone of your review of my book 'From Tokyo to Tiflis' emboldens me to point out a misapprehension of my meaning in one part. "Mr. McKenzie," you say,

"suggests that Japan can raise an army of four million Chinese troops, an army sufficient 'to defeat the combined forces of the Europeans.' Why stop at four millions? Why not forty millions?"

This suggestion is not mine. I simply quote verbatim from a recent Japanese writer. I quote him to illustrate the temper of a section of the Japanese people, imbued with a sense of racial superiority. This section must be reckoned with in attempting to forecast the future action of Japan in international affairs.

Japan is setting out on a policy of imperial expansion. That policy includes, first, the virtual annexation of Korea, despite Japan's and our own treaty obligations to maintain the independence of that country. It includes, further, the domination of China, not by direct force of arms, but by the sheer power of personality of a more strenuous nation, and by a policy of actively protecting China from Western aggression. A systematic campaign will be promoted for the extension of Japanese commerce, especially in the shipping trade, for which the genius of her people peculiarly fits her.

Temporarily, no doubt, we will benefit. Japan will, for the time, treat us well in some ways, for it is to her present interest to do so. But in the end the rise of commercial Japan must injure our trade in the Far East. The victories of the yellow man against the white have already struck at the roots of white domination in many parts of Asia. The growth of population of the fecund, united, and reorganized Mongolian peoples (modified by the partial Malaysian strain of the Japanese) must in the end threaten our Far Eastern territories.

You raise some interesting points about the artillery equipment of the two armies. I was with General Kuroki's army. The Russians opposing us at the battle of the Yalu and at each subsequent engagement were supplied with modern quick-fire guns, and with Maxim-Nordenfolt machine guns. At first, however, the artillery were badly handled. I have since been informed that the guns were newly brought out immediately after the war began, and that the artillerymen had had no time to familiarize themselves with them. The Russian gunners constantly over-aimed. They fixed their range too quickly, and did not readjust it often enough. Later, they did much better. At Yantsuling, for instance, at the end of July, they put opposing batteries out of action more than once.

The Japanese at first had admirable mountain artillery, inferior field batteries, and no machine-guns. As you point out, their field artillery was strengthened later by employing captured Russian batteries, and guns of a much heavier calibre are now used. The handling of their guns was much better than the Russian, and they were more skilful and bold in the choice of gun sites. The Japanese field batteries were constantly pushed forward to what European commanders would consider highly dangerous points.

It is not quite correct to say that I "have some general remarks against shrapnel and in favour of the Japanese shell." Shrapnel is, and bids fair to remain, the most potent form of shell for common use against troops in the field. But this war has proved, I believe, that the practically exclusive use of shrapnel in the field—as was the custom of the Russians—is a serious blunder. There are times when common shell does work which shrapnel cannot.

F. A. MCKENZIE.

* * This was received too late for the reviewer to reply this week.

THE MYSTERY OF TILSIT.

REFERENCE was made in The Athenæum of September 27th, 1902, to the revival during recent years of an ancient controversy as to the precise method by which timely warning of the projected maritime league against England was conveyed to Canning from Tilsit in July of 1807. In the article to which we have referred the possible sources of this momentous intelligence were discussed in the light of certain new material which supplemented the evidence of the contemporary State Papers. More recently still fresh evidence has been forthcoming, and this may enable us to make further progress towards a solution of the mystery.

The British expedition against Copenhagen in the summer of 1807, which resulted in the forcible occupation of the capital of a friendly power and the seizure of its whole naval armament in time of peace, has exercised the minds of several generations of political writers without producing any serious historical investigation of the subject. Whether a fresh vindication of British policy in this matter is really necessary might well be doubted, in the face of the publication in our own time of the secret articles of the peace of Tilsit. Even without this tardy revelation, the high-handed policy of the British Ministry in 1807 may seem to have been sufficiently justified by subsequent events. At the same time, it might be argued that the danger threatened by the reactionary policy of the venal monarchies of Europe, the smouldering jealousy of conflicting maritime interests, and the avowed designs of Napoleon himself cannot be pleaded in extenuation of an offence against the law of nations. Indeed, it was frankly admitted by English statesmen at the time that their action against Denmark was only warranted by precise intelligence of an imminent act of aggression against this country in which the participation of Denmark was already assured. To some extent this contention was made good by the publication of the diplomatic correspondence connected with the negotiations that preceded the rupture with the Danish Government, whilst the course of political events provided forthwith a sufficient vindication. In later times, however, when the subject can be treated more dispassionately, the conventional explanation of this unfortunate incident has been subjected to a searching criticism. The foreign policy of the Portland Ministry has been once more denounced as equally unwise and unsuccessful, and the justification for the ultimatum presented to Denmark has been questioned on the ground that no definite intelligence was received by Canning at that time respecting the hostile employment of the Danish fleet. But we are not concerned here with the conduct of the Copenhagen expedition or the negotiations that preceded and followed it, although it might not be difficult to show that the modern criticism to which we have referred is characterized by grave errors in respect of facts which have formed a basis for unwarranted inferences.

The object of a former article on this subject was to suggest that, although the reputed authority for Canning's famous statement cannot be produced, the statement itself may be verified from other sources of information. A careful perusal of their public and private correspondence must convince us that the ministers and agents of this country on the Continent were wholly unaware of the conspiracy at Tilsit. Again, by utilizing various contemporary sources we are able to demonstrate the impossibility of certain information having been received by Canning through the usual channels. This discovery, if confirmed by independent researches, would leave us only a choice between the supposition that the communication itself was not of the nature hitherto assumed, and the suggestion that it was made through some hitherto unsuspected agency.

Taking in their order the four points which here present themselves, it may once more be insisted that the published and unpublished dispatches of the British ministers or official agents abroad do not contain the precise intelligence which we are seeking for. Nay, more, from these official dispatches, as well as from the private correspondence and diaries that are available, we must conclude that at the very date when the intelligence in question was received by Canning, the British diplomatists abroad were in complete ignorance equally of the terms of the hostile compact made at Tilsit and of the masterful counterstroke resolved on at Whitehall. It is true that in a few cases subordinates or secret-service agents had got an inkling of what was going on, but their intelligence does not seem to have made much impression on the minds of their superiors in the foreign missions. The possibility of the secret having been transmitted independently by one of these subordinate agents is a solution which appears to lie outside the scope of the official sources.

The second point concerns the incidental notices of time and place connected with the dispatch and delivery of intelligence through the usual channels, including the ordinary packet service and the special conveyance of the agents or messengers by a naval service. From the minute details of these services that have been preserved we are able to check the progress of the official intelligence above referred to, as well as to verify the statements which occur in published narratives. The proposition that we have to deal with may therefore be regarded as excluding the official dispatches and their enclosed intelligence from the probable sources of the information that is known to have been in Canning's possession on July 21st, 1807. This exception must also be held to cover the probability of one or other of the British Ministers having purposely dissembled their knowledge of the true state of affairs in their official correspondence for the purpose of ensuring greater secrecy. The possibility of this manoeuvre having been resorted to should not, indeed, be disregarded, but in this case the prescience of the diplomatists would eventually have been vindicated expressly, or even unconsciously, in their later correspondence. From this source, however, nothing appears to be more certain than their real ignorance of the existence of an actual project for the use of the Danish fleet against this country. Again, the favourite theory that the true facts were elicited by the British Minister from the bearers of this diplomatic correspondence is not based on a sufficient knowledge of the personal conditions involved. Harvey and Clinton had certainly nothing to tell, and Mackenzie, who is regarded on the highest authority as the most likely source of information, was roused for his journey to England from a "Bacchanalian" carouse. Other bearers of intelligence who possessed far better credentials have not been considered, but reasons could be given for dismissing any claim that might be made on their behalf. In particular, Sir Robert Wilson, who has also been credited with the revelation, did not arrive in England until the English counter-blow had fallen.

Passing now to the third consideration, whether it is really necessary for us to suppose that precise intelligence of the Danish menace was received by Canning on any particular occasion, we shall find that the sources available for our inquiry are much narrowed. We can easily disregard both the natural assertions of the disconcerted conspirators abroad, and the malicious insinuations of political antagonists at home, which denied equally the existence of the plot and its opportune divulgence. Neither is it difficult to discount the mortified incredulity displayed by certain British diplomatists who continued to persuade themselves of the loyalty of Russia and the injured innocence of Denmark. These men had failed to detect the conspiracy, and they could not reconcile that failure with their amour propre. A far stronger case is certainly presented by the attitude of those contemporary statesmen who chose to regard the cumulative evidence of rumours and forebodings which had poured into the British Foreign Office since the first negotiations at Tilsit as sufficient justification for Canning's eventual action. This tone, when adopted by public men who were engaged in the closest intercourse with the minister, is somewhat disquieting. Neither was the British case improved by their grim reflection that they were, after all, only paying back Napoleon in his own coin. Such casuistry did not really touch the case presented by Denmark. Even the citation of general threats and mysterious utterances on the part of the French Emperor cannot be regarded as a proof of the existence of documentary evidence of hostile designs, in which Denmark was implicated. On the whole, we may reasonably conclude that those who relied upon this special pleading were not in the secret of Canning's information. At the same time it may be readily admitted that, before the receipt of the intelligence in question, the British Government, sensible of the gravity of the situation, had already prepared a plan of campaign against Copenhagen, utilizing for this purpose the expeditionary force designed for the protection of Stralsund. The secret history of these precautionary preparations forms an important link in the development of the defensive policy of the British Government. It is perhaps difficult to resist the conviction that even in the absence of more definite proof of hostile intent an ultimatum would still have been presented at Copenhagen backed by a fleet and army. This surmise, however, does not affect the official procedure as it is actually recorded, for the date of the first overt act against Denmark is fixed by Canning's famous instructions to Brook Taylor, dated July 22nd, 1807. In this document it is expressly stated that intelligence reached Canning on the 21st direct from Tilsit as to the conclusion of a hostile agreement with regard to the Danish navy. The decisive character of this intelligence is plainly indicated by the subsequent proceedings, although down to the very moment of its receipt we learn from the admissions of the minister and his confidants that uncertainty and consequent hesitation prevailed in all their councils.

It remains for us to examine once more the evidence that is available for the identification of the source of this authoritative information. From Canning's own description we may attempt to formulate it as follows: (1) It was received by Canning himself on July 21st. (2) It came direct from Tilsit. (3) It purported to be an account of what took place at a meeting of the emperors at Tilsit on June 25th, evidently furnished by some one who was present on the Russian side. A further hint is afforded by FitzHarris, who, with his father, was in the secret, and who, in a contemporary letter, says that the information came from a private quarter. From our review of the British sources of information available it must appear improbable that a British agent was in direct communication with his Government. It is true that Wilson's contemporary diary proves that he was at this very time engaged in the most daring attempts to discover what was going on; that he entered Tilsit in disguise, and that, in addition to his official reports to his immediate chief, he sent certain intelligence to England. We also know that the agents at Hamburg and Altona had received sundry hints from French sources which were calculated to throw suspicion upon the attitude of Denmark. But it is evident that Canning's information came from no ordinary source, and the existence of a strong Anglophile party in the Russian Court and Chancery has always pointed to a possible solution of the mystery. We know now, from the published correspondence of the Russian Foreign Office, that representatives of that power entered upon the negotiations at Tilsit on June 25th armed with a written project for the humiliation of England by means of the Danish fleet. We also know that the Russian Minister in London, who had intimate relations with those who must have been aware of the complicity of Denmark in this project, was favourable to the Anglo-Russian alliance, and that he was on the best of terms with Canning. If we need look further for a probable source of the latter's information, we should find that the Portuguese Minister at the Court of St. James, whose Government had an equal interest in the question of neutrality, was a most intimate personal friend of the English Foreign Minister. Finally, it may be suggested with some reason that the remarkable secrecy preserved on the subject of this communication was due to the personality of the informer.

Now that from an examination of the available sources we have at last arrived at some plausible theory respecting this much debated question, it may be permitted us to hope that future writers will cease to base their narratives of the transaction upon the unfounded statements of political gossips, or garbled extracts from original documents. Other sources still await investigation, including the hitherto inaccessible papers left by Canning and by those of his contemporaries who shared this secret with him. Besides these the foreign archives of Europe still remain to be explored, and even if no further evidence is forthcoming from these neglected sources, the effort made to arrive at the truth of one episode of modern diplomatic history will at least prove instructive.

THE SHERBORNE PAGEANT.

THIS spectacle, which was witnessed by an audience of some thousands of persons, which daily grew more enthusiastic, is, to the best of our belief, unique. It is indeed of most happy omen that in days when the blight of riches and vulgar ostentation on all sides appears to menace the higher interests of mankind, a community should be found so full of the historical sense—or sentimentalism—as to go to the vast labour and almost general sacrifice involved in the production of a piece which had no pecuniary end to serve and will bring none of the performers fame or fortune. Not only were the names unpublished and the costumes mostly given, but even the poorest paid half the cost of their dresses, and the whole town and neighbourhood, without distinction of class, united in doing its best.

That best was very good. Mr. Louis Parker was happy in being able to avoid any appearance of competition with the professional drama, and, consequently, no taint of amateurishness marred the pleasure of the spectator. The pageant was what it professed to be—a folk-play, not a modern piece dependent on situations. The interest was historical and æsthetic rather than dramatic in the strict sense. There is no development of character, none of that attempt consciously to display the reaction of circumstances upon personality which is the essence of dramatic writing. At any rate, no personality more present or obvious than the spirit of the Sherborne community could be regarded as the centre of such a collision of forces. Thus the pageant, like its occasion, is social and communal—it is not individual or psychological.

It is a series of episodes, in appropriate costume, representing the chief events of the history of Sherborne—taking the spectator from the time, soon after the conversion of Wessex by Birinus, when St. Ealdhelm founded the see and city, right through the days when the see was removed by the Conqueror to Sarum, to the period of the dissolution of the monasteries, and the fresh foundation of the school by Edward VI. The episodes were represented with vividness. Most of the costumes were highly becoming, and were historically admissible, although we fancy we noticed one or two anachronisms. The grouping throughout was superb, and reflects the greatest credit on Mr. Parker and his subordinates. The final scene, wherein every group of performers was ranged round a pedestal occupied by two female figures, representing the English and the American Sherborne, was, indeed, a miracle of arrangement, the last touch being given by the boys and girls with coats of arms used in the neighbouring villages and country houses. The only point to criticize is that for true proportion the figures on the pedestal required to be more than life-size. To dominate such a group, the front of which must have occupied at least three hundred yards, a statue comparable to the Bavaria at Munich was required.

Of the more important performers a few words must be said. St. Ealdhelm was dignified and saint-like, and in the final moments, when the long procession wound away behind the ruins, as he sat with his lute at the base of the pedestal, and seemed dreaming of the history which he had done so much to shape, dull indeed must have been the mind which did not carry away some impression of the significance of what too often is a cant phrase—the unity of history and the spirit of communal life. The elocution of Queen Osburga was admirable—clear, impressive, but never over-emphatic. The same may be said of Roger of Caen, the founder of the castle, the famous servant of Henry I., who did so much to organize the Exchequer. William the Conqueror, however, was poorly impersonated, except in the dignity of his carriage. The voice was throaty, and gave little sense of that most tremendous of men. We think, too, that one reference to “le splendeur de Dieu” would hardly have been blasphemous. The mad woman in the ninth episode (the dissolution) was a really fine piece of acting, and cannot be too highly praised. With Lady Raleigh every one was charmed, and her enunciation of the well-known verse of her husband was deservedly applauded:—

Tell Love it comes unbidden;
Tell Faith 'tis in my heart;
Tell Loyalty—tho' chidden
It never shall depart;
The world saith they will die—
Then give the world the lie!

Sir Walter, too, was good. He managed to convey that very strong element of humbug which united with nobler graces to secure for the hero the popular applause. One great element of success was that the movements were so well executed. The morris dance by the companions of Robin Hood and Maid Marian was in the setting extremely beautiful. Effective, also, were the various fights, the rush of the Danes across the long stretch of grass, and last, but not least, the rush and cry of the School when summoned to hear the charter of Edward VI.

The scheme of colour was, with slight exceptions, unimpeachable. But it must be admitted that much was owing to the splendid setting of the pageant. The massive gateway on the left, the long stretch of grass, the trees in the distance, and in the front the ivy-covered ruins, with a beautiful piece of Norman arcading on one wall and a fine arch and column on the left, formed a proscenium and a background not easily surpassed, which seemed to embody the very spirit of historic piety. This last it is which, perhaps, is the most noteworthy feature of the pageant. A century ago, with Europe enthralled and England menaced by Bonaparte, with the era of the Aufklärung scarcely completed, with George III. on the throne, and Mrs. Radcliffe and Robert Plumer Ward the popular romance-writers, such a performance would have been unthinkable and impossible. Now, however, it seems as though the English people had begun to realize the pieties that pertain to a great heritage, and cared a little more than of old for the names shining through the centuries, and understood at least something of the spiritual forces which are abiding influences in national and in communal life, and the reverence for past achievements which is the best augury for future splendours.

HOTHAM AND NAPOLEON.

Brighton, June 12th, 1905.

A SLIGHT error occurs in your notice of M. Houssaye's book ‘1815—La Seconde Abdication—La Terreur Blanche’ in The Athenæum of the 10th inst.

Alluding to Napoleon's surrender to Maitland, Lord Hotham's name is mentioned as the admiral in command. It was my father, the late Vice-Admiral the Hon. Sir Henry Hotham, who was in command of the British squadron off the west coast of France at that time, not Lord Hotham.

All matters relating to Napoleon have been so well thrashed out, particularly by Dr. Rose in his ‘Napoleonic Studies,’ pp. 305-41, and also by ‘The Surrender of Napoleon,’ by Rear-Admiral Sir F. Maitland, pp. 1-136, and elsewhere, that I am tempted to ask if it is not now time to cease these “Reminiscences” or “Phases” of Napoleon. Nothing further can be known on the matter, and it is time that these somewhat unworthy recriminations, from whatever quarter, should cease.

BEAUMONT HOTHAM.

LAMB'S LETTERS.

WHILE such scholars as your reviewer and Mr. Macdonald are discussing “pruna nana,” the unlearned dusts his school “Ainsworth,” looks under ‘Plum,’ and finds: “A plum, prunum; a little plum, nanum.” Is he on Lamb's track here?

Also, on reading the reviewer's remark that in “Palloris” Mr. Lucas makes “a bad blunder” for “Pallor, &c.,” he remembers that Mr. Macdonald printed “Pallor, Oris” (i. 157). And noting Mr. Macdonald's very good-humoured and candid explanation of how his version of the former passage was “constructed,” the ignorant man would like to know whether he is to accept this new reading.

May I add that the “letter to Manning, which is not to be found in the editions of Ainger, Mr. Carew Hazlitt, or Mr. Macdonald” (that referring to Lamb's namesake and his “duns and girls”), appears in my copy of Mr. Hazlitt, vol. i. p. 355, and of Mr. Macdonald, vol. i. p. 203? As Mr. Lucas tells us he took his text from Mr. Hazlitt, this relieves him from an apparent contradiction, and mitigates the charge of “squeamishness.” J. A. R.

Clifton Club, Clifton, Bristol.

WHY should not “pruna nana” be perfectly correct Lamb-Latin, and have been intended to mean “dwarf plums”? Might it not have been enough for Lamb that prunum was Latin for plum, and nanus Latin for dwarf? And if any one had objected that nanus was not an adjective, no more, he might have retorted, was “dwarf.” But perhaps there are no such things as “dwarf plums.” If that be so, Lamb may have thought himself as free to make a natural history of his own as to make a Latin of his own. J. ROWLEY.

THE circumstance that hippocras was formerly recommended “in paralytic and apoplectic dispositions” does not alter the fact that Mr. Lucas's definition of it as “a medicinal drink” is inadequate, and, indeed, absurdly misleading. Gin is frequently recommended for its diuretic property, yet neither Mr. Lucas nor Mr. Bell would, I take it, propose to define that spirit as “a medicinal drink.” Hippocras (vinum Hippocraticum) was an aromatic cordial, made of wine flavoured with spices; and it derived its name, "wine of Hippocras" or "Hippocrates" (a famous Greek physician born c. 460 B.C.), not from any medicinal properties, actual or surmised, but simply from the fact that it was strained through what was known as "Hippocrates' sleeve," i.e., a conical bag, usually made, I believe, of the cloth variously known as "stamin," "stammel," "tamine," or "tammy." The true (concise) definition, then, of "Hippocras" is "spiced wine" (vinum myrrhatum). THOMAS HUTCHINSON.

* * We have to thank several correspondents for sending us elaborate recipes for making Hippocras, which are interesting, but too long for insertion here.

Literary Gossip.

MR. UNWIN has arranged to publish a book by Mr. Thomas Marshall on 'Aristotle's Theory of Conduct.' It is intended to bring Aristotle's 'Ethics' to the notice of English readers. It contains a general introduction, separate introductions to the several chapters, explanatory remarks, and a paraphrase of the greater part of the text. As an adjunct to more elaborate commentaries, it will, it is hoped, be found useful by students of the 'Ethics,' giving, as it does, within a reasonable compass a somewhat full conspectus of Aristotle's theory.

MR. HORACE G. HUTCHINSON's new novel, entitled 'Two Moods of a Man,' which will be published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. next Tuesday, is a character-study presenting the struggle between the individual aim at complete self-realization and the claims of social connexions. Reconciliation with society's conventional ambitions is effected only at the cost of long remorse for love betrayed and wounded self-respect; and the interest is completed in the gradual discovery of these things by the wife, and her ultimate relations with her husband.

In view of the coming celebration at Norwich in memory of Sir Thomas Browne, Mrs. Martin Wilkin is about to publish a memorial volume, under the title 'Quaint Sayings from the Works of Sir Thomas Browne.' Mr. Elliot Stock will be the publisher.

THE July number of The Independent Review will contain a poem, 'Hail, Pytho!' by Mr. T. Sturge Moore. Among the articles which will be included the following may be mentioned: 'The Case of Sir Antony MacDonnell,' by Mrs. J. R. Green; 'Optimism and Mr. Meredith,' by Mr. G. M. Trevelyan; 'Separation in France,' by Mr. Robert Dell; and reviews of 'Patriotism and Compatriotism,' by the editor; of 'Frenzied Finance,' by Mr. G. Lowes Dickinson; and of Shorthouse's 'Life,' by Mr. C. F. G. Masterman.

IN Chambers's Journal for July there is a paper by Mr. Henry Clews, of the New York Stock Exchange, on 'Ups and Downs of Wall Street.' Mr. A. R. Canning describes 'The Zambesi.' Mr. Augustus Grimble, in 'Ascending and Descending Salmon,' shows that fish do ascend and descend some rivers several times in the course of a season. Mr. Clive Holland writes about 'Pictures with Romantic Histories'; Mr. G. J. Webster upon 'Ranching in the Canadian North-West'; Mr. J. B. Drayton describes a tour 'Through France on Business Fifty Years Ago'; and Mr. W. D. Gray retells the story of Napoleon's fight at Arcola.

A GERMAN translation of Prof. W. J. Ashley's 'Progress of the German Working Classes,' recently published by Messrs. Longman, will shortly be issued by the Laupp'sche Buchhandlung of Tübingen.

MESSRS. HODGSON's catalogue for next week includes several very interesting volumes from the library of Dante Rossetti. Amongst others are a copy of Keats's poems containing many of his pencil marginal notes and criticisms—those on 'Endymion' and 'Hyperion' being of particular interest—and the scarce private print of 'Hand and Soul.' The catalogue also includes a copy of the rare privately printed "copyright" issue of Browning's 'Gold Hair,' as well as an interesting copy of Anne Killigrew's poems which has the fine mezzotint portrait often wanting, with the autograph of William Killigrew—doubtless Sir William Killigrew the dramatist, uncle of the author—written across the title.

ALICE, LADY STRAFFORD, points out that by an error in the third volume of her uncle Mr. Henry Greville's 'Diary,' p. 315, note, Mr. Wilson, who died at Calcutta in September, 1860, is described as "Sir Archdale Wilson, one of the heroes of the siege of Delhi." He was in fact the Right Hon. James Wilson, Secretary to the Treasury and Finance Minister in India. The misconception has been pointed out from several quarters.

THE offices of the Royal Literary Fund are now at 40, Denison House, Westminster, S.W.

MR. KENNETH MCKENZIE writes from Yale University:—

"Presumably before this note reaches London the concordance to the minor Italian works of Dante, prepared by members of the Dante Society of Cambridge, Massachusetts, will be in the hands of subscribers. The occasion seems suitable for announcing that the writer has undertaken the preparation of a concordance to the 'Canzoniere' of Francesco Petrarca, which he hopes to publish within a reasonable time."

IN October the Cambridge University Press will publish the first number of The Modern Language Review, a quarterly journal devoted to the study of mediæval and modern literature and philology. The review will be edited by Dr. J. G. Robertson, Professor of German in the University of London, who will have the assistance of an Advisory Board consisting of Dr. H. Bradley, Prof. Brandin, Dr. Brauholtz, Dr. Breul, Prof. Fiedler, Prof. Dowden, Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly, Mr. W. W. Greg, Prof. Herford, Prof. Ker, Prof. Kuno Meyer, Prof. Morfill, Prof. Napier, Prof. Priebisch, Prof. Skeat, and Dr. Paget Toynbee.

M. PAUL SABATIER, the well-known authority on St. Francis, is coming again to England next week to receive an honorary degree at Oxford, and we are glad to hear that he will take the opportunity of giving an address at the Kensington Town Hall on Thursday evening next, at half-past eight, on 'L'Évolution de la Pensée Religieuse en France.' The lecture is being arranged by Mrs. Cobden-Sanderson, of River House, Hammersmith.

IN reviewing M. Claretie's second Bri-chanteau volume we noted the points of resemblance between his decayed comedian and the Kari-Kari of his relative M. Ludovic Halévy. M. Claretie has now revealed the secret in Le Temps, that a real person, named by him, was known to both authors, and was the original of both the characters.

THE death in his seventy-eighth year is announced from Königsberg of the distinguished Kant scholar Dr. Emil Arnoldt. He was at one time lecturer at Königsberg University, but resigned his post when the Government, to mark its disapproval of his democratic views, refused to promote him to a professorship. During the Kant celebrations last year the title of professor was offered to him, but he declined to accept the belated honour.

SCIENCE

MODERN PHYSICS.

A Text-Book of Physics.—Vol. III. Heat. By J. H. Poynting and J. J. Thomson. (Griffin & Co.)—After a long interval the third volume of Profs. Poynting and Thomson's treatise on physics has appeared. The treatment of the subject is the same as that adopted in the previous volumes on 'Sound' and 'The Properties of Matter'; it is essentially experimental, and the use of all but the simplest analysis is avoided. But though perhaps the authors' skill has not diminished, it is probable that the book will be something of a disappointment to those who have read the preceding parts. These differed in their aim and scope from all other English text-books, and had a delightful freshness of their own; the new part inevitably suggests comparisons with Preston's standard work.

It is only conservatism that sustains the grouping of all the varied subjects classed under the term "heat," since they really fall into two separate divisions. The first, including conduction, change of state, the properties of gases, and so on, is really part of the properties of matter; the second, radiation, is a branch of the theory of light; they are connected through thermodynamics, the only part of the subject which is truly a theory of heat.

No great originality could be expected of the authors in dealing with the first part of their subject. In all but minute details our knowledge has long been complete. Regnault's researches in this field still excite our admiration, but do not inspire emulation; if any advance is to be made in this region it is not by a frontal attack. Nearly all of the first thirteen chapters might have been written fifteen years ago, and there is some internal evidence that might lead to the supposition that they were actually composed about that time, and have been merely revised, not rewritten, since. It is only a matter of detail, but we think that the statement (p. 131) that Kelvin's vortex ring is the most successful attempt hitherto made to represent the structure of the atom may not be entirely due to the over-modest self-effacement of Prof. Thomson.

The chapter on 'The Kinetic Theory of Matter' is admirable. Using only elementary methods, the authors are able to arrive at approximate expressions for the mean free path and the quantities depending upon it, by ingenious, but in no way cumbrous, devices. The physical principles involved are so clearly exhibited that much benefit may be derived even by those who are fully competent to grapple with the advanced theory, in which those principles are far less prominent. In twenty-seven pages an adequate account is given of all the simpler properties of gases, the difficult question of partition of energy is touched, and even such a complicated phenomenon as radiometer action is lucidly explained. The rest of the part calls for no special attention; it is adequate, but not remarkable.

The foundations of thermodynamics are the subject of such acute controversy that the authors' chapter on this science is sure to arouse contrary opinions. The second law is stated thus: We cannot transform heat into work merely by cooling a body already at the lowest available temperature. Taken literally this statement would appear to be a truism; if a body is at the lowest available temperature, of course it cannot be cooled any further, for, if it could be, its temperature would not be the lowest available. However, the possibility of misconception on this point is cleared away by the subsequent explanatory paragraph. But the objection remains that the entire significance of the law depends on the interpretation of the word "merely," and this the student is left to gather from the applications made of the principle. On the other hand, it is satisfactory to note that attention is drawn to a fact too often neglected, that "reversibility" is a term applicable only to infinitely small changes. The line of reasoning which is found most convincing by the student differs in almost every case, but no one can fail to be impressed by the logical sequence of the ideas expounded when once the initial stumbling-block is passed. It is doubtful whether more is not lost than gained by the introduction of analogies to illustrate the working of heat engines, especially if they be so imperfect as that of a water wheel.

In two subsequent chapters thermodynamical principles are applied to gases and to change of state, the usual formulæ being deduced. In some places too much has been sacrificed to brevity.

No one is better qualified than Prof. Poynting to write of radiation, and the four chapters which deal with this subject will be read with interest. The matter is so nearly allied to the theory of light that there is considerable difficulty in defining the province of the book. A somewhat arbitrary boundary appears to have been drawn, for we should have expected to find some account of Rubens's 'Reststrahlen.' There is a very satisfactory chapter on 'Radiation and Temperature,' in which some of the methods of determining the solar constant are described, but otherwise the experimental work is somewhat scantily treated. A final chapter deals with 'The Thermodynamics of Radiation,' a topic of absorbing interest. The chief results of Wien and others are enunciated, but we fear that here again the proofs are sometimes too condensed to be readily intelligible to the beginner.

A serious blot on the book is the large number of misprints which occur. They are for the most part trivial, and would mislead no one, but they are annoying, and so easily removed by a competent proof-reader as to be inexcusable.

On the whole, we fear that, though Profs. Poynting and Thomson's work has many excellent and several novel features, it does not maintain the high standard which the two previous volumes had led us to expect. It is, of course, perfectly sound and safe, and will doubtless be widely used, but it lacks the attractiveness of its predecessors. We look forward eagerly to the volume on 'Electricity and Magnetism,' a subject that should furnish an excellent example for the method of treatment adopted by the two distinguished authors.

Modern Theory of Physical Phenomena. By Augusto Righi. Authorized Translation by Augustus Trowbridge. (New York, the Macmillan Company.)—The great interest that has been aroused by the discovery of radio-activity, and by the development of the new theory of matter to which it has lent support, is very gratifying to those who desire to see the spread of an intelligent appreciation of physical science beyond the narrow limits to which it is at present confined. We are therefore predisposed to welcome heartily any attempt to satisfy the curiosity of the lay inquirer, more especially if it proceed from the pen of so competent an authority as Prof. Righi. But we must confess reluctantly that neither Prof. Righi's book nor any other of the popular treatises that have appeared lately seems to fill adequately the gap in scientific literature.

Every physicist must have had the pleasure of being asked by his acquaintances to "tell them all about this new radium." In most cases the interest prompting the request is purely utilitarian. When it is explained that there is no immediate prospect of radium curing cancer, or driving a motor-car, still less of making anybody's fortune, radium is dismissed as "dull." In other instances the interest is sentimental, akin to the feeling that causes "scientific shockers" and emotional astronomy to appeal to a certain class of mind; the inquirer craves for incomprehensibly vast numbers, and is satisfied by calculations of the height to which the British navy might be raised by the energy in a gramme of radium.

But besides these devotees of pseudo-science there are some whose desire for enlightenment is as real as that of any professed student of physics. There are educated men who feel that their outlook on the world is incomplete without some knowledge of the methods and results of natural philosophy. To some the trains of experiment and reasoning, to many more the new conceptions and theories to which these have given rise, afford a keen delight. But where are they to turn for instruction? Existing works either require too deep a knowledge or provide too scanty a fare.

It is to this class of the laity that "popular" treatises should be addressed; the others may be left to the mercy of journalists whose imagination admirably qualifies them to cater for those who crave sensationalism rather than accuracy. No previous knowledge of the subject should be required, but in no other respect should the treatment be "elementary"; doubtful steps in the reasoning should not be shirked, nor apparent inconsistencies in the theories glossed over. It is precisely these difficulties that give an air of life and vigour to the subject, and help to cultivate the scientific spirit.

There is the great example of Darwin's writings to inspire an attempt to reach this ideal; but undoubtedly the production of similar works on physics is rendered harder by the necessity of avoiding all use of mathematical analysis. There seems to have been but one Faraday in the world's history. And yet it is physics, in a sense the most fundamental of the sciences, which it is most desirable that the outside world should appreciate. The task may be impossible, but then let us have no more popular science. Sad though it may be, we must make of science an esoteric preserve.

Judged on these principles, Prof. Righi's little volume is far from satisfactory. We doubt whether he had in his mind any clear idea of the class of reader he was endeavouring to instruct. The success of the book—it has passed through two Italian editions—might be thought to justify its publication, yet we cannot believe that it has given to any one more than a scrappy knowledge of facts scattered about in an incoherent mixture of irrelevant hypotheses. It assumes too wide an acquaintance with physics. The reader is supposed to know something of the fundamental laws of electro-dynamics, the relation of work and energy, and the meaning of "polarized light." The author is not even consistent, for he considers it necessary to expound Ohm's Law, while he devotes some of his scanty space—the whole book is but 161 pages of large print—to foot-notes containing differential equations and references to original authorities.

Nor is the choice of subject-matter always unexceptionable. There is an excellent account of Prof. J. J. Thomson's determination of the charge on a corpuscle, a piece of work combining such experimental resource and ingenious argument that it cannot fail to be of interest; but, on the other hand, an equal space is devoted to a catalogue of the radio-active elements known at the present time, an array of mere dry-as-dust facts without the slightest theoretical significance. Throughout there is a tendency to condense unduly a train of reasoning, and to omit all mention of difficulties in the views supported and of objections urged against them.

We regret to notice inaccuracies from which the writings of a Professor of Physics might have been expected to be free. On p. 76 we are told that "the variety of  $\beta$  rays is quite great; thus, while some are stopped by aluminium foil one-hundredth of a millimeter thick, others are able to traverse several millimeters of lead," a statement which might convey extremely erroneous ideas as to absorption; for some portion of a homogeneous pencil of rays, however penetrating, is stopped by a layer of material, however thin. Again, that

"the conductivity which a rarefied gas acquires when the cathode rays pass through it makes it impossible to maintain the two plates at a sufficient difference of potential" is hardly an adequate explanation of the failure to obtain electrostatic deflection of the rays. The end of chap. v., on the disintegration products of the radio-active elements, contains some rather doubtful statements. We are told that "the final non-radio-active substance has at least been found in the case of radium." How does Prof. Righi know that helium is the only, or, indeed, the chief, final disintegration product? Does he indeed know that helium is not radio-active?

When an accomplished physicist sets out to write a popular treatise, the first quality which must be demanded of him is scrupulous and unfailing accuracy. But perhaps the author is not to blame for all the deficiencies noted. The short quotations given might suggest that he has not been well served by his translator. We cannot congratulate Prof. Trowbridge on his share in the work. His efforts to eliminate Italian idiom have not been uniformly successful, and have led him to employ ungrammatical constructions.

A Treatise on the Theory of Alternating Currents. By Alexander Russell. Vol. I. (Cambridge, University Press.)—Mr. Russell proposes to give some account of the mathematical theorems which electricians use in their everyday work with alternating currents. He does not attempt to describe the machinery which they erect, or the instruments by which it is measured and tested, but only to investigate the principles employed in its construction and use. The reader is supposed to have a sound working knowledge of modern analysis, by the use of which the formulæ are established; graphical methods, which play so large a part in modern engineering practice, are employed, for the most part, only as subsidiary to more rigid treatment, or in cases where the complicated nature of the problem makes a complete solution unattainable.

In the first chapter—one of the best in the book—an admirably concise, lucid, and accurate summary is given of the principles of electrostatics and electrodynamics. We then proceed to consider self-inductance, effective values, and capacity. Some interesting calculations, with important practical applications, concerning the capacity of cables are here introduced. Chaps. v. to ix. treat of the "power factor," and some of the graphical methods by which it may be ascertained. After a digression on the air transformer, we are introduced to the theory of polyphase currents, the instruments which measure them, and the cables by which they are carried. Chap. xvi. is concerned with eddy currents, a subject which does not lend itself readily to the somewhat rigid methods which are characteristic of the book. In the final chapter, under the heading of 'The Method of Duality,' the author points out the simplicity gained by recognizing the reciprocal relations which exist between capacity and inductance, star and mesh, and so on. In a future volume we are promised the theory of alternators, motors, and transformers, and the transmission of power by polyphase currents.

Any estimate of Mr. Russell's work must proceed from a knowledge of the class of students to which it is addressed; unfortunately we are left somewhat in the dark on this point. But we fear that the author has fallen into the common error of trying to appeal at once to all classes. The student of pure theory will find much to interest him in the calculation of capacity and of effective values, but will be disappointed by the approximate methods applicable to eddy currents. The student of electro-technics will not always possess the mathematical knowledge to appreciate the proofs supplied, or to confirm for himself those formulæ which are simply stated without proof, but he will benefit by a study of the limitations which inaccurate but necessary assumptions impose upon the validity of the formulæ. The working engineer will find much that is suggestive in the treatment of such subjects as sheath losses, but may think that much of the space devoted to complicated hyperbolic expressions would have been better filled by numerical tables.

Perhaps it is the student of pure theory who will find Mr. Russell's book most satisfactory; he seems to have been placed in the front row of the audience. The author pushes analytical treatment as far as it will go, sometimes beyond the point where the results cease to have any relation to experimental facts, and only falls back on approximate, but simpler methods when the more accurate weapon has failed him. Thus, in dealing with eddy currents, where quantitative information is unobtainable, he devotes several pages of mathematics to a consideration of the problem when the permeability is constant; a solution, equally adequate so far as working conditions are concerned, could be reached by very much easier methods.

Many of the formulæ which are the result of tedious integration are simply stated, the algebraic details of the process by which they have been obtained being omitted. This plan has great advantages, but it makes accuracy all-important. Great care seems to have been exercised in this respect, for we have tested several of the expressions taken at random, and have found them correct without exception. From errors of carelessness, as well as from faulty diagrams, misprints, and so on, the volume is laudably free.

Mr. Russell's work is of great utility in grouping within a small compass facts which have hitherto been scattered through journals or bulky treatises; we wish it all success. But we venture to hope that in preparing the second volume the author will decide definitely what class of readers he is addressing, and confine himself more closely to satisfying their needs.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

IN the Journal of the Anthropological Institute Dr. John Beddoe defends his method of estimating skull capacity from measurements on the living against the criticisms of Prof. Karl Pearson in Biometrika, and reasserts his estimate of the average capacity of English male crania at 1,500 c.c., a figure which was exceeded by fifty-six out of sixty men of superior intellect. Miss Nina F. Layard describes the palæolithic flint implements recently found by her at Ipswich. Dr. Deniker's Huxley Lecture on the six races composing the present population of Europe is printed in French, illustrated by two maps and a selection from the fine photographs exhibited by the lecturer. The Rev. W. Howell and Mr. R. Shelford describe a love philtre obtained from a Sea-Dyak woman, and furnish a translation of two incantations sung over it to give it effect. Dr. Haddon (in Man for May) has an article on the decorative art of the same race, in which he derives some of their characteristic patterns from the roots of the parasitic fig-tree. The subject of Moorish decoration is dealt with in the Journal by Dr. Westernmark, who shows that many forms of it are magical, designed as protections against the evil eye. Three papers in Man relate to Egypt. Prof. Arthur Thomson applies the method of composite photography to four collections of skulls of the ancient inhabitants of the Thebaid, with marked success as showing the distinctive features—twelve negroid males and eleven negroid females are contrasted with twenty-six non-negroid males and sixteen non-negroid females, the total number in each case that was available, exhibiting marked differences in the form of the nasal aperture, the breadth between the orbits, and the form of the orbit. Mr. Hall contributes a short note on palæolithic implements, and a discussion of the question of the early appearance of iron, which he dates back to the time of the Old Empire. Mr. H. R. Tate contributes to the Journal ethnographical notes on the Kikuyu tribe of British East Africa, and Mr. C. Hill Tout an elaborate and valuable ethnological report on the Stseelis and Skaulits tribes of the Halkomelem division of the Salish of British Columbia, prepared under the auspices of the Government Grant Committee of the Royal Society. Mr. R. E. Latham furnishes notes on some ancient Chilian skulls and other remains, and Mr. R. H. Mathews a philological paper on the Wiradyuri and other languages of New South Wales. The Rev. W. O'Ferrall contributes translations of a very interesting collection of native stories from Santa Cruz, the Reef Islands, and Duff Island. In Man Mr. J. Edge-Partington warns collectors against forged ethnographical specimens from the New Hebrides, and figures an object recently acquired by him, manufactured by the natives for the purpose of barter, and not being or representing any real implement.

The Corresponding Societies Committee of the British Association selected for special notice twenty-one contributions to anthropology made by seventeen local societies during the year ended May 31st, 1904. Mr. G. Clinch's paper on recent discoveries at Waddon, and Mr. W. F. Stanley's on recent excavations at Abydos, were communicated to the Croydon Natural History and Scientific Society; Mr. Appleby's notes on ancient stone crosses of Somerset, and Mr. Sydenham's on eighteenth-century token issues, to the Bath Natural History and Antiquarian Field Club; papers by Mr. Crump and Messrs. Crossland and Jolley on place-names to The Halifax Naturalist; and papers by the Rev. J. Griffith on Rhondda cairns, and Mr. T. H. Thomas on South Wales folk-lore, to the Cardiff Naturalists' Society. The other papers, each contributed to a separate local society, included Mr. Stafford on the maintenance of the erect posture, Mr. Meyrick's anthropometrical report on Marlborough College, Mr. Kennard on a palæolith from Grays, Dr. Colley March on the problem of lynchets, Mr. Mortimer on prehistoric jet ornaments from East Yorkshire, the Rev. R. A. Bullen on a late Celtic cemetery at Harlyn Bay, Mr. George on the Anglo-Saxon cemetery at Kettering, Mr. Gleave on the Roman wall near Hexham, Mr. Sutcliffe on the place-name "Low," and Miss Russell on some old names in Berwickshire. Scottish societies published papers by Mr. J. Devon on the study of the criminal, and by Mr. F. R. Coles on the stone circles of the north-east of Scotland. The Belfast Natural History and Philosophical Society had a paper by Mr. R. J. Ussher on the evidence of the caves.

By the courtesy of Lord Avebury, who was President of the first International Congress of Sociologists, held in Paris, a meeting will shortly be held at his house in St. James's Square to set on foot the necessary organization for the meeting of the Congress to be held in London in 1906. Persons interested in the subject and desirous to serve on the general committee should communicate with the Secretary to the Sociological Society, 5, Old Queen Street, Westminster.

SOCIETIES.

ASTRONOMICAL.—June 9.—Mr. W. H. Maw, President, in the chair.—Mr. P. H. Cowell read a paper on the discordant values of the principal elliptic coefficients in the moon's longitude.—Lord Rosse read a note on his work on the determination of heat radiation from the moon. His results showed it to be surface heat, varying with the phase; he considered it to be absorbed and re-emitted. It was very slight at new moon, and attained a maximum at full moon.—Mr. Dyson read a paper by the Astronomer Royal on the diurnal variations of nadir and level of the Greenwich transit circle. The variation of the level has a period of 24 hours, with a maximum about 6 A.M. and a minimum at 6 P.M.; the variations of nadir are much smaller, and show less conclusive results.—Mr. A. R. Hinks gave an account of his paper on the determination of stellar proper motions without reference to meridian places, which was followed by some discussion.—The Secretary read a paper by Mr. Denning on the meteors from Biela's comet, and Dr. Downing described his own researches on the same subject.—Mr. Hinks gave an abstract of a paper by himself and Dr. H. N. Russell on a general scheme for obtaining stellar parallaxes from photographs taken at Cambridge Observatory. Dr. Russell gave the results already obtained for the parallax of Lalande 21185 and  $\gamma$  Virginis.

LINNEAN.—June 1.—Prof. W. A. Hardman, President, in the chair.—Mr. A. J. Dicks was admitted a Fellow.—The Rev. W. J. W. Anderson, Mr. E. R. Burdon, Miss K. M. Hall, Mr. F. W. Lucas, and Mr. H. F. Macmillan were elected Fellows.—Mr. H. E. H. Smedley exhibited models of restorations of some extinct Dinosaurs, Ceratosaurus, and Diplodocus, also of Ichthyosaurus, Plesiosaurus, Scelidosaurus, and Stegosaurus.—After the President had opened the discussion, Dr. A. Smith Woodward remarked that many of these restorations must still be considered hypothetical, for whilst the material for a reconstruction of the Ichthyosaurus was abundant enough to show the nature of its covering, in others we were still without accurate knowledge, even of the position assumed by the animals during life; the Plesiosaurus, it is now known, could not possibly have displayed the swan-like neck depicted, as its cervical vertebrae did not permit of sufficient movement.—Dr. C. W. Andrews (a visitor) and the Rev. T. R. R. Stebbing also contributed remarks.—On behalf of Mr. J. F. Waby, the General Secretary exhibited two photographs of a palm, Corypha elata, which had been previously mentioned. At the general meeting of June 18th, 1903, photographs were shown of two specimens of equal age: one had normally flowered, fruited, and died; the other, instead of flowers, had thrown up a secondary central growth of leaves. The information now sent completes the record; the survivor in its turn had flowered and died, the inflorescences being developed from the secondary crown of foliage. On being cut down it proved to be 68 ft. in height, diameter at base 3 ft. 6 in.; diameter at base of secondary growth, 1 ft. 10 in. The secondary growth itself was 4 ft. in height, and the height of the spadix an additional 20 ft. 5 ft. of this being bare stem, the remaining 15 ft. crowded with twenty-nine huge branches. The crop of fruit numbered over 51,000 and weighed half a ton, most of the spadices being abortive.—Mr. C. B. Clarke remarked that though this palm grew in the Calcutta Botanic Garden, he had never noticed this abnormal behaviour, though branching in palms occurred in many species.—The General Secretary exhibited sundry rarities from the books and manuscripts of Linnaeus, especially three which had been lost sight of owing to their having been placed amongst the manuscripts which remained unbound. Each exhibit was explained, with the circumstances attending its production, and its special interest indicated.—The President remarked that, in spite of what had been done in bringing to light certain items in the collections of Linnaeus, doubtless much yet remained to be discovered, and instanced the fact of his exhibiting the artificially produced pearls from the Linnaean Cabinets. He suggested that possibly among the Linnaean manuscripts there might yet exist some documents still unutilized which would throw light upon the procedure adopted by Linnaeus as regards pearl-mussels.—The last item was a paper by Mr. R. N. Rudmose Brown, on 'The Botany of Gough Island: Part II. The Cryptogams, exclusive of the Ferns and Unicellular Algae.'—The President said that when Part I. of this paper was read on May 4th it had been suggested that a visit to the Tristan da Cunha group might form part of the programme of the Cape session of the British Association. The matter had, however, received so little outside support that the project had been abandoned.

PHILOLOGICAL.—June 2.—Rev. Prof. Skeat, President, in the chair.—Prof. Napier read a paper on a number of Old English words. The first group of words discussed is contained in a few eleventh-century Bury St. Edmunds documents written on some fly-leaves in a MS. of the Benedictine Rule in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, which Prof. Napier is editing for the Early English Text Society. The most interesting of these words are: scor, "a score," from the O. Norse skor; stott, glossed by "equus vilis," the parent of Chaucer's "ful good stot," on which the Reve rode; sceppe, "a measure (of malt, wheat, &c.)," from O. Norse skeppa, whence comes the skep, "a basket," of the modern English dialects; smolt, "lard" (which, it is true, also occurs as a gloss to pinguedo in Æthelwold's 'De Consecratione Monachorum'): it is the same as the Mod. Dutch smout and Low German smolt. In the various hundreds of Suffolk, St. Edmunds possesses so many manslot, which is no doubt an Anglicized form of the O. Norse mannshlutr. The older dictionaries record these words, but the reference given by Lye, and copied, without verification, by others, is wrong, viz., to the MS. of the Reg. Ben. in the library of C.C.C., Cambridge, instead of Oxford; hence the compilers of the more recent dictionaries, being unable to find the words in the MS. referred to, rejected them, though Prof. Schröder in his edition of the O.E. version of the Reg. Ben. called attention to one of them, viz., scor, overlooking the others. Amongst other O.E. words from other MSS. to which attention was called may be noted trendan, "to roll," whence Mod. E. to trend, which occurs in an O.E. proverb published by Zupitza in the first volume of Anglia: "an apple never rolls (trendað) so far as not to show from which tree it came"; the reason why this has been hitherto overlooked is probably because Zupitza suggested that it was a mistake for trendað (from trendlian), an already recorded word; but Prof. Napier in his volume of 'Old English Glosses' has already called attention to the gloss sintrendende, "round" (literally "ever turning"), and to the verb fortrendan, used in the sense of "to close [Christ's tomb] by rolling a stone to the entrance." The compound mealt-calo, "malt-ale," is not recorded in the dictionaries, but occurs in an eleventh-century prescription for the cure of wens, the same fragment containing the only recorded instances of liferwyr, "liverwort," and piporewyr, "a pepper-mill." Words like niht, "night," ceoman, "to chew," drincan, "to drink," are well known, but none of the dictionaries have genihtian, "to grow dark," gecom, "a chewing," or gedrinca, "a cup-bearer," the first two of which occur in the Verelli MS. Halgungboc, "a benediction," has escaped the dictionary compilers, though the passage in which it occurs has been printed at least six times from Wanley onwards. Other unrecorded compounds were sleghrader, "an ox for slaughtering," affringelað, "an offering cloth," geargemynd, "day of yearly celebration," &c. In conclusion Prof. Napier discussed a number of O.E. ghost-words which he had been able to trace to their sources, such as behydignes, "a desert," swyllt, "a whirlpool," bys, "a storm," &c. He hopes to print his collected material in the course of this summer.

SOCIETY OF BIBLICAL ARCHEOLOGY.—June 14.—Prof. A. H. Sayce read a paper on 'The Hittite Inscriptions Translated and Annotated.' The author said that this concluded his series of papers on the Hittite texts. Their decipherment had now progressed so far that it was possible to give connected translations of the better-preserved inscriptions. After briefly describing the nature of the key which finally unlocked them, he referred to the various verifications of its correctness which, with the increase of our materials, are constantly coming to light. The values already obtained for the characters give, without forcing, the requisite geographical and personal names in each fresh text to which they are applied.—Tyana, for example, at Tyana, Carchemish at Carchemish, Mames in Pisidia—and lead on to the discovery of the values of other signs. Explanations turn up unexpectedly of geographical titles found on the Assyrian monuments—e.g., of the Akhlamê, who inhabited the district of Carchemish, and whose name is written in the Carchemish texts letter for letter as it is in the cuneiform. Even the grammatical affixes to words found in the cuneiform tablets of Arzawa recur in the same positions in the hieroglyphic texts; and the theological conceptions disclosed by the translation of the inscriptions are just those which were peculiar to Asia Minor. Above all, the translations not only flow naturally and necessarily from the application of the key, but prove to be in accordance with probability and common sense; while the whole system of decipherment is (what every correct system ought to be) progressive, one discovery leading to another, and serving to confirm and verify the results already obtained. The author has recently been studying the originals of many of the texts in the magnificent museum of Constantinople, where every assistance was liberally afforded him, and has thus been able to correct the errors which are inseparable even from casts and photographs. Translations were given of the Carchemish, Hamath, and other texts, some of which can be translated with a fair amount of certainty, while of others only a partial rendering can at present be attempted. But the extensive use made in them of ideographs and determinatives goes far to explain their meaning. The prince to whom the Hamath texts are due bore the name of Arki-suanna. The inscriptions are for the most part architectural or theological.

MATHEMATICAL.—June 8.—Prof. A. R. Forsyth, President, and, temporarily, Prof. W. Burnside, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. V. Ramaswami Aiyar was elected a Member.—The President announced that the Council had awarded the De Morgan Medal for 1905 to Dr. H. F. Baker for his researches in pure mathematics.—The following papers were communicated:—'On the Conditions of Reducibility of any Group of Linear Substitutions' and 'On Criteria for the Finiteness of the Order of a Group of Linear Substitutions,' by Prof. W. Burnside;—and 'On a Class of Many-Valued Functions defined by a Definite Integral,' by Mr. G. H. Hardy.—Informal communications were made as follows:—'The First Principles of Cauchy's Theory of Functions,' by Mr. G. H. Hardy;—and 'Differential Equations whose Integrals are expressible by Partial Quadratures,' by Prof. A. R. Forsyth.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- TUES. Asiatic, 4.—'Muhammadan Talismans from the Maldiv Islands,' Rev. S. Stitt.
- WED. Meteorological, 4.—'Normal Electrical Phenomena of the Atmosphere,' Mr. G. C. Simpson; 'Two New Meteorological Instruments,' (1) Automatic Pole Star Light Recorder, (2) The Umbroscope, Mr. S. P. Fergusson.
- British Archaeological Association, 8.—'Notes on the Ninth Iter of Antoninus, with Special Reference to the Sites of Venta Icenorum and Setomagus,' Rev. Dr. Astley.
- Folk-lore, 8.—'Notes on the Legend of Merlin and on Joseph of Arimathea and his Connexion with Britain,' Dr. Gaster.
- Geological, 8.
- Microscopical, 8.—'Theories of Microscopical Vision' (second paper), Mr. A. E. Conrady; 'The Tubercle Bacillus,' Mr. E. M. Nelson.
- THURS. Antiquaries, 8½.

Science Gossip.

The Journal of the Geographical Society of Paris contains a very interesting paper by the well-known traveller Lucien Fournau, on the drying up of the rivers in Central Africa. As the head of the flotilla on the Lower Niger, he was in a position to take constant and accurate measurements during 1903 and 1904, and he found that the volume of water decreased with alarming rapidity, so that the steamers of the Niger Company cannot go to Djebba, as they could do easily fifteen years ago. The reports of the natives bear out these statements, and many islands which had to be periodically deserted by their inhabitants no longer run the risk of being flooded.

The International Congress of Anatomists will be held at Geneva from August 6th to 10th, and will be attended by distinguished representatives from England, France, Germany, &c.

We referred in our number of March 4th to the question of the adoption of a standard time for India, which seemed at last on the eve of settlement. It is now officially announced that the new time will be introduced into all telegraph, postal, and railway offices on the 1st of July next. In large commercial towns like Calcutta and Bombay the Government of India is prepared to introduce standard time in their offices and courts, "if local opinion shows itself agreeable to accept the alteration." There is no doubt that opinion generally will be in favour of the change.

Two new small planets were photographically discovered by Dr. Götz at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg, on the 28th ult. Dr. J. Palisa, of Vienna, has published in No. 4024 of the Astronomische Nachrichten the results of visual observations he has obtained of some of the recently discovered bodies of this class. The whole number now known is approaching six hundred.

Herr A. WEDEMAYER, of Berlin, has computed elliptic elements of Giacobini's comet ( $\alpha$ , 1905), and obtains a period of 279 years, somewhat longer than that determined by Messrs. Crawford and Maddrill, and mentioned in our 'Science Gossip' on the 3rd inst. In other respects the results are very nearly the same, so that the true period is probably between 250 and 260 years.

THE Berliner Astronomisches Jahrbuch for 1907 has just been received. The data are as in the previous year, and the solar, lunar, and planetary places are formed from the same tables as in 1906. Elements of the orbits of 521 small planets, the last of these being Brixia, which was discovered by Herr Dugan at Heidelberg on January 10th, 1904, are included; also opposition ephemerides for forty of those which come into opposition this year. It is mentioned that of the 553 small planets announced up to the end of last March, 374 have been observed at four or more oppositions, 31 at three, 48 at two, and 100 at only one opposition, most of the latter being, of course, recent discoveries.

FINE ARTS

Medieval Art, from the Peace of the Church to the Eve of the Renaissance, 312-1350.
By W. R. Lethaby. (Duckworth & Co.)

A MORE accurate title for this book would have been 'Medieval Architecture,' for, with the exception of one chapter on 'French Sculpture and Painting,' it is almost entirely concerned with buildings, or with sculptures and mosaics, which perform the function of architectural decoration. Illuminations and ivories are mentioned only once or twice, and incidentally. Mr. Lethaby may vindicate his title by urging the enormously preponderant importance of architecture in the Middle Ages. This is perfectly true; yet the title is misleading, and inquirers who go to the book for guidance on other branches of art may be disappointed.

But as a sketch of the development of architecture and the arts auxiliary thereto this work deserves the most serious attention. We believe it to be the first English handbook that has ever appeared which will enable a careful reader to gain a comprehensive and ordered view of the history of architecture in Europe and the relations of the various schools. This achievement is not due merely to skill in presentation and exposition, though considerable skill is displayed. It is largely due to the fact that the author approaches the problems of the evolution of Western architecture with a thorough knowledge of Byzantine art, which has enabled him to appreciate the full significance of the brilliant investigations of Prof. Strzygowski, of Graz. A complete revolution in our conceptions of the origin and growth of Christian art has been, and is being, wrought by Strzygowski's labours, and Mr. Lethaby's readers will be enabled to understand its significance. The origin of Christian from classic art, not at Rome, but in the East, in the Hellenistic sphere, imposes at the outset a new conception of the interdependence of East and West. But this original and decisive Eastern influence was not exhausted in the initial stages, and Mr. Lethaby fully recognizes its continuance. Some passages which are significant of his general treatment of the development may be quoted. Speaking of "parcel-mosaic," he says:—

"It was this late Byzantine style acting on the West by many channels, by the migration of its artists, by the dissemination of ivories, MSS., bronzes, goldwork, textiles, and enamels, which gave the artistic impetus which led up to Romanesque art. The West, of course, contributed the ability and readiness to absorb and transform these influences."—P. 72.

"Wherever in Italy we see a school of architecture in course of formation, we shall find that it has its roots in a fresh Byzantine impulse."—P. 91.

And as to the so-called Lombardic School:

"The general style from the sixth to the eleventh centuries Cattaneo has called Italo-Byzantine, and he has rightly denied the existence of any specific Lombard School during this time except so far as it shows itself in barbarism. He has also pointed out that the first active and indigenous school to arise had its centre at Venice. It was indeed in origin strictly Byzantine, but in Venice it found such a congenial soil that it soon took root, and bore even finer fruit than at the same time in its original home."—P. 92.

Even the Romance art, as Mr. Lethaby would designate Gothic, which grew out of Romanesque in North France, though not due directly to Eastern influence, was nevertheless conditioned by the East. Gothic is "the architecture of towns, guilds, and masters who were free to pass from place to place," and the guilds of masons are probably Byzantine in origin. Such guilds were highly organized in Constantinople:—

"It is a curious fact that in the thirteenth century latomos, the Byzantine word for mason, was used in France and England. I suppose that workers in the West derived their customs and organization from groups of Byzantine artists working in Italy; and that it is to the existence of such groups in North Italy that we owe the easy transition of Lombard architecture over Western Europe, which ultimately led to the establishment of similar guilds and the development of Gothic."—P. 145.

The castle-building and military architecture of the Gothic period were, of course, directly due to the influence of the East consequent on the Crusades.

The question as to the geographical path by which the Eastern influences acted on the West, and led to the creation of Romanesque, has not been finally settled, and Mr.

Lethaby does not definitely commit himself to the extremely probable opinion of Strzygowski that they travelled through North Italy and Marseilles. But he adopts that scholar's view as to the dependence of the Romanesque type of church on the type of Syria, Asia Minor, and Armenia, which was characterized by "the use of vaulting instead of wood roofs, the absence of an atrium, a west façade having a porch between two towers, the use of piers as supports instead of columns, the addition of a square compartment before the apse, and the bringing of windows together in groups of two or three."

Mr. Lethaby lucidly states his own conclusion as follows:—

"There have been in the main two great and persistent types of church plan, and the final type of large Western churches was reached by combining the two. The first is the Congregational, basilican, or ship type of plan, with its long columned aisles; the second is the martyrion, circular, or cross type, usually entirely vaulted. Both were in use from the age of Constantine, but in certain parts of the East, as in Asia Minor, North Syria, and Armenia, the latter type was particularly favoured, and ultimately almost prevailed over the basilican type. In the seventh, eighth, and ninth centuries churches of the Eastern cross-type were frequently built in the West, and finally the aisled cross church of Romanesque type was reached by bringing the two types together."

But while Mr. Lethaby has assimilated the important results of foreign research, he is thoroughly independent in his judgments; he has thought everything out for himself, and impresses us with his mastery of the vast subject. The purpose and value of the book consist in the new conception of the general development, and the reader must not expect to find every celebrated monument described, or even mentioned. The only serious complaint we have to make is that more space has not been given to secular architecture. The author himself suggests that Castle-Gothic has been "neglected in the study of the evolution of the style." He might have devoted a paragraph or two to a description of the castle of Gisors or of Les Andelys. We think that he ought to have noticed the buildings of Paulinus at Cimitile, near Nola, which were probably modelled, as Bertaux has shown, on the buildings round the Martyrion of Christ at Jerusalem.

The book has succeeded in its design of showing "the unity in diversity of the stream of art which flowed down the centuries." The day has gone by for treating the various schools of art in the Middle Ages as separate compartments.

Paradise Lost. By John Milton. With Photogravures by William Strang. (Routledge.)—This is an excellently got-up edition, the print and paper are well chosen, and the proportion of type to the page is just. The photogravures from Mr. Strang's etchings are admirably reproduced. Indeed, for a cheap edition of Milton, nothing could be better planned, if we except the binding, which is not altogether agreeable. Mr. Strang's relation to his author is rather curious. For while on the one hand his sense of broad and simple design and stately unbroken contours brings him naturally into harmony with the Miltonic rhythm, on the other his total want of the feeling for sensuous charm, his essentially rugged and unlyrical tone, are in startling opposition to the spirit of the poem. In consequence his most unqualified success is in the noble portrait of Milton which forms the frontispiece, and in the title-page, where we have Milton playing to his daughters. In these there are a puritanical plainness and directness of expression which interpret Milton as a man finely. But Milton the poet seems to get out of Mr. Strang's range of sympathy. There is in his illustrations no trace of that "Doric delicacy" which Wootton noticed, and his Paradise seems a fitter place for the snake than for Eve. There is, of course, no scope here for Mr. Strang's peculiar sense of the grotesque which came out so admirably in his renderings of Mr. Kipling and 'Don Quixote'; for though, in a sense, Mr. Strang's feeling is classic, it is a classic grotesque peculiar and personal to himself that he expresses. We feel, therefore, that Milton did not supply the inspiration best suited to Mr. Strang's temperament, and that, since he has had the good sense not to go contrary to the spirit of his author, he has found himself limited and a good part of his natural talent prevented from expression. The result is that we detect a certain coldness, a want of zest and life in the imagery of his designs. But if they do not vividly stimulate the reader's imagination, it must also be said that they never distract or obtrude themselves unduly. And this is surely no small praise of Mr. Strang's taste and propriety of feeling. For to touch 'Paradise Lost' without striking a false note argues a fine sense of style, a rare discretion and restraint.

Mural Painting. By F. Hamilton Jackson. (Sands & Co.)—The idea of this book, and, indeed, of the whole series of "Handbooks for the Designer and Craftsman," is excellent, namely, to give in a short space all the available information, both of practice and principle, which the craftsman requires. Unfortunately its practical value is not very great. The processes of wall painting, particularly of fresco, are so complex, and in a Northern climate require such infinite precautions, that no artist need hope, with the aid only of a book like this, to set about such a performance. He will find here a number of recipes of all dates and all countries brought together, but none of them given with just those final details which make all the difference between theoretic and practical knowledge. There is, moreover, a lack of guidance in the selection of the best methods. Only one who had himself practised these various methods could, we think, give the needed advice. But even failing this, a few recipes given in the utmost detail would have been more helpful.

The amateur whose curiosity about methods only goes so far as the wish to understand in a general way the mode of production of works he admires will, of course, be able to learn a good deal from what is given, though even from this point of view the book is hardly satisfactory from want of information as to the date of the different methods described. Moreover, in such a connexion the historical sketch with which the book begins ought surely to have been a full history of changes in technique rather than what we find—a very brief and not very scholarly restatement of the outlines of Italian painting.

Besides fresco, which is treated at some length, the author describes spirit fresco, the method invented by Mr. Parry and employed by Lord Leighton at South Kensington; encaustic, the great method of the ancients, which has been revived from time to time in France with some success; and, finally, various oil processes, either directly on the wall or on canvas marouflé. Of these last the author speaks somewhat disparagingly, and every one would, we think, agree as to their inferiority to real fresco, or even to tempera, so far as the beauty and purity of the effect go; but for all that, oil processes on canvas have been employed in almost all the successful wall decorations of our day in Northern climates, and until it can be shown that a wall surface can be prepared so as to make fresco permanent in England, it seems as though some kind of oil—or, better still, wax and turpentine—medium on canvas was the most practical method. This was, after all, the method adopted by such great technicians as the Italians whenever they had to meet conditions, as at Venice, which at all corresponded with those of an English climate. There is a great deal of curious information in Mr. Jackson's book, and he is evidently well read in his subject; but lack of system and want of proper reference to authorities are serious drawbacks to its value.

English Embroidery. By A. F. Kendrick. (Newnes.)—The appearance of this book—at a time when the remarkable collection of English embroidery at the Burlington Fine-Arts Club has made a stir—is to be welcomed. For Mr. Kendrick, whose admirable introduction to the catalogue we inadvertently ascribed to another, is a master of his subject, and gives here an admirable survey of the whole history of English embroidery from Anglo-Saxon times to the eighteenth century. He writes, moreover, from a liberal and genuinely artistic standpoint, and is not carried away by a love of mere curiosity. To one who has studied and appreciated the great designs of the thirteenth and early fourteenth centuries, as Mr. Kendrick has, the grotesque extravagances of seventeenth-century stump-work, so dear to the collector, cannot appeal very forcibly, and he treats his whole subject with a due sense of proportion.

The most interesting part of the book, therefore, is devoted to the Romanesque and Gothic periods, beginning with the St. Cuthbert vestments at Durham of the early tenth century. These are reproduced, but unfortunately not on a large enough scale in view of their extraordinary importance. The next great work is the so-called tapestry of Bayeux, which the author admits is not, properly, English. It shows, indeed, a great falling off from the earlier Saxon work. There a strict Byzantine tradition was followed, which gave to the figures a singular nobility and beauty; in the Norman work we have a rather premature and childish effort at naturalistic and dramatic design, for which experience and tradition were alike wanting.

Then come the Worcester vestments, in which decorative form again asserts itself, and then the great series of copes, the Syon, Ascoli, Daroca, Bologna, and Pienza copes, and the chasuble at Anagni; and, finally, the Steeple Aston cope, in which at last such command of form and freedom of line is attained that dramatic effects are possible without loss of beauty. In treating of this period some authorities are likely to accuse Mr. Kendrick of too liberal an interpretation of the word English; and perhaps it would have added to the value of his book if he had discussed more fully the points of differentiation on which he has relied for his conclusions.

He then traces the gradual decline of the typical forms of this great period of embroidery throughout the fourteenth century, and the rise of a new conception of design, with figures and ornaments parsemé on a velvet ground, which replaces it in the fifteenth century. Of this effective, but comparatively coarse treatment, the Chipping Campden and Baunton altar frontals are the finest specimens.

With the Reformation the whole character and aim of the art change, and though we have many examples of delicate workmanship and refined taste—such, for instance, as Lord Falkland's "black work" tunic and the exquisite coverlets of the early eighteenth century—embroidery is no longer an art called on to express great imaginative ideas; it falls definitely into the rank of the minor arts.

Alphabets and Numerals. Designed and drawn by A. A. Turbayne. (Jack.)—This is one of the best books for practical purposes that we have had before us for a long time; we do not agree with the writer in every particular, but it is the product of a genuine taste, founded on a study of sound originals. We are glad to note that the provision of good examples for lettering seems likely to be recognized as a duty by art schools, whose authorities cannot do better than follow the example of Aberdeen in including a collection of specimens of fine antique Roman, Italian, and German inscriptions in their museum. Mr. Turbayne's first alphabet is founded on the lettering of Trajan's Column, and the curved serifs give it a very fine decorative effect. The second, and best in the book, is derived from the Pisa monument to Henry VII. We know no finer collection of inscriptions in Italy than that in the Campo Santa and on the west front of the Duomo there. The numerals of this alphabet are not so good. Plates v.-viii. are founded on Jenson's letter, with a contamination from Spira. We cannot agree with the notion that the latter's type counterfeits a pen-drawn letter to any extent, though we remember William Morris used to lay some stress on the influence of the pen as an element in its design. We should not recommend the lower-case of "condensed Gothic" unreservedly—the k, m, f, g, and s are unworthy of the rest of the fount; but it is much better than the "square serif" Gothic which follows. We have named Morris; his lower-case Gothic type seems almost the last word in legibility, while preserving the essential characteristics of the style. Mr. Turbayne, in his desire to avoid plagiarism, has probably gone out of his way not to adopt these forms, but one need not go wrong merely to emphasize another man's rightness. We recommend his book heartily to all who have to design lettering. They will find not only the plates but also the notes full of useful suggestion.

GERMAN BOOKS.

We have received several numbers of Hirth's Formenschatz, which maintains its reputation both for the choice of objects reproduced and the excellence of its reproductions. An ivory Bénéitier of the tenth century from the cathedral treasury at Aix-la-Chapelle, a very curious Byzantine reliquary from the same place, several superb specimens of Meissen porcelain, the consecration comb of St. Heribert, Rhenish ivory of about 1000 A.D., a curious Middle-Rhenish painting of a Liebespaar, and the tower of the Abbey of Charroux, a magnificent specimen of transitional Romanesque architecture, are among the more curious and unfamiliar examples of various arts contained in recent numbers.

Der Meister der Berliner Passion und Israhel van Meckenem.—Verzeichnis der Kupferstiche Israhels van Meckenem. Von Dr. Geisberg. (Strassburg, Heitz.)—We have here two contributions—No. 42 and No. 58—to "Studies in German Art History." No writer except Prof. Max Lehrs has done so much as Dr. Geisberg to dispel the darkness in which the early history of engraving in Germany was, till recently, involved. The work of the younger student is based to a large extent on the researches of his senior, who has generously placed at Dr. Geisberg's disposal all his notes on the engravings of Meckenem. After acquiring a thorough knowledge of the primitive engravers, Dr. Geisberg has turned his industry and acumen to good purpose by concentrating his attention on two artists of his own fatherland, Westphalia. His preliminary essay, published two years ago, proves that the so-called "Master of the Berlin Passion" (not the "Renouvier Passion" of 1446), a goldsmith who migrated to Bocholt, probably from Arnheim, about 1457, and died about 1465, was the father of Israhel van Meckenem, and that a local tradition, maintained till the eighteenth century, that two artists of that name had worked at Bocholt, was better founded than modern critics had supposed. The first should rightly be called Israhel van Meckenem the elder, but a full catalogue of his work has already been published by Prof. Lehrs under the current name, which serves better to distinguish him from his son. The work of the latter is analyzed with a patience and insight that are truly amazing, and with no waste of words. Even more remarkable is the amount of labour expended on the second volume; just published, which enumerates 570 engravings by Israhel van Meckenem the younger, as against 267 described by Passavant. The catalogue gives full particulars of the states of each engraving, their water-marks, the collections in which they occur, and every kind of information that the most thoroughgoing student can need, in the most condensed form. The only matter for regret is that the bulk of the catalogue was already in print before Dr. Geisberg made many new discoveries in visiting French and English collections last year; the corrections thus made necessary could only be introduced in an appendix, and the order of states described in the body of the work is not in all cases definitive. Only 102 engravings are regarded as original; the remainder are copies from the works of other artists, including no fewer than 215 after the master E. S.

Das radierte Werk des Anders Zorn. Bearbeitet von Fortunat von Schubert-Soldern. (Dresden, Arnold.)—The Swedish painter, sculptor, and etcher, Herr Anders Zorn, has a great reputation on the Continent and in America, though his work is at present little known in this country. His etchings, and especially such portraits as those of Renan, Verlaine, and Liebermann, are remarkable for vigour, grasp of character, and freedom from any mannerism or academic bias; they are remarkable, too, in contrast to most contemporary work, for their almost invariable adherence to the bitten line in its purity, unaided by any adventitious process. They are largely represented in public collections abroad, especially at Stockholm, Dresden, Berlin, and Budapest, and their importance fully justifies the publication of a separate catalogue. The work has been carried out by a competent author—the Director of the collection of engravings formed by King Frederick Augustus II. of Saxony, which supplements by the many rarities which it contains the better-known Royal Print-room at Dresden. The catalogue is not only clear and businesslike in arrangement, but also—unlike most German books of its class—a pleasant object to sight and touch. In type, spacing, and the proportion of the page it follows the best English models of recent date; good hand-made paper and a judicious use of red add to the attractiveness of the volume, which contains an original plate, Zorn's own portrait, and twenty collotype reproductions of other etchings.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL NOTES.

AMONG Capt. Croz's discoveries at Telloh, some account of which was given in The Athenæum of March 18th, is a statuette of a new king named Sumu-ilu, who reigned over Ur in the twenty-second century B.C. It is in hard black stone, probably granite, and owes its preservation to its having been made into a support for a vase. A notice of it appears in the Revue Archéologique for May-June, and it is hoped that a representation of it, with the inscription and a translation, will be published before very long. Perhaps it is a sign of the increased cordiality between France and England that three of the articles in this number of the Revue are in English.

The fourth and last volume of M. Amélineau's 'Nouvelles Fouilles d'Abydos' is now out, and may perhaps be reviewed at length later. It is as confused and as disorderly as its predecessors, and a great part of it is taken up with controversy, in which the author attempts to prove that his excavations were properly conducted, and that if he broke into pieces duplicate vases and committed the other acts of vandalism of which he has been accused, it was after consultation with, and by order of, the Service des Antiquités, who were anxious that no part of his finds should be sold to tourists. Without any desire to prejudge the matter, one would think that this was a question of fact, which could easily be decided by direct evidence. If all he says could be established, it would seem that he was badly treated in the sudden cancelling of his concession, and the handing over of his site to Prof. Petrie; but he has been so sweeping in his accusations of unfairness, repeated in this volume, against not only the last-named, but also M. Loret and M. Maspero, as the past and present heads of the Service, and Count von Bissing, that one is naturally disinclined to put faith in his theory of a kind of conspiracy against himself. Of the many objects included in the plates to this volume perhaps the most noteworthy is an ivory tablet bearing apparently the name of Den, which seems to be the duplicate and complement of one already published by Prof. Petrie in 'Royal Tombs II.'

Among the antiquities from Abydos lately added to the Ashmolean Museum is the fragment of a vase bearing the name of Az-ab, or Merbapen, who is now generally acknowledged to have been the Miebis of Manetho, and the third king of the last-named's first dynasty. It gives the king the title of "Uniter of the North," of which no instance had previously occurred, and this lends some colour to the theory, already indicated by his name being placed first on the list of kings in the tablet of Saqqarah, that it was he, and not Menes, who was the real founder of the Egyptian kingdom.

A new theory regarding these early vases has been started by M. Georges Foucart in a communication made by him this month to the Académie des Inscriptions. He argues, chiefly from specimens discovered at Negadah, and sometimes dignified with the name of prehistoric, that the object of the scenes painted on them was to assure the participation of the dead in the offerings made to the gods, and generally to provide for their subsistence in the next world. This would not only be strictly in accord with the ideas underlying the practice of magic among all primitive peoples, but would also be the prototype of those deduced from the Pyramid Texts, the Book of the Dead, and all the other forms of funereal literature peculiar to the Egyptians of historic times. But M. Foucart goes further, and seeks to discover in the already conventionalized forms of the different objects portrayed the origin of the hieroglyphic characters. If he succeeds in establishing his point he will have rendered a service of incalculable value to learning, but at present the theory seems to be a little in the air.

M. Capart succeeds M. Maspero as the compiler of the periodic 'Bulletin Critique des Religions de l'Égypte' in the Revue de l'Histoire des Religions. He frankly abandons the method of his predecessor, which was generally to seize upon some lately published work of importance, and make it a peg from which to hang one of his masterly dissertations upon some point of Egyptian religion which he had just excogitated. Instead, M. Capart plods steadily through the great mass of material accumulated since the last appearance of the 'Bulletin,' and divides it into heads, such as 'Culte des Animaux,' 'Livres de Géographie ['] Infernale,' and the like, devoting but two or three lines to each work, and producing a result as bald and dry as the 'Archæological Report' which Mr. F. Ll. Griffith yearly furnishes to the Egypt Exploration Fund. The publication with which M. Capart deals at most length is Dr. Budge's 'Gods of the Egyptians,' which he condemns for the lack of any connecting thread between the facts there detailed, and for some minor faults, such as absence of references and mutually contradictory passages. As to his main complaint, it seems to be answered by the state of chaos into which the native religions of Egypt fell during the period of five thousand years that they endured, and which makes one sometimes doubt whether an ancient Egyptian could have given any more coherent account of the creeds of his people than a modern historian. Or is it possible that there is a clue through the maze which has not yet been found? It may be noted that M. Capart, who seems to be now much in love with the methods of the Berlin School of Egyptology, adopts in this article a peculiarly objectionable method of transliteration, in which he denotes the different forms of d's and t's in which the Egyptian language abounds by numbers. This seems to combine all the defects of every form of transliteration yet suggested.

A new Jewish catacomb has been discovered in Rome, containing some sixty inscriptions in Greek and Latin. These last have been carefully removed to the Lateran Museum.

Fine-Art Gossip.

THE exhibition of the remaining works of G. H. Boughton, R.A., at the Leicester Galleries closes to-day. During the following week a series of seventy-five water-colours by Mr. Walter Tyndale will be on view, illustrating the Wessex of Mr. Hardy's novels.

AT the Æolian Hall last Thursday there was a private view of Mr. A. H. Savage-Landor's pictures of Tibet and Nepal, which will be on view till July 14th.

AT the Knoedler Galleries M. Theobald Chartran has an exhibition of portraits open.

MESSRS. CARFAX & Co. hold to-day a private view of works by members of the Society of Painters in Tempera.

AT the Rowley Gallery, Silver Street, Kensington, Mr. J. A. Rowley has on view an exhibition of oil paintings and water-colours by Mr. A. Ludovici.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 8th inst. a picture by F. Guardi, 'Ruins, Venice,' with figures, for 105*l*.

THE first International Art Congress is to be held at Venice from September 21st to 28th. Among the points to be discussed is the question of artistic copyright, and it is hoped that some agreement may be come to between the nations interested.

WE have received the following: 'Envoi de Fleurs,' by Toulmouche, etched by Marie Louveau-Rouveyre; 'Labourage Nivernais,' by Rosa Bonheur, etched by E. Salmon; 'A Lawn Tennis Party,' by Lavery, etched by Daniel Mordant; 'Primavera,' by Julius Rolshoven, etched by Th. Chauvel; and by the same engraver a rendering of Daubigny's 'Écluse dans la Vallée d'Optevoz, Isère.' With the exception of the last, none of the original paintings has any serious claim to consideration as a work of art, and there is nothing in the interpretation by the engravers to give it that character.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Hillier Festival.

AT the fifth concert of the Hillier Festival on June 7th, Gustave Charpentier's suite, 'Impressions d'Italie,' was given here for the first time in its entirety. This work was written nearly twenty years ago. The music is light, picturesque; the composer shows an eye for colour and a taste for programme-music. No special individuality is displayed, and it is open to question whether one or two movements from the work would not be more satisfactory than the complete suite; genre music of this kind is best taken in small quantities. The performance was good. Saint-Saëns's Symphony in c minor, composed expressly for the London Philharmonic Society in 1886, is a very clever, very effective work, yet one which shows more head than heart. M. Arthur de Greef, the Dutch pianist, displayed gifts of no common order in Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto; and yet, somehow or other, he did not actually reveal the romance of the music.

The programme of the sixth and last concert commenced with a Symphony in F by M. Théo Ysaye, brother of the well-known violinist, written last summer, and produced at Brussels in November. The composer is terribly in earnest, but earnestness is not a satisfactory substitute for inspiration. It is difficult to understand why the symphony was selected, or why it was placed at the head of the programme. In music of a less exacting form M. Ysaye may appear to greater advantage. A Concertstück for harp and orchestra, by M. O. Pierné, proved less pretentious and far more attractive. The composer gained the Prix de Rome in 1881 with his cantata 'Edith,' and since then he has written works of various kinds. It may be interesting to add that he succeeded César Franck as organist of St. Clothilde. The piece in question is exceedingly refined, and the solo part for harp (well rendered by Mlle. M. Stroobants) effective in the best sense of the term. The influence of Franck is undoubtedly felt in the music, but in a natural way. M. E. Deru gave an excellent performance of Bach's Violin Concerto in E; and some solos for viol da gamba, admirably rendered by M. E. Jacobs, deserve mention. The programme ended with M. Paul Dukas's clever Scherzo 'L'Apprenti Sorcier.' The next time Mr. Hillier gives a festival he will no doubt profit by the experience he has attained. There were praiseworthy features in the scheme, and some excellent performances; but when a foreign orchestra and foreign conductor appear in London they must be well able to stand the severe test of comparison.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Philharmonic Concert.

THE Symphony in A by Paul Juon, performed at the Philharmonic Concert last Thursday week, has a clever first movement, a lively Scherzo, a charming Romanze, and a bustling Finale. Most of the music seems made, and extremely well; but only in the Adagio does the composer speak to us from his heart. Miss Fanny Davies played Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto in the right spirit, though perhaps not in her happiest vein. M. Casals gave a most artistic rendering of Bach's Suite for 'cello solo in D minor.

Songs from David Herd's Manuscripts. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Hans Hecht. (Edinburgh, W. J. Hay.)—It is surprising how little attention has been paid by writers on Scottish history to the vast amount of available manuscript matter illustrating the old life of the people. The most vivid light is thrown upon the social and literary aspects of the time by many collections and letters which have never been published or even adequately catalogued. Dr. Hecht reminds us that David Laing's valuable collections form at present an unsurveyable chaos; of George Paton's extensive correspondence comparatively few specimens have been published; and important collections of Thomas Percy's letters—for example, those exchanged with William Shennstone—remain unused in the Manuscript Department of the British Museum.

Dr. Hecht's service in the matter of David Herd's manuscripts must be gratefully acknowledged. A recent authority has asserted that "Herd did for Scottish song what Bishop Percy had done for English ballads." This is an exaggeration. The honour of having revived English and Scottish popular poetry remains unreservedly with Thomas Percy, Robert Burns, and Walter Scott, whose knowledge and art lent adequate expression to the vivid emotions of the time. It is, however, both just, and, from an historical point of view, necessary to consider the share due to their collaborators, of whom Herd was the most prominent. The value of his collections of songs and ballads has never been contested. To the student of Scottish song prior to Burns they are indeed indispensable, and it is worth remarking that Burns himself, as is clearly shown (for the first time) in Henley and Henderson's "Centenary Edition," made extensive use of them in connexion with Johnson's 'Musical Museum.' They supplied him with the beginnings of over twenty songs: some set down by Burns's editors as wholly his own, and a few vaguely described as "old," while the rest have been "riddled with speculations or assertions more or less unwarrantable and erroneous." The original edition of Herd's collections was published in 1776. That edition, as well as Sidney Gilpin's reprint of 1870, have become bibliographical rarities. The Glasgow reprint of 1869 is more accessible. Both reprints, however, are unsatisfactory in so far as they do not deal adequately with the history of the particular songs, nor make any reference to their associated airs. This deficiency was complained of by Percy after the publication of the first edition. It has now been satisfied by Dr. Hecht on the basis of modern research. His edition is founded on the manuscripts themselves, the entire song-material contained in them being reprinted. Drawing-room considerations are wisely ignored, the book being avowedly addressed to the student and the antiquary. The notes chiefly illustrate Burns's arrangements of the texts for the 'Museum'; some are of special value as claiming for the poet verses which have not yet been assigned to him. The editor's introduction includes some characteristic letters which passed between Paton and Percy concerning Herd's collection, as well as brief biographies of Paton and Herd. Taken with Mr. John Glen's recent work on 'Early Scottish Melodies,' the book may be said to exhaust the theme of Scottish song before Burns. It is provided with a good index.

Musical Gossip.

VERDI'S 'Aida' was revived at Covent Garden last Saturday evening with a cast which was practically the same as that of last season. Signor Caruso was again the Radames, and sang the music of the part with full effect, his share of the duet at the close of the third act being admirably rendered. Here also Fräulein Destinn, the Aida, sang with marked fervour and dramatic power. In all respects Madame Kirkby Lunn satisfied the requirements of the rôle of Amneris; and Signor Scotti was an excellent Amonasro. Signor Mancinelli conducted.

UMBERTO GIORDANO'S 'Andrea Chenier' was performed at the Paris Théâtre Sarah-Bernhardt on June 3rd by the Sonzogno Company with marked success. The admirable interpreters were MM. Bassi and Sammarco, and Madame Tétrazzini. M. Campanini conducted.

ROBERT KAJANUS, conductor of the Symphony Concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra at Helsingfors, has just performed all Beethoven's symphonies in chronological order. One of the programmes included, by the way, Sir Edward Elgar's 'Cockaigne' Overture. A special concert was also given in memory of Rubinstein, the programme including the pianist-composer's First Symphony in F, and the E flat Concerto, the solo part of which was played by Prof. Lhévinne, of Moscow, one of Rubinstein's most gifted pupils.

MR. LEONI'S opera 'L'Oracolo,' the libretto of which is based upon the play 'The Cat and the Cherub,' is now being rehearsed at Covent Garden, and will probably be produced next week; also Gluck's 'Orfeo,' with Madame Kirkby Lunn as Orfeo, and Madame Ranny, the well-known French dramatic soprano, as Eurydice.

MR. ALICK MACLEAN'S opera 'The Hunchback' will be performed in the autumn at the Mainz Opera-House.

A COMMITTEE has been formed at Rome, under the presidency of Prince Barberini, for the purpose of erecting a monument to Palestrina at Palestrina, his native place.

THE death is announced at an advanced age of Franz Strauss, the father of Dr. Richard Strauss, formerly a member of the Court orchestra at Munich, and one of the finest performers on the horn in Europe. He also composed studies and various pieces for his instrument.

DR. CHARLES STEGGALL, who died June 7th, was born in 1826. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music under Sterndale Bennett, and in 1851 was appointed Professor of Harmony and the Organ at that institution. In 1864 the organistship of Lincoln's Inn Chapel was conferred on him. Steggall was a Bach enthusiast, and was honorary secretary of the first Bach Society from its establishment in 1849 to its dissolution in 1870. He wrote anthems, services, and pieces for the organ, and was musical editor of 'Hymns, Ancient and Modern.'

THE hundredth anniversary of the death of Luigi Boccherini, May 28th, 1805, has been celebrated in various cities of Italy—Lucca, where he was born in 1740, Florence, Milan, and Trieste. Like Haydn, his great contemporary, he was a prolific writer of chamber music; but his delicate little Minuet in A is the one piece which keeps his name in remembrance, so far as the general public is concerned.

Le Ménestrel of June 11th mentions the recent performance at the Royal School of Wurzburg of an unpublished Adagio for clarinet and strings by Richard Wagner. The piece is dedicated to the clarinetist Christian Rummel, who from 1815 to 1841 was capellmeister at Wiesbaden, where he died in 1849.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |   |
|--------|---|
| SUN.   | Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.                                 |
| MON.   | Mischa Elman's Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.                                |
| —      | Herr J. Mossel's 'Cello' Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.                       |
| —      | Miss Muriel Foster and Mlle. Chaminade's Recital, 3.30, Bechstein Hall. |
| —      | Messrs. Fryer, Newman, and Walenn's Trio Concert, 8.15, Æolian Hall.    |
| —      | Kubelik's Jubilee Concert, 8.30, Queen's Hall.                          |
| —      | Madame Hortense Paulsen's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.          |
| TUES.  | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.   |
| —      | Miss Eveline Barton's Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.                          |
| —      | Miss P. Allen and Mr. Archdeacon's Concert, 8.15, Æolian Hall.          |
| —      | Mlle. Rosa Oltzka's Song Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.                 |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.   |
| WED.   | Miss Evie Greene's Song Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.                       |
| —      | The New Trio and Miss Florence Dawnay's Concert, 3, Æolian Hall.        |
| —      | Miss Janotha's Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.                                |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.   |
| THURS. | Miss Mueller's Concert, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.                           |
| —      | Philharmonic Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.                                  |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.   |
| FRI.   | Mr. H. Witherspoon's Song Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.                   |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.   |
| SAT.   | Mr. Boris Hambourg's 'Cello' Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.                   |
| —      | British Festival, 3, Crystal Palace.                                    |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.   |

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

WALDORF.—Performances of Eleonora Duse.
—La Locandiera; La Visita de Nozze;
Adriana Lecouvreur.

MIRANDOLINA, in 'La Locandiera' of Goldoni, is one of the characters in which Signora Duse was seen on her first appearance twelve years ago at the Lyric. It is noteworthy as the brightest and, if we except Cyprienne in 'Divorçons,' the sunniest part in her repertory. It is that also in which her company yields her most effective support. It is difficult to recognize in the dull and rather somnolent interpreters of modern French drama the animated exponents of eighteenth-century Venetian comedy.

As Signora de Cygnerol, in an Italian rendering of 'Visite de Noces,' the rather morbid satire of Alexandre Dumas, the diva essays a part belonging to Aimée Desclée, with whom her art has much in common. So few opportunities does the character offer the actress that one wonders what precise temptation it held forth. As when it was first seen, we hesitate to believe that a noble woman, such as from a French standpoint the heroine is, would expose herself to an ordeal such as is faced. That question may be left where Dumas has placed it in his answer to the strictures of Sarcey. In acting one moment's chance is afforded Signora Duse—that in which, with ineffable loathing, she wipes off the stain of the impure and dishonouring caress she has provoked. In this the great artist was at her best.

In 'Adriana Lecouvreur' the actress enters the lists against a series of rivals, living or dead, extending from Rachel to Madame Bernhardt. Her performance of the heroine of Scribe and Legouvé exhibits no new phase of her genius. It has, however, that special gift of reticence in surrender which is an essential portion of La Duse's art. How far this grace is appropriate in the case of Adrienne we know not. Nothing in her recorded career distinguishes her from the French actresses of the early eighteenth century, who were no more distinguished for reserve than their predecessors and successors. That the devotion of the great actress to her distinguished lover, exemplary as it was, did not prevent her from giving him cause for jealousy, we know, and we know no more. The method adopted has at least the advantage of assigning the scenes of love-making exemplary allurement, and those of death pathos no less conspicuous. In the scene in which, by means of the recitation from Racine, Adrienne brands her princely rival, Signora Duse showed much power and some passion. Were her method in scenes of the kind universally adopted, a revolution in art, the full significance and import of which are not easily to be estimated, would be effected. The general performance is less intelligent than we should have expected under Signora Duse's direction.

TERRY'S.—Performances of Madame Réjane.
—L'Hirondelle; Madame Sans-Gêne.

OF the many pieces in which Madame Réjane has been seen at Terry's Theatre, two only — 'L'Age d'aimer' and 'L'Hirondelle'—are novelties. The latter, a comedy in three acts and four tableaux, by M. Dario Nicodemi, was first seen in New York, and has since been given in Brussels, but has not yet received the Paris imprimatur. It has a moderately interesting story, but no more claim to originality than is obtained by slightly changing the relations of the various characters taking part in a commonplace complication. Sylvie Desnoyers, whose character may be inferred from the name generally bestowed upon her of L'Hirondelle, is the mistress of a certain Horace Lenoir, a solicitor, whose younger brother Lucien is in love with her daughter, Madeleine Desnoyers. Some strong, but not too conceivable, situations are brought about before the mother—in order to secure the happiness of her daughter, whose hand is asked in marriage by Lucien—gives up her long-maintained liaison. It may be said with Judge Brack that people don't do such things. If we grant, for the sake of argument, that they do, the effect produced may be regarded as stimulating. Madame Réjane displays her well-known and brilliant gifts as Sylvie, M. Félix Huguenet makes what can be made of Horace, and M. Pierre Magnier, as Lucien, shows himself a capable jeune premier. Madame Jeanne Bergé gives a clever sketch of Miss Smithson, an English governess.

On Monday Madame Réjane reappeared in what, though not free from a touch of caricature, is perhaps the most original and stimulating part in her repertory, Madame Sans-Gêne. In this she showed her old magic. The general performance, which included M. F. Huguenet as Lefebvre, M. Duquesne as Napoléon, M. Revel as Neipperg, Madame Suzanne Avril as La Reine Caroline, and Mlle. Félyne as La Princesse Élixa, had every element of popularity. All that is to be asked of an actress whom playgoers are in a conspiracy to spoil is the extension by her of a little courtesy to her public. To begin at half-past eight a performance announced for eight is ungracious, if it is not unwise.

ST. JAMES'S.—The Man of the Moment: a Comedy in Four Acts. From the French of Alfred Capus and Emmanuel Arène by H. Melvill.

IN 'L'Adversaire,' produced at the Renaissance on October 23rd, 1903, M. Capus, with the collaboration of M. Arène, who is known in political as well as journalistic circles, rose from the position of a purveyor of the lightest and sauciest comedy to that of one of the most faithful portrayals of social life. Between the promise of 'Brignol et sa Fille' and the performance of 'L'Adversaire' less than nine years have elapsed—nine years, however, charged with remarkable accomplishment. Throughout the short career, less than a dozen years in all, which has made him, perhaps, the most considerable of living French dramatists, M. Capus has displayed the rarest of gifts, establishing himself as a satirist without gall, and an observer less anxious to be witty than just. The subject of 'L'Adversaire' is adultery, the only subject, it is to be conceded, in which France or that part of England which derives thence its tastes or its views consents to be interested. In no other modern play with which we are familiar is conjugal offence treated with equal sobriety. Between the relentless utterances of Dumas fils and the sane condemnation of M. Capus there is the widest of differences. Let it be granted that the infidelity of Marianne Darlay is so gratuitous and unworthy as to be scarcely conceivable. This is an unquestionable blot, though the only one in the piece. All sophistry concerning the manner in which such an action may be condoned or accepted is brushed away, and the behaviour of the husband is exemplary in its inflexibility and its temperance. The title of the original means no more than that, under given conditions, one of the parties to a nuptial contract stands in an attitude of formal and perhaps fatal antagonism to the other, a sense to which nothing in the name of the English piece corresponds.

Not altogether simple or easy is the task of fitting to the English stage a question such as is raised in 'L'Adversaire.' Luckily the conditions inherent in the problem were prohibitive of those processes of tinkering which justify an Englishman in calling his translation an adaptation, and dubbing himself a dramatist. Mr. Melvill has left his scene and characters in France, where alone the action is conceivable. He has confined himself in the main to a simple translation of the original, though by those familiar with 'L'Adversaire' an occasional euphemism such as English prudery likes and English authority occasionally demands may be traced. When Madame Grécourt demands of her daughter concerning her husband, "Il n'a pas de maîtresse?" the English equivalent is something like "Has he any strong flirtations?" The method adopted is so far judicious that the result is a success. Interesting and stimulating throughout, and convincing and conclusive in its moral, the piece attains in the third act a point of remarkable intensity. In the scene in which the hero wrings from his wife the confession of her guilt, Mr. Alexander rose once more to a point of earnestness and passion reminding one of earlier days, and was seen at his best, while Madame Le Bargy, the creator of the leading rôles in 'Le Bercail' and 'Le Retour de Jérusalem,' made an eminently successful début on the English stage. Speaking our language admirably, and possessing a bright physiognomy and an excellent method, she proved herself so genuine an artist, that we trust, though with no very sanguine faith, she may be induced to stay in our midst.

SHAKSPEAREANA.

STUDENTS of our greatest poet will note with pleasure the appearance of the facsimile published by Messrs. Methuen of Mr. William Shakspeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies: 1664, or what is briefly known as the Third Folio. P. C. (Peter Chetwynde) first published the volume in 1663, and in the next year he reissued it with the addition of seven plays, 'Pericles' and six others, which have no genuine claim to be Shakspeare's, though their ascription to him shows that publishers fully appreciated the selling value of so great a name. It is a reasonable assumption that the rarity of the Third Folio is due in part to the destructive effect of the Fire of London in 1666. Recent prices paid for defective examples of this Folio are 50*l.* and 52*l.* last year, and for much better copies two years ago 307*l.*, 510*l.* (1663 edition), and 570*l.*

Now we have an excellent reproduction of this precious volume, neatly bound, at a price which is, in view of the work involved, most moderate. And, as the edition is limited, this reproduction itself will rapidly become a rarity. It is a custom, dating as far back as Johnson, to regard the First Folio as all-important, and the later ones as negligible. "The truth is," says Johnson, in his preface to his edition of Shakspeare (1765),

"that the first is equivalent to all others, and that the rest only deviate from it by the printer's negligence. Whoever has any of the folios has all, excepting those diversities which mere restorations of editions will produce. I collated them all at the beginning, but afterwards used only the first."

This last sentence explains the merit to the worthy doctor of his standpoint: it saved him a good deal of time and labour. In the main he was right; but it does not seem to have occurred to him that corrections of nearly contemporary authority have a much greater value than those of a later century made by aspiring editors. The varieties of the folios, too, seem to indicate more than the personal equation of the compositor. They all belong to a time when the original representations of the plays were among living memories, and we hope that Messrs. Methuen's enterprise will encourage study of Shakspeare's period, and put out of date and repute the wild conjectures which are supposed to be facts by the ignorant only.

We have carefully examined vol. ii. of The Works of Shakspeare in the admirable limited edition on hand-made paper which is being produced by the Shakspeare Head Press of Stratford-on-Avon, and we find Mr. Bullen's text again most judicious. He is sparing of emendation, and while he does not preserve the many fantasies of spelling in which the First Folio indulges, he retains interesting forms like "bankrout," and "pease" in the line ('Love's Labour's Lost,' V. ii. 315)

This fellow pecks up wit as pigeons pease.

"Pease" is, indeed, the only correct form here, since "peas" implies a singular "pea" of much later formation, derived from an apparent plural which is really a singular. Six lines earlier we prefer the reading of the Third and Fourth Folios:—

Whip to our tents, as roes run o'er the land.

But Mr. Bullen's is defensible, and superior to two corruptions we find in modern editions. Here, as a matter of fact, alterations are too trilling to matter, but the principle is important, that Shakspeare's text should be treated with the same care for the best documentary authority that we find in classical editions. The Chandos portrait is the frontispiece to this volume, the Droeshout one having appeared in the first issue.

Dramatic Gossip.

'BROOKE OF BRAZENOSE,' described as a costume play in three acts, by Neville Doone and T. R. F. Coales, was given at the Criterion on the afternoon of the 8th inst. It shows the conversion of a foolish freshman into a man of fashion by means of a system consisting principally of practical jokes. Some amusement was caused by the performances of Mr. George Giddens, Mr. Edmund Gurney, and others; but the pictures of academic life under George III. were singularly unconvincing. The supposed undergraduates to whom the action was entrusted were mainly men of ripe years.

'YOU NEVER CAN TELL' has reappeared at the Court, where it will be played until the close, a fortnight hence, of the season.

MR. BERNARD SHAW is said to have written a play, the central figure in which is a major in the Salvation Army, to be presented by Miss Eleanor Robson. He has also written 'Passion, Poison, and Petrification; or, the Fatal Gazogene,' a "tragedy," to be given on July 14th at the Botanical Gardens for a benefit. The action of this occupies twelve minutes.

AFTER a "tremendous reception" at Drury Lane on Saturday last in 'Waterloo' and 'Becket' Sir Henry Irving promised a reappearance next year at the close of a three months' tour in America.

DURING next season Miss Ellen Terry will appear, under the management of Mr. Charles Frohman, in a new play, concerning which and the scene of production no information is as yet forthcoming.

MISS TERRY's part in 'Alice Sit by the Fire' will be played in America by Miss Ethel Barrymore.

'HAWTHORNE, U.S.A.,' has had but a short run at the Imperial, having been already supplanted by a revival of 'Monsieur Beaucaire,' with Miss Evelyn Millard as the heroine. A four-act play by Mr. Alfred Sutro, entitled 'The Way of a Fool,' is promised by Mr. Waller for the autumn.

'THE NEW FELICITY,' a three-act comedy by Miss Laurence Alma Tadema, is, with 'Tomorrow,' in one act, by Mr. Joseph Conrad, to be given by the Stage Society at the Royalty on the 26th inst.

ON his return next year to London Mr. William Collier will appear in 'On the Quiet,' a farce by Mr. Augustus Thomas, which has made a reputation in America.

'THE LAND' is the title of a play by "Padraic Colum," produced by the Irish Literary Theatre at the Abbey Theatre, Dublin. Its theme is the contrast between the devotion of the Irish peasant to the land and the desire of the younger generation for a fuller or gayer life.

MISCELLANEA

THE PEDIGREE OF THE BRUCES.

Viewforth, Cramond, N.B.

IN the new 'Scottish Peerage' which is being edited by Sir James Balfour Paul, Lyon King at Arms, as an improved recension of the second edition of the 'Peerage' compiled by Sir Robert Douglas of Glenbervie, a serious mistake in that edition is copied. In the account there of Robert de Brus, the second Lord of Annandale, who was confirmed in his Scottish lands by King William the Lion in 1166, it is stated that he died in 1194, leaving two sons, Robert and William, the first of whom married in 1183 Isabella, a bastard daughter of King William by the daughter of Robert Avenel, and died s.p. before his father in 1191, in which year his widow was married to Robert de Ros, an English baron who was afterwards one of those appointed to enforce the observance of Magna Carta by King John. The evidence given for these statements is two entries in the 'Chronicle of Melrose' under the years above mentioned, but that they have been misread by the peerage writers will be evident from the following references to other documents.

At some time between 1193 and 1199 Robert de Brus granted a charter to the abbot and monks of Melrose, giving and confirming to them "that part of Whitton," in the present parish of Morebattle and shire of Roxburgh, "which he owns." The witnesses to this charter, including Jocelin, Bishop of Glasgow, and R[obert], his archdeacon, fix the date ('Liber S. Mariæ de Melrose,' vol. i. No. 169). Even more conclusive is another charter in the same cartulary (vol. i. No. *72), given by Walter, son of Alan, son of Walter, Dapifer of the King, who succeeded to the stewardship on the death of his father in 1204 ('Chron. de Melrose,' s.a.), confirming his grandfather's grant of Mauchline, in Ayrshire, to the Abbey of Melrose, and witnessed among others by "Dominus Robertus de Brus et Willelmus frater ejus." Finally, in the first volume of Joseph Bain's 'Calendar of Documents relating to Scotland preserved in H.M. Public Records,' the entry No. 605 (dated erroneously 1194-1215) contains an agreement, the original of which is one of the charters of the Duchy of Lancaster, between William de Brus and William de Heineville, in which the former gives to the latter lands and pasture in Annandale, "which had been held by the granter's father, and brother Robert de Brus."

These documents prove clearly that Robert de Brus, son and heir of the Robert who was second Lord of Annandale, survived his father for thirteen years at least, and that it was not he, but his father, that married the natural daughter of William, King of Scots. His father was still living in 1189, when he granted to the Church of Glasgow three churches in Annandale, in a "chirograph," No. 197 in the first volume of Bain's 'Documents,' which is witnessed by his two sons, Robert de Brus, "agreeing," and William de Brus; and he must have died soon after, either in the same year, or in one of the two succeeding. The elder son either remained unmarried, or died s.p., for he was succeeded in Annandale at some time between 1204 and 1215 by his brother William, who seems to have inherited the English lands of the family at his father's death. He appears in Bain's 'Documents' in possession of the lands of Hesternes in Northumberland in 1198, and is found accounting in the Pipe Roll of 1201-2 for 20 marks, for having a weekly market on Wednesday and an annual fair of three days in August in Hartlepool, and elsewhere as giving the manor of Ellington to William de Mesnille Durande, a Norman knight. He probably died before May 5th, 1215, when King John commanded the Treasurer and Chamberlain to pay 30 marks by way of gift to Robert de Brus. This Robert, son and heir of William, married Isabella, the second daughter of David, Earl of Huntingdon, and so became great-great-grandfather of King Robert de Bruce. ROBERT AITKEN.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—E. D.—W. M.—received.

N. S.—M. D.—J. P. H.—Later.

R. B.—Many thanks.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST.

Catalogue sent post free on application

CHEAPER REISSUE. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE EVE OF THE REFORMATION

Studies in the Religious Life and Thought of the English People in the Period preceding the Rejection of the Romish Jurisdiction by Henry VIII.

By the Right Rev. Abbot GASQUET, D.D.

"Dr. Gasquet has produced a book which will set many men thinking. He has done an excellent piece of work, and has offered to students of history a highly interesting problem. He writes, as usual, in a lucid and attractive style. The controversial element is so subordinated to the scholarly setting forth of simple facts and the adroit marshalling of evidence, that one might read the volume through without being tempted to ask what the author's creed is, or whether he has any, and when one gets to the end one is inclined to wish that there were a little more."—Athenæum.

In 5 vols. 21s. net each; or, in half-morocco, 31s. 6d. net each.

BRYAN'S DICTIONARY OF PAINTERS AND ENGRAVERS.

A New Edition, Revised and Enlarged, under the supervision of

C. G. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D.,

Assisted by a Staff of Specialists.

With about 500 Illustrations, including 40 Photogravure Plates.

Illustrated Prospectus on application.

In this Edition upwards of 1,400 New Biographies have been added, and nearly 6,000 Corrections made in Articles that have been allowed to stand. In addition to this, 250 Lives have been partly rewritten.

"No one interested in the fine arts can afford to be without this comprehensive and indispensable dictionary." Full Mall Gazette.

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUE. 1s. net.

THE ANGEL IN THE HOUSE.

By COVENTRY PATMORE.

Pott 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 1s. net; or in limp leather, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. net.

DEFOE. By Albinia Wherry.

[Bell's Miniature Series of Great Writers. Ready June 21.]

THE YORK LIBRARY.

A NEW SERIES OF REPRINTS ON THIN PAPER. Small 8vo, 2s. net in cloth, and 3s. net in leather.

NEW VOLUMES.

CERVANTES' DON QUIXOTE. Motteux's Translation, Revised. With Lockhart's Life and Notes. 2 vols.

DRAPER'S HISTORY of the INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT of EUROPE. 2 vols.

THE THOUGHTS of MARCUS AURELIUS ANTONINUS. Translated by GEORGE LONG, M.A. With an Essay on Marcus Aurelius by MATTHEW ARNOLD.

PASCAL'S THOUGHTS. Translated from the Text of M. AUGUSTO MOLINIER by C. KEGAN PAUL.

JAMESON'S SHAKESPEARE'S HEROINES. Characteristics of Women: Moral, Poetical, and Historical.

ARTHUR YOUNG'S TRAVELS in FRANCE: DURING the YEARS 1787, 1788, and 1789. With Introduction, Notes, &c., by M. BETHAM EDWARDS.

SWIFT'S JOURNAL to STELLA. Edited by FREDERICK RYLAND, M.A.

Others to follow.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

DUCKWORTH & CO.'S LATEST PUBLICATIONS.

TURGUÉNEFF, TOLSTOY, GORKY, AND OTHERS. "BIOGRAPHICAL AS WELL AS CRITICAL."—Times.

IDEALS AND REALITIES IN RUSSIAN LITERATURE.

By PRINCE KROPOTKIN. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"Prince Kropotkin's book is admirable, and, so far, at any rate, as the later Russian literature is concerned, should supersede all other works of the kind in our language. The author not only knows the literature of which he writes. He also knows the life to which it relates, and out of which it has arisen. Consequently he writes with authority."—Times.
 "This most interesting volume is the best book of its kind that has appeared in England within the last ten years. There is nobody in England who can speak with such authority and such feeling on Russian writers and their sufferings. His intense and noble sympathy enables him to interpret as nobody before him has done."—Daily Chronicle.
 "PUSHKIN, LERMONTOFF, TURGUÉNEFF, TOLSTOY, DOSTOYEVSKY, GORKY, are a few of the masters whose works Prince Kropotkin discusses with sympathy and judgment."—Daily Mail.

METAPSYCHICAL PHENOMENA.

By Dr. JOSEPH MAXWELL.

With Prefaces by Sir OLIVER LODGE and Prof. CH. RICHET. Large crown 8vo, 10s. net.

A most important contribution to the study of phenomena known as "spiritistic," "occult," or, to use the term now suggested, "metapsychical." It presents a kind of interim report on a series of experiments extending over several years, undertaken in a spirit of pure investigation. The author states his conclusions in favour of the existence of physical forces as yet unrecognized by official science.

CRITICAL STUDIES AND FRAGMENTS.

By the late S. ARTHUR STRONG, M.A., Librarian to the House of Lords.

With a Memoir by LORD BALCARRES, M.P.

4 Portraits and 23 other Illustrations, Photogravure Frontispiece.
 Royal 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 16s. net.

AUGUSTE RODIN.

By CAMILLE MAUCLAIR.

With 40 Illustrations, Photogravure Frontispiece. Crown 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

"The public interest in the Michael Angelo of our time is more than ordinarily acute. We could have no better guide than M. Maclair.....giving us this illuminating study of a genius."—Daily News.

THE ITALIAN POETS SINCE DANTE.

By WILLIAM EVERETT. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

A study of the language and poetry of Italy, accompanied by a series of verse translations.

A NEW BOOK FOR READERS OF 'THE ROADMENDER.'

A MODERN MYSTIC'S WAY.

Uniform with 'The Roadmender.' 2s. 6d. net.

The anonymous Author of this Work was the intimate friend of Michael Fairless, the Author of 'The Roadmender,' by whom, indeed, the book was inspired. Revealing the attitude of a mystic, it presents much original thought, particularly in the matter of recent tendencies in psychology.

THE GREY BRETHREN.

By MICHAEL FAIRLESS, Author of 'The Roadmender.'

Cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

THE LIBRARY OF ART.

NEW VOLUMES.

G I O T T O. By Basil de Sélincourt.

45 Illustrations. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

ALBERT DÜRER. By T. Sturge Moore.

With 4 Copperplates and 50 Half-Tone Engravings. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

DUCKWORTH'S POPULAR LIBRARY OF ART.

Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net. NEW VOLUME.

VELAZQUEZ.

By AUGUSTE BREAL, Author of 'Rembrandt.'

With 50 Illustrations.

NEW FICTION.

NAPOLEON'S LOVE STORY.

By WACLAW GASIOROWSKI. Translated by COUNT DE SOISSONS.

[Ready June 19.]

This true romance of a passage in Napoleon's life is a most faithful study of Polish society of a century ago, as well as a fascinating love story.

IT'S A WAY THEY HAVE IN THE ARMY.

By LADY HELEN FORBES. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The author gives a convincing picture of regimental social life in India which conveys aspects scarcely realized by the public. While the picture is not always pleasing, the book is certain to call forth much comment and remark.

THE HOUSE OF BARNKIRK.

By AMY McLAREN, Author of 'From a Davos Balcony.'

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It has what we too seldom get and what is never without its charm—a picture of kindly well-bred people who talk and act in a perfectly natural manner."—Times.
 "Miss McLaren is making a reputation."—Glasgow Herald.
 "A very attractive story, full of incident and variety.....and interesting both in its incidents and character-drawing."—Scotsman.

By ELINOR GLYN, Author of 'THE VISITS OF ELIZABETH.'

THE VICISSITUDES OF EVANGELINE.

Coloured Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"An attitude to life which is actual, and has not hitherto discovered a mode of expression. A book like this must interest every one. The lightness, ease, and elasticity of style are quite distinctive. As a relief from the more conventional form of fiction, Evangeline's method is most refreshing."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE DISCIPLE'S WIFE.

By VINCENT BROWN, Author of 'A MAGDALEN'S HUSBAND.' Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The story commands attention. There is power and intensity. You must read with a admiration."—Times.
 "Mr. Vincent Brown's style commands attention, and the plot, originally conceived and well carried out, is essentially interesting. In the Baroness comments and recommends."—Punch.
 "Mrs. Durnford is an admirable study. She stands before us real flesh and blood.....The minor characters are nearly all delightful miniatures.....Handled with a lightness and skilled accuracy which are altogether good."—Daily Telegraph.

London: DUCKWORTH & CO. 3, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

THE BOOK OF THE SEASON.

PRINTERS'
PIE, 1905.

EDITED BY

W. HUGH SPOTTISWOODE,

PUBLISHED

ON THE FIRST OF JUNE.

Every Copy sold helps one of the best-managed Charities in the Country—The Printers' Pension Corporation. President for 1905, Mr. C. ARTHUR PEARSON.

CONTENTS:

STORIES, &amp;c.

DRAWINGS, &amp;c.

BY

W. L. ALDEN.
F. ANSTEY.
DUKE of ARGYLL.
G. B. BURGIN.
Lieut.-Col. NEWNHAM-DAVIS.
Major - Gen. Sir A. G. FRENCH.
TOM GALLON.
G. L. GRAVES.
J. K. JEROME.
E. V. LUCAS.
H. W. LUCY.
BARRY PAIN.
Major - Gen. B A D E N-POWELL.
C. ARTHUR PEARSON.
MOSTYN PIGOTT.
WM. LE QUEUX.
W. PETT RIDGE.
ADRIAN ROSS.
LORD STANLEY.
G. R. SIMS.
KATHARINE TYNAN.
I. ZANGWILL.
&c. &c.

BY

CECIL ALDIN.
C. A. BUCHEL.
E. M. CROXTON.
C. DANA GIBSON.
DUDLEY HARDY.
JOHN HASSALL.
L. RAVEN HILL.
GUNNING KING.
PHIL MAY.
WILL OWEN.
CHAS. PEARS.
F. PEGRAM.
L. THACKERAY.
F. H. TOWNSEND.
DAVID WILSON.
LAWSON WOOD.
STARR WOOD.
&c. &c.

1s. net.

Of all W. H. SMITH & SON'S Bookstalls,
And of all Booksellers and Newsagents.

Published by THE SPHERE and TATLER, Ltd.,
Great New Street, London, E.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE TREASURES of 'THE IMITATION' of
THOMAS A KEMPIS.

Being Selections, alphabetically arranged, with a copious Index and Introductory Essay.

By JOHN F. CRUMP.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

Walsall, Robinson; London, Simpkin &amp; Co.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.
The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN,
HEADACHE, GOUT,
And INDIGESTION.
And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

THIS WEEK'S NUMBER CONTAINS—

NOTES:—William Waynflete—Sir Thomas Phillipps and his Library—Sir James Lawrence's 'Empire of the Nairs'—Incedon: Ccoke—Keats's 'Grecian Urn': the Heifer—Local Records—Yorkshire Wills—Superstitions of Trades and Callings—Rogationtide at Ufford—Russian Proper Names—"Arch"—Name Coincidences—Young and Burns—Cape Hoorn—Bellringing—Cromwell Fleetwood.

QUERIES:—Knights Templars—Hermitage, Harrow—Newport Family—"Warkamooes"—St. Paul's Cathedral—"In antient days, when Dame Eliza reign'd"—Child executed for Witchcraft—Gosnold Portrait—Caldwell Family—John Hazlitt and Samuel Sharwood—"Who pays the piper calls the tune"—Job Heath—Authors of Quotations Wanted—Rates in Aid—Keats's 'Grecian Urn': its Date—Lundy Island—"The Missal"—Sir George Davies, Bart.—Tombola Concerts—Peter Persehouse—D'Avaux—Parker Family.

REPLIES:—Sarah Curran, Robert Emmet, and Major Sirr—Philippina: Philopœna—Benson Earle Hill—Madame Violante in Edinburgh—Guinea Balances—Prisoners' Clothes as Perquisites—Sixteenth Century Economist—"Allen"—Bibliographical Queries—York, 1517 and 1540—Longman, Barrel-Organ Builder—Mr. Moxhay, Leicester Square Showman—Spenser's 'Epithalamion'—"Wrong side of the bed"—Mary Masters—Suppression of Duelling in England—"Goyle"—Tunbridge Wells and District—"In cauda venenum"—Norman Inscriptions in Yorkshire—"The Streets of London"—"Guardings"—"May-dewing"—Haswell Family—Maiden Lane, Malden.

NOTES ON BOOKS:—"Minor Poets of the Caroline Period"—Gomperz's 'Greek Thinkers'—"Charles Kingsley to James Thomson"—Methuen's "Standard Library"—"The Plays of Sheridan."

Booksellers' Catalogues.

Notices to Correspondents.

LAST WEEK'S NUMBER CONTAINS—

NOTES:—William Shelley—Convention of Royal Burghs of Scotland—French Words of Uncertain Origin—Royal Oak Day—Early Italian—Halley Surname—H. Alworth Merewether—"Souwarrow Nut"—Sir Jonathan Trelawny—Johnsoniana—Pickwick, c. 1280—King's 'Classical and Foreign Quotations'—Statues in London.

QUERIES:—"Persona grata"—The Flag—Stutt Family—Human Sacrifices: Ghosts—House of Lords 1625-60—Griffith and Cre Fydd—La Scala—"Yealls": "Brewetts"—Academy of the Muses—Love Ales—Burial-places of Celebrities—"There shall no tempests blow"—Indian Kings—Long Bredy, Dorset—St. Patrick—Jack and Jill—Horse-racing in Scotland—Norden's 'Speculum Britanniae'—Medieval Seal—Sir R. Fanshawe.

REPLIES:—The Egyptian Hall—Norfolk Folk-Songs—Bonaparte in England—Owen Brigstocke—Southwold Church—"England," "English"—Dickensian London—Cromer Street—"Tandem"—Turville—Ninths—London Cemeteries—"A shoulder of mutton," &c.—Baptist Confession of Faith—Wace on the Battle of Hastings—Swedish Royal Family—Nelson Column—Theatre Parkgate.

NOTES ON BOOKS:—Hakluyt's 'Navigations' and 'Hakluytus Posthumus'—Cambridge Grace-Book B—Crisp's 'Visitation of Ireland'—"The Bernards of Abington"—"The Burlington Magazine"—Reviews and Magazines.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.
And of all Newsagents.

AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.

THE NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

COPIES OF

NOTES AND QUERIES

FOR JUNE 30, 1900,

Can still be had, 1s. 1d. free by post, containing an account of the Flag, with Coloured Illustration according to scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

A NEW STORY BY THE AUTHOR OF 'LUKE DELMEGE,' &amp;c.

GLENANAAR: a Story of Irish Life.By the Very Rev. Canon P. A. SHEEHAN, D.D., Author of 'My New Curate,' 'Luke Delmege,' &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

LONGMANS, GREEN &amp; CO. 39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1824.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL AND GENERAL
LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.Assets over FOUR MILLIONS Sterling.

BONUS DIVIDED 1902, £597,415.

TO SHARE IN NEXT BONUS

APPLY NOW OR BEFORE JUNE 30 TO

CHIEF OFFICE: 15, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

C E L E S T I A L   M O T I O N S :

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

NOTES AND QUERIES.*GENERAL INDEXES.THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

|                           | £. | s. | d. |
|---------------------------|----|----|----|
| GENERAL INDEX,            |    |    |    |
| FOURTH SERIES ...  | 3  | 3  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,            |    |    |    |
| SIXTH SERIES ...   | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,            |    |    |    |
| SEVENTH SERIES ... | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,            |    |    |    |
| EIGHTH SERIES ...  | 0  | 6  | 0  |

For Copies by post an additional Threepence is charged.JOHN C. FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office,
11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

BEARDSLEY AND WHISTLER.

WHISTLER'S ART DICTA,

And other Essays.

By A. E. GALLATIN.

"This exquisite volume will be a valuable keepsake to those who admire Whistler. It is remarkable, first, because of its superb print; secondly, because of some remarkable facsimiles; and, thirdly, because of a criticism which may well be a vade mecum to those who would better understand Whistler."—Outlook (New York)."A work of unquestionable value to all whose interests include the two most conspicuous examples of originality in contemporary illustration and art [Beardsley and Whistler]."—Lamp (New York).* * This book has been printed at America's most famous press, the Merry-mount, in a Limited Edition on Hand-
Made Paper. Drawings and Letters, Reproduced in Line and in Photogravure, enrich the Volume.

Price 16s. net.

ELKIN MATHEWS, London, W.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.THE UPTON LETTERS.

By T. B.

Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

WEEK'S SURVEY.—"A piece of real literature of the highest order, beautiful and fragrant ..... It is in truth a precious thing."DAILY CHRONICLE.—"If any one supposes that the art of letter writing is dead, this volume will prove the contrary..... Altogether this is a curiously intimate and very pathetic revelation."DAILY NEWS.—"Such charming letters..... The author writes with that intimacy of self-revelation which is the secret of charm in correspondence."ROSE OF THE WORLD.

By AGNES and EGERTON GASTLE.

THIRD IMPRESSION.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

ATHENÆUM.—"Mr. and Mrs. Castle always write with distinction and colour. If this is not the best of their novels it takes high rank among them."HEARTH and HOME.—"It is a wonderful sketch of of a woman's soul, showing rare power combined with a most welcome tact, and it is set worthily."GUARDIAN.—"Rose of the World" has..... something indefinable that is not given by one novel in a hundred."A VAGRANT ENGLISH WOMAN.

By CATHERINE I. DODD.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND EDITION READY IMMEDIATELY.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Wholly charming and amusing."YORKSHIRE POST.—"Bright, shrewd, and humorous;
..... a delightful blend of fact and fiction."TRACKS OF A ROLLING STONE.By the Hon. HENRY J. COKE,
Author of 'A Ride Over the Rocky Mountains,'
'Creeds of the Day,' &c.With a Portrait Frontispiece. Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION IN PREPARATION.

ATHENÆUM.—"May be cordially recommended as an excellent piece of biography."VANITY FAIR.—"One of the liveliest and most irresistible books of memoirs that have appeared for a long time."THREE NEW 6s. NOVELS.
THE MARQUIS'S EYE.

By G. F. BRADBY,

Author of 'Joshua Newings; or, the Love Bacillus.'
[Just published.]ROSE OF LONE FARM.

By ELEANOR G. HAYDEN,

Author of 'Turnpike Travellers,' 'Travels Round Our Village,' 'From a Thatched Cottage,' &c.

[Ready to-day.]

TWO MOODS OF A MAN.

By HORACE G. HUTCHINSON,

Author of 'Crowborough Beacon,' 'Glencairly
Castle,' &c.

[On June 22.]

BOOKS FOR SEASIDE AND HOLIDAY READING.* * Messrs. SMITH, ELDER & CO. will be happy to send, post free on application, a copy of their CATALOGUE, containing a List of 2s.,
2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., and 6s. Popular Novels, together with a large number of Miscellaneous Works.

London:

SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO. 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S LIST.

JUST READY, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s.

THE BISHOP OF DURHAM ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

Short Devotional Studies on the Dying Letter of St. Paul.

By the Right Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D., Lord Bishop of Durham.

The Bishop "has taken up this heart-moving Epistle with the single intention of expounding it after the manner of a Bible Reading, not for literary criticism or inquiry, but in quest of divine passages for heart and life."

JUST READY, cloth gilt, gilt top, 6s. net, with 2 Photogravures and 24 Page Illustrations.

JOHN WESLEY, EVANGELIST.

By the Rev. RICHARD GREEN.

The AUTHOR says:—"My aim has been chiefly to present two aspects of Wesley's life history. The first of these embraces his earlier career, in which prominence is given to those events and circumstances which in so remarkable a way prepared him for his great work. A second object aimed at has been to set forth the one chief purpose for which I believe Wesley was raised up, and to fulfil which he was especially qualified—namely, his evangelistic appeal to the heart and conscience of this nation."

READY SHORTLY, demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. net.

HOME LIFE IN BIRD-LAND.

By OLIVER G. PIKE, Author of 'Woodland, Field, and Shore,' &c.

With 4 Coloured Plates and upwards of 70 other Illustrations Photographed from Nature by the Author himself.

'Home Life in Bird-Land' is a fascinating book. Mr. Pike is an enthusiastic naturalist, amply endowed with the gift of patient observation. His new book comes at an opportune time, just when "the singing of birds is come," and will be warmly welcomed, we have no doubt, not only by the special class of naturalists, but by all who love birds and their haunts. Mr. Pike is an expert in the difficult art of bird-photography, and there are some charming illustrations in the volume.

JUST READY, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s.—A NEW WORK ON THE HIGHER CRITICISM.

THE NEW TESTAMENT AND THE PENTATEUCH.

By Prof. C. F. NOSGEN, D.D.

Translated from the German by the Rev. C. H. IRWIN, M.A.

Dr. Nösgen considers the testimony which our Lord and His Apostles bore to the Law and the Pentateuch without demanding a supernatural acquaintance of either.

JUST READY, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s.—BY-PATHS OF BIBLE KNOWLEDGE SERIES.

THE BIBLE AND BABYLON:

Their Relationship in the History of Culture.

By EDUARD KONIG, D.D.

Translated from the Tenth German Edition, with additional Notes, by Rev. W. T. PILTER.

With a Preface by the Very Rev. HENRY WACE, D.D., Dean of Canterbury.

The DEAN says:—"The short treatise which is here translated will supply an opportune warning against the hasty acceptance of a line of thought which has of late been vehemently urged in Germany and has found too much countenance among some scholars in this country."

JUST READY, illustrated, large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE ASCENDING CROSS.

By the late Rev. W. A. ESSERY.

This is the only book on life and work in Bible Lands which includes Syria, Palestine, Egypt, Greece, Macedonia, Turkey in Europe, Turkey in Asia, Armenia, Arabia, and Persia. It may be said to graphically describe the progress of the Cross versus the Crescent. It deals with all phases of Christian work in these countries, and contains stories of help given them through the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society during fifty years.

JUST READY, large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

JAMES LEGGE, MISSIONARY AND SCHOLAR.

By his Daughter, HELEN EDITH LEGGE.

With 4 Portraits (1 in Photogravure) and 12 other Illustrations.

The DUNDEE COURIER says:—"There is not a dry page in this most fascinating biography."

The SCOTSMAN says:—"Dr. Legge's life appears at a time when events in the East may help to emphasize the greatness of the work which he did during his thirty-three years' active service in China."

The PALL MALL GAZETTE says:—"The record of Dr. Legge's achievements in Oriental criticism, history, and translation is known to all men, but it adds completeness here to a singularly well-written and interesting book."

NEW EDITION, THOROUGHLY REVISED AND IN PART REWRITTEN BY SAMUEL G. GREEN, D.D.

THE BIBLE HANDBOOK:

An Introduction to the Study of Holy Scripture.

By the late JOSEPH ANGUS, D.D. 848 pp. 6s. net.

Part I. THE BIBLE AS A BOOK. | Part II. THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

Dr. MURRAY, the Warden of St. Augustine's, Canterbury, says:—"The more I look into it the more I value it. On the New Testament especially it seems to me to contain in a concise form all that a student can want to show him what are the points on which the best modern commentators are agreed, and what are the questions that are under discussion. The sobriety of judgment and the width of reading that has gone to the production of this part of the work seem to be equally remarkable."

The BRITISH WEEKLY says:—"This handbook, of more than eight hundred pages, contains a mass of information which cannot elsewhere be found in so convenient and compact a form."

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

Demy 8vo, 430 pp. cloth gilt, with 40 Full-Page Illustrations by THEO. CARRERAS, 7s. 6d.

CREATURES OF THE SEA:

Being the Life Stories of some Sea Birds, Beasts, and Fishes. By FRANK T. BULLEN, F.R.G.S.

The SPECTATOR says:—"Mr. Ruskin would certainly have rejoiced in Mr. Bullen's delightful collection of marine life-histories, informed as they are with knowledge and illumined by the creative imagination of the poet."

The SPEAKER says:—"Mr. Bullen has essayed the new method of telling the life-story of his sea birds, sea beasts, and fishes, with vivid details of their habits and environments, in contradistinction to the method of naturalists of the old school of supplying a weighty volume of dry facts."

The MORNING POST says:—"Mr. Bullen's book has a freshness that holds the reader."

JUST READY, large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

A BOOK FOR RECENT CONVERTS.

WORDS OF HELP

ON BELIEF AND CONDUCT.

By the Right Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D., Bishop of Durham; The DEAN of NORWICH; the Revs. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.; F. S. WEBSTER, M.A.; Dr. JOHN WATSON (IAN MACLAREN); ALEXANDER McLAREN, D.D.; R. F. HORTON, D.D.; G. S. BARRETT, D.D.; J. G. GREENHOUGH, D.D.; J. D. JONES, B.D.; W. T. A. BARBER, D.D.; Dr. A. T. PIERSON; and other Writers.

JUST READY, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

OUR BRIEF AGAINST ROME.

By the Rev. CHARLES STUTEVILLE ISAACSON, M.A.

People are asking what the distinct tenets of the Roman Catholic Church are, and why they are wrong. This volume deals with the subject in sufficient, and yet not in overwhelming, detail, with the most careful accuracy, and yet not in a pedantic or technical manner.

JUST PUBLISHED, large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE APOSTLE PETER.

Outline Studies in his Life, Character, and Writings. By the Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D., Principal-Elect of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, Vicar of St. Paul's, Portman Square, London.

The GUARDIAN says:—"There is good work in the book, which is likely to be useful both to Sunday-school teachers and to clergy in search of useful material for sermons."

The RECORD says:—"It is not a dull, lifeless, academic study of the apostle's life and work, but one which is obviously the fruit of a ripened Christian experience, and seeks before all things to apply the teaching of Scripture to the every-day life of the believer."

The EXPOSITORY TIMES says:—"It is a volume of scholarship of original work and insight."

LONDON: 4, BOUVERIE STREET, and 65, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, E.C.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Published Weekly by JOHN C. FRANCIS at Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C., and Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Agents for SCOTLAND, Messrs. Bell & Bradburn and Mr. John Menzies, Edinburgh.—Saturday, June 17, 1905.

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

YOUNG GENTLEMAN, age 19, desires post as AMANUENSIS or ASSISTANT in LITERARY WORK. Public School Classical Education; also French and little German. Antiquarian tastes; knowledge of Heraldry.—G. MARSHALL, 2, Harley Road, South Hampstead, London.

RESEARCH WORK, Genealogical and Literary, of all kinds. Pedigrees and Family Histories traced, Records searched and transcribed. Advertiser has long experience and first-class references. Indexing, Bibliographies, Library Arranging and Cataloguing undertaken. Terms moderate.—Address RESEARCH, care Davies & Co., Advertising Agents, Finch Lane, Cornhill.

PRINTERS—AUTHORS.—Experienced READER (especially in News Work) seeks EMPLOY as SUB-EDITOR, or whole or partial work Reading. Disengaged. Authors' MSS. prepared and revised for the Press. Printers and Publishers provided. Translations obtained from French and German. Terms moderate.—Write, in first instance, W. C. RUDGE, 52, West Square, St. George's Road, Southwark, S.E.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL WORK and INDEXING—Apply Miss PETHERBRIDGE (Nat. Sci. Tripos), 52A, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

TYPE-WRITING.—Cheap Prices.—Reviews, Novels, Plays, Poetry, Scholastic Work, Letters, &c., TYPED, or from Dictation (Shorthand if desired). Ten years' experience. Duplicating.—GRAHAM, 34, Strand, W.C. (Charing Cross).

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirlbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Rennington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBAINO TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.O.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BUCHAN, 34, Paternoster Row.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED, And supplied with every requisite. Write for 'THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST.'

The Imperial News Agency, 2 and 4, Tudor Street, London, E.C. America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. Australia: Holt's Chambers, 121, Pitt Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application. Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.O.

Catalogues.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Philz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

CATALOGUE No. 43.—Etchings by Whistler and Samuel Palmer—Engravings after Turner—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Drawings of the Early English School—scarce illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

H. H. PEACH, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 11 contains illuminated, Historical, Classical MSS.—Collections of Autographs—Books on Art—Early and Modern Presses—Broadside—Bibliography—Emblems, &c.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROSE & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 140, containing a Special Article, entitled 'The RECENT DEVELOPMENT of ART BOOKS,' by Dr. O. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the New Edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters and Engravers,' &c. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORRIS, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

GLAISHER'S REMAINDER BOOK CATALOGUE. JUNE SUPPLEMENT NOW READY, Comprising all most recent Purchases in PUBLISHERS' REMAINDER STOCK. Books in NEW condition, at REDUCED Prices. WILLIAM GLAISHER, Remainder and Discount Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London.

LEIGHTON'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 Illustrations, price 2s JUST ISSUED. Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

ELLIS & ELVEY, Dealers in Old and Rare Books and Manuscripts. NEW CATALOGUE (No. 105) of Aldines, Works on Education, Government, Law, Medicine, Trade and Economics, &c., NOW READY, post free, Sixpence. 29, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

B O O K P L A T E S. Mediaeval and Modern Styles Designed and Engraved. Write for ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET free. THOMAS MORING, Engraver, Stationer, Printer, &c., 257, High Holborn, W.C.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—Spink & Son, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Heathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

Sales by Auction.

Valuable Books, including a Library removed from Shropshire.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on MONDAY, July 3, and Following Day, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS, including Specimens of the Aldine and other Early Presses—Eikon Basilike, 1648—Bindings with Arms of former Owners—Phillips, The Perfect Path to Paradise, 1590—Manuscripts on Vellum, with Miniatures—Chardin's Travels, 2 vols., old red morocco—Blomfield's Norfolk—Chardin's Hind and the Panther, 1687—Early Tracts and Pamphlets—Franco-Venetian Costumes—Funeral of James Stuart, the Old Pretender, 1766—Works of James L., 1616—Boydell's Shakespeare, 9 vols., morocco gilt—Boydell's Shakespeare Gallery, 2 vols.—Hamerton's Etching and Etchers, inlaid to folio size, in 7 vols., extra-illustrated with numerous plates—Lear's Parrots, Coloured Plates—Standard Editions of Works on Biography, Travel, Theology, Science, &c.—First Editions of Modern Poets and Novelists. Ex-Libris—important Autograph Letters and Documents—Fur and Feather Series, 9 vols. Large Paper—British Military Library, 2 vols. Coloured Plates, &c.

Engravings and Drawings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, June 26, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS and DRAWINGS, comprising a nearly complete Collection of Tickets, Cards, Book-marks, &c., by Bartolozzi, for the most part Engraver's Proofs—Early Impressions of Liber Studiorum Prints, an unusually fine Set of Proofs before all letters of the Rivers of England and River Scenery—Portraits after Sir T. Lawrence, by F. C. Lewis, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

A Collection of Engravings and Drawings, formed for illustrating Pennant's History of London.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, June 27, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS and DRAWINGS of VIEWS, PORTRAITS, &c., formed during the early part of the nineteenth century by a GENTLEMAN resident in the South of England for illustrating Pennant's History of London, and including many Engravings of considerable rarity. Mezzotints, and other Portraits—an extensive Series of Water-Colour Drawings by G. Shepherd, specially executed by him during the years 1800-1814 for the purpose of this Collection—Drawings of Portraits by G. P. Harding, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

Coins and Medals, including the Collection of GEORGE HODGES, Esq., and the Collection of Tokens of WILLIAM NORMAN, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, June 27, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, COINS and MEDALS, including the Collection of Greek, Roman, and English Coins, &c., Coin Cabinets, and Old Paper Money, the Property of GEORGE HODGES, Esq., of Laburnham House, Thurnbury, Gloucestershire; also a Collection of TRADESMEN'S COPPER TOKENS of the Nineteenth Century, including the rare Birmingham Sixpence, the Douglas Copper Shilling, the Jersey Halfpenny, and many Patterns and Proofs, the Property of WILLIAM NORMAN, Esq., of Newcastle-on-Tyne, Member of the British Numismatic Society, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

Valuable Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, June 29, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including a Valuable Collection of Alpine Books, the Property of C. E. MATHEWS, Esq. (sometime President of the Alpine Club, who is giving up collecting), comprising The Alpine Journal, 22 vols.—Ball's Peaks, Passes, and Glaciers, 3 vols.—Moore's Alps in 1864—The Scottish Mountaineering Journal, 7 vols., and other Works on Mountaineering. The CHOICE LIBRARY of NEVILLE CROSS, Esq., including a remarkably fine Collection of the Writings of Charles Dickens and Books relating to him, First Editions, chiefly in morocco, by Riviere—the Works of Charles Lever, 52 vols., First Editions, in morocco, by Riviere—Capt. Marryat's Novels, 82 vols., First Editions, calf extra, by Riviere. A PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late H. E. HORNBY, Esq., and the late R. C. HORNBY, Esq. (of Sandown, Wavertree, Liverpool), containing Curtis's British Entomology, 8 vols.—The Ibis, 1880-1891—Lillford's British Birds, 7 vols., First Edition—Fowler's Colaptes 5 vols.—Gould's Humming Birds, 6 vols.—Audubon's Birds of America, 7 vols., and other Scientific Works—Shakespeare's Works, Second Folio. Other Properties, comprising Ackermann's Microcosm of London, 3 vols.—Smith's Mezzotint Portraits, 4 vols., with Plates—Works by and relating to Shakespeare—Byron's Poems on Various Occasions, First Edition, uncut—Elizabethan Literature—Cicero's Cato Major, Franklin, 1741, and other Scarce Americana—Autograph Letters—illuminated Horae—Scott's Waverley, First Edition, 3 vols. uncut—Shelley's Queen Mab, First Edition, with Manuscript Notes—First Editions of the Writings of John Milton, Books of Prints, &c.—Original Drawings by W. M. Thackeray, for 'The Book of Snobs,' a Sketch-Book of his, and an Autograph Manuscript Compendium of German History, written in 1831.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The valuable and interesting Musical Library of the late T. W. TAPHOUSE, Esq., M.A.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, July 3, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable and interesting LIBRARY of ANCIENT and MODERN PRINTED MUSIC, MUSICAL MANUSCRIPTS, and COLLECTIONS of the late T. W. TAPHOUSE, Esq., M.A. (late Mayor of Oxford).

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The valuable Library of an English Gentleman, recently deceased.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, July 5, at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable LIBRARY of an ENGLISH GENTLEMAN, recently deceased, removed from France, comprising French Illustrated Books, principally of the Eighteenth Century—Old English Plays—Smith's Catalogue Raisonné, 9 vols.—The Writings of Molière, La Fontaine, and other French Classical Authors—Bibliography—Genealogy and Heraldry—Armorial Bookbindings, including Examples from the Libraries of the Comtesse de Verrue, L. H. de Bourbon Condé, Madame de Pompadour, Duc de Choiseul, Comtesse d'Artois, Duc de Grammont, and other well-known Collectors—Specimens of Binding by Petit, Masson-Dehonnelle, Cuzin, Marius Michel, Chamblotte-Durru, Hardy Menill, &c.—Works on Art, Pottery, and Porcelain—Topography, comprising Brand's Newcastle upon Tyne—Surtees's Durham—Whitaker's Richmondshire—Nicholson and Burns's Westmoreland and Cumberland; the Property of a CLEGGYMAN, containing Montesquieu, Le Temple de Gnide, 1796, Large Paper, Proof Plates—Berquin, Idylles and Romances, Large Paper—The Plates to Banier's Ovid—Les Emaux de Petitot, 2 vols., &c.—and a Copy of the excessively rare Play The True Chronicle History of King Lear and his Three Daughters, 1605, being the precursor of Shakespeare's famous Tragedy.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A Further Portion of the choice Library of EDWARD J. STANLEY, Esq., M.P.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, July 6, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, a FURTHER PORTION of the choice LIBRARY of EDWARD J. STANLEY, Esq., M.P., containing Biblical and Liturgical Literature—French Illustrated Books of the Eighteenth Century—the Cabinet Choseul et Basan, Proofs—Billing's Baronial Antiquities—Musée de Peinture, 28 vols.—Musée Français, Proofs before Letters—Portraits, and other Books of Prints—Serial Publications—Dugdale's Monasticon, Large Paper—Spanish and Italian Literature—Publications of the Percy, Philobiblon, and other Societies—Shaw's Dresses and Decorations, Large Paper—Alken's National Sports—French Armorial Bindings, including Books with the Arms of the Comte de Maurepas, the Comtesse de Verrue, Madame de Pompadour, the Duchesse d'Aiguillon, Count Hoyon, Duc de Fronsac, Longpierre, Marie Antoinette, and other Royal Arms, &c.—Fine Specimens of French and English Bindings, including Examples of Nicolas Eve, Tadeloup, Derome, Hardy, Trautz-Bauzonnet, Francis Bedford, Smith, Lewis, Riviere, &c.—Classical Literature—Books of Reference—Voyages—Heraldry—Genealogy—History, &c. All in fine condition.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A Collection of Autograph Letters and Documents; also interesting Relics of Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on SATURDAY, July 8, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and DOCUMENTS, principally written by or relating to Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton, the Property of Mrs. L. F. HOLDING, Lake View, St. Helen's Parade, Southsea, comprising a Series of Autograph Letters of Lord Nelson addressed to Lady Hamilton, Lady Nelson, Lord Spencer, Sir James St. Clair Erskine, John McArthur, Sir Joseph Banks, Sir A. J. Ball, Lord Collingwood, and others; also Autograph Letters of Lady Nelson, Lady Hamilton, John Scott (his Secretary, killed at Trafalgar)—a most valuable Historical Document, being the Official Dispatch sent by Lord Collingwood announcing the Battle of Trafalgar and Death of Lord Nelson, addressed to the Right Hon. Lord Robert Fitzgerald, Minister Plenipotentiary, Ambassador at Lisbon, dated Fitzgerald, off Cadiz, 21 Oct. 1805, 2 pp. folio. The Collection also comprises Letters of Captain Bligh, a most interesting Series of Letters and Documents relating to the Voyage of the Providence, Prince Caracciolo, Lord Collingwood, General Dumoriez, Sir John Franklin, Sir W. Hamilton, Lord Howe, Lord Rodney, Sir George Rooke, Dr. Solander, Robert Burns, C. Dickens, P. B. Shelley (Autograph Letters and Poem), Dean Swift, &c.; also interesting Relics of Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A Valuable Collection of Greek Coins, the Property of a Gentleman.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, July 11, at 1 o'clock precisely, a VALUABLE COLLECTION of GREEK COINS, the Property of a GENTLEMAN.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Curiosities.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., on TUESDAY, June 27, at half-past 12 o'clock, CHINESE and JAPANESE PORCELAIN—Carved Ivories and Cloisonné Ware—interesting Specimens of Native Work—Carved and Inlaid Furniture—large Pictures and Coloured Engravings—and Curios from all parts.

On view day prior 10 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Scientific, Surveying, and other Instruments, &c. FRIDAY, June 30, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., a fine 6 in. THEODOLITE, by Elliott Bros.—14 in. Level by ditto—Sextant, Prismatic Compass, and other fine Instruments—Microscope and Slides—Photographic Cameras and Lenses—Tool Chest and Tools—International Library of Literature—and a large quantity of valuable Miscellaneous Property.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Egyptian, Greek, and Roman Antiquities, &c.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., on TUESDAY, July 4, at half-past 12 o'clock, a COLLECTION of ANTIQUITIES of the Egyptian, Greek, Roman, and later Periods found in Egypt and acquired in that country by the late Rev. J. RANGER LAWRENCE, Chaplain of Ramleh, and of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute, Alexandria, Egypt, consisting of many interesting Objects in Stone, Pottery, Bronze, Wood, Glass, and other materials—a most comprehensive Series of Lamps of the Greco-Egyptian and Roman Periods, including many fine and rare Types, both in form and decoration—Egyptian Deities in Stone, Bronze, and other materials—Mummy Cases—Egyptian and Greek Pottery—Leaden Cinerary Urns—Alabaster Vases, &c.

On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

THE ELIZABETHAN STAGE SOCIETY.

Ancient and Modern Costumes—Antique Furniture—Bric à brac—Books and Properties, the Collection of WILLIAM PEEL, Esq., including the unique full-sized Model of the Old Fortune Playhouse.

BOREHAM & CO. (of Mowbray House, Norfolk) will SELL, at the Atelier, 93, College Street, Chelsea, on JULY 5.

Catalogues of the AUCTIONEERS.

Valuable Miscellaneous Books, including a Portion of the Library of a Gentleman.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, June 28, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, valuable MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, comprising Armstrong's Gainsborough and Sir Joshua Reynolds—Complete Sets of the Wiltshire and Somersetshire Archaeological and Natural History Society's Publications—Topographical and Antiquarian Books—the Works of Dryden and Swift, by Scott, in old Russia—Fielding's Tom Jones, First Edition, 6 vols.—Duruy's History of Greece, 4 vols.—Traill and Mann's Social England, 6 vols., and other Historical Works—Fine Sets of Fielding, Defoe, Scott, Dickens, and others—a handsome Set of Burton's Arabian Nights, with Coloured Illustrations 12 vols. half-morocco—Villon Society's Publications, 13 vols.—The Kilmiscott Press Keats; a PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late Sir J. BUDD PHEAR, including Books on India and the East; also a unique Collection of Newspaper Cuttings, recording the daily progress of the Boer War, arranged in 50 volumes, and carefully Indexed.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

Valuable Law Books, from the Library of the late Sir JOHN BUDD PHEAR (formerly Chief Justice of Ceylon), removed from Marpool, Exmouth (by Order of the Executors), and from the Library of E. P. WOLSTEN-HOLME, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on FRIDAY, June 30, at 1 o'clock, the above LIBRARIES and other Properties, comprising a complete Set of the Law Reports from 1865 to 1901, bound in calf—another Set, from 1865 to 1901, in half-calf, noted up, and a Series from 1865 to 1883—Cases in the House of Lords and Privy Council, including Moore's Fast Indian Appeals—The Bengal Law Reports, and others on Indian Law—a complete Series of Reports in Chancery, &c.—Admiralty Cases—Sets of the Justice of the Peace, Law Journal, and Law Magazine—Black-Letter Year Books and the Old Folio Reports—Encyclopedia of the Laws of England, 13 vols.—Campbell's Ruling Cases, 25 vols.—Bythewood and Jarman's Conveyancing, 8 vols.—Modern Text-Books; also a Mahogany Glazed Bookcase—Writing Tables, and other Office Furniture—a Remington Typewriter, &c.; to which is added a Collection of Book Plates (Ex-Libris)—Prints and Engravings.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

PALL MALL.

The Collection of Pictures, Miniatures, Antique Rings, Silver Plate, Coins, and Medals, Old Netsukis, Bronzes, &c., formed by the late F. G. SMITH, Esq.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce for SALE by AUCTION, by direction of the Executors of the late F. G. SMITH, at the Gallery, 54, Pall Mall, on THURSDAY NEXT, June 29, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of PICTURES, including Works ascribed to

|               |               |                |
|---------------|---------------|----------------|
| F. Bol.       | H. Hudson     | Porbus         |
| W. Collins    | Hondecoeter   | Sir M. A. Shee |
| Constable     | L. van Leyden | H. Williams    |
| M. E. Dockree | Mulready      | Van Ott        |

Miniatures by Engleheart, J. Smart, and others—Silver Plate—Coins and Medals—a Collection of 650 Antique Rings—a Collection of 178 Old Netsukis (in one Lot), with carefully compiled Catalogue; also 91 other Netsukis (in Lots)—old Japanese Bronzes—Antique Carved Oak Four-door Cabinet, &c.

May be view'd Tuesday and Wednesday next, when Catalogues may be had.—54, Pall Mall.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square:—

On MONDAY, June 26, and TUESDAY, June 27, at 1 o'clock, the COLLECTION of PICTURES and DRAWINGS of the late CHARLES J. GALLOWAY, Esq.

On TUESDAY, June 27, at 1 o'clock Fine OLD WORCESTER and CHELSEA PORCELAIN, the Property of E. W. WALKER, Esq.

On WEDNESDAY, June 28, at 1 o'clock, Fine EARLY ENGLISH SILVER PLATE, the Property of H. W. H. DUNSMURE, Esq., and from numerous sources.

On WEDNESDAY, June 28, at 2 o'clock, Choice WINES from the CELLARS of the Right Hon. VISCOUNT POWERS-COURT, deceased, Sir GEORGE ELLIOT, Bart., deceased, and Col. CORNWALL LEIGH, deceased.

On THURSDAY, June 29, at 1 o'clock, a GASKET of JEWELS, the Property of REUBEN D. SASSOON, Esq., deceased, and JEWELS from private sources.

On THURSDAY, June 29, at 2 o'clock, Fine WINES, the Property of T. LLANWAINNE, Esq., deceased; PORT, CHAMPAGNE, and CIGARS, the Property of Sir GEORGE ELLIOT, Bart., deceased.

On FRIDAY, June 30, at 1 o'clock, Fine OLD FRENCH DECORATIVE OBJECTS, and OLD SILVER and DRESDEN PORCELAIN, the Property of a GENTLEMAN.

On SATURDAY, July 1, at 1 o'clock, MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS of the late Sir JOHN BARRAN, Bart., and others.

On SATURDAY, July 8, at 1 o'clock, IMPORTANT PICTURES by OLD MASTERS, the Property of the late Lady ASHBURTON, by order of the Executor.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

JULY. Price 6d.

WILD WHEAT. By M. E. Francis (Mrs. Francis Blundell). Chapters XVIII—XXI.

The LOVELY MISS LONG. By Leslie Winter.

TAKAGI SAN. By H. L. Norris.

The SPOILS OF OFFICE. By M. MacDonagh.

MIDSUMMER in IRELAND. By Maud E. Sargeant.

ABOVE the BOOMS. By G. S. Ellis.

THAT WONDERFUL EVENING. By Mrs. Wallford.

The BIRDS and BEAUTIES of an OLD ORCHARD. By W. Hencage Legge.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By Andrew Lang.

Longmans, Green & Co. 39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.; New York and Bombay.

WESLEYAN HALL, WESTMINSTER.—Selected Design: Sculpture at the Royal Academy (with illustrations); Notes and Sketches in Southern Italy (concluded); The Institute of Architects—Presentation of Royal Gold Medal with Portrait of Sir Aston Webb; Architecture at the Royal Academy (IV.); Decay and Preservation of Stone-Work (II.); Types of Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column), &c.—See the BUILDER of June 24-25, by post 4½d. Through any Newsagent or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

MR. HEINEMANN'S LIST.

AN EPOCH-MAKING BOOK.

RUSSIA FROM WITHIN.

By ALEXANDER ULAR. Post 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

"Will come as a shock to some very sincere friends of Russia. Those who confound the Russian Nation with the Bureaucratic System will be inclined to dispute a number of apparently improbable facts, which, although they do not make pretty reading, are authentic, historical, exact."—From the Preface.

An Entirely New Series of Literary Monographs.

ILLUSTRATED CAMEOS OF LITERATURE.

Edited by Dr. GEORGE BRANDES, of which Two Volumes are NOW READY.

RICHARD WAGNER AS POET.

By WOLFGANG GOLTHIER.

Numerous Illustrations, including Four Designs by AUBREY BEARDSLEY, Facsimile of Handwriting, &c.

MAXIM GORKI. By Hans Ostwald.

Numerous Illustrations, including Two Portraits and Sepia Reproductions from Photographs by GORKI.

* * The object of the Series is to afford an agreeable and easy method of seeing personalities and periods in the Search-light of modern criticism, presented with all the lucidity that only the Masters of a Subject can command. Small 4to, 1s. 6d. net.

NATURALISM IN ENGLAND.

Being the Fourth Volume of "Main Currents of 19th Century Literature." By Dr. GEORGE BRANDES. Post 8vo, 12s. net.

"This masterly survey.....will have a sure welcome from all readers of English who can appreciate a criticism, erudite far beyond the common, that can still subordinate learning to ideas and insight."—Scotsman.

THE HISTORY OF THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY.

By IDA M. TARBELL. 80 Illustrations, 2 vols. 8vo, 21s. net.

"Practically certain to always be what may be described as the authoritative account of the Standard Oil Trust.....mainly based on official documents."—Financial Times.

"Even the most confirmed advocates of the Trust system could hardly fail to recognise the authority of this history."—Scotsman.

AN IMPORTANT WORK ON FOOD.

PHYSIOLOGICAL ECONOMY IN NUTRITION.

By RUSSELL H. CHITTENDEN, Director of the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University, &c. Demy 8vo, 14s. net.

"The work is a valuable one, and will long remain a standard of reference on the subject of nutrition."—Field.

MRS. JACOB'S NEW BOOK.

VERSES. By Violet Jacob,

Author of 'The Sheep Stealers,' 'The Interlopers.'

Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Mrs. Violet Jacob.....is approaching the public by a new road. Her 'Verses' show many of the qualities of her fiction. They all have imagination and music. Here and there is a couplet to be remembered.....that has distance in it, and golden evening and a breathless summer stillness."—Evening Standard.

SIX-SHILLING FICTION.

MR. HEINEMANN ANNOUNCES A NEW NOVEL BY JACK LONDON, AUTHOR OF 'THE CALL OF THE WILD,' &c.

THE GAME.

An engrossing story of the Prize Ring, told with all the customary verve of the writer. [Ready July 5.]

THE WALKING DELEGATE. By Leroy Scott. With Frontispiece.

[Ready June 26.]

AT CLOSE RANGE. By F. Hopkinson Smith. Illustrated.

A DARK LANTERN. By Elizabeth Robins.

"The most engrossing and intellectually delightful book of the year."—Black and White.

"By far the best novel Miss Robins has yet written."—Speaker.

THE WISE WOODS. By Mrs. Henry Dudeney.

"In portraying the stormy, wayward character of this girl (Vashti) Mrs. Dudeney has achieved.....a triumph."

"A curiously fascinating book."—Athenæum.

Ladies' Field.

DUKE'S SON. By Cosmo Hamilton.

"Gay, cynical, kindly, amusing, and distinctly clever."—Academy.

[Second Impression in the press.]

THE MACDONNELLS. By Lady Sykes.

"Henry Macdonnell and his Calvinistic mother might have been conceived by Thackeray."—Morning Post.

TOLLA THE COURTESAN. By E. Rodocanachi.

"Mr. Frederick Lawton.....is to be complimented upon the discernment and adequacy with which his task has been accomplished. The book is a sketch of private life in Rome at the beginning of the eighteenth century.....A sound historical picture. The author is to be commended, too, for his delicacy, for the book is perfectly suitable for general reading."—Athenæum. "A brilliant historical study."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE STIGMA. By Jessie L. Herbertson.

"A remarkable novel."—Manchester Courier.

THE BEST SIXPENNY NOVELS.

NOW READY.

THE RIGHT OF WAY. By Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P.

THE MANXMAN. By Hall Caine.

IF I WERE KING. By Justin Huntly McCarthy.

FLAMES. By Robert Hichens.

SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE. By Richard Harding Davis.

ALSO A CHEAP EDITION, WITH AN ATTRACTIVELY DESIGNED PAPER COVER, OF

THE TIME MACHINE. By H. G. Wells. 1s. net.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NORWAY

and the Union with
SWEDEN.

By FRIDTJOF NANSEN.

Crown 8vo, 2s. net.

BY PROFESSOR BURY.

THE LIFE OF ST. PATRICK, AND HIS PLACE IN HISTORY.

By J. B. BURY, M.A. Hon.D.Litt. Hon.L.L.D., Regius Professor of Modern History, Cambridge University. 8vo, 12s. net.

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.—New Series.

EDWARD FITZGERALD.

By A. C. BENSON. Crown 8vo, 2s. net.

PHILOSOPHICAL STUDIES.

By DAVID G. RITCHIE, M.A. LL.D., sometime Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in the University of St. Andrews. Edited, with a Memoir, by Prof. ROBERT LATTA, M.A. D.Phil. 8vo, 10s. net.

THE ANNUAL OF THE BRITISH SCHOOL AT ATHENS.

No. X., Session 1903-4. Illustrated, 17s. net. [Tuesday.

Contents:—The Palace of Knossos, A. J. Evans; Teams of Ball Players at Sparta, M. N. Tod; Grotesques and the Evil Eye, A. J. B. Wace; Old Egyptian Ploughs, H. Schäfer; Mystica Vannus Iacchi, Miss J. E. Harrison; S. Western Laconian Sites, E. S. Forster; Excavations at Palaikastro, R. M. Dawkins and C. T. Currelly, &c.

ENGLISH GOLDSMITHS AND THEIR MARKS.

A History of the Goldsmiths and Plateworkers of England, Scotland, and Ireland, with over 11,000 Marks, reproduced in Facsimile from authentic Examples. By CHARLES JAMES JACKSON, F.S.A. Imperial 8vo, 42s. net.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION NOW READY.

A TREATISE ON CHEMISTRY.

By Sir H. E. ROSCOE, F.R.S., and C. SCHORLEMMER, F.R.S. Vol. I. The NON-METALLIC ELEMENTS. New Edition, completely Revised by Sir H. E. ROSCOE, assisted by Dr. H. G. COLMAN and Dr. A. HARDEN. With 217 Illustrations. 8vo, 21s. net.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.

NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY BRICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

ITALIAN BACKGROUNDS.

By EDITH WHARTON. Illustrated by E. C. PEIXOTTO. Royal 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

VILLAGE SERMONS.

Second Series. By the late F. J. A. HORT, D.D. D.C.L. LL.D. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW IMPRESSION NOW READY.

THE SEVEN WEEKS' WAR:

Its Antecedents and its Incidents. By Col. Sir H. M. HOZIER, K.C.B. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

MESSRS. HURST & BLACKETT beg to announce the publication of Mr. F. A. McKENZIE'S New Work.

In 1 vol. demy 8vo, with Illustrations, Plans, and a Map, price 7s. 6d. net.

FROM TOKYO TO TIFLIS.

Uncensored Letters from the War.

By F. A. McKENZIE,

Special Correspondent of the Daily Mail.

"If the man must have a heart of stone who can read these sidelights on war without feeling their tragedy, he must be devoid of human pride who can read them without being thrilled by the courage and devotion they record."

St. James's Gazette.

NEW AND INTERESTING BOOK.

In 1 vol. demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, Maps, &c., price 7s. 6d. net.

ZANZIBAR IN CONTEMPORARY TIMES.

By R. N. LYNE.

NEW VOLUME BY JEROME K. JEROME.

NOW READY, in 1 vol. crown 8vo,
price 3s. 6d.

IDLE IDEAS IN 1905.

By JEROME K. JEROME,

Author of 'Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow,'
'Three Men in a Boat,' &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW NOVELS.

A COUNTRY BUNCH,

And other Stories.

By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY,

Author of 'Folly Corner.'

In 1 vol. 3s. 6d. [Next week.

THE PURPLE HEAD.

By EDWIN PUGH,

Author of 'Tony Drum,' &c.

In 1 vol. 6s. [Next week.

BREAD UPON THE WATERS.

By ALICE M. DIEHL,

Author of 'The Garden of Eden,' &c.

In 1 vol. 6s.

SECOND EDITION OF MARIAN SAX.

By MADAME ALBANESI,

Author of 'Capricious Caroline,' 'Susannah and One Elder,' &c. In 1 vol. 6s.

"This well-written story."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"This novel, like everything from the same pen, is admirably written, and instinct with dramatic feeling."

Dundee Advertiser.

"The story is gracefully written and constructed."

Scotsman.

DOROTHY TUKE.

A Tale of the Sea.

By EDMUND DOWNEY,

Author of 'Through Green Glasses,' &c.

In 1 vol. 6s.

"The easy humour, a kind of friendliness in observation, and the hearty human sympathy, all characteristics of Mr. Downey's former works, are conspicuous in this one."

World.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

SECOND LARGE IMPRESSION.

RUSSIA UNDER THE GREAT SHADOW.

By LUIGI VILLARI,

Author of 'Italian Life in Town and Country,' &c.

With 84 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"Those who may excusably feel surfeited with the literature of the Russian crisis will make a mistake if they give the go-by on that account to Mr. Villari's able and picturesque survey of the Tsar's dominions at this fateful juncture. 'Russia under the Great Shadow,' is a volume of signal interest and equally pronounced value.....An admirable collection of more than eighty illustrations co-operates with the author's still more incisive pen-pictures to set the outward and visible Russia of to-day in something like panoramic display before us."—Pall Mall Gazette.

SECOND LARGE IMPRESSION.

THE PROGRESS OF HELLENISM IN ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE.

By JOHN PENTLAND MAHAFFY,

D.D. Mus. Doc. Dublin; Hon. D.C.L. Oxon; sometime Professor of Ancient History in the University of Dublin.

5s. net.

"These eloquent and highly suggestive lectures deal with a peculiarly interesting subject, which, from the side of his life-long study of Greek life and thought, Prof. Mahaffy does much to illuminate."—Aberdeen Free Press.

IN PERIL OF CHANGE.

Essays Written in Time of Tranquillity.

By C. F. G. MASTERMAN,

Author of 'From the Abyss,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"It is a good thing for a man to think, but it is better still to make others think, and this is exactly what 'In Peril of Change' does. The political and social topics Mr. Masterman deals with cannot be too carefully considered, too frequently pondered and discussed for the benefit of the thoughtful among us and the welfare of the Empire."

Daily Telegraph.

INTERNATIONAL LAW AND THE NORTH SEA CRISIS.

By F. E. SMITH,

B.C.L., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, and Vinerian Scholar in the University of Oxford, and

N. W. SIBLEY,

LL.M., Trin. H. Cant., Barristers-at-Law.

Royal 8vo, cloth, 21s. net.

SIBERIA:

A Record of Travel, Exploration, and Climbing.

By SAMUEL TURNER, F.R.G.S.

With 100 Illustrations and 2 Maps. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. net.

IN SEARCH OF EL DORADO:

A Wanderer's Experiences.

By ALEXANDER MACDONALD, F.R.G.S.

With 32 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

JOHN CHINAMAN AT HOME.

By the Rev. E. J. HARDY,

Author of 'How to be Happy though Married,' lately Chaplain to H.M. Forces in Hong Kong.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

NEW FICTION.

THE FLUTE OF PAN.

By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS. 6s.

TOM GERRARD.

By LOUIS BECKE. 6s.

GRAND RELATIONS.

By J. S. FLETCHER. 6s.

CONSTANTINE DIX.

By BARRY PAIN. 3s. 6d.

T. FISHER UNWIN, London.

SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|  | PAGE    |
|--|---------|
| SCANDINAVIA ... ..   | 773     |
| NAPOLEON: THE FIRST PHASE ... ..   | 774     |
| CITY DEVELOPMENT ... ..  | 774     |
| AUCTION PRICES OF BOOKS ... ..   | 775     |
| A SISTER OF MARIE ANTOINETTE ... ..  | 776     |
| NEW NOVELS (Marian Sax; Balil Garth; A Prince to Order; The Unwritten Law; A Grand Duke of Russia; Poverty Bay; The Scarlet Bat; L'Épaullette) ... ..  | 777-778 |
| SCOTTISH HISTORY AND GENEALOGY ... ..  | 779     |
| BIBLIOGRAPHY ... ..  | 780     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Stevenson's Essays of Travel; Following the Sun Flag; L'Empire Russe et le Tsarisme; En Mandchourie; Life's Questionings; The Country-House Party; A Modern Legionary; Talks in a Library with Laurence Hutton; Middle Temple Records; New Editions; A Sailor's Anthology) ... .. | 781-783 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..   | 783     |
| SOME NEW VERSES BY OMAR KHAYYAM; STENDHAL MEMORIAL; ON A PASSAGE IN ALFRED'S 'OROSIUS'; 'DICTIONARY OF INDIAN BIOGRAPHY'; CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS; LAMB'S LETTERS; 'MULCIBER'S WORKHOUSE'; TWO IRISH DICTIONARIES ... ..  | 784-786 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..   | 786     |
| SCIENCE—THE NEW KNOWLEDGE; THE HISTORICAL RELATIONS OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY; NATIONAL PHYSICAL TRAINING; THE WORLD OF TO-DAY; PEEPS INTO NATURE'S WAYS; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..   | 787-790 |
| FINE ARTS—MRS. BARRINGTON'S REMINISCENCES OF WATTS; NORWAY; THE TEMPERA SOCIETY; ARCHEOLOGY IN THE PEAK; SALES; GOSSIP ... ..  | 790-793 |
| MUSIC—ROMÉO ET JULIETTE; BALLO IN MASCHERA; ADRIANA LECOUVREUR; CONCERTS BY VECSEY, ELMAN, AND KUBELIK; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..  | 794-795 |
| DRAMA—MADAME BERNHARDT'S SEASON; TWO SHAKESPEARE QUARTOS; GOSSIP ... ..  | 795-796 |
| MISCELLANEA—"INWARA" AND "UTWARA" ... ..   | 796     |

LITERATURE

Scandinavia: a Political History of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden from 1513 to 1900.
By R. Nisbet Bain. "Cambridge Historical Series." (Cambridge, University Press.)

THERE is a great scarcity in our literature of historical works on certain of the European countries, and this is pre-eminently the case with Sweden and her Scandinavian sisters. Defoe wrote a 'History of the Wars of his Present Majesty, Charles XII., King of Sweden, by a Scots Gentleman in the Swedish Service' (1715); and the laborious Dr. Dunham, among his many compilations in Dr. Lardner's 'Cabinet Cyclopædia,' included a history of our Scandinavian neighbours (1839). The latter is certainly rather a heavy book, and the first readable history of these countries appears to be that published by Miss E. C. Otté in 1874, which, if not a brilliant composition, is accurate and trustworthy. This lady was also the author of a little grammar of Swedish in "Trübner's Series," which is well spoken of by competent scholars, and is probably the only grammar of Swedish in existence for English students.

Mr. Nisbet Bain has on this occasion a more limited range, as he treats of the Scandinavian kingdoms after 1513 only. He is lucky not to be required to go at any length into the earlier period, which would probably find few readers. He has already written with considerable success on Charles XII. and Gustavus III. To the majority of Englishmen Sweden is the country of Gustavus Adolphus and Charles XII. They may know something of Gustavus Vasa, the more so because he has been put upon the English stage. We occasionally find a man who has heard of Gustavus III., but he will perhaps confuse him with Gustavus Adolphus. Even Charles XII. owes much of his reputation to Voltaire's 'Life,' which to the ordinary reader has great value for style, but is full of inaccuracies, as the Polish king Stanislaus Leszczynski pointed out in some well-known strictures which he addressed to the author. Dr. Johnson has further increased this fame by his splendid passage in the Imitation of Juvenal's tenth satire. Many also remember Pope's

From Macedonia's madman to the Swede.

Of Danish kings and Norwegian celebrities very little is known in this country. In modern times Ibsen has brought to the front a neglected language—or shall we say dialect? In his preface Mr. Bain makes some remarks full of truth on the extreme folly of the constant struggles between Sweden and Denmark, whereby the Scandinavian element has been weakened and German encroachments encouraged. The Danish language has had to struggle against the constant attempts to thrust Germanisms upon it. Oehlenschlaeger, one of the chief Danish poets, whose statue adorns a street of Copenhagen, actually wrote some of his poems in German, and justified himself for so doing on the ground that when he wrote in Danish he wrote for about six hundred people, the number at which he fixed the cultivated and literary men of Copenhagen. These constant struggles between the Scandinavian sisters no doubt help to explain the fact that Swedish and Danish literature, with the exception of some ballads, does not begin before the eighteenth century, and Norwegian not before the nineteenth. Mr. Bain, who is somewhat hyperbolic in his praises, talks about "the unusually manifold and brilliant" Scandinavian literature. We venture to think that this encomium is rather wide of the mark. Of course we have Holberg and Hans Andersen among the Danes, Ibsen among the Norwegians, and Bellmann, Rydberg, and Tegnér among the Swedes; the last is chiefly conspicuous for his attempts to Byronize the simple Scandinavian sagas. There are also a few second-rate lyrical poets among the Swedes, the best of whom is probably Stagnelius, remembered chiefly for one exquisite lyric. We have found Mr. Bain's narrative clear and very readable. Perhaps he is too magisterial in tone, and he uses such grand epithets for his heroes that we have difficulty in realizing how narrow their sphere of action often was. In many particulars they remind us of the Scotch, who have made some noble history, but as it were in a corner. The output of literature, however, among the Scots has been very much greater than anything the Scandinavian peoples can show. In another respect, also, Scotland resembles the Scandinavian peninsula: both had a corrupt and licentious clergy, and in both countries the Reformation was brought about with unusual violence.

We have read with much pleasure the account given by Mr. Bain of the great expedition of Gustavus Adolphus, terminating in the fatal battle of Lützen. We do not follow his account of Charles XII. with equal enthusiasm. We rather agree with the German historian that he was a brutal man, who freely sacrificed men for his caprice, as indeed Mr. Bain partly allows in his account of the march of Charles through Russia in 1709. His great victories were mostly won against untrained troops. He undid the work of Gustavus Adolphus. Sweden receded from her proud position in Europe, which she owed to the genius of one man, and her external and internal development was put back a hundred years. The plan of Gustavus of a Northern Protestant confederation was in every way a great one, and seems to have anticipated the idea of Bismarck of a Prussian hegemony of Germany. When Mr. Bain speaks of the "preposterous legends" concerning the death of Charles with such magisterial emphasis, he forgets that King Oscar, in his speech delivered at Stockholm in 1868, on the unveiling of Charles's statue on the 150th anniversary of his death, told his countrymen that for upwards of a hundred years it had been more or less taken for granted that he was killed by some traitor. If, therefore, natives of Sweden during such a long period formed such an idea, there could be nothing exactly preposterous in it, and it must have had some strong arguments to support it. As no confession on the subject was ever made, and nothing more has been discovered, the matter remains where it was. We cannot see how the investigation of three surgeons, who examined the skull in 1859, can have settled it. We are told that they arrived at the conclusion that the shot was fired at a distance and on a higher level. Coxe, in his 'Travels,' gives the arguments for and against, and many people must have been alive in his time who remembered the occurrence. We cannot wonder that the Swedes are unwilling to adopt the unpatriotic opinion that the king was killed by one of his own subjects.

The remarks of Mr. Bain on the invasion of Poland by Charles X. seem to us eminently just. He also with good reason brands the traitors with whom Poland at that time swarmed, and for some time afterwards, e.g., Morzтын; he should also add the Palatine Christopher Opalinski, an egregious traitor, who was not ashamed to appear in the hypocritical garb of a censor morum, and lashed his countrymen in bad blank verse for their drunkenness, among other vices. Mr. Bain deals too tenderly with the mad Eric, who made love to Queen Elizabeth, as Gustavus III. reminded Coxe, and was willing that his brother's wife, the faithful Catherine, should be handed over to Ivan the Terrible. This part of Swedish history has been well discussed by Mr. Hjärne, who has especially dealt with the relations between Sweden and Russia—among other important documents, with the account of Russia written for the Swedes by Kotoshikhin, which is preserved at Upsala.

Mr. Bain is very severe on Patkul, and speaks of his having "richly deserved" his atrociously cruel punishment. Had it been inflicted by Peter the Great, our author would have probably assigned it to Muscovite barbarity. But surely it is somewhat anachronistic to blame Patkul for having cared only for the interests of his order. At that time there was very little effort for the interests of the common people made by anybody. We remember an eminent German professor, now dead, who used to brand even William the Silent as being merely an aristocrat, and only caring about aristocrats. Mr. Bain says nothing about the death of the unfortunate Görtz, who fell a victim to the revengeful Ulrica Eleonora. The Swedes soon repented of the treatment he had received.

We must leave Mr. Bain to his enthusiasm for the elegant Gustavus III., whom Coxe found so pleasant. Our author tells us that he opened the Diet with a speech in the Swedish language, but he says nothing about the depressing influence which the French tastes of the king had upon Swedish morals and Swedish literature. We should have liked to have a little more about the relations of Finland to Sweden, so as to get a clear idea about the advantages and disadvantages of the union; of the depression of its language, its aristocracy, and its trade. It is altogether an obscure subject. Why, in fact, were the Finns so often rebellious when their country was attached to Sweden? Their sufferings began before they were united to "barbarous" Russia.

In many points we have found Mr. Bain's narrative instructive. There is not much scope for style in these little handbooks, but the author is very clear. We are, moreover, assisted by four excellent maps. The bibliography at the end of the book is very useful.

For a scholar versed in many languages, Mr. Bain occasionally allows himself a certain confusion in the orthography of the names, both personal and geographical. Why is Wladyslaw, a common Polish name, invariably spelt "Wladislaw" (also in the index)? Mr. Bain is such a purist in form that he correctly writes Mazepa, although it may well be thought that a name which has been domesticated among us, chiefly from Byron's poem and bare-backed circus-riding, should be allowed to keep its conventional spelling. Everybody now knows the drastic punishment inflicted upon the future hetman by the husband of Madame Falbowska. He richly deserved it, for he was always a great sinner in this way. Again, why is Poltava spelt "Pultawa"? The place had ceased to be Polish (if it is ever chronicled as such) at the time of the battle. The same remark would apply to many of the names introduced in the route of Charles through Russia; they are invariably spelt in the Polish fashion. On p. 118 "Jagellonika" should certainly be Jagiellonka. "Voronets" greatly surprises us, because this is an inaccurate Western spelling of the Russian Voronezh—there is no other form of the name. Lastly, "Smarganie" strikes us as curious for Smorgony; is this a printer's error, or has Mr. Bain chosen to transliterate the Russian name of a Polish village? But these are trifling mistakes, and need not prevent our enjoying a good book. It is throughout a scholarly production.

---

Napoleon: the First Phase. By Oscar Browning. (Lane.)

MR. BROWNING confines himself in these pages for the most part to a matter-of-fact statement of details; and it must be confessed that at times the heaping up of details in these hard unadorned sentences is apt to become wearisome. For instance, we are told that, on leaving the École Militaire at Paris, the youth

"took with him twelve shirts, twelve collars, twelve pairs of socks, twelve handkerchiefs, two nightcaps, four pairs of stockings, a pair of shoe-buckles, a pair of garter-buckles, one sword, and a silver collar-stud; also about 6*l.* 10*s.* for the journey."

Stated thus baldly, these details can have little interest save for the most maternal mind; and this instance might be matched several times over, the recital of really interesting facts being not seldom interrupted by dull trivialities, which are introduced as if, in a literary sense, they were of equal value. Thus, after a good account of the training and discipline in that school, there occur irritatingly disjointed sentences like the following:—

"The cadets changed their linen three times a week. The daily white shirt of the Etonian was not required, and they received new uniforms in April and October, which, in Napoleon's time, were blue with red facings."

In regard to historical accuracy as distinct from literary presentment, the volume is, on the whole, meritorious. Here and there Mr. Browning's judgment may be challenged; but the recital of facts is generally correct, and will suffice to dispel many misapprehensions current in the pre-scientific period of Napoleonic study. The labours of M. Frédéric Masson and of M. Arthur Chuquet (to whom the author expresses, in the preface, his manifold obligations) have cleared away many legends from this part of the story, and have enabled us to see not only the real Bonaparte as he was at school and in the barrack, but also the conditions of life in which he there moved, and the character of the studies, and that of the cadets and officers with whom he associated, and duly to estimate the discipline, or lack of discipline, which prevailed. Mr. Browning has selected from the wealth of materials accumulated by the two French scholars above named enough to present a satisfactory account on all these heads, and he has very properly prefaced his narrative by briefly describing the state of Corsica, its administration by the French, the position held by the Bonaparte and Ramolino families, and the characteristics of Napoleon's father and mother. We also find full references to his birth, a topic on which Mr. Browning is patriarchally frank and communicative. There seems to be a misstatement on p. 41 respecting the date at which the Corsican, Ilari, made his submission "to the English." Mr. Browning gives it as May, 1816; but surely all resistance to Louis XVIII. had vanished before that time, and the submission would be to him, not to the English force dispatched several months previously.

Elsewhere we note small incongruities, as when, on p. 52, Mr. Browning seems to discredit the stories of the young Napoleon's unsociability, or refers it, if it existed, to his moral austerity, whereas on p. 55 we read, of the same period: "He lived a solitary existence, sullen and ill-tempered." On p. 44 we are told that Napoleon at Autun "learned sufficient French to converse fluently and to write little exercises." Later (about the time spent at Brienne) we read: "He never learned Latin—indeed, French was to him a foreign language." It is also curious to have the accounts of fees and expenses in French schools presented solely in £ s. d., and not in the first instance in louis. The statement (p. 69) that Napoleon lost his first battle on French soil at Brienne is not quite accurate. The battle of February 1st, 1814, took place at La Rothière, some five miles away from that town. A correction is needed, but is not given, in the account of the "day" of August 10th, 1792, as dictated by Napoleon at St. Helena. He there stated that "the greater part of the National Guard was on the side of the king"—in the fighting at the Tuileries. This is certainly incorrect. All the best authorities agree in referring the catastrophe in the last instance to the inability of Louis XVI. to inspire enthusiasm in the National Guards, and to the consequent defection of by far the greater part of them. These defects in Mr. Browning's narrative are small if considered singly, and are doubtless due to insufficient proof-reading; but they somewhat impair complete confidence in the care of the author. To the same category we may refer one or two solecisms in translation from the French.

To turn to more important matters, we may note that Mr. Browning gives as clear an account as can be given in a small space of the strifes between the Paolists and the republicans in Corsica; but we think that he is scarcely fair to the former, especially in the statement (p. 211):—

"War was declared [by France] against England on February 1st, 1793. This tended to make Paoli unpopular, because he had lived twenty years in London, and had received a pension from George III."

This is put very loosely. The facts are that Paoli, after fighting heroically against the French, escaped with difficulty in 1769, and sought refuge in England, where his urgent needs were met by a pension which few Corsicans, if any, grudged to him; and that at the time of the outbreak of war between France and England in 1793, he had the support of the great majority of Corsicans, being unpopular only with the French or Republican faction to which the Bonapartes adhered. The volume closes with an account of the siege of Toulon, and of the part there played by the young Napoleon; but the share which he had in the origination of the plan that led to the reduction of that stronghold is somewhat exaggerated. There are also interesting documents on this subject in Appendix II., and there is an adequate index; but the value of the book for students is lessened by an entire absence of references to original authorities in foot-notes.

---

City Development: a Study of Parks, Gardens, and Culture Institutes. By Patrick Geddes. (Edinburgh, Geddes & Co.; Bournville, the St. George Press.)

THIS is a remarkable example of the truth that the mind of the writer, and not the occasion or the theme, supplies the matter of every book, determines the logical content of every subject. In this case the occasion is certainly local, the theme seemingly of the most restricted character. A minor Scottish town—we talk from the foolish standpoint of the census, which is ignorant of history and indifferent to virtue—has been presented by the cheerful Mr. Carnegie with a park of no great dimensions. What to do with the park is primarily the subject which Prof. Geddes, at the request of the Carnegie Dunfermline Trust, sets out to treat. But as there have gone with the gift of lands certain moneys, to be administered by the Trust for the recreative, educational, and social purposes which the park is intended to subserve, the theme widens at once into something other than a botanist's, or even a landscape-gardener's report. In the hands of Prof. Geddes it becomes a treatise on education, a reading of history, a vision of the world, a criticism of life.

Yet be it said at once that we have here no ordinary case of that centrifugal tendency which often indicates a defect of inhibition and co-ordination rather than an extravagance of power—that aptness to expatiate upon general aspects which too often betrays an insufficient knowledge of, or patience with, the world of detail and the claims of reality. As nothing could be more concrete and special than the reference under which Prof. Geddes has gone to work, so nothing could be more naturalistic, detailed, and thorough—more directly inspired by the actual scene, or in closer contact with the local ground—than the recommendations which he submits to the Trust in this imposing volume. Of the ground, indeed, within the park and around it, he has literally studied every yard, and taken cognizance of every movement of its contour lines; and along with this geological survey has gone a photographic exploration of the landscape resources or possibilities of the park as viewed from innumerable standpoints and under many conditions. We understand that for three months before a line of this report was written, Prof. Geddes daily spent the whole time 'twixt dawn and dusk in Pittencrieff Park, ostensibly in making these exact observations, but not less really, we fancy, in learning what the park, as a living thing in nature, had to say to him at its own chosen hours. An acquaintance equally intimate with the history of Dunfermline, and with its present as containing much of its past, has been considered not less essential to the purposes of this report. For a city also is, for Prof. Geddes, a living thing, and has something which it would say, some truth which it would reveal, to those who have sympathy and knowledge. Still more has it something which it would be, if only that which obstructs and that which perverts could be obviated or exorcised, and it were left free to move in the line of its true development and achieve its proper identity. Thus relieved and released everywhere, enabled to gather from without, yet permitted to grow from within, the city would tend to individuality even as humanity does, and to beauty as the things of nature do.

In all respects the promise of relevance to fact and possibility, place and plan, which these preliminary studies in Pittencrieff Park give out, is faithfully redeemed by the whole report. In a book containing a thousand detailed directions and unfolding half a score of distinct projects which are almost as vast as they are illuminating, we find the writer on all needful occasions precise as an architect, practical as a master-builder, careful of means and material as any contractor might be. Some of the things of which he is careful are things which contractors and master-builders, perhaps also architects and trusts, if left to themselves, are apt to have a short way with. But nowhere is Prof. Geddes more in earnest than at these perilous junctures; and he does not disguise his conviction that if certain diabolic improvements are carried out—if these old stables are pulled down, if a certain primitive mill is not permitted to live and earn its livelihood in its old way, or if the plain and Puritan seventeenth-century mansion house is to give place to something rococo and bewitched—then the loss will be Scotland's, the disgrace Dunfermline's, for ever. It is for Dunfermline therefore to take heed. Let her count carefully and keep well those treasures, those monuments of her olden life, "which a city holds in trust for its nation, for the larger world"—and which the said nation and the world, thanks to this report, will not fail to look for now from time to time.

And, indeed, should Prof. Geddes's recommendations be made effective, the world will be likely to look to Dunfermline for a great deal; for such a race of citizens, in fine, and such fruits of citizenship as not Florence, and hardly Athens, has given the pattern for. Possibly a perception of these impending obligations may go to hinder the full adoption of the social-culture scheme here unfolded. Dunfermline may have some dread of being found unworthy when tried by the standard of its opportunities. But it will have failed by that standard as it is, if all this knowledge and wisdom has been cried in its streets, if all this vision and purpose, this enthusiasm of science and of humanity, has been opened to it in vain. For the work is such as has never been done for any city before. The knowledge out of which the thought should issue has not been in the world till our own day; and perhaps minds capable of the combinations which we find here are few in a century, rarer even than those divine differential aptitudes which—in poetry, in music, or in abstract thought—we acclaim as genius. This opinion, we have little doubt, will be shared by all those who, from a careful study of the whole book, have apprehended intimately "the way in which Prof. Geddes's mind works" (in Mr. Booth's phrase), and have realized the number of directions in which that mind is sure and vitalizing.

It is in part this interest of the book as an intellectual manifestation, and in part the scientific validity, the imaginative sweep of its greater projects and contentions, which give 'City Development' a claim to be considered as other than a local document, or a merely scientific or sociological work. The purpose for which it was written may be served or no, as the parish pump or the local signiory shall decide. That Botanic Garden not made from books nor presenting "mainly a cat's-graveyard effect of epitaph labels," but growing in the abundance of nature and for man's pleasure; that evolutionary Rock Garden, at once a playground, an historical life-scroll, and a visible section of the globe; that Nature-Palace, with its panorama of lands and peoples, teaching the citizens "to see their fellow-man of different clime and race and colour no longer as 'half-devil' but as truly child"; that Open-Air Museum of sociological fact, and that Crafts Village which should make the ages and the industries of the earth simultaneous and mutually illuminating; that Institute of History, charged in plan and plenishings with concrete relic and reminder, with symbol and with sentiment—these and many other institutions of the cultural wonderland which Prof. Geddes has projected for Dunfermline may not, after all, have their real foundations laid there. But this philosophy of historical reality, this naturalist's vision of an evolving world, this personal sense of the oneness of life and of the immanence of upward trend and splendid purposes—of which the whole scheme is the concrete product and part expression—are too rare not to command recognition among thinkers, and too vital not to enter largely into subsequent practice. It is true we might have wished to have, apart from any limiting reference to any local parcel of ground, a sufficient exposition of an outlook and a method of thinking that have been a subject of remark, if not always of understanding, for a good many years now. And yet the close reference of all this treatise to the conditions of a given case and place affords just what is needed to exemplify the method and vindicate the thought. The book should mark an era in its subject, for it definitely removes what has surely been hitherto the reproach of general sociology, regarded as a focussing of the sciences to the ends of action. Sociology, so defined, has been too like the lion's cave in the fable. We have seen all the sciences travelling towards it, and each entering in turn. But we see none of them come out again—except in the form of an abstract sociologist, leaner than ever, and looking for more. Now Prof. Geddes, who has all the sciences, is of all sociologists the least abstract, albeit he scatters ideas and challenges like a Mirandola, and sees the cosmos wherever he looks: equally in the ripening kailyard and in the listeners to the Angelus.

Of the illustrations with which the volume is richly furnished, some afford striking object-lessons in the art of constructive vision, and others are of no small intrinsic interest and beauty.

---

Auction Prices of Books. Edited by Luther S. Livingston. Vol. I. (New York, Dodd, Mead & Co.; London, Stock.)

This is an American compilation which we owe to the energy and industry of an able bibliographer, Mr. Livingston, and as it is what it professes to be, "a representative record, arranged in alphabetical order, from the commencement of the English 'Book-Prices Current' in [Dec] 1886 and the American 'Book-Prices Current' in 1894 to 1901," we need scarcely point out that its value to all who have to do with books cannot be exaggerated. It does not by any means supersede 'Book-Prices Current,' but is rather an index to and epitome of the contents of the eighteen volumes of that most useful publication, with the American book-prices of the last ten years thrown in, not to mention "some thousands of important auction quotations of earlier date." Copious extracts have been made from the catalogues of such collections as the George Daniel, Sunderland, Beckford, Corser, Tite, and others which occurred after Lowndes was published and before 'Book-Prices Current' was begun. This fact is in itself very important; and, in these days of high pressure, to find out at a glance what a particular book has fetched, instead of having to wade through twenty-eight volumes, is a very great boon, and we cannot be too grateful to Mr. Livingston and his enterprising publishers, Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co., for the work. The four volumes will contain nearly 100,000 records, or about 20,000 different books and editions, alphabetically arranged under the authors' names. The scope of the work may be briefly summarized thus: It includes (1) all books in the English language, or printed in England, from Caxton's time to the present day, which have realized 1*l.* in England, or 5 dols. in America; (2) all books relating to America, wherever printed and in whatever language; and (3) all important incunabula printed on the continent of Europe, together with a large number of continental works of a later date than 1520. On the other hand, most books of the seventeenth and two succeeding centuries printed in continental languages, and not relating to America, are excluded; whilst, for reasons which will be obvious, most extra-illustrated books are likewise omitted.

Mr. Livingston, though he has a natural and excusable bias in favour of Americana, has built up his great work on a well-defined basis, and in going carefully through his well-packed pages we cannot but admit that he has done his work admirably. We think, indeed, that he has, in one way, done it more thoroughly than was necessary, by following too closely the limitations which he set himself. Take, for instance, such an entry as the first edition of Buckle's 'History of Civilization,' 1857-61. There are eight entries of copies sold in England and America, and these vary from 1*l.* 1*s.* to 14 dols. It would have been a material economy of space to include only the highest and lowest amounts, with the respective years of sale, and so compress into a single line what now takes thirteen. There are hundreds of books in the first volume which might readily have been submitted to this process of condensation, and the space thus saved could have been utilized for annotations of really rare and important books. Mr. Livingston is, we think, too sparing in the matter of annotation, although we frankly recognize that if he had not done violence to his desires in this respect he would never have got through his task. In the case of early English Bibles, Caxtons, and so forth, he has refrained from giving collations, but has briefly indicated the defects of each copy, and it is sometimes curious and interesting to notice the variations in the descriptions of the same copy in two sales. For instance, when the Coverdale Bible of 1535 was in the Tite sale at Sotheby's in May, 1874, it lacked "title, six other leaves, and map"; when it was sold at Christie's in April, 1900, the "title, first two leaves of dedication, fol. ii, map, and last three leaves" were enumerated as being in facsimile, which seems to suggest that all the faults of this example were not fully set out in the Tite catalogue. A good many discrepancies, indeed, will be discovered in different descriptions of the same copy at an interval of a few years: imperfect books are often perfected in the course of time, and minor defects were not regarded as worth mentioning a quarter of a century ago. To-day the smallest defect is mentioned, counting even blank leaves, the absence or presence of which makes a very considerable difference in the commercial value of a Caxton or a Fust & Schoeffer.

It does not follow that because a book is very rare it is also valuable. There is, as Mr. Livingston points out in his excellent preface, a buyer somewhere for a copy of every printed book. The difficulty which most booksellers experience is the running down of that particular collector. Then again book-collecting, like all other things, has its fashions, and men will collect with assiduity to-day what they would have trampled on ten years ago, and what they may throw out ten years hence. Some few of these ups and downs may be traced in the first volume of Mr. Livingston's great encyclopædia of books and their prices; other and still more striking illustrations will be observed in the succeeding volumes, when the juvenilia of Mr. Rudyard Kipling and R. L. Stevenson are pitilessly tabulated. Many of these sudden "booms" are due more to trade engineering than to any real demand on the part of genuine collectors, and if booksellers have frequently burnt their fingers over some of their speculations, they do not deserve much sympathy.

We are glad to notice that Mr. Livingston has not followed Mr. Slater with that blind faith which sometimes leads to disaster. But he has not sufficiently made use of the many, if sometimes minor corrections of Mr. Slater's useful annual which have appeared for some years in The Athenæum. Accuracy in books of this description is of the utmost consequence. Mr. Slater, as well as Mr. Livingston, has to depend almost entirely on the sale catalogues, and these, in their turn, are often compiled at very high pressure; if a book is described and sold under the hammer as perfect, it is only reasonable to assume that it has no imperfections. But it often happens that defects are only announced when a book is put up for sale, and if these defects are accepted by the auctioneer as reasonable, they are duly entered in the sale catalogue, and are consequently open to any one who cares to look for them. For instance, "portrait inserted" should have been deleted from the entry of J. P. Camus, 'Nature's Paradox,' 1652, sold at Sotheby's in June, 1902. The very interesting copy of Burns's 'Poems,' Kilmarnock, 1786 (with the last leaf in facsimile), which realized 56*l.* in the same sale, is entirely omitted by Mr. Livingston. It ought further to have been mentioned that the copy of Bunyan's 'Holy War,' 1682, likewise in the same sale, contained the very scarce advertisement leaf beginning "Some say the 'Pilgrim's Progress' is not mine," &c., as this to some extent explains the very high price (149*l.*) paid for that copy; moreover, 'Book-Prices Current' states (and we have no notes to the contrary) that this copy contained the folding plate. Mr. Livingston distinctly says "no folding plate." Clearly the two statements are in conflict, and we think that Mr. Slater is correct in this instance. The Hope Edwardes copy of 'Don Quixote,' translated by Shelton, and sold in 1901 for 52*l.*, was returned as imperfect, and afterwards resold for 23*l.*, so that the former price, uncorrected, is misleading. Minute examination might reveal other debatable points; but as a solid, conscientious piece of work, we can cordially commend Mr. Livingston's 'Auction Prices of Books.' Like all other books of the same kind, it must be used with intelligence, and not relied upon too implicitly. "Verify your quotations" is a form of advice which is often needed in dealing with bibliographical books of all kinds.

Marie Caroline, Reine des Deux-Siciles. Par André Bonnefons. (Paris, Perrin.)

AMONG the queens who have aroused in their votaries and enemies a passion of admiration or hatred, few figures are more interesting than that of the unhappy sister of Marie Antoinette, who for forty-six years was titular sovereign of Southern Italy. It is the lot of certain persons to act as sedatives; others, again, have an inspiring or irritant quality which keeps their surroundings in a state of fervour or ferment. Both kinds doubtless have their uses as foils one to the other; but it is an untoward destiny which yokes a frolicsome colt with a heavy cart-horse; and that was the lot which exigencies of State imposed on the two lively daughters of Maria Theresa. In 1768 the empress-queen gave in marriage Marie Caroline, then in her sixteenth year, to Ferdinand IV. of Naples. Two years later Hapsburg policy bestowed on the Dauphin of France, soon to become Louis XVI., the Archduchess Marie Antoinette at an even earlier age. The bridegrooms were but one year older than their brides, and it is generally recognized that they were intended by nature to be gamekeepers rather than kings. It would be interesting to speculate what might have been the outcome of events if the two monarchs had had the wish of their hearts and devoted themselves solely to sport, leaving affairs of State to their ambitious, if not able consorts.

From this attractive though unpractical train of thought we turn to notice the actual course of events in the life of the elder sister, though it is well to remember that the sympathy which always existed between them inspired subsequently in the Queen of Naples that implacable hatred of France which counted for so much in European politics and in the life of Nelson. Marie Caroline had little difficulty in gaining the upper hand over her husband, and when she gave birth to a prince she gained the right (for which Maria Theresa stipulated in the marriage contract) to take her place in the King's Council. Her influence sufficed to remove from power, in the year 1777, the Minister Tanucci, who had formerly kept the young prince and king in a kind of tutelage. Soon all was changed. The influence of the Court of Spain waned, while that of the Hapsburgs steadily grew—a development furthered by the adroitness and tenacity of purpose of the new Minister, Acton. It is not our purpose here to seek to fathom the mystery which hangs over the figure of this remarkable man. The time has not yet come when his career can be described with justice and certainty. The author repeats, though without malevolence, some of the stories told against him, but admits that, after receiving the portfolio for Foreign Affairs in 1788, he did something to invigorate the policy of the Neapolitan State.

The outbreak of the French Revolution and the fall of that monarchy brought about an entirely new situation. Thenceforth Marie Caroline's jealousy of Spain was swallowed up in her boundless hatred of France. The Court of Naples, it is true, recognized the French Republic, but that action was known to be due only to fear of Latouche-Tréville's fleet. An alliance with England was now all-important, in order to secure the Neapolitan coasts from insult; and it was this motive of self-interest which impelled Ferdinand, Marie Caroline, and Acton to turn to the Court of St. James. M. Bonnefons's conjecture that Acton's conduct was prompted by his gratification at receiving the title of "lord" is surprisingly modern. The Neapolitan statesman was Sir John Francis Acton, and he succeeded to that rank on the death of his cousin in 1791. In fact, the rupture with France lay in the nature of things, especially after the execution of Louis XVI. By the treaty of July 20th, 1793, the Neapolitan Court agreed to place its fleet and 6,000 soldiers at the service of Great Britain for the common cause against the French Republic. What the Neapolitans did during the siege of Toulon by the republicans is well known. M. Bonnefons says: "[ils] s'étaient comportés vaillamment." In his reference to that event he gives another proof of the insufficiency of his study by using the phrase, "le général espagnol [sic] O'Hara commandait l'armée de terre." More valuable is his account of the way in which Ferdinand IV. shirked his duties to his ally, Austria, in 1796, and made the first overtures for peace with France without the knowledge of his queen.

The account provided of the events of 1798-9 is often incomplete and untrustworthy, chiefly because the author has not utilized the English materials on the subject, notably the works of Capt. Mahan and the volume of dispatches 'Nelson and the Neapolitan Jacobins,' recently edited for the Navy Records Society. That Nelson acted with regrettable ferocity, especially towards Caracciolo, must be admitted; but the authority conferred on him by the king at Palermo gave him the right to override the terms which Cardinal Ruffo had granted to the Neapolitan leaders, and M. Bonnefons ought further to point out that, while the British admiral allowed the terms of the capitulation of Castellamare to hold good because it had been completed, he claimed that he had the right to annul the other capitulations which had not been completed. Further, in this matter Nelson was acting not as a British admiral, but as the plenipotentiary of the king. However, the author does not spare his censures of the queen, and even of the Neapolitan republicans. He justly exposes the trickery which had enabled them to seize the Castle of St. Elmo from the royalists, and ventures on the rather sweeping assertion that their previous conduct was totally devoid of patriotism. Granted that they did great harm to their country, yet it was surely due in the main to ignorance and desperation. M. Bonnefons does well to print in an appendix the remarks of the queen on the capitulation signed by Ruffo and Foote: they are the ravings of a woman half mad with longings for revenge.

The later chapters of this work show the same defect which we have already noticed—a lack of knowledge of the evidence on the British side, especially of the archives of the Foreign Office, which have been to some extent published. The author follows Thiers and M. Sorel in assuming that Malta was the sole cause of the rupture of the Peace of Amiens, and that England all along meant to keep that island. It is clear that he has not benefited by the researches of M. Coquelle (reviewed in The Athenæum of April 29th last). We have no space in which to follow M. Bonnefons through the closing events of the queen's life. The fall of Acton, the flight of the Court to Sicily, the hopes and fears, the plots and quarrels that there filled up her life, are briefly but clearly set forth. M. Bonnefons has not been able to clear up the vexed question of the supposed dealings of the queen with the French authorities in South Italy or Dalmatia. His treatment of this affair (which accounted for what he is pleased to term Bentinck's "persecution" of her) is less detailed and satisfactory than that of Mr. R. M. Johnston in 'The Napoleonic Empire in Southern Italy,' part i. chap. viii. Incidentally he quotes a curious story, reported by Alquier, according to which the Emperor Francis told the queen that he would not refuse Napoleon his daughter if he asked for her—this, too, during the Consulate. The final impression created by this work is that a being so wayward and passionate as Marie Caroline was certain to make shipwreck of her life; but the story is not without elements of pathos, to which M. Bonnefons does full justice.

NEW NOVELS.

Marian Sax. By E. Maria Albanesi. (Hurst & Blackett.)

THE tendency to invent an improbable condition of things, which we noted in a former pleasant story by Madame Albanesi, 'Susannah and One Eldor,' has grown to large proportions in the present novel. Hubert Dane, villain and hero combined, is discovered staying at a country house, to which his virtuous and discarded wife is coming in her capacity of a professional singer on tour. As he intends to marry the daughter of his host, the proposed after-dinner concert is inconvenient; but Mrs. Dane, née Marian Sax, thoughtfully drowns herself to prevent further confusion. The interview between husband and wife and its sequel would appear to provide sufficient sensation for twenty-four hours. But, as Dane is escaping from the scene, with an unknown elderly gentleman in the same railway carriage, the stranger dies abruptly, leaving in a dressing-bag documentary proof that the lady just drowned is his sole legatee. We are not, as it might seem, unfairly telling the story, for all this is merely by way of a beginning, and extraordinary complications follow, startling to the legal mind. Vice seems finally left triumphant, although modest virtue in disguise comes in for some reward. The women of the book are more skilfully portrayed than the men.

Baliol Garth. By Algernon Gissing. (Chatto & Windus.)

MR. GISSING has a way in all his stories of falling just short of actual achievement, of conviction—in a word, of success. He has a nice literary sense, and considerable feeling for romance; his characterization is frequently good and always sincere; also, he writes with restraint and refinement. There is the uncomfortable fact, however, that he never wholly satisfies one; his books lack rounded completion. The plot of the present story is almost melodramatic, the treatment analytic. And that, by the way, may be one of the sources of this writer's weakness. Here and there in previous books, and once at least in this one, he creates an atmosphere not unlike that of some of Poe's tales—of brooding danger and crime, in a setting that is wild and mysterious. We are concerned here with a man of good Border stock who deserts his family acres for the excitement of commercial life. We find this man on the verge of ruin and disgrace. He seeks to save himself by marriage with the well-dowered daughter of the man who has detected his financial wrongdoing, and, to hasten the match before exposure shall fall upon him, sends for his son and that son's tutor from the Border home which he scarcely ever visits. (The man is a widower.) His son is an interesting, poetically minded youth; the tutor a strong, scholarly man of a most unworldly sort. The father induces the tutor to aid him by pleading his cause with the woman he would marry; by telling her how she can save him from ruin, and by interesting her in the boy. The tutor agrees, chiefly to shield the boy and his family from disgrace. But afterwards he repents, for he falls under the fascination of the girl to whom he should plead his employer's cause. In the end his word stops a clandestine marriage; exposure comes, and the father is sent to prison for a long term. Later the tutor marries the girl, who is wealthy in her own right. Withal, he has a fine sense of honour. The book tells of his attempt to reconcile the facts and his sense of honour, and of the tragic aftermath; and is, after all, a good tale, told with ability.

A Prince to Order. By Charles Stoke Wayne. (Lane.)

THIS is one of the numerous band of stories which tell of the adventures of an American at the Court of a tiny State in Central Europe. Its treatment lacks distinction, but the tale has one or two features of originality. In the beginning, the hero is seen in the act of waking in bed in a Paris hotel. How he came there, why his dark hair should now be fair, and his ordinarily clean-shaven face bear a beard of some months' growth, is more than this gentleman can explain. He dresses himself in clothes he cannot remember ever having seen before, and, meeting by chance a fellow-American at a café, succeeds in establishing his identity in this man's mind, only to learn the embarrassing fact that he is regarded by his friends in America as a swindler, who disappeared from New York several months before with a large number of valuable securities. The position is one of some interest and novelty. Later we learn that our hero has been kept under hypnotic influence all this while by the chief of a party of conspirators who mean to set him on the throne of Budavia as the long-lost heir. He awakes at length to realities by reason of the death of the chief of the gang, under whose influence he had been kept. For the rest, the tale runs upon well-defined lines which have recently become stereotyped in this class of narrative. But it is not a bad specimen of its class: lively, entertaining, and tolerably ingenious. The author's notions of European titles and how they are conferred are quaint.

The Unwritten Law. By Arthur Henry. (Nutt.)

THIS is one of the American novels that are worthy of all respect and consideration. In such a book as this one is made conscious of a genuine striving after ideals, social and moral, as well as literary. This is Zola, with Anglo-Saxon restraint and without any trace of his singular gusto in handling topics that English-speaking peoples generally agree to treat with reserve. The book is animated by a fine seriousness, a single-minded sincerity, which pertain to the best and highest in American art and thought. It exhibits a certain crudeness, a certain toughness of fibre, which may militate against its right appreciation by the fastidious. But this quality is not really to be regretted—rather, perhaps, to be recognized as a natural feature of the more hopeful sort of American novel. In the present stage of America's literary development fine polish and delicacy of style are apt, when they occur, to connote weakness rather than strength. The author of this story has obviously set himself earnestly to the task of comprehending certain phases of American society, and presenting them, in the form of fiction, as he has seen them, and without reference to the vision and presentation of old-world novelists. That road leads to literature in fiction; those methods should win appreciation from all friends of American literature, and recognition upon this side of the Atlantic. In the beginning the story introduces a simple, ignorant old German, living in a suburb of New York, with his wife and two little daughters. He is a working engraver, and by the exercise of ceaseless thrift has accumulated perhaps a couple of thousand pounds, to provide for himself and his wife in old age, and to shield his children from the dangers and mischances of poverty. This old peasant and his wife are characters of beautiful simplicity. Their children are of another race; they are young Americans. The reader is introduced to other people in a somewhat higher social grade, and gets a luminous picture of that curious modern product, the religious man, superintendent of a Sunday school and so forth, who is caught by the tide of recklessness in finance, and led into out-and-out commercial dishonesty, whilst remaining a genuinely religious man. The bank of which this man is president, and which contains the whole of the old peasant-engraver's savings, fails. The old man does not even know of the failure for several months, and then is stunned by the loss, which finds him too old to get further employment. He does not in the least understand the manner of his loss. The great brilliant power of which he knows no more than if he were a horse—the society which he has served all his life long—has snatched his treasure from him. Lacking a situation, he sits down doggedly to engrave counterfeit notes, aiming solely at supporting his family, and winning back from society the treasure it has taken from him. In due course he is detected and sent to penal servitude. He proffers no defence, and the authorities do not in the least comprehend the workings of his primitive mind or concern themselves with the real beauty of his simple nature. One of his daughters, impelled by a fiery social ambition, marries a wealthy man, the other suffers the hardships and buffets of the slums. She has her peasant father's absolute simplicity, rendered more dangerous by a passionate unrestraint born of the more spacious environment in which she was reared. The whole story makes a fine, realistic picture of life in New York, and presents many problems for the consideration of the thoughtful—one of which, by the way, is the extraordinary brutality and tyranny of the police administration of New York, and the marvellous meekness with which they are endured by a free-born people. This book should certainly be read.

A Grand Duke of Russia. By Fred Whishaw. (White & Co.)

THIS "story of the upheaval" is extremely modern; so much so that on its purely historical side it seems but an expansion of newspaper accounts which we have read up to "Vladimir's Day," and since. Yet the author has much to tell which is purely ancient on the social side, glimpses and sidelights touching the great blank Oriental mass of the Russian populace, who seem from the best accounts to be much in the same state as when, in the twenties of last century, they cheered for Constantine and the Constitution (taking "Constitutzia" to be the grand duke's wife), and not much changed since the Instructions of Theodosius. What will the upheaval (if any) upheave? There is no answer here, only a parable of the breaking up of Northern winter and a coming of the flood of spring, with which the lovers of the story console themselves when the curtain falls. He is sprung (irregularly) from a grand duke, and, as his father's gamekeeper, is in touch with the people, though educated above his apparent class. She is young, educated, and patriotic; also, his father's mistress. Volodia saves Maximilian at the risk of his own life, and with his eyes open relieves him of Nathalie. The story of Matrona, Volodia's wife, her hapless marriage and miserable end, is in the deadly key of most Russian peasant stories.

Poverty Bay. By Harry Furniss. (Chapman & Hall.)

MR. FURNISS calls his admirably illustrated book a "nondescript novel." It is likely to be popular, since it contains a Dickensian touch of sentiment, with many odd characters, a ghost, and a mystery. The hero is a rich man who goes down to a decayed country resort, "Poverty Bay," and enjoys the humours of the truly extraordinary inhabitants. He writes in the first person, and one would imagine, from the record of the people who talk to him, that the generality of authors and all sorts of artists were so desperately swindled and maltreated in London that they never had a fair chance. This satirical vein is overdone and does not make good padding. Mr. Furniss has facility in writing and some humour, but he has not learnt the arts of omission.

The Scarlet Bat. By Fergus Hume. (White & Co.)

THIS is a good specimen of the sensational novel, not because it can boast of characterization, but because it is ingenious, well-proportioned, and does not misuse the English language. The hero awakes from a bout of drugged drink, to find his oppressor both shot and stabbed in the same room. He flies from justice in view of circumstantial evidence; though, of course, he is innocent. The unravelling of the plot against him is well done, and most of the puppets steer clear of rank melodrama.

L'Épaulette: Souvenirs d'un Officier. By Georges Darien. (Paris, Charpentier.)

'L'ÉPAULETTE' is a most strange book—clever—unlikely, we think, to be popular in our country, as the military and national considerations which the task of reading it involves are exclusively French, and, outside France, interesting only to the German general staff. As we knew from his 'Biribi: Armée d'Afrique,' the author is a pessimist, but he seems to gather his expression of his doctrine from all the various French pessimist schools except the clerical. Sometimes he seems Bonapartist in his regrets, sometimes anti-clerical Nationalist in the present, and sometimes Socialist in his dreams of the future. But then he becomes pessimist only for the days which are, and optimist for those which are to come. We think the French army better than M. Darien makes it.

SCOTTISH HISTORY AND GENEALOGY.

A Student's History of Scotland. By D. W. Rannie. (Methuen).—The student who needs this brief and useful sketch of Scottish history ought, we think, to read 'The Tales of a Grandfather' either immediately before or immediately after examining this skeleton. The author, very properly, keeps in view the relations between Scotland and England, but he does not make them amusing: Scott does. He thinks that Queen Mary and Presbyterianism swallow up Scottish history, and, indeed, to have known Queen Mary is in itself a liberal education; though "an uncritical admiration" of the Reformation and the Covenant is the bane of popular histories. Sir Walter, even, is much too friendly to what he excessively disliked in his heart. He certainly never dreamed of asking Master John Littlejohn whether the people of Scotland were "Non-Aryan, Magyar, Basques, Finns," or not. However, ours is a scientific age, and Mr. Rannie tells the student as much as is good for him about the Picts. We do not wholly understand how, at Falkirk, the Scots "swept round the English and seized the Stirling end of the bridge." Did they swim, or cross in boats? "The rain of arms," at Bannockburn, was possibly a rain of arrows. The gillies, and the fallen rose from Randolph's chaplet and the axe stroke of Bruce, are left out, so that the student does not know the things worth knowing about Bannockburn. There is no reason for reviewing in detail a little educational book like this. It is a good and clear summary of the history of a nation which, as it does not set its own examination papers, cannot expect much interest to be taken in its obscure past. The affair of Kinmont Willie can scarcely be remembered by the student who reads the story told in four lines. Montrose disappears from the book at Philiphaugh. Rather more is said about the regalia than about the great marquis's year of victory, and about his fate nothing is said at all! Was Stewart of Ballechin "suborned"? Was he not naturally inclined to stand for the rightful cause? This is, in short, an excellent little book for the young student who is going to read Scottish history, or who, having been so eccentric as to read Scottish history, wants to refresh his memory by a synopsis.

Lady Jean: the Romance of the Great Douglas Cause. By Percy Fitzgerald. (Fisher Unwin).—If Mr. Fitzgerald's ingenuity in explaining the necessity for his book were equalled by his skill in presenting his facts, 'Lady Jean' would be a useful summary of one of the great peerage cases. As it is, his essay is merely an example of book-making. To speak of the case as "now for the first time related in these pages" is (ambiguously) wide of the mark, though his meaning is made clear in the subsequent statement that the struggle has been "completely overlooked for a period of a hundred and forty years." But if the story has not had a monograph to itself in recent times, its essential features have been told over and over again, notably in Burke's 'Romance of the Aristocracy' and his 'Vicissitudes of Great Families.' An excellent account was included by Sir William Fraser in 'The Douglas Book' (1885), in the 'Dictionary of National Biography' (1888), and, finally, in Sir Herbert Maxwell's 'House of Douglas' (1902). With such reminders the "1,200 quarto pages of evidence" can scarcely be called an undiscovered country, even although Carlyle never explored them, as he once threatened to do. Perhaps to Mr. Fitzgerald himself the "Cause" has come as a real novelty. Such an inference, at any rate, might be drawn from his reference (via "the versatile Sir Herbert Maxwell") to "one Wodrow." What has the voluminous minister of Easton done to deserve this suggestion of obscurity?

If the book does not take the expert, or the fairly educated even, by storm, it is not written as a rattling story of adventure which the man who runs may read; for it assumes a little too much, especially towards the beginning. It is typical of Mr. Fitzgerald's methods that he has supplied no genealogical table and no index, although he prints such superfluous illustrations as the cathedrals of Aix and Rheims; yet such a table would have illuminated the destination of the estates in question. Mr. Fitzgerald also presents his theory of imposture as if it were new, apologizing almost if "my view" of the matter is not "acceptable to those interested in Lady Jean and her family"; but it is forty years since Sir Bernard Burke frankly stated that it is impossible "to resist the strong appearance of imposture," and in 1890 "G. E. C." quoted Burke with approval. Indeed, a cursory examination of the evidence at this time of day simply makes one astounded at the verdict of the House of Lords in favour of the claimant, and throws a most interesting light on the similar reversing of the Court of Session judgment in the case of the United Free Church. The reader has not to go far without finding some characteristic touches of Mr. Fitzgerald. On p. 6 we get an "and who," and on p. 7 "and which." On p. 7 Lady Jean's house is called "Drumsheugh," which is correct, and on p. 15 "Drumcleugh."

The History of the Speculative Society, 1764-1904. (Edinburgh, T. & A. Constable).—"I do think the Spec. is about the best thing in Edinburgh," wrote Stevenson in a letter to a fellow-member. Again, in 'Memories and Portraits,' "Here a member can warm himself, and loaf and read; here, in defiance of Senatus Consults, he can smoke." To the outside world the "Spec." is known, if known at all, chiefly from its literary associations. Founded in 1764 by six students, one of whom was Burns's future publisher William Creech, its members' roll has included such men as Dugald Stewart, Walter Scott, Lockhart, "Christopher North," and Aytoun, to select a few from the long list printed in this volume. Scott was admitted in 1790, and read essays on the origin of the feudal system, on the authenticity of Ossian, and on the origin of Scandinavian mythology. He was secretary of the Society from 1791 to 1795, and took a leading part in debates on the poor rates, the abolition of slavery, and the "eternal question" of the justice of the execution of Charles I. Lockhart became a member in 1815, and four years later caricatured the Society in 'Peter's Letters to his Kinsfolk.' Stevenson's name is first inscribed in the books in 1869. He was president during the sessions 1872-4, and wrote many essays for the Society, two on 'John Knox and his Relations to Women' being subsequently extended and reprinted in 'Familiar Studies.' In set debate, as we gather from this history, he did not shine, but he "spoke regularly, and took an eager and often riotous part in private business." One of the scenes in 'Weir of Hermiston' is laid in the hall of the Speculative, where, in the earlier years of their history, the members used to discuss such edifying subjects as "Whether does a married or a single state tend most to promote virtue?" and "Whether is that modesty which is characteristic of the fair sex natural to them or acquired by education?" The present history of the Society is virtually a continuation down to date of the history published in 1815, now out of print and scarce. It is complete, in so far as it chronicles the membership of the Society from its beginning; but the editor has rightly deemed it unnecessary to treat with the same fullness the record of members whose careers were exhaustively dealt with in the former history. There is an excellent series of portraits of some thirty members of the Speculative, from Creech to Stevenson, with a reproduction of Sir J. W. Gordon's portrait of Scott as frontispiece. A full index completes an interesting and valuable account of a phase of intellectual life in Edinburgh.

A Guide to the Public Records of Scotland deposited in H.M. General Register House, Edinburgh. By M. Livingstone, I.S.O. (Edinburgh, H.M. General Register House).—This is a useful indication of the nature and extent of the public archives which still remain in Scotland. Although its rolls and registers were as far back as 1290 placed under the custody of an official called the Clerk of the Rolls, who held a post which later became that of "Lord Clerk Register," Scotland has been singularly unfortunate in the losses its records have sustained. The first infraction of their completeness was when, in 1291, the claims of the competitors to the crown were submitted to Edward I., many charters being, with the Crown jewels, removed to Berwick and London. A few were returned when John Baliol became king, but in 1296 (not 1696, as printed) some rolls were delivered at Berwick to Hugh Cressingham, Treasurer of Scotland, and the larger part of the spoil remained, and perhaps still remains, in England. Another raid on the records was made by Cromwell in 1651, and they were removed from Stirling Castle to the Tower of London—the clerk in charge, however, saving the Registers of the Privy Seal by conveying them to the Highlands, whence they were recovered in 1707. Cromwell's spoil was embarked for Scotland by sea in 1660, packed in ninety-five hogsheads; but misfortune still pursued the archives, and only ten hogsheads reached Scotland, the rest being lost in the shipwreck of the Elizabeth. Other MSS. removed on the capture of the Bass to England were possibly, like other Scottish records which found their way to London, destroyed by fire in London. In spite of these losses a wonderfully large number of Scottish records down to the Union of 1707 survive, and this work gives a short and useful indication of their nature. They "amount to 60,000 MS. volumes, and an equivalent in bulk of unbound warrants and other papers." How valuable a list such as the one before us is can therefore be imagined, as it not only indicates what is in the Register House, but also in many cases tells us where the volumes and MSS. missing from there exist. For the use of historical students clearer and more definite information might have been given to show which of the records have already appeared, completely or otherwise, in a printed form, though an attempt has been made to do this.

The Scots Peerage. Edited by Sir James Balfour Paul, Lord Lyon King-at-Arms. Vol. II. (Edinburgh, Douglas).—The second volume of this work, which to Scottish genealogists is very important, includes the peerage titles from Ogilvy, Lord Band, to Cranstoun, Lord Cranstoun. It is to some degree a better ordered volume than its predecessor, but still there is a want of complete uniformity about it which we are sorry to see. Children of peers' daughters who were not heiresses still appear in some articles (e.g., Belhaven, Cathcart, and Cassilis), though not in all cases. Carelessness in proof-reading and haste are apparent throughout, and some incorrectness in the copious references may be noticed. In spite of this the work is worthy of much praise.

In this volume there are many important articles—for instance, Hamilton, Lord Belhaven; Borthwick, Lord Borthwick; and Campbell, Marquess of Breadalbane; for each of which the peerage cases have formed an excellent basis of authority. Under 'Belhaven' we notice that the husband of Anne Hamilton of Silvertonhill should have been Sir William Craigie of Gairsay, in Orkney. In the article on 'Blantyre' we are sorry to see that the mother of "La belle Stuart" is still unidentified, though Evelyn described her to Pepys as "one of the most cunning women in the world." The account of the Hepburns, Earls of Bothwell, is a valuable contribution to Scottish history, even though it does not definitely affiliate Margaret Hepburne (so the name is here spelt), Bothwell's maternal grandmother. It might also, perhaps, have mentioned that Archibald Douglas, who married (as third husband) Bothwell's sister, Margaret Hepburne, was the plotter whose intrigues against Queen Mary (his wife's sister-in-law) Mr. Lang has done so much to make known. Under 'Breadalbane' we get little light thrown upon the dispossessed Lord Ormelie, and under 'Buchan' we may point out that "Sir Hadrian Damon" was not a Dane, but Adrian Damaan, a professor of Leyden, who was in 1594 agent for the States General of Holland at the Scottish Court. 'Buccleuch' is chiefly founded upon Sir William Fraser's work, two early generations being omitted. 'Wemyss, Lord Burntisland,' is also indebted to the same author. Under 'Bute' is given a fuller account of the early Stewarts, Sheriffs of Bute, than has yet appeared, but the latter portion is in some places deficient in dates, and the first marriage of Cristine Egypta Bonaparte is omitted. The early earls of Caithness and Orkney remain very shadowy, but a great deal of new information is given on 'Crichton, Earl of Caithness,' and in the next article ('Sinclair') there is much fresh matter also, inter alia on the claim of the son of David Sinclair of Broynach to the earldom in 1786. 'Carlyle, Lord Carlyle,' and 'Comyn, Lord Buchan,' deserve study, as does 'Dalzell, Lord Carnwarth.' Under 'Bruce, Earl of Carrick,' much doubt is cast upon the old statement that Thomas Randolph, Earl of Murray, the Regent, was in reality the nephew of King Robert I. The notice on the Kennedies, Earls of Cassilis, is full, and, though supported by the Culzean MSS., is needlessly long. Sir William Fraser's reasons for doubting the legend of 'Jocky Faa' are quoted, but no reason for the folk-tale's origin. The article on Colville of Culross contains much of interest connecting the family with the Reformed Church in France. Under 'Elphinstone, Lord Coupar,' it should perhaps have been stated that Marion Ogilvy, Lady Coupar, was married when very young and under great pressure. The volume includes three Scottish titles the holders of which were wholly English, viz., Lord Barret of Newburgh, Lord Churchill of Eyemouth, and Richardson, Lord Cramond, which are adequately treated. We must not forget to praise also the last article on 'Lord Cranstoun,' which is one of the best-written in the book.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

Facsimiles of Rare Fifteenth-Century Printed Books.—1. Anelida and Arcite. By Geoffrey Chaucer.—2. Libellus Augustini Dacti. (Cambridge, University Press.)—These very handsome volumes are the first of a series of twelve photogravure facsimiles of rare fifteenth-century books printed in England, and now in the University Library, Cambridge. The facsimiles are by M. Dujardin, of Paris, and only two hundred copies are for sale. A short introduction by Mr. Jenkinson tells us that both of the originals from which they were made were sent to Cambridge on the famous occasion when

The king to Oxford sent a troop of horse.

They have another distinction, in being the only copies known, and the facsimiles are thus doubly welcome. The 'Anelida' is printed in a fount of type brought over from Bruges to London by Caxton, and is probably one of the first books printed in this country. It is of value as preserving some readings not found in any MS. A full description of it by Bradshaw is to be found on p. 118 of Dr. Furnivall's 'Trial Forewords,' and the facsimile shows Bradshaw's collation signatures.

The 'Rhetoric' of Augustine Dactus is one of the standing puzzles of English typography. The type is very small for the period, is only used once (in this book), though a few letters of it are found in the catchwords of another book from the same press, and contains an extraordinary number of "sorts," double letters, &c. In view of the fact that the book is very small, and that the St. Alban's press produced only four books, the complexity of the fount is very difficult to understand. It may be that the pride of the rich foundation of the abbey was involved in the matter to some extent, so that, funds being no difficulty, an unnecessarily complete set of punches or matrices was procured. The composition is satisfactory (though one or two "literals" can be found), and the press-work is at least as good as Caxton's. Two classes of those interested in bibliography have special reason to be grateful to Mr. Jenkinson for this splendid series of facsimiles. All those engaged in teaching the book arts require facsimiles, not of pages (which exist already), but of complete tracts which present a whole fount for their students' study. Bibliographers are able to compare types without difficulty. It is to be hoped that one result of the publication will be to determine the origin of this type. We recommend every school of art interested in the study of lettering to obtain this series, and to study the types, not as models for imitation, but as forms of the Gothic letters, which were adapted for English use in the time when Roman had not been introduced. Praise must be given to the excellence of the process employed for the reproduction. Its only drawback is that accidental soils of the original assume undue prominence in the facsimile. That they were allowed to remain is an additional guarantee for its absolute verisimilitude.

The Western Manuscripts in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge: a Descriptive Catalogue. By M. R. James, Litt.D. Vol. IV. (Cambridge, University Press.)—In reviewing the previous volumes of this excellent catalogue, we have on each occasion pleaded for an atlas of selected facsimiles. The present volume, which concludes the whole work, is in part an answer to our request, since it contains, in addition to a few pages of addenda and corrigenda, and forty pages of index, seventeen plates of facsimiles. Complete pages are seldom reproduced; but samples are included of the writing and illumination of twenty-five manuscripts. The size of the page (the volume being uniform with its predecessors) precludes the possibility of showing the finest MSS., such as the magnificent Apocalypse (No. 950) or the huge Canterbury Psalter (No. 987); and the finest miniatures are not attempted, such as the Psalter of Herbert of Bosham (No. 150), the East Anglian Horæ (No. 246), the Flemish Horæ (No. 261), or other MSS. (Nos. 1247, 1249, 1286, 1289, 1374, 1447) which are highly spoken of by Mr. James in his descriptions. On the other hand, we have two samples of the twelfth-century hand which Mr. James especially associates with Christ Church, Canterbury, and attributes to the example of Lanfranc; two earlier

Christ Church MSS., in a very graceful Caroline minuscule (Nos. 141 and 1135); the MS. of the Pauline Epistles (No. 216) traditionally assigned to the hand of Bede; two copies of Juvenal from St. Augustine's, Canterbury (Nos. 1241 and 1242), the first in a beautiful English minuscule of the tenth century; the best extant MS. of Ovid's 'Ibis' (No. 1335); some initials and borders of English work (Nos. 90 and 115); and a page of French work from the Horæ formerly belonging to Anne of Austria (Nos. 269 and 270). For all this we are grateful, and if we are still grasping enough to desire more, we recognize that we have as much as we have any right to expect, and that the gratitude of students is due to the Master and Fellows of Trinity for the beautiful catalogue of their manuscripts which they have now given to the world, and to Mr. James for the masterly skill with which he has executed it. Specialists may, as he says in his preface, detect errors or omissions here or there; but they will also be the most ready to proclaim the profound knowledge and unwearied industry which make Mr. James's work a model of its kind. We are glad to take this opportunity of congratulating both Mr. James and King's College on his recent election to the Provostship; and we trust that his new duties and dignities will be compatible with continued progress in the production of his admirable series of Cambridge catalogues.

The Library: a Quarterly Review of Bibliography and Library Lore. (Kegan Paul.)—Henry Bradshaw once began an article by saying that he had kept the notes he was using by him for years, for want of a periodical in which to publish them. It is indeed only when one compares the immense reputation of the late Cambridge University Librarian, and his influence on modern bibliography, with the small amount published under his name, that one realizes the loss sustained by scholars from the fact that for the greater part of his life no such review as The Library existed.

To bookish men there is always a pleasure in going into a fresh library, however small. One turns over fresh books, strange titles catch the eye, a chance passage sets the mind working in new directions, and an impulse thus received often modifies a previous train of thought. A glance into The Library has much the same sort of effect. We meet things that beforehand would not have made us seek them out, but being there, they interest us. Few are interested in old French, but all are glad to meet the first account in English of a newly discovered Chanson de Geste, and to find that it is not only new, but that it even ranks with 'Aliscans' and the 'Chanson de Roland.' The historian would not naturally turn to such a review for his materials, but no one interested in the Civil War can avoid careful study of its pages. The 'Alphabetum Narrationum' is but a name to those who have not read the 'Alphabet of Tales,' published last year by the Early English Text Society; but Mr. Herbert's paper on its authorship sets us off on a pleasant trip through mediæval times.

In the special department of bibliography the names of editors and contributors guarantee the best work. The owner of a library which contains fifteenth-century books should consult the papers running through the last volume on this subject, and, from another point of view, those which summarize the prices obtained for them during the past years. He will learn, too, what has been done and what is recommended for the care of books, not only from the point of view of a public librarian, but also from that of a small owner. It is, in fact, to the cultured man of leisure, owning books and interested in them, that the review makes its principal appeal.

It is to be feared that in many cases it does not reach his address, and that it suffers in consequence. The number of periodicals of the kind is sadly limited, and it behoves every one interested in such matters to lend them their support. The Library is a review which should be read and kept in every library where books are valued; it is written for book-lovers, and to them we cordially commend it.

L'Art Typographique dans les Pays-Bas (1500-40). Par Wouter Nijhoff. Livraison V. (The Hague, Nijhoff.)—We are glad to see a new part of this valuable series, and to learn that the author has recovered his health, and can promise a regular issue in future. The part before us contains twelve very interesting sheets of facsimiles, among them three of the Danish presses at Antwerp of 1529-31; of Bois-le-Duc (Hayen); of Gouda (Frères Conférenciers), where the woodcut (fac. 6) raises several questions as to the vestments shown; of Leyden with a fine device of Van Woerden; and of Zutphen. The facsimiles are very good and clear, and the system employed of keeping the reproductions of each printer on a separate sheet allows the greatest freedom to the editor during the production of the work, and complete ease of classification when it is completed. The work is an indispensable complement to the 'Bibliographie de la Typographie Néerlandaise,' itself an indispensable guide through a most complicated literature.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

THE reprint of Stevenson's Essays of Travel (Chatto & Windus) from the "Edinburgh Edition" is certain to be popular. It comes, except to the subscribers to that edition, with all the effect and freshness of a new production. And it is very characteristically Stevensonian. It will surely warm many hearts to hear a friendly and familiar voice once more a-talking. For Stevenson was a great chatterer. He is one of the most amiable gossips in literature, and in reading him one gets to recognize and expect his pleasant little points. There are some critics who go so far as to pronounce him a better essayist than writer of fiction. We should not like to say that, but it is certain that he is fully equipped for the special art of belles-lettres. His mental properties fitted him for success here. He had a keen eye, an engaging sense of fun, a pleasant cynicism, and an interest in all human affairs. His itineraries, if they are not quite sentimental journeys, come very near being so. Confessedly he admired Sterne, and it is probable that he played the "sedulous ape" to the author of 'Tristram Shandy' as well as to Sir Thomas Browne. One thing that strikes a reader of these essays is the early age at which Stevenson founded his style. For example, at twenty-one he writes of the difference between England and Scotland:—

"Here are two people almost identical in blood; pent up together on one small island, so that their intercourse (one would have thought) must be as close as that of prisoners who shared one cell of the Bastille; the same in language and religion; and yet a few years of quarrelsome isolation—a mere forenoon's tiff, as one may call it, in comparison with the great historical cycles—has so separated their thoughts and ways that not unions, not mutual dangers, nor steamers, nor railways, nor all the king's horses and all the king's men seem able to obliterate the broad distinction."

How characteristic of Stevenson to the end was that careless ordered touch of king's horses and king's men! "Nearly all with whom I conversed upon the subject," says he elsewhere, "were bitterly opposed to war, and attributed their own misfortunes, and frequently their own taste for whisky, to the campaigns in Zululand and Afghanistan."

Every admirer of R. L. S. is familiar with that gentle and amusing cynicism which never did any harm in the world. But the moralist as well as the cynic is here, and the moralist of good sound sense, who despises the fashionable refuge in paradox. Total abstinence, he thinks, "like all ascetical conclusions, is unfriendly to the most generous, cheerful, and human parts of man"; and he enlarges on the folly of emigration as a cure for drunkenness:—

"You cannot run away from a weakness: you must sometime fight it out or perish; and if that be so, why not now, and where we stand? Cælum non animam. Change Glenlivet for Bourbon, and it is still a whisky, only not so good. A sea-voyage will not give a man the nerve to put aside cheap pleasure; emigration has to be done before we climb the vessel; an aim in life is the only fortune worth the finding; and it is not to be found in foreign lands, but in the heart itself."

These are the moral maxims of the shorter catechist. They are, no doubt, very facile, but they are good; and they were in Stevenson's blood. The charge of over-fluency, as well as of monotony, has been brought against Stevenson's prose, and here good opinions differ. Certainly his style, manufactured as it was by arduous artifice, was an accomplished implement, and was turned by him to variable uses. It has always colour (sometimes it is over-coloured), rhythm, and significance. But above all it has significance; for it is for use that Stevenson primarily wants it. No word is employed wantonly, and fine words are not thrown out of employment merely because they are fine. It is a mistake to fight shy of grand acquaintances. They should be met, as one gentleman meets another, and receive frank and courteous treatment. In some such fashion might Stevenson, with a deal more grace and flourish, have explained and justified his literary "Corinthianism." And who amongst us to-day could have set forth so lively and vivid an impression as this?—

"It was a bleak, uncomfortable day; but at night, by six bells, although the wind had not yet moderated, the clouds were all wrecked and blown away behind the rim of the horizon, and the stars came out thickly overhead. I saw Venus burning as steadily and sweetly across this hurly-burly of the winds and waters as ever at home upon the summer woods. The engine pounded, the screw tossed out of the water with a roar, and shook the ship from end to end; the bows battled with loud reports against the billows; and as I stood in the lee-scuppers and looked up to where the funnel leaned out, over my head, vomiting smoke, and the black and monstrous topsails blotted, at each lurch, a different crop of stars, it seemed as if all this trouble were a thing of small account, and that just above the mast reigned peace unbroken and eternal."

In all, including 'The Amateur Emigrant,' this volume comprises fourteen papers and fragments. It is a pity that 'The Amateur Emigrant' is not published in its proper place, with its sequel 'Across the Plains.' But, as it is, this book will find room on the shelves of all lovers of English letters.

WHEN Lord Kitchener, during the operations of the Soudanese war, sternly relegated the war correspondents to the railhead, he earned the hostility of those who regard the distribution of news as of more importance than the successful conclusion of a campaign. So, too, of course, the Japanese have incurred the enmity of some Occidental war correspondents. Their wonderful system of censorship has undoubtedly assisted the Japanese very materially, and has certainly justified itself. But it has broken the hearts and patience of some amiable press-men. Mr. John Fox, jun., a well-known American novelist, was dispatched to follow the Japanese from Tokyo, and, after pursuing the will-o'-the-wisp for some months, gave it up as a bad job. The somewhat meagre results of his pilgrimage, related in a forlorn and dispirited temper, are embodied in Following the Sun

Flag (Constable). Mr. Fox declares that "no more enthusiastic pro-Japanese than I ever touched foot on the shores of the little island." But, alas! we gather that his feelings underwent a change owing to his treatment. He does not quarrel "with what was done—only with the way it was done." He suggests that Japan ought to have been more honest, and refused to take any war correspondents from the outset. Perhaps it will interest people to learn how the Japanese generals exercised supervision over the press, which is related in a chapter entitled 'The White Slaves of Haicheng':—

"We are to play a week's engagement here in a drama of still life—the title of which heads these lines. With a sleeve-badge of identification on—the Red Badge of Shame we call it—we can wander more or less freely within the city walls. We can even climb on them and walk around the town—about two miles—but we cannot go outside without a written application from the entire company, and then only under a guard. We are to have three guards by the way, and our letters—even private ones—are to go to the censor, and not come back to us."

Mr. Fox's book thus wears a lugubrious air. It has nothing to do with the war, but is just a narrative of his personal experiences and the experiences of other correspondents in his company. Some were English, some American, some French. Mr. Fox has a sensitive pen and a sense of colour in fiction, which do not desert him here. But his impressions are very random. He takes to the Chinese rather than the Japanese, declaring that the Chinese are the Saxons of the East, the Japanese the Gauls. He testifies to the tremendous patriotism of Japan. Women let their hair go undressed over a month to save five sen for the war. Every servant in some households saves so much from his wages for the war:—

"One rich merchant, who has already given 100,000 yen, has himself cut off one meal, and declares that he will, if necessary, live on one the rest of his life for the sake of Japan. There is a war play on the boards of the theatre. The heroine, a wife, says that her unborn child in a crisis like this must be a man-child, and that he shall be reared a soldier. To provide means, she will herself, if necessary, go to the Yoshiwara."

People animated by such a spirit reproduce in the East the devotion of Sparta; and whatever may be the future character or destiny of the individuals composing it, that nation which makes patriotism its prime virtue will go far.

M. VICTOR BÉRARD publishes through the Librairie Armand Colin L'Empire Russe et le Tsarisme, a volume which is, perhaps, not one of the author's best, but which is, at all events, sound and accurate. He points out that the strength of Russia is her solid centre of thirty millions of Orthodox Great Russians, all thinking and speaking alike, and supported in their patriotic ideas—entertained, however, in less narrow fashion—by fifteen million Little Russians who adjoin them. Nowhere in Europe, as M. Bérard shows, is there so large a number of men so closely tied together by creed, by historic tradition, and "if not by devotion, at least by the same resignation to centralized authority." He then explains how closely bound to this central nucleus are many of the surrounding groups of Russian subjects; but, on the other hand, how much Russia has lost by not knowing how to make use of the genius of her Jews and the Scandinavian civilization of her Finns. If only, he tells us, the Jews of Russia were treated as the Mohammedans of Russia have been for centuries, the Russian empire would be in an immense degree the gainer. In Finland, Siberian tribes, converted to the Lutheran creed, have adopted the Swedish independence and dignity of individual life, and regularity and probity of public life. They are, he says, as virtuous as the Scandinavians—"the most virtuous of Europeans." The frightful corruption of Russia naturally called, M. Bérard thinks, for the scrupulous assistance of the Finnish people, who have been repulsed by folly. An interesting remark of M. Bérard, which should be considered by all who have what are called anti-Semitic leanings, is that with regard to the Jews, in which he describes them as being "of all races, white, yellow, European, Asiatic, Aryan, and Semitic, brought together in the Jewish religion and in the use of the Yiddish dialect." M. Bérard points to Austria, and still more to Hungary, as showing the services which this commercial people can render to countries which treat them well. We note that M. Bérard entertains the same belief as to British action in the Mohammedan world as is to be noticed in French writers of all kinds:—

"Cairo, since the British occupation, has become a centre of Pan-Islamic agitation, whence the English are trying to draw together and to federate all the discontents of the Mohammedan world, .....under the Arab flag, for the benefit of British Imperialism."

THE same publishers issue En Mandchourie, by M. de la Salle. The writer was a French newspaper correspondent, who was sickened of his Russian allies by the war. The description which he gives of the officers of the Russian army is deplorable, and he presents us with facts which exceed in condemnation those contributed from any other source; they are, indeed, almost beyond belief. From one moral that he draws from his observation of modern war we differ. Our author declares that "to call forth all one's power against an enemy—this war proves it—it is necessary to hate him." M. de la Salle refers in a footnote, as justifying the saying, to a Japanese order of the day, which he prints in an appendix. We fail to find confirmation of his opinion in the order, which only declares that the secret of victory lies in courage, energy, the joy of fighting, and the endurance with which an army follows the end to be attained, until it reaches complete success. "Joyful audacity" is explained to be the mode of attack by which alone loss can be kept down. All this, however, with the patriotic basis which underlies it, is very different from the "hatred" of which M. de la Salle writes. The German army is still thought by most soldiers to be the best in Europe. Yet no one believes that in the war of 1870, or in that of 1866, the German army was animated by any real hatred of the opponent against whom it fought.

Life's Questionings: a Book of Experience. By William Romaine Paterson (Benjamin Swift). (Methuen.)—Mr. Paterson seems definitely to have adopted the device of a dual literary personality. There is Benjamin Swift the novelist, and William Romaine Paterson the meditator on life and spiritual experience; and these two are one. It has its advantages. When we see the name on the title-page, we know at once whether he is speaking in his own person or through the medium of fiction. It has also its disadvantages. Many people who would purchase at once a book by Benjamin Swift may pass unrecognized a book by William Romaine Paterson. And the expedient of adding the pen-name in brackets on the title-page only partially redresses this drawback. In the present volume, of course, Mr. Paterson speaks for himself, not as a novelist. It is a collection of aphorisms on things in general; and Mr. Paterson somewhat defiantly defends its absence of any system or arrangement by a French quotation, which might briefly be epitomized in the words of Shakespeare's Jack Cade: "Then are we in order when we are most out of order."

There was no need for apology. We do not look for system or consecutiveness in a book of aphorisms, which condense the outcome of many and shifting moods and moments of reflection. Mr. Paterson rather ostentatiously proclaims it to be "a book of experience." We take it for granted that aphorisms, to be worth anything, are the issue of experience. Every man who has lived a certain time in the world can claim experience. But if the experience take shape in aphorisms, their value will rest mainly on the quality of the mind which has experienced, and its faculty of expression. We look for either depth or acuteness of mind, with pregnant and felicitous expression. At its best, the aphorism or "maxim" has never been a popular form with Englishmen. It suggests, and leaves the reader to amplify and complete its suggestion; but this is too meditative a process for the Englishman, who likes his thinking done for him, and the result set down in full, clearly made out. What cannot be so stated is to him not worth stating. He loves not suggestion. There is also, of course, the witty and epigrammatic aphorism—Rochefoucauld and Chamfort combine somewhat of both, while the maxims of the ancients are generally grave and sententious. But wit also is very much an exotic among us. Mr. Paterson's aim is nothing if not sententious and serious; in which respect he is English, for we are still a serious people. But we doubt whether he will overcome the unpopularity of his form. His expression has a measure of the terseness for which he strives; but it lacks, as a whole, something of the close-knit pregnancy proper to the form: above all, with occasional exceptions, it misses the felicitous finish which makes for memorableness.

Yet Mr. Paterson is practised craftsman enough to maintain a certain level of good, if not striking utterance. It is in substance that he is most uneven. The volume reads as though he had swept into it the contents of his commonplace book, without discrimination or selection. One is tempted to close the pages by aphorisms of solemn triteness, and then surprised into keeping them open by somewhat of real thought and individuality. We do not expect or exact uniform success; but the proportion of commonplace is exasperatingly large. "It has been calculated that about 150,000 people die every day" may be a solemn fact; but we see not the need why Mr. Paterson should thus solemnly have set it down. "When we lift the edge of the mask from the face of Life, we discover a face of sorrow," is a pretentiously decked-out platitude. He recalls the usage of pastrycooks in allowing their employés to surfeit themselves on the dainties they sell, that they may lose all relish for them, and be safe from after temptation; then gravely exclaims, "What a comment on the duration of pleasure!" A schoolgirl might make the comment, and be proud of her reflective depth. Then presently you will find him saying, "We should train our minds in the rapid mobilisation of ideas"—a thought well and originally phrased. "There are certain persons who, when compelled to praise those they dislike, make use of the soft pedal at its full capacity," is merely an elaborate warming-up of Pope's "damn with faint praise." Yet Mr. Paterson can say, "What we call Fate is probably only a form of gravitation," which is a suggestive and individual idea, whether you account it true or false. It "gives to think," as the French say. This, also, is good and true:—

"It is startling to think of the heavy, rough actual wood of the Cross, and to observe that now the Cross has become only a symbol, and is decked with silken tassels and little velvet flags, and is guaranteed easy for carrying. Moreover, its victory was assured when it was accepted among the world's trinkets and worn as jewellery."

There are freshness and personality in that.

But, well-expressed though much of it is, a master of style would have corrected its diffuseness, and compressed it into an utterance entirely memorable. It is over-wordy for an aphorism. Mr. Paterson's book, in fine, is of a very mingled yarn, thoughtful and shallow, with a style which, at its best, is somewhat short of distinction, though literary and direct. It would have left a better impression had it been half, or even a third of its present length.

The Country-House Party, by Dora Sigerson Shorter (Hodder & Stoughton), is not a novel, but a succession of short stories supposed to be told in the smoking-room one night by the members of such an assemblage. The method of narrative is excellent, and secures the author an opportunity of finding a natural transition from one tale to another, and of interspersing brief comments where they may appear desirable. Unfortunately the stories themselves are for the most part of small merit. They lack verisimilitude, and are seldom convincing either in matter or manner. Love and the supernatural form their two principal themes, and both are somewhat crudely treated, so that the passion of the one often becomes violent and the mysteriousness of the other grotesque. The book, in fact, inclines to sensationalism, and the exaggerated style in which it is written is by no means suggestive of the smoking-room anecdote. One or two of the stories excite a momentary interest, and in several cases we find a really striking idea which deserved the best treatment.

THE adventures of Irishmen, recorded by themselves, are sure to be readable, and A Modern Legionary, by John Patrick Le Poer (Methuen), is no exception to the rule. Enlisted as a lad of sixteen in the Foreign Legion of the French army, the writer relates, with details interesting enough to those who like what Archibald Forbes called "camps, quarters, and casual places," his experience of military life in Algeria, and of active service in Tonquin.

Some of his remarks on the practical business of soldiering are worth more than a passing notice:—

"In all ages and nations a man's accoutrements—I use the word in the most general sense—have been decided on by tailors and good-for-nothing generals—oh, there are plenty of them in every army in the world!—and, worst of all, by women, who twist and turn the said generals around their little fingers."—P. 41.

"Well, there are officers who care for their men, but they are so few that, if you know a hundred captains, you may easily reckon the good ones on the fingers of a hand."—P. 113.

Here is an opinion hardly supported by the present war in the Far East:—

"Though the Asiatic will face death by the hands of the executioner with far more stoicism than the European, in the press of the battle the white man's enthusiasm is infinitely better than the yellow man's contempt of death."—P. 144.

The fighting part of the book is undoubtedly founded on fact: yet Mars may never be far from Venus, and we are not surprised to find a soldier's reminiscences merged into romance.

A sergeant-major in his teens, the Irishman finds his fate in Giulia, the handsome "daughter of the regiment"—a fine, faithful girl, who, all unwilling, provokes the jealousy of an amorous adjutant against her Jean. The climax comes, rapid (in six chapters) and decisive (for there is nothing lukewarm in Algeria, la patrie des légionnaires). Jean is degraded to the ranks—kills the adjutant; escapes with Giulia, an English corporal, and another Irishman; loses all three in the desert, the victims of fight or fatigue; and makes his way to Tangier, Spain, and safety. The keynote of the book is personal comradeship, which redeems the many discords of a desul-tory and often disagreeable service. The chief characters are drawn boldly and effectively, and the scenes are described with a certain raciness which makes the story worth reading. We came across it as a serial in the columns of a French newspaper a few weeks ago.

Talks in a Library with Laurence Hutton, recorded by Isabel Moore (Putnam), may be regarded as virtually the work of Mr. Hutton himself, as he revised the manuscript of the volume before his recent regretted death. We cannot expect that his name will survive as that of one pre-eminent in letters, though his "Landmarks" series is engaging work of its kind; but we can endorse Mr. G. H. Putnam's comment in an introductory note that Hutton had a genius for friendship. He had independence, too, as well as a sunny nature, and his good stories in this volume are not of the kind which holds a hint of unfairness, if not animosity. Some of the things recorded seem too trivial or local for the general world of letters to read with attention. Such are facsimiles of impromptu wit and signatures from the Hutton Guest-Book; but the book is very pleasant reading, and full of the gossip of the journalist. A rough "proof" credited Mr. Hutton with the remark that New York had been greatly "enriched by the receipt of the vest buttons of James Lenox," and he had to send for his manuscript to discover the right words, which were "vast bequests." Dean Stanley showed Mr. Hutton and two friends the initials "I. W." and the date "1658" scratched in the Abbey on a tomb by Izaak Walton, and this anecdote of the Dean is added:—

"Izaak Walton had confessed the deed in one of his letters, and the gentle prelate told us that on discovering the fact, late at night, he could not rest till he had proved for himself that the marks still existed. And with a lighted candle he went from the Deanery, in the silent hours of the morning, to satisfy himself that they were there."

This exhibits Stanley happily, except for the phrase "gentle prelate."

Middle Temple Records: Minutes of Parliament, 1501-1703. Translated and edited by C. Trice Martin. 3 vols. (Butterworth & Co.)—A Calendar of the Middle Temple Records, edited by the late Mr. C. H. Hopwood, K.C., in 1903, and noticed in these columns in July of last year, had prepared us for the appearance of the 'Minutes of Parliament' preserved among the records of the Society, and now translated and edited by Mr. C. Trice Martin, of the Public Record Office. The minutes are entered in five volumes, lettered respectively A, D, C, B, and E. This strange sequence is probably to be accounted for by the fact that the minutes between February, 1524/5, and February, 1550/1, were lost about the time that volume D was in course of compilation.

In our notice of Mr. Hopwood's 'Calendar' we ventured to express some surprise at his statement that the minutes recorded in these volumes were in Latin. It now appears that entries in English occasionally occur even in the earliest volume during the first quarter of the sixteenth century, although the majority of entries are, as we might naturally suppose, in Latin. That being the case, Mr. Martin has treated Book A in fuller detail than the rest of the series, going to the pains of translating verbatim the Latin entries, whereas in dealing with the later volumes he has not felt called upon to give more than abstracts of their contents so long as the abstracts embraced the "whole of the facts." From Mr. Martin's translations and abstracts Mr. Hopwood compiled (in part) his calendar of the Inn's records, extracting therefrom "every passage of general interest." This was scarcely sufficient for the serious student of the internal economy of an Inn of Court. It is only from Mr. Martin's fuller work, for instance, that he would learn that the evil of the various Inns of Court harbouring individuals who had no intention of following the profession of law, and thus becoming diversoria instead of hospicia, was taken in hand not only in 1614, but also in 1630. Again, it is only from Mr. Martin that he would obtain the long lists of admissions to the Inn dear to the genealogist.

As was to be expected, there is little or no fault to find with the manner Mr. Martin has carried out a difficult and laborious task. The volumes are supplied with an exhaustive index of persons and places, the reader being referred to Mr. Hopwood's 'Calendar' for an index of subjects.

Mr. Hutchinson, the librarian of the Society, to whom we are already indebted for an interesting work on 'Notable Middle Templars,' has written an introductory chapter to these 'Minutes of Parliament,' in which he gives a concise account of the origin and early history of the Inn. Once more we have the vexed question of the precise relation that the two societies of the Temple bear to each other. Mr. Hutchinson shows himself a strong disbeliever in the original unity and subsequent division of the Inner and Middle Temple, whilst he as strongly favours the absolute equality of the two societies. "The history of the Middle Temple," he writes,

"though dating in its most authentic form.....from the commencement of its Registers in 1501, may be traced back to a society existing before the occupation of the Temple, which, side by side, and simultaneously with the society now known as the Inner Temple, took up its residence there and became a co-tenant of its grounds and buildings," and yet in the same breath (if we may say so) he declares it impossible, without more evidence, to say which of the two bodies arrived first at the Temple!

MR. MURRAY has sent us a comely edition of Borrow's Romano Lavo-lil. This is the authoritative issue of his works.

IN "The King's Novels" (Moring) Silas Marner has appeared. Dr. Garnett's introduction completes what is in every way a desirable little volume.

True to the Flag (Routledge) is a collection of sailors' poems compiled by E. C. Ommanney, and published in paper covers at a shilling. The anthology has a wide range among the works of the living as well as the dead, and, thanks to the generosity of those who hold copyrights, may be called fairly representative. We expect to see it widely used, and therefore regret the absence of an index of first lines.

We have on our table Mirabeau and the French Revolution, by C. F. Warwick (Lippincott),—Daniel Webster, by E. P. Wheeler (Putnam),—Mary, Queen of Scots, by A. H. Millar (Edinburgh, Brown),—The Freedom of Authority, by J. M. Sterrett, D.D. (Macmillan),—The Jack Historical Readers: Hanoverian England, Book V., by A. W. Dakers (Jack),—A First French Song-Book, arranged with Aïrs and Tonic Sol-fa, by R. B. Morgan and F. B. Kirkman (Black),—Some of God's Englishmen, by the Rev. A. T. Bannister (Hereford, Jakeman & Carver),—The Three Term Algebra, by C. W. Cook and W. H. Weston, Books I. and II. (Jack),—Up through Childhood, by G. A. Hubbell (Putnam),—Know Thyself, by H. S. Solly (P. Green),—Our Stellar Universe, by T. E. Heath (King, Sell & Olding),—Friedberger and Fröhner's Veterinary Pathology, edited by M. H. Hayes and J. Dunstan, Vol. II. (Hurst & Blackett),—Chess, by Howard Staunton (Drane),—Polo: Past and Present, by T. F. Dale (Newnes),—The Grand Duke, by C. Dawe (Hutchinson),—Life of my Heart, by Victoria Cross (Walter Scott),—I Charge You Both, by Alice M. Meadows (Digby & Long),—The Pride of Mrs. Brunelle, by A. H. Holmes (Burleigh),—The Devil's Derelicts, by F. C. Vernon-Harcourt (Digby & Long),—The Loot of Cities, by A. Bennett (Alston Rivers),—Hecla Sandwith, by E. U. Valentine (Harper),—Time—the Enemy, by H. A. Darlington (Jarrold),—The Husband Hunter, by M. Elliott (Simpkin),—and Ruth Fielding, by Mrs. F. A. Farrar (Stock).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Gospel of St. Mark in West Saxon, edited by J. W. Bright, 2/6 net.
Holy Catholic Church: her Faith, Works, Triumphs, by a Convert, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Johannine Vocabulary, by E. A. Abbott, 8vo, 13/6 net.
Preachers from the Pew, edited by the Rev. W. H. Hunt, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Sterrett (J. M.), The Freedom of Authority, cr. 8vo, 8/6 net.
Wotherspoon (Rev. H. J.), The Second Prayer Book of King Edward VI. (1552), 12mo, 4/ net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Birch (W. de G.), History of Scottish Seals: Vol. 1, The Royal Seals of Scotland, 4to, 12/6 net; fine-paper edition, 21/ net.
Latham (C.), The Gardens of Italy, 2 vols. folio, 63/ net.

Poetry and the Drama.

Borgia, 8vo, sewed, 3/6 net.
Emra (C.), The Love Song of Tristram and Iseult, and other Poems, cr. 8vo, sewed, 3/6
Esher (B.), Dreamland, 12mo, 2/6 net.
Owen (L.), The Poetry of the Future, 4to, 2/6
Rhymes of the East and Recollected Verses, by Dum-Dum, 12mo, 3/6 net.

History and Biography.

Annual Register, 8vo, 18/
Bessemer (Sir Henry), F.R.S.: an Autobiography, 13/ net.
Byron (Lord), Confessions of, extra cr. 8vo, 10/6 net.
FitzGerald (Edward), by A. C. Benson, cr. 8vo, 2/ net.
Lawson (Sir C.), Memories of Madras, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Nelson (The Life of), by W. C. Russell, cr. 8vo, 2/6
Petrie (T.), Reminiscences of Early Queensland, 10/6 net.
Rifle Brigade Century, 1800-1905, by G. E. Boyle, cr. 8vo, 7/6
Zanzibar in Contemporary Times, by R. N. Lyne, 7/6 net.

Geography and Travel.

Black's Guide to Scotland (North), 12mo, 2/6
Dorset, by F. R. Heath, 12mo, 3/; leather, 3/6 net.
Percival (W. S.), Twenty Years in the Far East, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Sports and Pastimes.

Betham (J. D.), Oxford and Cambridge Scores and Biographies, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.

Education.

Latter (O. H.), Practical Nature Study for Schools: Part 1, Questions for Pupils, 4to, 2/6 net.

Philology.

Japanese Conversation-Grammar, by H. Plaut, cr. 8vo, 6/

Science.

Baly (R. C. C.), Spectroscopy, cr. 8vo, 10/6
Bidwell (L. A.), A Handbook of Intestinal Surgery, 6/ net.
Essex (E. H.), Roofs and Floors of New Buildings: their Structure and Stability, 8vo, 2/6
Hall (H. S.) and Stevens (F. H.), A Key to the Exercises and Examples contained in a School Geometry: Parts 1 and 2, cr. 8vo, 3/6; Parts 1-4, cr. 8vo, 6/
Hall (J. W.), Methods of Morbid Histology and Clinical Pathology, 8vo, 9/ net.
Hamilton (J.), Our Own and Other Worlds, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Peterson (M. G.), How to Know Wild Fruits, cr. 8vo, 6/6
Ross (E. A.), Foundations of Sociology, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

General Literature.

Burnet (W.), Gleanings from a Parson's Diary, 2/6 net.
Callwell (C. E.), Military Operations and Maritime Preponderance, 8vo, 15/ net.
Darlington (H. A.), Time—the Enemy, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Firbank (A.), Olette d'Antrevernes and A Study in Temperament, cr. 8vo, sewed, 2/ net.
Gasiorowski (W.), Napoleon's Love Story, translated by the Count de Soissons, cr. 8vo, 6/
Griffiths (A.), The Passenger from Calais, cr. 8vo, 6/
Hayden (E. G.), Rose of Lone Farm, cr. 8vo, 8/
Jerome (J. K.), Idle Ideas in 1905, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Mackenzie (W. C.), The Lady of Hirta, cr. 8vo, 6/
Nansen (F.), Norway and the Union with Sweden, 2/ net.
Nesbit (K.), The Rainbow and the Rose, cr. 8vo, 5/
Riego (Mlle.), Selected Works, Vols. 2 and 3, 4to, each 2/6 net.
Sheehan (P. A.), Glenanaar, cr. 8vo, 6/
Sheldon (C. M.), Mark Burns' Manuscript, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Skinner (T.), The London Banks and Kindred Companies and Firms, 1905, cr. 8vo, 10/ net.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Goyau (G.), L'Allemagne Religieuse: Le Catholicisme, 1800-48, 2 vols. 7fr.
Hus (L.), Opera Omnia, Vol. 2, 10m.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Planat (P.), L'Art de Bâtir, Vol. 2, 20fr.

History and Biography.

Diehl (C.), Études Byzantines, 10fr.
Suau (P.), L'Espagne: Terre d'Épopée, 5fr.

*Geography and Travel.*Boland (H.), Zigzags en France, 4fr.*General Literature.*Brada, Les Beaux Jours de Flavien, 3fr. 50.Delorme (A.), Roman d'une Vieille Fille, 3fr. 50.Flat (P.), L'illusion Sentimentale, 3fr. 50.Léonzon-le-Duc (C.), Ce que l'État doit à l'Eglise, 2fr. 50.

SOME NEW VERSES BY OMAR KHAYYAM.

As is well known, the earlier Persian anthologies do not give any specimens of Omar Khayyam's verses. There is, however, a manuscript in the British Museum of a work which was composed in the year 1000 H., or 1592 A.D., which gives many quotations from the quatrains, and also a qit'ā of sixteen lines which seems to have hitherto escaped notice. The manuscript is the Bazmārā of Sayyid 'Alī b. Mahmūd al Husainī, and is described in Rieu's Supplement to his Persian Catalogue, p. 73, No. 106, Or. 3389. The entry is under the name Khayyām, and occurs at p. 77<sup>b</sup>. The verses consist of a satirical dialogue between Omar and Reason, and remind one somewhat of Sir Walter Raleigh's poem of 'The Lie.' Omar asks various questions of Reason about life, marriage, &c., and receives mocking answers. The translation of the last two lines seems to be:—

I said to him, "What are Khayyam's writings?"
He replied, "Wrong calculations, and some raptures."

I hope to publish the text hereafter in the R.A.S.J. H. B.

STENDHAL MEMORIAL.

1, Talbot Mansions, Museum Street, W.C., June 16th.

THERE is a general desire to erect a monument to Henri Beyle (Stendhal) in France, and a committee has been formed in Paris for that object. The committee, thinking that there are probably some admirers of the great novelist and philosopher in England, has requested me to receive any subscriptions, or they can be sent direct to the secretary, M. A. Paupe, 50, Rue des Abbesses, Paris, 18<sup>e</sup>.

OSCAR LEVY, M.D.

ON A PASSAGE IN ALFRED'S 'OROSIUS.'

The University, Liverpool.

IN translating the passage in Orosius (i. 1) on the site and orientation of Spain, King Alfred, as is his wont when he can draw on his own knowledge, supplies some additional information. It is to the effect that the north-western corner of the peninsula lies "opposite Ireland, beyond the arm of the sea, exactly opposite the river-mouth which is called Scene" ("ongean Scotland, ofer þone sæs earm, on geryhte ongean þæne mūþan þe mon hæf Scene").

Without any hesitation all editors* have taken Scene to mean the Shannon, thereby imputing to Alfred a very poor acquaintance with the geography of Ireland. Nor is it easy to see how the Old-Irish "Sinann" (Latinized "Sinona") should come to be rendered in Old English by "Scene." But Alfred's knowledge of Irish topography turns out to have been more minute and exact than that of his modern editors and commentators. There can be no doubt that "se mūþa þe mon hæf Scene" refers to "Inber Scéne," the Old-Irish name for the estuary of the Kenmare river. This may, in a manner, be said to be opposite Spain, and it was there, according to Irish tradition, that Éber, son of Míl, landed with his followers from Spain ('Book of Leinster,' p. 12b).

It is most likely that Alfred got this information from the three Irish pilgrims who, the 'Saxon Chronicle' tells us, visited him in the year 891. If this surmise is correct, it furnishes us with a datum a quo for the translation of Orosius.

It may not be superfluous to add that "Inber Scéne" means "river-mouth of the knife" or "knife-shaped river mouth" (scéne being the gen. sg. of scian, f. "a knife"), a most appropriate designation for an estuary that cuts inland like a pointed knife or dagger.* This very plain etymology has, however, not prevented early Irish legend-mongers from inventing an eponymous heroine Scian, from whom the estuary is said to have taken its name.

KUNO MEYER.

'DICTIONARY OF INDIAN BIOGRAPHY.'

(Fifth List.)

June 5th, 1905.

By the courtesy of the Editor of The Athenæum, I have been permitted to publish the following list of names of the deceased persons (1151-1400) who have been provisionally selected for inclusion in the 'Dictionary of Indian Biography,' to be published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. in the autumn. This work is intended to contain biographical notices of about 2,000 to 2,500 persons, living or dead, Europeans or natives of India, connected with India since about the year 1750 A.D. Suggestions are invited, and it is hoped that readers of The Athenæum will bring any important omissions to my notice, and state where materials for short biographies can be obtained. Letters should be addressed to 61, Cornwall Gardens, S. Kensington, S.W.

C. E. BUCKLAND, Editor 'D.I.B.'

Popham, William, Lieutenant-General, 1740-1821
Porter, William Archer, Principal of a College, Madras, 1824-90
Pottinger, Eldred, Major, Political, 1811-43
Pottinger, Sir Henry, Lieutenant-General, Governor of Madras, 1789-1856
Powell, Eyre Barton, Director of Public Instruction, Madras, 1819-1904
Powis, Edward, second Lord Clive, and first Earl of, Governor of Madras, 1751-1839
Prendergast, Thomas, Indian Civil Service, Madras, 1806-1886
Price, David, Linguist, Historian, 1762-1835
Pringle, Robert Keith, Indian Civil Service, Bombay, 1802-1897
Prinsep, Charles Robert, Advocate-General, Bengal, 1790-1864
Prinsep, Henry Thoby, Member of the Council of India, 1792-1878
Prinsep, James, Orientalist, 1799-1840
Pritchard, Sir Charles Bradley, Member of the Supreme Council, 1837-1903
Pritzler, Sir Theophilus, Brigadier-General, 2-1839
Puller, Sir Christopher, Chief Justice, Bengal, 1774-1824
Purnia, Diwan of Mysore, 2-1812
Pycroft, Sir Thomas, Member of Council, Madras, 1807-92
Quinton, James Wallace, Indian Civil Service, Chief Commissioner of Assam, 1834-91
Raffles, Sir Stamford, Lieutenant-Governor of Java, 1781-1825
Rai, Pratap Chandra, Scholar, Translator, 2-1895
Rai, Raja Shitab, Naib Diwan of Bihar, 2-1773
Raikes, Charles, Indian Civil Service, Author, 1812-85
Rainier, Peter, Naval Commander-in-Chief in East Indies, 1741 2-1808
Ramiyengar, Vembaukum, Diwan of Travancore, 1826-87
Rammaram, Raja, Deputy-Governor of Bihar, 2-1763
Ramsay, Hon. Sir Henry, Commissioner of Kumaon, 1816-1893
Ranade, Mahadeo Govind, Judge, High Court, Bombay, 1842-1901
Rao, Baji, Peshwa, 1775-1853
Rao, Raja Sir Dinkar, Indian Statesman, 1819-96
Rao, Hindu, Mahratta, of Delhi, 2-1855
Rao, Raja Sir Madhava, Indian Statesman, 1828-91
Rao, Raghoba, or Raghunath, Peshwa, about 1772
Rao, Tandalam Gopal, Professor, 1832-86
Rattigan, Sir William Henry, Barrister at Lahore, 1842-1904
Rattray, Thomas, Colonel, raised Rattray's Sikhs, 1820-80
Rawlinson, Sir Christopher, Chief Justice, Madras, 1806-88
Rawlinson, Sir Henry Creswicke, Baronet, Member of the Council of India, 1810-95
Raymond, alias Haji Mustapha, Interpreter, Translator, 2-1791
Raymond, Michel Joachim Mirie, in the Nizam's service, 1755-98
Raynal, Guillaume Thomas François, Abbé, Writer, 1713-96
Reade, Edward Anderton, Indian Civil Service, 1807-85
Ready money, Sir Cowasji Jehangir, Philanthropist, 1812-1878
Reed, Sir Thomas, General, 1796-1883
Rehatsek, Edward, Professor, Linguist, Author, 1819-91
Reid, Sir Charles, General, 1819-1901
Renault, Pierre, French Governor at Chandernagore, 2-2
Rennell, James, Major, Surveyor-General of Bengal, 1742-1830
Rennie, James, Superintendent of Indian Marine, 1814-1903

* An equally descriptive name is that for the mouth of the river Bann, which in Old Irish is called Inber Táiige, "the axe-shaped estuary."

Renny, George Alexander, Major-General, V.C., 1825-87
Richards, Sir William, Major-General, 1778-1861
Richardson, David Lester, Major, Poet, Principal, Author, Journalist, 1801-65
Richardson, John, Lexicographer, 1741-1811?
Richey, Sir James Bellett, Member of Council, Bombay, 1834-1902
Ricketts, Sir Henry, Member of the Supreme Council, 1802-86
Ricketts, John William, the "East-Indian Patriot," 1791-1835
Rieu, Charles, Linguist, Professor, 1820-1902
Ringeltaube, Rev. William Tobias, Missionary, 1770-?
Ritchie, William, Member of the Supreme Council, 1816-62
Rivett-Carnae, Sir James, Baronet, Governor of Bombay, 1785-1846
Roberts, Sir Abraham, General, 1784-1873
Roberts, Arthur Austin, Indian Civil Service, 1818-63
Roberts, Emma, Journalist, Authoress, 1794 2-1840
Roberts, Sir Henry Gee, Major-General, 1800-60
Roberts, John Blessington, Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, 1819-80
Robertson, Archibald, Major-General, 2-1847
Robertson, Thomas Campbell, Lieutenant-Governor, N.W.P., 1789-1863
Robinson, Sir William Rose, Member of Council, Madras, 1822-86
Roddy, Patrick, Colonel, V.C., 1820-95
Rodgers, Charles James, Numismatist, Archaeologist, 1838-1898
Rose, Sir John, Lieutenant-General, 2-1852
Ross, Alexander, Governor of Agra, 1777-?
Ross, Sir Campbell Claye Grant, General, 1844-92
Ross, Sir John, General, 1829-1905
Ross, Patrick, Major-General, Member of Council, Madras, 1740 2-1804
Rost, Reinhold, Librarian, Linguist, 1822-96
Roth, Rudolph von, Professor, Linguist, 1821-95
Rothney, Octavius, Colonel, 1824-81
Rottler, John Peter, Missionary, Botanist, 1749-1836
Routledge, James, Journalist, 1829-98
Roxburgh, William, Botanist, 1751-1815
Roy, Rama Prasad, First Government Pleader, 2-1862
Roy, Raja Rammohan, Social Reformer, 1772-1833
Royds, Sir John, Judge Supreme Court, Calcutta, 1752-1817
Royle, John Forbes, Exponent of Botanic Science, 1799-1858
Rumbold, Sir Thomas, Baronet, Governor of Madras, 1736-91
Runga Charlu, Cettipaniam Viravalli, Diwan, Mysore, 1831-83
Russell, Sir David, General, 1809-84
Russell, Sir Edward Lechmere, General, 1818-1904
Russell, George Edward, Member of Council, Madras, 1787-1863
Russell, Sir Henry, Baronet, Chief Justice of Bengal, 1751-1836
Russell, Sir James, General, 1781-1859
Russell, Patrick, Botanist, Naturalist, 1727-1805
Russell, Sir William, Baronet, Lieutenant-General, 1822-1892
Russell, Sir William Oldnall, Chief Justice of Bengal, 1735-1833
Rustomji, Heerjibhoy Manackji, Sheriff of Calcutta, 1845-1904
Rustomji, Manackji, Sheriff of Calcutta, 1815-91
Ryan, Sir Edward, Chief Justice of Bengal, 1793-1875
Salar Jung, Nawab Sir, Prime Minister, Hyderabad, 1829-83
Salar Jung Bahadur II., Nawab Sir, Prime Minister, Hyderabad, 1862-89
Sale, Florentia, Lady, Prisoner in Afghanistan, 1790 2-1853
Sale, Sir Robert Henry, Defender of Jalalabad, 1782-1845
Salisbury, Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoigne Cecil, third Marquis of, Secretary of State for India, 1830-1903
Salmone, Habi Anthony, Scholar, Journalist, 1860-1904
Sambhunath Pandit, Judge, High Court, Calcutta, 1820-67
Samru, Adventurer, 1720-78
Samru, Begam, of Sardhana, 2-1836
Sandeman, Sir Robert Groves, Agent to Governor-General for Beluchistan, 1835-92
Sandford, John Douglas, Indian Civil Service, 1833-92
Sandhurst, William Rose Mansfield, first Baron, 1819-76
Sarasvati, Dayananda, Teacher, Reformer, Ascetic, 1827-83
Sargent, Sir Charles, Chief Justice, Bombay, 1821-1900
Sargent, Right Rev. Dr., Bishop Coadjutor, Missionary, 1807-89
Sassoon, Sir Albert Abdullah David, Baronet, 1818-96
Sastri, Sir Amaravati Seshiah, Diwan of Travancore, 1823-1903
Sastri, Calamur Viravalli Runganada, 1819-81
Saunders, John O'Brien, Journalist, 1852-1905
Sausse, Sir Matthew Richard, Chief Justice, Bombay, 1809-67
Sayani, Rahmatulla Muhammad, of Bombay, 1847-1902
Schalch, Vernon Hugh, Indian Civil Service, Bengal, 1825-1877
Schieffner, Franz Anton von, Russian Orientalist, 1817-79
Schlagentweit, Emil, Student of Buddhism, Author, 1835-1904
Schneider, Sir John William, General, 1822-1903
Schulze, Benjamin, Missionary, Linguist, 2-1760
Schutz, C., Doctor, Sanskrit Scholar, 1805-92
Schwartz, Rev. Christian Friedrich, Missionary, 1726-98
Scotland, Sir Colley Harman, Chief Justice, Madras, 1818-1903
Scott, David, Agent to Governor-General, N.E. Frontier, 1786-1831
Scott, John, Major, Agent of Warren Hastings, 1747-1819
Scott, Sir John, General, 1797-1873
Scott, Sir John, Judge, High Court, Bombay, 1841-1904
Scott, Jonathan, Captain, Professor, 1754-1829
Seal, Mati Lal, Merchant, Philanthropist, 1791-1854
Seaton, Sir Thomas, Major-General, 1805-76
Seecombe, Sir Thomas Lawrence, Financial Secretary, India Office, 1812-1902
Seddon, Felix John Vaughan, Translator, Professor, 1795-1865
Sen, Keshab Chandra, Religious Reformer, 1838-84
Sen, Ram Komul, Diwan of the Calcutta Mint, Educationist, 1783-1844

* Except Pauli, who renders Scotland by "Scotland," and Scene by "Seine"!

Seton, Sir Henry Wilmot, Judge, Supreme Court, Calcutta, 1848—1884
 Seymour, Henry Danby, Joint Secretary to Board of Control, 1820—77
 Shah Alam, Emperor of Delhi, 1728—1806
 Shah Shuja, Amir of Afghanistan, 1780?—1812
 Shakespeare, John, Professor, Author, 1774—1858
 Shakespeare, Sir Richmond Campbell, Colonel, Political, 1812—61
 Shaw, Robert Barkley, Traveller, 1839—79
 Shell, Sir Justin, Political, Envoy to Persia, 1803—71
 Shelton, John, Colonel, Brigadier in Afghanistan, 1845
 Shepherd, John, Member of the Council of India, 1792—1859
 Sherring, Rev. Matthew Atmore, Chaplain, Author, 1826—80
 Sherwood, Mary Martha, Authoress, 1775—1851
 Shipp, John, Marine and Soldier, 1784—1831
 Shir Ali, Amir of Afghanistan, 1850—79
 Shir Ali, Murderer, 1842?—72
 Shirt, Rev. George, Missionary, Linguist, 1843—87
 Shujaat Ali, Rev., Baptist Minister, 1791—1865
 Shuja-ud-daula, Nawab Wazir of Oudh, 1731—75
 Sibley, George, Railway Engineer, 1824—91
 Sim, James Duncan, Member of Council, Madras, 1823—88
 Singh, Raja Sir Deo Narain, at Benares, 1870
 Singh, Maharaja Bahadur, Sir Dulip, 1827—93
 Singh, Pandit Nain, Surveyor-Explorer, 1826?—82
 Singh, Maharaja Ranjit, of the Panjab, 1780—1839
 Sircar, Dr. Mahendra Lal, Scientist, 1833—1904
 Siva Prasad, Raja, Education Inspector, 1823—95
 Skinner, James, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1778—1811
 Skinner, Thomas, Lieutenant-Colonel, Traveller, 1800?—43
 Sladen, Sir Edward Bosc, Colonel, Political, 1827—90
 Sleeman, Sir William Henry, Major-General, 1788—1856
 Smith, Sir Harry George Wakelyn, Baronet, Lieutenant-General, 1788—1860
 Smith, John Richard Bullen, Member of the Council of India, 1887
 Smith, John Thomas, Colonel, Mint-Master at Calcutta, 1805—82
 Smith, Joseph, Major-General, 1733?—90
 Smith, Michael William, General, 1809—91
 Smith, Richard Baird, Colonel, Chief Engineer at Siege of Delhi, 1818—61
 Smith, Sir Robert Murdoch, Director of the Indo-European Telegraph Department, 1835—1900
 Smith, Robert Percy, Advocate-General, Bengal, 1770—1845
 Smyth, Sir Rowland, Lieutenant-General, 1873
 Solvyns, François Balthazar, Artist, 1760—1824
 Somerset, Sir Henry, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1794—1862
 Souter, Sir Frank H., Commissioner of Police, Bombay, 1886
 Speechley, Right Rev. John Martindale, Bishop of Travancore, 1836—98
 Speke, Peter, Member of the Supreme Council, 1745—1811
 Spencer, Hon. Sir Augustus Almeric, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1807—93
 Spencer, Right Rev. Trevor, Bishop of Madras, 1799—1868
 Sprenger, Aloys, Principal, Professor, Linguist, 1813—93
 Spurgin, Sir John Blicke, General, 1821—1903
 Stables, John, Member of the Supreme Council, 1822—25
 Stack, Sir Maurice, General, 1796—1880
 Stanhope, Hon. Edward, Under-Secretary of State for India, 1840—93
 Stanley, Sir Edmond, Judge, Supreme Court, Madras, 1790—1843
 Stannus, Sir Ephraim Gerrish, Major-General, 1781—1850
 Stansfeld, Sir James, Under-Secretary of State for India, 1820—98
 Staunton, Francis French, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1779?—1825
 Staunton, Sir George Leonard, Baronet, Secretary to Lord Macartney, 1737—1801
 Staveley, Sir Charles William Dunbar, Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1817—96
 Staveley, William, Commander-in-Chief, Madras, 1781—1854
 Steel, Sir Scudamore Winde, Lieutenant-General, 1789—1865
 Steevens, Charles, Naval Commander-in-Chief at Madras, 1705—61
 Steingass, Francis Joseph, Professor, Linguist, 1825—1903
 Stephen, Sir James Fitzjames, Baronet, Member of the Supreme Council, 1829—91
 Stevenson, Robert Charles, Burmese Linguist, 1851—1905
 Stewart, Charles, Professor, Author, 1764—1837
 Stewart, Charles Edward, Colonel, Political, 1836—1904
 Stewart, Sir Donald Martin, Baronet, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1824—1900
 Stewart, John, Traveller, "Walking Stewart," 1749—1822
 Stewart, Patrick, Major, Director-General, Indo-European Telegraphs, 1832—65
 Stewart, Sir Richard Campbell, General, 1836—1901
 Stibbert, Giles, Lieutenant-General, 1822—25
 Stirling, Andrew, Indian Civilian, 1793?—1820
 Stisted, Sir Henry William, Lieutenant-General, 1817—75
 St. John, Sir Oliver Beauchamp Coventry, Lieutenant-Colonel, Political, 1839—91
 Stoeckeler, Joachim Hayward, Journalist, Author, 1800—1885
 Stoddart, Charles, Lieutenant-Colonel, executed at Bokhara, 1806—42
 Stoliczka, Ferdinand, Paleontologist, 1821—1871
 Strachey, Sir Arthur, Chief Justice, Allahabad, 1858—1901
 Strachey, Sir Henry, Baronet, Private Secretary to Clive, 1736—1810
 Strange, Alexander, Lieutenant-Colonel, Scientist, 1818—76
 Strange, Sir Thomas Andrew Lumsden, Chief Justice, Madras, 1756—1841
 Strange, Thomas Lumsden, Judge, High Court, Madras, 1808—84
 Strathnairn, Hugh Henry, Baron, Commander-in-Chief in India, 1801—85
 Stratton, John Proudfoot, Brigade Surgeon, Political, 1830—1895
 Stuart, Sir Charles Shepherd, General, 1801—79
 Stuart, James, Major-General, 1793
 Stuart, James, Commander-in-Chief, Madras, 1711—1815
 Stuart, Sir Robert, Chief Justice, Allahabad, 1816—96

Sunkersett, Jagannath, Member of Legislative Council, Bombay, 1802—65
 Surajuddaula, Nawab Nizam of Bengal, 1731? or 1736?—57
 Sutherland, James, Marine Service, Journalist, Professor, 1794—2
 Svarnamayi, Maharani, Landowner in Bengal, 1827—97
 Sykes, William Henry, Colonel, Chairman E.I.Co., 1790—1872
 Symes, Sir Edward Spence, Indian Civil Service, 1852—1901
 Symons, Sir William Penn, Major-General, 1813—99
 Tagore, Maharshi Debendra Nath, Spiritual Leader, 1818—1905
 Tagore, Dwarka Nath, Traveller, Philanthropist, 1795?—1846
 Tagore, Prasanna Kumar, Member of Legislative Council, 1891—63
 Tagore, Rama Nath, Maharaja, Member of Legislative Council, 1890—77
 Talbot, Hon. Gerald Chetwynd, Private Secretary to Lord Canning, 1819—85
 Taleyarkhan, Sorabji Jehangir, Judge at Baroda, 1836—1900
 Tania Topi, Rebel Leader in the Mutiny, 1819—59
 Taranath Tarkavachaspati, Sanskritist, 1812—2
 Tarkabagis, Prem Chand, Professor, Sanskrit College, 1806—1867
 Tarkapanchanan, Jagannath, Distinguished Pandit, 1695?—1806
 Tata, Jamssetji Nasarwanji, Philanthropic Merchant, 1839—1904
 Taylor, William, Indian Civil Service, 1808—92
 Taylor, Sir Henry George Andrew, General, 1784—1876
 Taylor, John Henry, Sheriff of Madras, 1822—87
 Taylor, Philip Meadows, Colonel, Author, 1803—76
 Taylor, Reynell George, General, Commissioner, 1822—86
 Teignmouth, John Shore, first Baron, Governor-General of India, 1751—1831
 Teipal, Gokuldas, Merchant, Bombay, 1822—67
 Telang, Kashinath Trimback, Judge, High Court, Bombay, 1850—93

CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS.

23, Leeson Park, Dublin, June 10th, 1905.

SINCE I last addressed you on this subject, my attention has been directed to certain evidences quoted by Cardinal Moran in his 'Persecutions of Irish Catholics' (Dublin, M. H. Gill & Son, 1884). His Eminence wrote as follows:—

"Jamaica and the adjoining islands had lately passed into the hands of England, and slaves were wanting to cultivate the sugar and tobacco-plant on that deadly soil. Sir William Petty,* writing in 1672, states that six thousand boys and women were thus sold as slaves from Ireland to the undertakers of the American islands. Bruodin estimates the total number of exiles from Ireland at 100,000, and adds that of these some thousands were transported to the tobacco islands.† A letter, written in 1656, cited by Dr. Lingard, reckons the number of Catholics thus sent to slavery at 60,000: 'The Catholics are sent off in shipfuls to the Barbadoes and other American islands. I believe 60,000 have already gone; for the husbands being first sent to Spain and Belgium already, their wives and children are now destined for the Americas.'"

Cardinal Moran also refers to a letter written by the Rev. John Grace, dated July 5th, 1669, who visited the West Indian islands in 1666. Father Grace stated that there were no fewer than 12,000 Irish scattered amongst the natives, and that they were treated as slaves.

The Irish bishops, assembled at Clonmacnoise on December 4th, 1649, complained that even then numbers of their people had been transported to the tobacco islands. What we want now, however, is definite evidence that transportation actually took place, and, in my judgment, Cardinal Moran supplies it. He writes:—

"On the 14th September, 1653, two English merchants, named Selleck and Leader, signed a contract with the Government Commissioners, by which a supply was granted them of 250 women and 300 men of the Irish nation, to be found within twenty miles of Cork, Youghal, Kinsale, Waterford, and Wexford."

It must be admitted, of course, that before Cromwell came to Ireland thousands of Irish had settled in the West Indian islands, just as during the Civil War many English Royalists sought homes therein. Father Hartigan, S.J., writing from Paris on March 30th, 1643, stated that he had received a petition from 25,000 Irish, residing in St. Kitts, imploring the appointment of two or more Jesuit priests of their own nationality to serve their spiritual needs. This petition was brought to Paris by * 'Political Anatomy of Ireland,' p. 187.

† Propugnæ, p. 672, "Aliquot milia in diversis Americæ tabacarias insulas relegata sunt."

Admiral du Poenry, the commander of the French naval forces in the West Indies.

In 1650 a Father John Stritch, S.J., born in Limerick, found 3,000 Irish in St. Kitts sheltered by the French authorities. He visited Montserrat in disguise, and here also he found large numbers of Irish whom he describes as being treated as slaves by their English owners. They were refused facilities for practising their religion, although the French inhabitants of the island were allowed freedom of conscience and of worship. Father Stritch ministered to his fellow-countrymen as best he could by night amidst the forests.

In The Athenæum for June 10th Mr. Robert Dunlop appears to question the correctness of the assertion that at the end of the sack of Drogheda the survivors of the massacre were transported to Barbados. In my letter of May 13th, in dealing with this matter, I relied on the references given in the Rev. Denis Murphy's 'Cromwell in Ireland' (Dublin, Gill & Son, 1885), and I regret to learn from Mr. Dunlop that these were incorrect. I am now, however, in a position to refer him to an authority whom I hope both he and Prof. Mahaffy will recognize as being at least a trustworthy witness. The testimony I rely on is that of Oliver Cromwell.

I possess, and have before me as I write, an original copy of "Letters from Ireland, relating the several great Successes it hath pleased God to give unto the Parliament's Forces there, in the taking of Drogheda, Trym, Dundalk, Carlingford, and the Nury. Ordered by Parliament to be printed, 2 October, 1649. London, Printed by John Field for Edward Husband, Printer to the Parliament of England."

The "letters" included in the pamphlet are Cromwell's reports to Speaker Lenthall on the progress of his military operations in Ireland. One of these communications, dated "Dublin, September 17th, 1649," and signed "O. Cromwell," describes the capture of Drogheda. In this Cromwell wrote as follows:—

"The next day the other two towers were summoned, in one of which were about six or seven score, but they refused to yield themselves, and we, knowing that hunger must compel them, set only good guards to secure them from running away, until their stomachs were come down: from one of the said towers, notwithstanding their condition, they killed and wounded some of our men; when they submitted their officers were knocked on the head, and every tenth man of the soldiers killed, and the rest shipped for the Barbadoes; the soldiers in the other town (? tower) were all spared, as to their lives only, and shipped likewise to the Barbadoes."

Mr. Dunlop says that "the only question is as to whether" such emigrants were sent to the West Indies "as slaves or servants." Is this a case of a distinction without a difference? Some expressions in Mr. Dunlop's letter, however, seem to me to call for a word of personal explanation. I have not written for the purpose of fixing on Cromwell or any one else the guilt of selling thousands of Irish into slavery. Personally I see grave difficulties in the way of accepting the theory that there was any wholesale exportation of Irish slaves to Barbadoes. In the first place, it would have been almost impossible to obtain a sufficiency of shipping, and in the second, the island had remained loyal to the Crown, and only submitted to the Commonwealth when a fleet and army had been sent to bring it to subjection. Why Cromwell should, under such circumstances, flood Barbadoes with thousands of discontented Irish prisoners is to me somewhat incomprehensible. That there were many voluntary Irish settlers is, I think, unquestionable, while I also think that I have shown that a certain number were exported as slaves.

WILLIAM F. DENNEY.

2, West Hill, Highgate, June 13th, 1905.

WITH reference to the communications appearing in The Athenæum on this subject, it seems to me that Mr. W. F. Dennehy (p. 657) is not strictly correct in attributing the persecutions and transportations to Barbadoes by the Cromwellians to have been confined exclusively to natives of Ireland. English men, women, and children "by hundreds" were transported to Barbadoes, "so that we have made an active verb of it: 'barbadoes you'" (see Carlyle, Oliver Cromwell's 'Letters,' vol. iv. p. 131). It is absolutely inaccurate to contend that these persecutions were not carried out. But those transported to Barbadoes in 1655 were not landed there, because the Cromwellian expedition under Venables and Penn was "batin' to blazes" in the attempt to take that island, and after the defeat, seeking refuge at Jamaica, they fortunately found that island undefended, landed, and captured it. Thus, in 1655-6, one thousand "Irish" girls (of whom many were English, or of English descent, and all undoubtedly "Papists") were transported to Jamaica and distributed, with 1,300 Bibles for the use of the garrison, as recorded in the "Original Journal of the Proceedings of Colonel Edward D'Oyley, during the time he held the Chief Command of the Island of Jamaica, from 19th November, 1655, to 27th May, 1662," ff. 21d et seq. J. P. HORE.

Lammas, Cowes.

MAY I quote as excellent authority for the selling into the plantations of the few who escaped massacre at Drogheda the second volume of 'Memoirs of the Verney Family'? In the chapter which deals with Sir Edmond Verney the younger—who was treacherously slain in cold blood with others after the massacre—there is a most circumstantial and clear account from contemporary sources of the fate of the wretched remnants of the garrison.

I am sorry I have not the book to refer to, as the simple and emphatic manner in which the tale is told is very telling and convincing. It will be remembered that the Verney family had special sources of information, and were far from prejudiced against Cromwell. The then head of the house, Sir Ralph, had taken the Parliament side in the civil wars, whilst personal loyalty to his king alone kept his father, Sir Edmond Verney, the standard-bearer, in the party for which he laid down his life at Edgehill. MARY DAMANT.

LAMB'S LETTERS.

Harrow, June 17th, 1905.

MR. RUTTER is sarcastic; but his ancient Ainsworth commands my respect. I wish now I had dusted mine, instead of consigning it to the dustheap a year or two ago. For, as Mr. Rutter may have detected, I did possess an Ainsworth, and found it of use when editing Lamb—the more admirable modern dictionaries being too guilty of leaving out the dog-Latin, the mongrel phrases, and the otherwise improper words of polite letters. It grieves me, however, to find that Lamb had recourse to the English section of that generous work; and also that he permitted himself to be corrupted by what he discovered there. I do not know Ainsworth's authority, but will venture to say that "prunum nanum" was never an actual and effective phrase in anybody's use till Lamb used it; and that Ainsworth—in that indiscriminating way which was his charm—hailed in, without lexical point or reference, a casual instance in which some one, viewing a given (or surreptitiously obtained) little plum, had said it was "nanum" = a dwarf, a pigmy, a very little one. Lamb thereupon brazenly accepts this as if it were a case of noun-and-adjective, and declines accordingly! But the end of it all is, that he did mean to suggest "plumkin," or some diluted equivalent of that strong word, even as I submitted. Therefore, my thanks to Mr. Rutter.

As to Mr. Lucas's "Palloris," and my "Pallor Oris," the first seems to be an emendation, and the second is somebody's mistake. That letter in my edition was printed from a collation, the securing of which was considered a prize, and therefore, although I could not make sense of "Oris" when it first came under my notice, of course I let it stand. Afterwards I forgot all about it; but it has occurred to me since the books were published that Lamb's handwriting had been misread, and that what he wrote was "Opis." Any one who will write that word with a somewhat short p will see that the misreading was so easy as to be almost inevitable. There is classical, if obscure, sanction for "Opis" as a nominative in personification, and Lamb would like it none the worse for being an out-of-the-way form. A curious fact, however, which has only occurred to me to-day, is that "Ops" itself, if written with a somewhat short p, and upon unlined paper, also yields an outline that is confusable, if not identical, with "Opis"; the eye has only to read into it a different style of r, the alternative forms of which letter are a continual cause of perplexity. Finally, to Ops (or Opis) there were temples enough, then and now.

W. MACDONALD.

"MULCIBER'S WORKHOUSE."

IN Kyd's tragedy of 'Soliman and Perseda,' I. iii. ll. 109-10 (Clarendon Press edition), are the two following lines, spoken by Basilisco:—

Rough wordes blowe my choller
As the wind dooth Mulciber's workehouse.

The allusion to "Mulciber's workehouse" is uncommon, and I am not aware that any explanation of it has been given. Kyd's latest editors, Mr. W. C. Hazlitt and Mr. F. S. Boas, have passed it by unnoticed. However, I think I am now able to offer a solution of the difficulty and point out the reference.

In the old anonymous interlude called 'Thersites' (Hazlitt's 'Dodsley,' vol. i. p. 395 seq.), written in 1537 and printed between 1550 and 1563, one of the characters, Mulciber, a smith, forges a suit of armour for Thersites, "a boaster." Among other curious things in this old piece is the following stage direction: "Mulciber must have a shop made in the place, and Thersites cometh before it saying aloud." "Mulciber's workehouse" would be his workshop, or smithy, and construing Basilisco's words in their literal sense, thus: Rough words have the same effect upon me as the wind (from the bellows) has upon the fire in Mulciber's forge—i.e., blows me into a heat, or choler—the meaning and reference is, I think, as plain as a pikestaff. No doubt Kyd was familiar with 'Thersites,' through reading or representation, or perhaps both, and probably drew his simile from it, as well as the hint for his vainglorious knight Basilisco, who bears more than a passing resemblance to the leading character, Thersites, in the old interlude. A. F. HOPKINSON.

TWO IRISH DICTIONARIES.

Union Club, S.W., June 21st, 1905.

I WAS much interested in finding in your notice of 'Two Irish Dictionaries' (Athenæum, May 20th) a reference to the darbhdaol (Staphylinus), a beetle which is (or was) killed by peasants in "an attempt at the transference of penalty." I had never before seen in print any description of the treatment given to this unfortunate insect; but the belief was current in County Cork forty years ago. The favourite method of execution there, however, was by seven prints of the finger-nail. Your reviewer is probably acquainted with the tradition which justifies this practice—an odd piece of Christian folk-lore which would take up too much of your space to find place in a letter.

The same review translates fiach dubh as "carrion-crow." But surely the black carrion-crow is unknown in Ireland, being replaced by the hooded crow (locally called "scall-crow"), to which your reviewer refers, s.v. fionnog. In West Clare to-day fiach dubh means raven (cf. "robin redbreast" for the only species of robin known in England).

The Gaelic word phartain is, oddly enough, the common name for crab at Berwick-on-Tweed among the fishermen, and is, I think, in use over the whole coast of Lowland Scotland. But at Berwick (and presumably elsewhere) it is never applied to the edible crab, being restricted to the common small crabs found in rock-pools. M. C. SETON.

Literary Gossip.

THE most interesting literary event of July will be the publication of a work of prose fiction by Mr. Swinburne. While dealing mainly with the love passion, as its name, 'Love's Cross-Currents,' implies, it satirizes, with the humour and trenchant wit that the readers of 'Heptalogia' are familiar with, certain characteristics of modern society. We shall give fuller particulars of it later. The publishers in England will, of course, be Messrs. Chatto & Windus. In America they will be Messrs. Harper & Brothers.

AN 'Account of the Original Bodleian Copy of the First Folio of Shakespeare,' by Mr. F. Madan, Mr. G. M. R. Turbutt, and Mr. S. Gibson, is now to be had, including a full description of the volume and its original unrestored binding, and notes on the Droeshout portrait and the true order of the preliminary leaves. There are also seven collotype illustrations. The publication is in style similar to the Clarendon Press facsimile of the First Folio issued in 1902. It can be procured only by application to Mr. Madan at Brasenose College, Oxford. We had a note on this highly interesting volume on February 25th last.

A CRITICAL edition of Juvenal by Mr. A. E. Housman, intended to make good some of the principal defects in existing editions, and especially to supply a better knowledge of the manuscripts, will be published shortly by E. Grant Richards.

IN The Cornhill Magazine for July libraries and readers form the main theme of the causerie 'From a College Window.' Mr. E. H. Pember, K.C., contributes 'Some Personal Recollections of Lord Grimthorpe.' A seasonable article on 'Roses' is from the pen of Canon Ellacombe. Mr. A. D. Godley pokes fun at some educational reformers in his verses 'The Pupils' Point of View.' In 'The Fall of the House of Goodere' Mr. H. B. Irving tells the true tale of the murder in 1741 of Sir John Goodere by his brother, the sea-captain. The Vice-Provost of Eton sketches the summer delights of 'A Voyage on the Mosel,' while the Rev. Reginald A. Gatty brings forward cogent evidence concerning the mystery of 'Lord Strafford's Burial-Place.' Miss Helen Zimmern has an article on 'The Modern Italian Drama,' while short stories are 'Watley's Witness,' by Mr. W. H. Rainsford, and 'A Were-Wolf Story,' by Mr. Horace Hutchinson.

THE July Blackwood includes 'A Word with Mrs. Humphry Ward,' and a paper 'On the Gentle Art of Blazon,' by Sir Herbert Maxwell. The author of 'A Retrograde Admiralty' compares Drake and Togo in connexion with the recent operations in the Sea of Japan. There are Scottish articles on 'Auld Reekie' and 'A Highland Gentleman' (Evander Maciver of Scourie), and 'A Study of the Japanese War,' by Chasseur.

LORD BURGHCLERE has revised and Mr. Murray will issue next week a new edition of his verse translation of 'The Georgics of Virgil.'

A NEW supplement to Poole's 'Index to Periodical Literature' is announced for immediate publication. It covers the five years ending in December, 1904.

MR. C. LEWIS HIND has written a romance, entitled 'The Education of an Artist,' the opening chapters of which, with illustrations, will be published in the July number of The World's Work and Play. This is the first matter in the nature of fiction to appear in that magazine, but it is fiction with an object, as it is intended that the reader who studies it shall thereby receive an education in art approximating to that of the hero himself. It is an ambitious scheme, and we doubt the propriety of revealing it before the novel is read. People may well object to fiction which "has a palpable design" upon them, to recall a phrase of Keats.

THE double section of the 'Oxford English Dictionary' to be published next month is a portion of vol. vi. (Madragera—Matter) by Dr. Bradley. The words therein recorded number 3,924, or more than double those contained in any other English dictionary, and the number of illustrative quotations is 14,664, exceeding any other work by upwards of 13,200. In this instalment the words treated are mainly of Romanic and Latin origin, but words from Oriental, African, and American languages are more than ordinarily abundant.

A BOOK of travel sketches entitled 'English Hours' will be published in the early autumn by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. for Mr. Henry James. The book will have illustrations by Mr. Pennell.

THE reviewer of 'From Tokyo to Tiflis' writes that he has re-read the book, and sees no reason to add to what he said a fortnight ago, or to reply to the interesting letter sent by the author last week.

THE Edinburgh University Court has appointed Prof. Eggeling curator of the University Library, and Mr. Alexander Anderson librarian. Mr. Anderson, who is known by his 'Songs of the Rail' and 'Ballads and Sonnets,' has published very little poetry for some time.

HITHERTO issued as a mid-monthly, The Dickensian will in future be published on the 1st of each month, beginning with the July number. This will contain amongst its contents a translation from the French of an article on 'The Heroes of Dickens,' by M. Arthur Dourliac; 'The Survival of Mrs. Crupp,' by Leicester Romaine; 'The Dramatic Element in Dickens,' by Miss Isabelle M. Pagan, who is the author of more than one dramatic version of Dickens's novels; a poem of thirteen verses on Dickens by his friend Chauncey Hare Townshend; 'The House which Bill Sikes Burgled,' by Mr. Walter Dexter, illustrated; and other items of interest. The cover design will be that of 'David Copperfield,' used in the original parts, and the frontispiece a reproduction of a wood engraving by Linton of Margaret Gillies's miniature of the novelist in 1844.

AT the monthly meeting of the Booksellers' Provident Institution, held on Thursday week last, the sum of 114*l.* was granted to fifty-six members and widows of members. Two new members were elected, and one application for membership was received.

THE dinner of the Printers' Pension, Almshouse, and Orphan Asylum Corporation, on Wednesday last, under the presidency of Mr. C. A. Pearson, was very well attended and a great success. Subscriptions reached a higher point than ever before, 8,210*l.* 'Printers' Pie' has raised 1,000*l.*, and Mr. Spottiswoode, its successful editor, gave a promise that he would make it an annual affair.

THE Académie Française publishes a long list of awards of the many prizes in its gift. The most important of these, the Prix Gobert, "destiné à récompenser le morceau le plus éloquent d'histoire de France," has been divided into two, M. Ernest Daudet obtaining 9,000*fr.* for his 'Histoire de l'Émigration pendant la Révolution Française,' and M. A. Lebey 1,000*fr.* for his book 'Le Connétable de Bourbon, 1490-1527.' The Prix Thérouanne, of the value of 4,000*fr.*, for the best historical work issued during the preceding year, has been divided into six, two portions of 1,000*fr.* each going to M. Paul Guiraud for 'Études Économiques sur l'Antiquité,' and M. Chatelain for 'Le Surintendant Nicolas Fouquet.' The 19,000*fr.* of the foundation Montyon for works "utiles aux mœurs" have been divided into one award of 1,500*fr.* to M. Guillaumin for 'La Vie d'un Simple,' seven of 1,000*fr.* each, and twenty-one of 500*fr.* each. The Prix Charles Blanc, of the value of 2,400*fr.*, has been divided into four: one of 1,000*fr.* to M. Bertaux for his book on Rome; two of 500*fr.*, to M. Baud-Bovy for 'Peintres Genevois,' and M. Hustin for 'Le Palais du Luxembourg,' respectively; and one of 400*fr.* to M. Dacier for 'Le Musée de la Comédie-Française.'

THE new member of the Académie Française, M. Étienne Lamy, elected in succession to M. Eugène Guillaume, secured an easy victory over his two rivals, the voting being twenty-one for M. Lamy, twelve for M. Maurice Barrès, and two for M. Émile Bergerat. M. Lamy has played many parts in his time. He was a member of the Assemblée Nationale in 1871, when he was only twenty-eight years of age, and one of his earliest public achievements of a literary nature was a voluminous report in connexion with the Marine Budget of 1876. For over twenty years he has devoted himself to literary studies, and his published works include 'Études sur le Second Empire,' 'La France du Levant,' 'L'Armée et la Démocratie,' and 'La Femme de Demain.' He has also edited a series of curious and interesting letters of Aimée de Coligny, and has commenced in the Revue des Deux Mondes some important studies on the government of the Défense Nationale. On the death of Comte Léon Lavedan he took over the direction of the Correspondant.

M. J. PINGARD, who died last week at Créteil in his seventy-eighth year, was the highly esteemed chief of the permanent staff of the French Institute, of which his father was for many years the general secretary. M. Pingard became a member of the staff in 1849 on leaving college; he wrote hardly anything, devoting the whole of his energies to his office—"Il ne fut que le gardien sévère des traditions et des usages académiques," says one of his biographers. He was a genial autocrat, and sometimes exasperated the Academicians by the manner in which he allotted tickets for places on "field" days at the Institute; but neither complaints nor criticism could induce M. Pingard to depart from what he regarded as his duty and the traditions of his important office.

THE subarchivist of the Vatican, Heinrich Denifle, whose death in his sixty-second year took place recently at Munich, was born at Imst, in Tyrol. He joined the Dominican Order at Graz, pursued his studies at Rome, and for over twenty-five years occupied his post at the Vatican. His works on German mysticism and his palæographical treatises showed such a thorough grasp of his subjects that he achieved a wide reputation. His work 'Luther und Luthertum in seiner ersten Entwicklung' made a stir two years ago. The first edition was sold out in four weeks, and the author was exposed to most virulent attacks from Protestant theologians. Denifle when he died was on his way to Cambridge to receive an honorary degree.

THE eminent philologist Prof. Adolf Mussafia, whose death is announced from Florence, was born at Spalato, in Dalmatia, in 1835, and studied at Vienna, where he subsequently received an appointment as Italian Lecturer. He soon turned his attention to the study of the Romance languages, at that time almost in its infancy, and when a chair for this subject was founded at the University of Vienna, he was appointed professor. Among his most important works are his edition of the old French prose legends, the manuscripts of which are in the Paris National Library, and a number of monographs on the old Italian dialects, and on Spanish, Portuguese, and Roumanian philology.

RECENT Parliamentary Papers include the Annual Report of the Commissioners of Education in Ireland, 1904 (1*d.*); and Accounts of the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, 1904 (1*d.*).

SCIENCE

The New Knowledge. By Robert Kennedy Duncan. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THE new knowledge of Mr. Duncan—who is Professor of Chemistry in Washington and Jefferson College—concerns, of course, the phenomena of radio-activity and electrolysis, of which we have lately become aware, together with the speculations on the constitution of matter to which they have given rise. Starting with the radiometer of Crookes, Prof. Duncan lays before the general reader an ostensibly popular account of the atomic theory, Mendeléeff's periodic law, and the ionization of gases. He then shows how the dissociation of the atom is established and accounted for, discusses the cathode, Röntgen, and Becquerel rays, and goes at considerable length into the discovery of radium and its congeners and the difference it has made in our conceptions of the universe. He next plunges into the structure of the atom as supposed to be indicated by the experiment with floating magnets—with which readers of The Athenæum must be by now tolerably familiar—and the electronic theory of matter, which he pronounces, fairly enough, to be at present mere hypothesis and wholly independent of the proved facts of atomic dissociation and radio-activity. Finally, he discusses the composition of the starry world as disclosed by the spectroscope, and touches upon what he calls "cosmical problems," such as the sun's heat, the causes of the Aurora Borealis and of the zodiacal light, and the tails of comets. In all this he uses popular language, eschews all but the simplest mathematics, and describes not only the recent discoveries themselves, but also the experiments by which they were made and verified. Although some little fault might be found with the arrangement of the book, Prof. Duncan has succeeded in his main object, and "the man in the street," by the time he has finished the two hundred and fifty pages of clear type here presented to him, will have a much more lucid idea of the recent advance in physics and the conclusions to which it has given rise than he can have at the present moment. As, moreover, Prof. Duncan is evidently well acquainted with the history of his subject, and is therefore able to distinguish in his treatment of it between fact and theory, the book is a great improvement upon all previous attempts at its popularization that we have seen.

This is not to say that the book is perfect, and perhaps we are still too near to the discoveries it relates for any perfect book upon them to be written. But it contains some errors probably due to the breathless haste with which it appears to have been written, and these urgently require amendment. On the very first page Prof. Duncan tells us we can divide all we know "of this universe of space and time" into three compartments, which he labels "1. Matter. 2. Ether. 3. Energy." Later, he defines matter as "that which occupies space and possesses weight"; ether as "the vast circumambient medium" which "cannot be air or water or any form of matter as we know it," which fills to the brim "empty space"; and energy as "the power to change the state of motion of a body." Yet almost on his last page he mentions with respect the contention lately put forward by Prof. Mendeléeff (see The Athenæum, Nos. 4010 and 4041) that the ether is an inert gas with an atomic weight about one million times less than that of hydrogen—a hypothesis which, as he says, accounts fairly well for the properties of the ether, and which is "deserving of more credit and attention" than it has hitherto received. It would appear from this that Prof. Duncan began his book with one idea in his head, and finished it with another, and this is rather borne out by some metaphysical remarks that he makes in several places about the universe being essentially one, and the three categories enumerated above being "phases of an underlying and unknowable reality," and also a "triune conception," "perhaps capable of a deeper synthesis." If Prof. Mendeléeff be right, Prof. Duncan's three categories are at once reduced to two; and if the electronic theory of matter be accepted, it may be possible to reduce them still further to what we are accustomed to call electricity only.

It may also be said that there are omissions from the book, of which the most serious is, perhaps, the absence of any attempt to explain the phenomena of magnetism. Magnetism is in effect the earliest as well as the most common electrical phenomenon known to man, and no synthesis of our "new" knowledge which does not deal with it can pretend to be complete. As has been stated in these columns (see The Athenæum, Nos. 4041 and 4049), M. Langevin has lately made a detailed study of the whole matter, while many speculations on the subject are to be found in the recent publications of the Royal Society and other learned bodies. Yet Prof. Duncan ignores all these, and contents himself with the bald affirmation that "magnetism is a force developed in ether as [sic] right angles to the direction of the corpuscles." Gravitation, with more excuse, he also abandons without any attempt at explanation, and we notice that he omits the actinium of M. Debierne from the list of radio-active elements, which he copies without acknowledgment from Prof. Rutherford's 'Radio-Activity.' As he makes no attempt to explain why some of the combinations in the floating-magnets experiment adopt alternative forms, and does not seem to have grasped the purely relative character of the valency and (electrical) sign of the elements, we have some grounds for suspicion that Prof. Duncan in such matters prefers to find his goods ready-made.

To bring our fault-finding to a close, we have noticed many slips of language, which in some cases seem due to carelessness, and in others point to the conclusion that "compulsory" Greek might with advantage be taught at Washington and Jefferson College. Madame Curie's name is Skłodowska, and "Skłodowski," and Prof. Mendeléeff spells his name as we have done, and not "Mendeléef" or "Mendlejeff." Prof. Fleming called his theory of matter the electronic, and the fearful word "electronic," which Prof. Duncan would substitute for this, seems to be derived from "electrotonus," a word which is, we fancy, used by medical electricians exclusively to denote the irritation of the nerve under electrical excitement. We prefer, too, the spelling of spintharoscope for Sir William Crookes's little instrument to that of "sphintharoscope," with which Prof. Duncan would grace it. In using "monovalent" and "univalent" indifferently Prof. Duncan sins in good company, but the latter form should be exclusively used by all physicists who retain any respect for the classics. Although beryllium and glucinum are the same metal, no one would guess it from Prof. Duncan's references to them; and no "new elements with transcendent ray-emitting powers," as he states, have been discovered since radium, polonium, and actinium—thorium, which is, perhaps, the parent of the whole group, having been known some seventy years before the Curies' researches. But when allowance is made for the faults here enumerated, the book remains the best of its kind that we have read.

---

The Historical Relations of Medicine and Surgery to the End of the Sixteenth Century. By T. Clifford Allbutt. (Macmillan.)—Prof. Clifford Allbutt was chosen to deliver one of the two addresses on inner medicine at the St. Louis Congress in 1904. He dealt with the outward relations of the subject, and discussed from an historical standpoint the statement of Galen that surgery is, after all, but a method of treatment. The address is well written and interesting, and demands the careful attention of every thoughtful practitioner of medicine. It shows that medicine has always been advanced by pressure brought to bear by the members in its lower ranks. This was, undoubtedly, because in old times the very illiteracy of the inferior grades of practitioners spared them the misfortune of the speculative intellect which too often strangled the higher ranks, whilst in later years the unparalleled advance of surgery has displaced the hierarchy of the physicians. Prof. Allbutt does not choose to carry his argument to its logical conclusion, but we think there is little doubt that the union of medicine and surgery, which was characteristic of Greek medicine, and long survived in Italy, will again become manifest. It will come by the disappearance of the pure physician, and the further education of the operating surgeon. The general practitioner, the ophthalmic surgeon, the dermatologist, and the obstetric physician already act in their respective spheres at one time as physicians, at another time as surgeons. The general or operating surgeon must necessarily know enough medicine to enable him to recognize and treat successfully the more obscure diseases of the brain, chest, and stomach, which used to belong exclusively to the pure physician. The physician alone remains as the representative of a single branch of the healing art. It is true that he still acts as a drag upon the over-zealous surgeon, but year by year he is less and less able to justify his existence, and there is very little doubt that in a few generations he must either widen the scope of his attainments or cease to exist. But the surgeon is not yet qualified to take the place thus left vacant by the physician. His training is too often wholly different, and he lacks many of those qualities which have enabled physicians to make medicine a learned profession and not a mere trade. Time, however, will remedy these objects. A large number of surgeons in England have received the same education as physicians. They have been trained in the same public schools, have obtained like honours in the universities, and have gained the sound knowledge of physiology and pathology which alone will enable them to advance both the science and the art of surgery.

National Physical Training: an Open Debate. Edited by J. B. Atkins. (Isbister.)—These papers, edited by Mr. J. B. Atkins, are reprinted with some additions from The Manchester Guardian. They are arranged in the form of a discussion by representative authorities, and make a useful symposium of opinion upon physical training for schools in its various aspects. Some remarks are added by specialists upon homelife, infant feeding, and continental physical exercises. It seems very clear that no exercises could be more suitable for maintaining interest, securing generalized development, and encouraging esprit de corps among school children than the various forms of drill which are here proposed. The chief opponents of the drill system at schools are those who, dreading the bugbear of militarism, fear lest the drills and exercises should arouse a spirit of Jingoism in the children. It is surely, however, among the unkempt, the undrilled, and the poorly developed hooligan classes that these tendencies arise most conspicuously. Mr. John Burns, M.P., in the course of some trenchant remarks upon the supreme importance of better feeding among the poorer classes as a factor in physical development, points out the distinction between the Swiss and Swedish and other forms of drill exercises, and the advantage they have over the violent drill to which, under a system of conscription, a recruit would be submitted, though for his own part, as regards physical exercise, he thinks "the old English games are quite sufficient." Many of these contributions will be found very suggestive and useful to those who have at heart the gravest problem with which the nation is now faced—the decline in physical vigour under the modern conditions of town life.

The World of To-day. By A. R. Hope Moncrieff. Vol. I. (Gresham Press.)—This is the first volume of a new popular description of the world at the present time. The author claims to give "a readable account of geographical, political, and ethnological features, with glances at natural history, and without going much into scientific questions."

In this difficult and rather thankless task Mr. Moncrieff seems to us to have succeeded very well. The present volume includes China, Japan, Korea, Russian Asia, and India. The author has consulted all the best-known authorities, and a good feature is the occasional use of quotations in the text and foot-notes. A few statements strike us as too broad; but we have found no serious errors. Of minor points it may be noticed that the term Tartary is out of date, and should hardly have been used for Mongolia. The famous bronze astronomical instruments in the observatory on the walls of Peking were not, as Mr. Moncrieff states, made by the Jesuits in the nineteenth century. They were constructed by order of the Emperor Kanghsi, who came to the throne in 1671, for the observatory which he built and placed under the charge of Father Verbiest, the celebrated Jesuit astronomer. It is scarcely correct to say that the Tibetans are so exclusive that they will not even admit Chinese women. Col. Waddell, in his recent book on Tibet, says that they are forbidden by Chinese edicts to leave their own country; but a few go by sea to Calcutta, and are smuggled in through Sikkim. An extraordinary amount of information is condensed into the compass of a moderate-sized book, and the necessary statistical facts are added in an appendix. The illustrations are numerous and good.

Peeps into Nature's Ways. By John J. Ward. (Isbister.)—Mr. Ward is the author of 'Minute Marvels of Nature,' and the present is another volume of the same class, well and amply illustrated by photographs and micrographs taken by the writer. The greater part, if not the whole, of this volume has appeared previously in various magazines. Yet one is glad to see material so wholesome and serviceable gathered in book form. Mr. Ward's method is of the popular sort, calculated to seduce the most learning-shy of readers into the acquisition of useful insect and plant lore before they become aware that they are learning. This is the sort of thing—simple, entertaining, yet genuinely instructive:—

"While preparing matter for this life history I watched, by means of a magnifying lens, a number of these caterpillars make their emergence from the egg, and in every instance the egg-shell was the first food of the young larva. The thought occurred to me—What course would be taken by one if it was removed from its shell immediately after emergence? To satisfy my curiosity, I carefully placed one that had just broken through its shell a little distance away along the stem. For a while it felt about as if it had lost something, but after feeling around a number of times it began to make its way slowly along the stem, at last coming to another egg which still enclosed its occupant. In about half an hour it had eaten about one-half of this shell, much to the discomfort of the other larva, which was not yet ready to emerge. Whether it mistook this for its own shell, or was making the best of a bad job, is more than I am able to say, but soon after it left its shell meal and commenced its vegetable diet."

In the same simple narrative style many of the most remarkable forms of insect and plant life are here dealt with from first-hand observation. The marvellous mimicry indulged in by "insect masqueraders" is well described.

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—June 7.—Dr. J. E. Marr, President, in the chair.—Messrs. Leicester Bonner, T. H. Cope, E. Jorissen, A. Jowett, and E. H. V. Melville were elected Fellows; and Dr. Bunjirô Kotô, Professor of Geology in the College of Science, Imperial University of Tôkyô, was elected a Foreign Correspondent.—The following communications were read: 'The Microscopic Structure of Minerals forming Serpentine, and their Relation to its History,' by Prof. T. G. Bonney and Miss C. A. Raisin, —and 'The Tarns of the Canton Ticino,' by Prof. E. J. Garwood.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—June 8.—Viscount Dillon, V.P., in the chair.—This being an evening appointed for the election of Fellows, no papers were read.—Mr. H. Swainson Cowper exhibited a bronze dagger found at Aldingham, a bronze armlet from Furness, and a stone implement of unknown use from Smyrna.—Mr. A. Hartshorne exhibited a silver and enamelled plate with the arms of Torbock and Cotton.—Mr. W. B. Baunerian exhibited two early Surrey parish registers.—Mr. P. Norman exhibited a Swedish stained cloth with Scriptural subjects.—The following were elected Fellows: Messrs. I. S. Leadam, G. Le Gros, H. W. Underdown, and W. G. Collingwood, Dr. Henry Jervis, Sir Benjamin Stone, and Mr. E. T. Clark.

ZOOLOGICAL.—June 6.—Dr. H. Woodward, V.P., in the chair.—The Secretary read a report on the additions to the menagerie during May, and called special attention to a crowned duiker (Cephalophus coronatus) from West Africa; to a Maxwell's duiker (Cephalophus maxwelli), also from West Africa, presented by Lieut.-Col. Bartlett; to a Nepalese hornbill (Aceros nepalensis) from the Himalayas; and to two sulphur-breasted toucans (Rhamphastos carinatus).—Mr. Oldfield Thomas exhibited a specimen of a new bushbuck, which he proposed to call Tragelaphus haywoodi, sp. n. Mr. Oldfield Thomas also exhibited some mammals and birds from Japan, which had been obtained by a collector sent out by the Society's President, the Duke of Bedford, who, in order to show his sympathy with the technical side of the Society's work, proposed to further zoological science by having systematic collections made in that part of the world. The specimens would be laid before the Society from time to time, and, after being worked out by specialists, would be presented to the National Museum. Of the present series Mr. Thomas drew attention to a fine marten, which appeared to be different from the true Mustela melampus, and which he proposed to call M. melampus bedfordi, subsp. n.—Mr. R. I. Pocock, the Superintendent of the Gardens, exhibited a female specimen of the Jamaican scorpion, Centruroides insularis, carrying its young on its back. The specimen had been presented to the Society by Mr. H. Munt.—Dr. P. Chalmers Mitchell, Secretary, read a paper entitled 'On the Intestinal Tract of Mammals,' and illustrated it by lantern-slides prepared from some of the drawings which he hoped would accompany the memoir on publication. In the course of the last eight years the author had taken every possible opportunity of studying the alimentary tract of mammals from specimens that had died in the Society's gardens, and had obtained additional material elsewhere, with the result that his investigations covered over two hundred individuals, and included the greater number of the mammalian orders. The paper gave a systematic account of the characters of the intestinal tract in the different mammalian groups, and concluded with the inferences as to the affinities of these groups that the patterns supplied.—Lieut.-Col. C. Delmé-Radcliffe gave an account (illustrated by a fine collection of specimens and a series of lantern-slides) of the natural history of Western Uganda, from observations and collections made by him while acting as British Boundary Commissioner on the Uganda frontiers.—Dr. H. Gadow read a paper on 'The Distribution of Mexican Amphibia and Reptilia.' After a critical revision of the species recorded from Mexico, the author stated that he grouped them according to the prevailing physical features of the country. It was found that Mexico had received its present fauna from both the Northern and the Southern continents. The Northern immigrants had spread over high tablelands and mountains, whilst not a few species had descended into the hot lowlands, even into Central America and still further south. On the other hand, the Southerners were divided by the plateau into an Atlantic and a Pacific mass, each having had time to modify many of its members according to the very different physical features. Scarcely any of these Southerners had ascended the plateau, but they were not averse to ascending high outlying mountains. A comparative list of species confined to high altitudes was given, and the conclusion arrived at, with the help of geological data and the fauna of the Antilles, was that the exchange between the North and South took place during the Miocene epoch, at which period alone the Antilles were connected with Central America.—Mr. G. A. Boulenger described the new species of reptiles discovered in Mexico by Dr. Gadow. Mr. Boulenger also presented a paper containing an account of the batrachians and reptiles collected in South Africa by Mr. C. H. B. Grant, and presented to the British Museum by Mr. C. D. Rudd.—Mr. F. E. Beddard communicated some notes on the anatomy of the yellow-throated lizard, Gerrhosaurus flavigularis. Mr. Beddard also presented notes on the cerebellum in the exanthematic monitor, Varanus exanthematicus, and on the cerebral hemispheres in the Taraguiria lizard, Tropidurus hispidus.—Mr. Richard Asheton communicated a paper on 'The Fœtus and Placenta of the Spiny Mouse, Acomys cahirinus.'—A paper was communicated by the Rev. H. S. Gorham on some new Coleoptera from South Africa. The beetles referred to were of the families Malacodermata, Cleridae, and Erotylidae, and had been collected by Dr. H. Brauns, of Willowmore, in Cape Colony, either at Willowmore or at Delagoa Bay in 1900 or 1901: they indicated that the fauna of South Africa was rich in species of the first two families, and richer than had been supposed in members of the third family. One new genus was described.—Dr. A. Smith Woodward communicated a paper by Baron Francis Nopcea entitled 'Remarks on the Supposed Clavicle of the Sauropodous Dinosaur Diplodocus.'—This meeting closed the session 1904-5.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—June 7.—Mr. F. Merrifield, President, in the chair.—Herr L. von Gangelbauer, of the Vienna Museum, was elected an Honorary Fellow; Mr. C. J. Grist, Mr. V. P. Kitchen, and the Rev. W. Mansell Merry were elected Fellows.—Mr. M. Burr exhibited an earwig, Apterogyla arachnoides, Yers., found by Mr. Annandale, of Calcutta, in a box of specimens received from the Andaman Islands. When placed in a small box it was alone, but next morning there were five larvae present; two disappeared, apparently being consumed by the parent; and the remaining three were those exhibited. Mr. Burr also showed a Locustid of the family Pseudophyllidae taken in Queensland by Mr. H. W. Simmonds among twigs and plants which it greatly resembled, together with a photograph of the insect in its natural position.—Mr. E. C. Bedwell showed three examples of the rare beetle Gnorimus nobilis, L., taken at Woolwich, and a malformed specimen of Lochmæa saturalis, with the left posterior tibia biind for about one-third of its length, and two tarsi, one of which had the joints considerably enlarged.—Mr. O. E. Janson exhibited a living specimen of Omophilus beater, Herbst, a beetle not known to occur in Britain, found by his son near Covent Garden, and probably imported.—Mr. W. L. Lucas exhibited one male and three females of the scarce Apylon armatum, taken this year by Mr. F. Balfour Browne and sent to him alive.—Mr. G. C. Champion showed four specimens of Aeromachus manihularis, Gyll., captured on the wing towards sunset near Woking at the end of May.—Mr. Selwyn Image exhibited two aberrations of Biston hirtaria, Cl., both females, taken at rest on tree-trunks at Mortehoe, North Devon, on April 23rd. The first aberration was tolerably normal in general coloration, but the anterior half of the fore wings was much suffused with fuscous. The second aberration was semi-transparent black all over both fore and hind wings, the veins strongly delineated with black, powdered with ochreous.—Mr. W. J. Kaye showed a number of empty pupa-cases of Zonosoma pendularia, to demonstrate the wide variation of methods in the placing of the silken girth round the pupa.—Prof. E. B. Poulton exhibited leaves of strawberry, Berberis japonica, and cherry-laurel. In the former the edges of the windows caused by the attack of a minute fungus were somewhat ragged, but those of the other two leaves had smooth contours, and strikingly resembled the oval transparent areas upon the fore wings of Kallima inachis, paralekta, &c., surrounded most conspicuously with a marginal zone of modified colour, varying greatly in tint and in extent in different individuals. Prof. Poulton also showed a photograph of the fungus-like marks on the wings of the Oriental Kallimas, taken under his direction by Mr. Alfred Robinson, of the Oxford University Museum.—Dr. Karl Jordan communicated a note on 'The Variability of the Genitalia in Lepidoptera.'—Dr. G. B. Longstaff read a note on scents in the male of Gonepteryx, and mentioned that whereas in G. cleopatra the odour was strong, he had been unable to detect any appreciable fragrance in G. rhamni. Such a difference, he said, seemed to imply a physiological difference of the two forms pointing to specific distinction.—Dr. F. A. Dixey, in connexion with Dr. Longstaff's observations, exhibited the several forms of Gonepteryx occurring in the palaearctic region, to demonstrate the variation of wing coloration in the respective forms ranked as species.—Mr. H. J. Elwes read a note on the geographical affinities of Japanese butterflies, and exhibited numerous examples taken by himself. Summing up his remarks, he said that during the winter and spring months the plants and insects of Japan were, like the climate, palaearctic in character, yet during the summer and autumn they were tropical.—Prof. Christopher Aurivilius communicated a paper on 'New African Lassicampide in the British Museum.'—Mr. G. W. Kirkaldy communicated a 'Memoir on the Rhynchota taken by Dr. Wyllie, chiefly in Beira and Lifù.'

METEOROLOGICAL.—June 21.—Mr. R. Bentley President, in the chair.—Mr. G. C. Simpson read a paper on 'The Normal Electrical Phenomena of the Atmosphere.' In no branch of physics has the discovery of ions, electrons, and radio-activity produced a greater revolution than in that devoted to atmospheric electricity. The author endeavoured to state the chief line along which during the last few years investigations have been made and the conclusions arrived at, and also to point out some of the problems awaiting solution. The amount of radio-active emanation in the lower regions of the atmosphere is increased by all those meteorological conditions which tend to keep the air stagnant over the earth's surface. The meteorological conditions which either cause or often accompany stagnant air are calm low temperature and high relative humidity; while, on the contrary, high winds, high temperature, and low humidity generally accompany the mixing of large masses of air. This all agrees with the observed facts that the atmospheric radio-activity increases with falling temperature, rising humidity, and increasing wind-strength. The author is of opinion that a solution of the problems of atmospheric electricity can only be expected from the results of extended measurements in the atmosphere itself, and from laboratory experiments directed towards the problem.—A paper by Mr. G. P. Ferguson, 'Two New Meteorological Instruments,' was read by the Secretary. The instruments described were an "automatic Polar Star light recorder," for recording the amount of cloudiness at night, and "the ombroscope," an instrument for determining the time and duration of rain. Both of these instruments are in use at the Blue Hill Observatory, Mass.

HISTORICAL.—June 15.—The Rev. W. Hunt, President, in the chair.—The following were elected Fellows: Rev. F. W. Ragg, Rev. F. Rashmore, and Mr. F. M. Rashmore.—The Birkenhead and Workington Public Libraries were admitted as subscribing libraries.—A paper was read by Mr. W. A. Parker Mason on 'The Beginnings of the Cistercian Order,' being the Alexander Prize Essay for the year 1904.—The President spoke on the subject of the Cistercian organization.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

Mon. Geographical, 8½.—'The French Antarctic Expedition,' Dr. Charcot.
Tues. Statistical, 5.—'A Contribution to the Study of the Vital and other Statistics of the Jews in the United Kingdom,' Mr. S. Rosenbaum.
Wed. British Numismatic, 8.—'The Saxon, Norman, and Plantagenet Coinage of Wales,' Mr. P. Carlyon-Britton.
Thurs. Antiquaries, 8½.—'The Island of Ictis,' Mr. Clement Reid; 'Late-Keltic Pins of the Hand Type,' Mr. R. A. Smith.

Science Gossip.

PROF. KARL SCHRÖTER and his pupil Dr. Rubel have established a biological station on the Bernina Pass, a most favourable situation for the work to be carried on. Although it is intended chiefly for the study of Alpine flora, attention will also be paid to meteorological observations, and the station is supplied with a complete equipment of meteorological and geodetic instruments. Prof. Schröter's present idea is to keep the station open during the whole year, and similar stations are to be established in Puschlav and in the Upper Engadine.

THE death, in his fifty-fifth year, is announced from Breslau of the distinguished surgeon Prof. Johannes v. Mikulicz, the Director of the surgical department of the University, and the author of a number of important works, including 'Die antiseptische Wundbehandlung und ihre Technik,' 'Über Gastroskopie und Oesophagoskopie,' 'Die unblutige Reduktion der angeborenen Hüftverrenkung,' &c.

PROF. ERNEST LEBON, of the Lycée Charlemagne, and author of a 'Histoire abrégée de l'Astronomie,' has been elected a corresponding member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Lisbon.

PROF. M. AND HERR G. WOLF have discovered a beautiful annular star in the constellation Cygnus, nearly to the south of the star  $\delta$  and north-west of  $\gamma$  Cygni. Its brightness amounted on the 29th ult. to more than the tenth magnitude, but below  $9\frac{1}{2}$ ; in previous plates of the same region no trace of it could be detected. The star, they remark, must be very red, on account of the ring which is shown by the image when out of focus. It is to be reckoned, according to the editor of the Astronomische Nachrichten (No. 4025), as var. 72, 1905, Cygni.

ADMIRAL CHESTER, Superintendent of the Naval Observatory, Washington, communicates to No. 4026 of the Astronomische Nachrichten the results of observations of the satellites of Saturn and Uranus obtained with the 26-inch equatorial during the year 1904. Until the middle of July these were made by Mr. C. W. Frederick, but on his resignation, in order to take charge of the erection of the new Naval Observatory at Tutuila, Samoa, the work was continued until nearly the end of October by Mr. J. C. Hammond.

FINE ARTS

G. F. Watts: Reminiscences. By Mrs. Russell Barrington. (G. Allen.)

MRS. RUSSELL BARRINGTON has written an extremely readable story of her long and intimate friendship with Watts. It does not pretend to be a methodical or critical study either of the man or the artist; it is rather in the nature of conversational reminiscences, jotted down at random while the interest in the subject is at its height and while the memories are still fresh. The work has, of course, the defects of such a method. It is discursive almost to excess, there are frequent repetitions, and the writing shows signs of haste; but it has also the freshness and vivacity of a sketch thrown off while the writer is still under the first impulse of the idea. Indeed, whatever may be thought of the book as a whole—and doubtless those who are intimately acquainted with the circumstances described will have much to criticize in so frankly personal an account—there are scattered through these pages many illuminating details which we are grateful to Mrs. Barrington for recording.

In the chapter on 'Aims' we get some very interesting confessions of Watts's ambitions, of the intensity and singleness of purpose which enabled a hyper-sensitive and melancholy temperament to accomplish so vast a work. Watts declares:—

"If I were asked to choose whether I would like to do something good, as the world judges popular art, and receive personally great credit for it, or, as an alternative, to produce something which should rank as the very best, taking a place with the art of Pheidias or Titian, with the highest poetry and the most elevating music, and remain unknown as the perpetrator of the work, I should choose the latter."

This note of devoted service to a common good runs through all he utters and all he attempts. And yet this clear perception of the worthlessness for civilization of popular art never made him, in spite of his intense consciousness of higher aims, judge the work of contemporary artists harshly; indeed, he is throughout excessive in his praise of contemporaries. So that when it is a question of selling his pictures, he "thought the Greek poetry picture, considering all things—for example, that Alma Tadema got three thousand for his 'Sappho'—ought not to be less than one thousand or one thousand five hundred; he would sell it for eight or nine hundred, reserving the copyright."

Watts persistently disclaimed the attributes of genius, and always found the work of minor artists more brilliant and more talented than his own. It was, he thought, only—though in this qualification it is easy to show that he was mistaken—in the elevation of his aims that the difference came in. With regard to this lifelong tendency to depreciate his own gifts, and the almost embarrassing modesty he displayed to the youngest visitor or critic, Mrs. Barrington makes a really illuminating criticism:—

"His taste and aspirations leading him to dwell on the very best things that have been produced in the world's history of art and literature, any comparison with these and his own work depressed him greatly, and led to belittlements of self. Moreover, as is often the case with those gifted with rare instincts of imagination which are outside and beyond the conscious working of their minds, Watts had a certain curiosity about himself. In conversing he would often try to unravel the inconsistencies in his nature, and he would, I think, speak of the consciousness of his deficiencies in order to challenge a discussion of them."

The words which we have printed in italics really contain the explanation of the curious phenomenon which Watts presented of a modesty which without doubt was in its origins perfectly sincere, combined with a certain egoism which made his own genius the most absorbingly interesting question in whatever circle he might be. So that his self-depreciation became not exactly a challenge to contradiction—the humility was too real for that—but at least a challenge to inquiry, a call for every one to concern himself with the intriguing problem of how he came to be what he was.

We almost wish that Mrs. Barrington had not printed Watts's obiter dicta on contemporary artists, for they err as extravagantly on the side of generosity as most professional opinions fall short of it. Watts had, in fact, a complete lack of the critical sense. It was part of the generous and disinterested, but at the same time almost purely emotional reaction to what was noble in life, that he was thus incapable of nice discrimination and judicial balance of mind. One likes him, perhaps, as a man all the more for enthusiasms which one cannot but recognize as misplaced, and which occasionally led to much disappointment in those in whom his praise had raised false expectations.

There is, of course, in this book but little about Watts's early life. Would that we had as vivid a picture of the youthful Watts, of the intimacy with the Hollands, and his last evening at Florence, which spun itself out into a stay of four years! Would that we could get some idea of his mind when the impressions of Italy first transformed him, and gave him the idea of an heroic art—that we had some sayings of the time before that vague and virtuous sentimentality which grew upon him in later years had dimmed the incisiveness of his intellect! But Mrs. Barrington wisely confines herself to the years of her own intimacy with the artist, and there are many interesting notes on the work he produced at that period. She tells how the 'Minotaur' was painted under the influence of intense moral indignation in three hours, from five to eight in the morning. "I remember," she adds,

"feeling the intensest regret, when I saw what Watts had created in three hours, that his normal vitality made such power comparatively rarely present. Some feeling of indignation, some intense enthusiasm, or other excitement produced from the mesmeric influence of another personality, were needed to stir the psychic forces of his Celtic nature from its state of normal lethargic melancholy. Conscience, a strong will, and a never-flagging ambition were the helpmates to his industry, and overcame all tendency to indolence; but other influences were needed before the depths of his genius were stirred."

It is put rather confusedly and redundantly, as is the author's wont, but there is no doubt a truth here which explains the extraordinary diversity in Watts's work. Though he disclaimed genius, he depended at all events on the inspiration of a Muse whose caprices were incalculable.

Of his sculpture Mrs. Barrington speaks with intimate knowledge; she tells how the conception of 'Vital Energy' grew out of the statue to Hugh Lupus, how Watts was obliged to give up modelling in clay because of the rheumatism its moisture caused, and so took to the peculiar tow and plaster method which gave his figures such a curious ruggedness of surface. Mrs. Barrington laments this; but one can scarcely doubt that it was congenial to him, the surface is so near in effect to that of his later paintings. It helped, too, to give that brokenness of surface which answers to what the author calls "bloom" in painting, a brokenness which most creative designers appear to require, and which they get sometimes, as Rodin does, by what seem to be the most gratuitous caprices.

She tells, too, of the ingenious device of iron bars with hooks and eyes that Watts contrived in order to be able to alter the action of his horse, even when the work was far advanced—a sign, borne out by the finished work, of a want of absolute grasp of the idea. Of the unfinished 'Aurora' she speaks with too much depreciation, we think. It had, when we saw it, at least a monumental sense of line—a self-containedness in the mass which is the rarest and most precious quality of modern sculpture.

Of his experiments in the technique of painting, too, his efforts to find a duly absorbent ground, his dislike of oiliness, Mrs. Barrington speaks, and adds:—

"I used to try to transmit our precious discoveries to Leighton, but he was somewhat sceptical as to their importance, and would exclaim, 'Oh, la cuisine, Mrs. Barrington! la cuisine!'"

Would that Leighton had had a little more of that cookery, and had shared Watts's dislike of a painty and lèche surface!

One of the most interesting confessions of Watts's artistic creed is that "he felt that the early Italians had been on the best road. Though he couldn't wish that Titian or Tintoret had done other than they did, still he considered facility fatal to the tranquil earnestness that finds and reproduces the very best."

As we have said, Mrs. Barrington's book can by no means be considered as a complete or adequate biography of Watts; some more authoritative and careful history must, we feel sure, be forthcoming, and it may perhaps be thought that our author has somewhat hastily discounted the effect such a work will produce. She has, however, described events almost more as they grouped themselves round her than as they occurred to Watts, and we think that the frankness and vivacity of the glimpses she affords of a great personality give these pages a value which atones for much discursiveness.

---

Norway. By Nico Jungman. Text by Beatrix Jungman. (A. & C. Black.)—Nothing could be more fitting than that Messrs. Black's series of "beautiful books," profusely illustrated in colour, should include one on Norway; and lovers of that country have been eagerly anticipating the appearance of this volume. They will rise from an inspection of it with rather mingled feelings. Of the seventy-five illustrations by Mr. Jungman, no fewer than twenty-seven are portraits; and those which he has painted from life—mainly types of feminine beauty in the picturesque national costume—are altogether charming. In this department the artist is thoroughly at home. Another division, some twenty-three in number, may be held to comprise town and harbour scenes, winter sports, and cottage interiors; and here he is frequently, though not uniformly, successful. Among the best are 'Making the Dinner,' the second view of 'Moldøen,' and 'Skiers drinking Goosewine.' It is in the pictures of natural scenery, with very few exceptions, that Mr. Jungman is really disappointing. This group comprises only a third of the whole, and several of these, as 'The Midnight Sun' (at the North Cape, though the artist does not say so) and 'Fishing-Boats at Lofoten,' are obviously taken not from nature, but from photographs or pictures. And yet, of course, the unique glory of Norway lies, not in her simple people, delightful as they are, but in the infinitely varied character of her landscapes and coast-line, in the matchless combination of fjord and snow-capped mountain, of torrent and pine forest, of glacier and rocky tarn. If this book is, as the publishers' leaflet states, "an attempt to depict the varied and majestic scenery systematically," it must be pronounced an almost complete failure. There is not one view of the great Alpine district of Jotunheim, nor one original painting of the mountainous coast of Nordland. There is but one view of the magnificent Sogne Fjord—that of 'Mundal, Fjærland,' evidently from a picture, and that not a modern one. The beautiful Nord Fjord supplies only a glacier, which, with its unnatural shape and its hard outlines (possibly a fault of the process), is a mere caricature of the stupendous Kjøndalsbræ. No country in the world is more justly renowned than Norway for the beauty of its mountain lakes, yet they afford not a single subject for Mr. Jungman's pictures. The fact is that the limited scope of his work suffers considerably by comparison with the comprehensive title of the book. It should rather be termed 'Pictures of Norwegian Life and Scenery,' for the landscapes are in no true sense representative. And they are generally lacking in these soft, dark tones of colour, the almost insensible intermingling of light and shade, which are characteristic of a Northern atmosphere. Two or three of the best, however, are not open to this criticism, as 'Sundalsfjord,' 'Mountains and Fjord facing Molde,' and 'Ostre Kanalhavn, Trondhjem.'

The narrative of travel by Mrs. Jungman is brightly written, and relates a long and rather uneventful journey, undertaken late in the season, and a good deal off the beaten track. These circumstances may account for her assertion, which will be startling to English ears, that "with the exception of Germans, who visit the coast-line in ship-loads, there are practically no tourists in Norway." She modestly, and we fear truly, characterizes her book as containing "the superficial impressions of a traveller, exceedingly interested, but having almost everything to learn about her subject." Hence, perhaps, her elaborate explanations of the carriage and of "the tiny rough huts called sæters"; hence, certainly, her artless question, natural from a denizen of a milder clime: "Why should people use snow-ploughs, when winter transit is entirely and most conveniently accomplished on sledges and skis?" She displays, however, an alert intelligence, an extreme, if somewhat credulous, curiosity, and a faculty for describing the most trivial incidents with a certain indefinable grace.

---

THE TEMPERA SOCIETY.

THE Tempera Society, founded some four years ago to "improve the art of painting in tempera by the interchange of the knowledge and experience of the members," has opened its first public exhibition at the Carfax Gallery. There is a general air of gaiety and purity of colour in the room which speaks for the essentially decorative quality of the medium. It is precisely because it is less easily manipulated, and imposes greater restrictions than oil painting, that it forces upon the artist a respect for the decorative effect of his panel. There can be no denying that a considerable number of artists already show real proficiency in the art, and that tempera painting is once more a practical and living mode of artistic expression. On the other hand, it must be admitted that the artistic vision of these who practise the art is not yet developed in proportion to their skill of hand. The more difficult problems remain to be solved. The archaistic and the false naïve are painfully apparent. The fancy is usually strained and unreal, the invention lacks spontaneity. For while we all admire the directness of vision and the unconscious hardihood of expression in primitive art, we cannot prevent our reaction to life and nature being complex, hesitating, and uncertain. So many interests claim our attention, life has so many overtones, is so rich in suggested and half-guessed intimations, that it is hard by an effort of will to recapture the clear-cut outlines of primitive romance. It is, we think, in the work of three women that the nearest approach to success is made in this interesting but experimental effort. One is Miss Sargent Florence, who works in fresco; the second is Miss Margaret Gere, who contributes only one tiny panel in tempera; and the third is Miss Florence Kingsford, who is an illuminator. The Gallery is in all other ways so well and tastefully hung that we are at a loss to understand why Miss Sargent Florence's study of two heads in buon fresco should have been relegated to an obscure corner of the vestibule, for to us it seemed that this had more of the real inspiration of great and characterful design than anything in the exhibition. It is, of course, dangerous to draw conclusions from a single study, but it bears out the impression that we got from a small work shown by the same artist four years ago at Leighton House, namely, that Miss Florence is not only a genuine artist with a distinct and personal mode of conception, but also, given a favourable opportunity, might develop into a very original and fine decorative painter. For her excellences are of the highest kind. These heads are full of character, and character seen in its broad outlines, seen poetically, and with a sense of what is really significant, not with any trifling curiosity or pedantic literalness. They are generalized without ceasing to be living and individual, and it is only on such terms that the figure can enter into the scheme of a large decorative treatment. She is not decorative in the rather too literal sense in which most of these artists understand the word, that is by the fabrication of hard, tight, and ingenious patterns, but her work has the quality of real decorative design in its breadth of feeling and firmly arrested form.

Miss Margaret Gere's little panel the Garden of the Slothful (No. 27) is delightful for wholly different reasons. It is for the delicacy and freshness of its fancy, the real delight in free and appropriate invention which it discovers, that we think it so attractive. We find no great accomplishment, no great science here. Miss Gere's is not a great or ambitious talent, but it has the inexplicable quality of perfect sincerity and ease. Her conceits—such as the little parrot perched on a stick in the garden seen against the sunlit wall, or the figures seen climbing through the creepers to the right—seem to have come to her uninvited; they have that air of being in the right place that no effort of scientific training can give. She has the gift of invention as the primitives had it, as Rossetti at one time had it, and that is all that one can say, except, indeed, that she has the courage of her gift, the courage and good sense to let it be what it is, and not destroy it by the futile ambition to make it appear more. Something of the same delightful freedom of invention characterizes Miss Kingsford's illuminations, but it is a little less freakish, less humorous and unexpected, and this betrays itself in a rather too even and subdued tone in her work. It just misses the sharpness of accent, the delightful surprise of a colour introduced rightly, but without being led up to, which one wants in work of this kind. It tends, in fact, to be a little too pretty. While we are upon this subject we must give also a word of praise to the writing by Mr. Graily Hewitt which accompanies Miss Kingsford's illumination. Indeed, the restoration of the tradition of beautiful writing of which this and many other exhibits give proof is not the least significant part of an effort towards sound craftsmanship in art which is full of promise.

To return to the paintings, Mr. Walter Crane has often given proof (notably in his illustrations to fairy stories) of his real gift of humorous and poetical fantasy, and of this his Mower (21), a great figure of Time, seen against a golden moon, mowing the flowers and the fairies, is a delightful example. Unfortunately Mr. Crane is not always in this simple mood; his triptych is spoilt by a strained elaboration which obscures any inspiration he may have had.

Mr. Gere's work, as is natural, has a strong family likeness to Miss Gere's little panel. He has something of the same purity and gaiety of invention, though not quite the same humour, but he has undoubtedly more accomplishment. His little pieces are altogether delightful, especially so The Cowslip Ball (31), which, without any direct reminiscence of Blake's art, has the sentiment of pure delight in sunshine and fields that one finds in the 'Songs of Innocence.' The Mourning of Demeter (30) is more ambitious and more commonplace. Near this hangs a remarkable and curious work by Mr. Cayley Robinson, The Deep Midnight (26), three figures of Egyptian solemnity gazing up to the sky. It is reminiscent of Blake, but with that forced note of would-be mystical intention which fascinates the German public. Mr. Robinson would be, perhaps he already is, a great artist at Munich. His work is extremely accomplished, but it brings with it for us no conviction of sincerity.

Mr. Neville Lytton exhibits a portrait of A Lady in Eastern Dress (52), and a little fantasia, called The Golden Age (53), which is like a Persian miniature rendered by Carpaccio. In both these are admirable passages; particularly fine is the background of leaves to the portrait, but in both we detect a want of completeness and unity in the vision. Mr. Lytton's natural mode of expression would seem to be more generalized, more in the key of eighteenth-century art; and when he comes to draw with the minute precision that tempera allows he seems to lose his hold upon the central idea. Mr. Batten is perhaps the most accomplished of all the artists who exhibit here; one cannot but admire the certainty and precision with which he carries out his ideas. If only we could like these, and did not find in them the traces of an essentially rhetorical and sophisticated mood! It is not by any means that he lacks sincerity any more than he lacks thoroughness and method, but that his mode of conception is unsympathetic. Though it is painted in tempera, his Mother and Child (11) is nearer to Carlo Dolce than to Fra Angelico, and his Dance (13), in many ways a masterly performance, is thought of as a heroine of the old Lyceum.

Mr. Sidney Lee's Spring (19) is extremely well observed and powerfully drawn. He is clearly an artist whose vision is best expressed in tempera; in his work in oils the deliberate austerity of his draughtsmanship leads to a certain heaviness and dullness of surface which are completely overcome in this work.

We would call attention also to Mrs. Herringham's sympathetic and appreciative copies from the great masters of tempera painting. Of these the best seems to us the combat of Love and Chastity from Cosimo Roselli's panel in the National Gallery.

ARCHÆOLOGY IN THE PEAK.

St. Albans, Sydenham.

IN July of last year I was allowed to communicate to these columns some notes on early crosses and other stones (several of recent discovery) in the Peak district, and to offer some conjectures as to their age and use. It had been my wish to offer as a sequel the result of further attempts to find on the moors other crosses or their stumps that appear on the Peak Forest enclosure maps temp. Charles I.; but, unfortunately, the rain was so continuous at the end of Easter week and at the beginning of the following week that the tramps that had been planned for that season had to be almost entirely abandoned. Nevertheless, one or two fresh facts as to pre-Norman crosses are perhaps worth stating, as well as a few other brief notes of general archæology.

Last year mention was made of the discovery by Mr. J. W. Andrew of a tall, well-marked Saxon cross shaft in a high field-wall near Cadster, the wall being up each side of it giving it the appearance of a disused stone gatepost. It may be added that the hill on the side of which the cross stands is called Eccles Pike, a suggestive name. Near it there are traces of the foundations of a small building. Possibly some future excavation may show that there was a small early church or sanctuary on this site. The cross is certainly of the Derbyshire churchyard type, and has no resemblance to pillar stones, such as the Robin Hood Picking Rods.

About a mile from Cadster, at Fernilee, Mr. Andrew had the good fortune to find another undoubted Saxon shaft, supporting a sundial. It is in the grounds of a private house, and bears the date 1720, which was probably the date when it was uprooted from its original site and put to its present use. It is a pillar stone, with a filleted head of the same fashion as the Picking Rods, the Cheshire Bow Stones, a small one in Bakewell church porch, and a taller one at Clulow. The height of this example, clear of the ground, is about 4 ft. 9 in.; but it would not be seemly on my part to write about it more particularly, as it will shortly be fully described and illustrated in the Journal of the Derbyshire Archæological Society, as well as in the first volume of "The Victoria County History" for this shire. The same is being done for the cross near the base of Eccles Pike.

On the high ground in Cheshire, very near the Derbyshire boundary, is a stone that goes by the name of "Pym's Chair." It is rather difficult to find, having very little height, and being almost concealed in a bank by a roadside. This stone, like the Abbot's Chair, Derbyshire (described last year), proves on examination to be the base of a large early cross; one of the sides of the squared socket having been broken away gives it the appearance of a low, rude chair. It has the initials P.C. in large capitals, probably cut in the eighteenth century, like those on the Edale Head cross, when some survey was made. An obvious idea, locally accepted, makes the initials stand for Pym's Chair. The name Pym is not an uncommon one either in Derbyshire or Cheshire. The curious thing is that a few miles off in Derbyshire, a little beyond Edale Head cross, near the centre of the old Peak Forest, another "Pym's Chair" is marked on the Ordnance 6-inch sheets, in a desolate piece of moorland. The weather prohibited our holding an inquest over this Derbyshire chair; it must be reserved for some other occasion. But the quiet pursuit of archæology over the moorlands of the Peak Forest has to encounter a much worse foe than the weather, which is only intermittent. "The sacred grouse"—as that late eminent man Sir Gardner Wilkinson styled them, when finding it impossible some years ago to complete a plan of that ancient fortress, the Cael Wark, above Hathersage, through the persistence of the gamekeepers—are an unending worry. In the old days of the Peak Forest, when occupied by the red and roe deer, free transit over any part of it was only forbidden for a single month—a fortnight each side of midsummer, termed the close month—when the hinds were dropping or rearing the young fawns; but the grouse form the excuse in many of the wildest parts for an almost unending close season. It has been suggested that the Cheshire Pym's Chair may have been a boundary cross of Macclesfield Forest.

On the only tolerably fine day of this excursion we went by train to Edale. Dismounting, I paid my first visit to the site of the modest little chapel which was pulled down in 1885, when a much larger church was built near by. There was not much to regret in the demolition, for that plain fabric only dated from 1812, when it took the place of the chapel "originally built here in 1633," as stated on a stone which used to be over the door, but is now in the churchyard wall. The records of the consecration of the chapel of the Holy Trinity, Edale, in 1633 by the Bishop of Lichfield on Trinity Sunday are extant; but I had long thought that the forest herdsmen of this once singularly secluded valley must have had a chapel here in mediæval days. The pulling down in 1885 had, at all events, one good result, namely, the bringing to light (buried beneath the pedestal marble font) of an old plain stone octagon font of good proportions and of thirteenth-century date, thus establishing the fact of a mediæval chapel at Edale with baptismal rights. By an unhappy error of judgment, this ancient font, though in good condition, was left exposed in the old churchyard—a new one, of a bulging and awkward shape, being provided for the new church. This church, though apparently conveniently fitted and of useful proportions, is absolutely unsuited to its surroundings. The architect—we know not who he was—could have had no appreciative eye for these impressive Derbyshire hills and dales. It possesses no repose nor quiet homely dignity. Contrariwise it has a fidgety garish exterior, completely out of keeping with its surroundings. Whether viewed near at hand or from the adjacent hills, this church clashes with the landscape, as well as with all the older and simple homesteads. The grey stone slates of the district make admirable roofing, and are on all the older buildings; but the architect has covered the high-pitched roofs of this suburban-looking edifice with alien tiles of staring red.

Our attention was drawn to an exceptionally fine piece of old oak carving in an Edale hostelry. It is a three-tiered court cupboard, and bears the names Nicolas and Margaret Smith, with the date 1670. The carving is rich and varied throughout, but its chief interest consists, as Mr. Andrew pointed out, in the distinctively late Elizabethan or early Jacobean style of ornament used in various parts, though combined with features more characteristic of its real date. The way in which old patterns continued to be reproduced in out-of-the-way districts is a particularly interesting feature of English furniture making, and this is just the kind of piece that might with advantage be purchased for the Victoria-Albert Museum.

We mounted towards midday one of the steep tracks that lead across the lofty ridge that separates Edale from Castleton Dale, in order to see if any trace of a cross could be found at the pass known as Hollins Cross; but none could be discovered. Perhaps the term here merely signifies cross roads; it is marked "Losehill Gate" on a plan temp. Charles I. Here, at this pass, three deeply worn British track roads converge: the main one along the summit from Mam Tor fort to Lose Hill, and the others sloping up and going down from valley to valley in a diagonal fashion. On this ridge, too, was the old "Forest Wall," marked thus on the Charles I. plan. This was the stone wall of a very considerable circuit that enclosed most of the Campana or Champagne (corrupted into Champion) district of the Peak Forest, where the feeding for the king's game of deer was the best. It was not a high park wall to keep the deer in, but a comparatively low one, with a dyke. Its object was to prevent sheep or cattle that might be agisted within the forest from trespassing on the parts particularly serviceable as pasturing ground for the often hardly tried deer; but it had to be low enough to allow hinds and fawns, as well as harts, readily to leap it when desirous of roaming further afield. We found it quite possible still to observe the building of this un-mortared forest wall, which is decidedly superior to other and later wall fences, particularly near Back Tor. Here were another pass and gateway in the forest wall, called Ludgate on the old plan.

Descending to Castleton, it was a great satisfaction, in connexion with the earthworks of the county, to find that almost the whole of the semicircular stretch of fosse and vallum known as the Town Ditch, which embraced the old town, can be readily traced with only a few breaks for buildings and roads. The ends of this semicircle start from below the well-known Castle of the Peak. A fairly perfect long piece of the ditch is in fields on the east of the town, and is marked on the large Ordnance maps; but it ought to have been shown almost the whole way, particularly on the west side, near the millrace from the stream that comes out of the great cave. This ditch formed a kind of outer bailey protecting a considerable area looped in below the castle, and is, I think, most probably of pre-Norman days. Does not the name Castleton in itself denote an earlier defensive work than the Conquest? There is a similar kind of great town ditch enclosing the small town of Bolsover in the east of the county, uniting it to the castle. There was also an earthwork defence of a like kind round the Essex town of Chipping Ongar.

A visit to the church, which I had seen a score of times in years gone by, brought a new fact to light, again telling of days before Peverel obtained foothold here. The chief feature of this church, much and sorely pulled about throughout the nineteenth century, is the good chancel arch of advanced Norman; it is probably of about the same date as the keep of the castle, which is known from the Pipe Rolls to date from the year 1176. Till this visit I had noticed nothing of earlier date; but in the churchyard, leaning against the south wall of the chancel, were three stones that proved to be the double-splayed headstone of a very small early light, and two long dressed stones that had served as the jambs. On inquiry of the new vicar (the Rev. J. H. Brooksbank, who takes the keenest interest in the fabric), it was found that he had recently rescued them from a rubbish heap, and that they had originally been in the north wall of the chancel, which was taken down about forty years ago to allow of vestry additions. The dressing of these stones with the zigzag or chevron tooling so characteristic of Saxon workmanship, as pointed out by the late Mr. Park Harrison, puts, I think, their date beyond doubt as belonging to the later pre-Norman times.

On one other day gleams in the rainy weather caused a second excursion to be made, with the intention of further cross-hunting on the moors above Mellor. Rain, however, compelled frequent shelter, and the day resulted in not much more than a visit to the high-placed church of Mellor, whence there is such a noble view over the vale of Cheshire. I had not visited this church since the "seventies" of last century, when I was (I believe) the first to call attention, both by letterpress and illustration, to the carved oak pulpit cut out of the solid, which I still believe to be "the oldest wooden pulpit in England if not in Christendom." A much-needed restoration of the interior of this church since I last saw it has brought about the re-using of the old pulpit, but it has been re-based, retopped, and repaired in soft wood after a clumsy style. Worse, however, remains to be said. Christmas decorations have been allowed to pepper this unique example of old church woodwork with tacks and nails, doing sad damage. I venture to make a strenuous appeal to those in charge, both local and diocesan, to put a stop to any further heedless defacement of this character. The early Norman tub-shaped font, with quaint incised figures, has been of recent years garnished with the unseemly addition of a brass tap in its side for the drawing off of the baptismal water. The Castleton font has also suffered a like outrage. Mellor church is well worth a pilgrimage to see the pulpit and font, but only the fifteenth-century west tower is old. The body of the church and the chancel were rebuilt about the beginning of the last century, after a singularly mean fashion, with "brief" money. To judge from small drawings of the church on plans of the reigns of Charles I. and Charles II., the original building was a fine one, with south aisle and clerestory to the nave, and a south chancel aisle.

On returning south I had to change stations, with a short interval, at Buxton. Walking into the town, I purchased two good postcards with illustrations of the interior and exterior of the old chapel in the higher town. One was lettered "St. Ann's, Buxton," and the other "Old St. Ann's, Buxton." I remembered a controversy some years ago as to the dedication name of this chapel being altered; but I thought and hoped that right and truth had prevailed over a careless falsifying of history. The old chapel of St. Anne stood close to the waters in Lower Buxton, and disappeared long ago. The chapel in the higher town was built in 1625, and dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. The diocesan authorities of Southwell put right in the official calendar the dedication of Kingston, Notts, after complaint in these columns. The Buxton case calls still more loudly for redress.

J. CHARLES COX.

SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 17th inst. the following pictures: G. Berkheyden, The Stadhuis, Amsterdam, 204*l.* M. Hondelcoeter, The Birds' Concert, 157*l.* Gainsborough, Lady Knighton, in blue dress, with pearl necklace, 325*l.* Boucher, The Toilet of Venus, 141*l.* F. Wheatley, Two Young Girls with a Dog, in a landscape, 110*l.* Romney, Lady Hamilton, in white dress, resting a book upon her knees, 756*l.* Nattier, Madame Dumesnil, in white brocade dress, with blue cloak thrown over her shoulders, 126*l.* Watteau, Madame la Maréchale de Luxembourg, seated in a garden, 609*l.* The Artist, with his Friend M. de Julienne, in a landscape near some ruins, 105*l.* F. Hals, Portrait of a Gentleman, in black dress, with white ruff, holding his hat in his left hand, 294*l.* Raeburn, Sir Wm. Forbes, of Pittligo, 367*l.* Velasquez, Mariana of Austria, in black-and-white dress, with pearl and jewel ornaments, holding a fan and a kerchief, 136*l.* Drawings: J. Downman, Lady Gordon, in pink-and-white dress, seated before a spinet, 273*l.* Turner, The Theatre at Myra, 168*l.*

The same firm sold on the 19th inst. the following drawings: C. Fielding, A Lake Scene, with figures and cattle, 54*l.*; A Storm off the Coast, with jetty and fishing-boats, 84*l.*; A Lake Scene, with peasants and cattle, 63*l.*; A Coast Scene, with stranded boats and fishermen, sunset, 105*l.* Sir J. Gilbert, The Standard-Bearer, 50*l.* T. Girtin, A Castle on a Hill, 56*l.* J. Hardy, jun., A Gillie and Deerhounds, 52*l.* J. H. Mole, A Welsh Landscape, with water-mill, angler, and peasants, 50*l.* P. De Wint, A Landscape, with a village, cattle, and sheep, 54*l.* Pictures: F. Domingo, The Inn Stable, 110*l.* Mary Beale, Three Young Ladies with their Brother in a Park, 105*l.*

Int-Int Gossip.

TO-DAY is the private view at the Dutch Gallery of pictures, water-colours, and posters by Mr. F. W. Carter, Mrs. Helen Bedford, and T. van Hoytema.

THE loan collection of examples of process engraving, comprising photogravure, photolithography, and kindred reproductions, which has been on view for the past three months at the Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington, will be closed to-morrow.

THE Collection Gallotti, which M. Paul Chevallier will disperse at the Hôtel Drouot, Paris, on Wednesday next, includes several interesting pictures by artists of the Early English School. The examples of Thomas Beach, 'Portrait of a Young Lady'; M. A. Shee, a similar portrait; Allen Ramsay, a 'Portrait of an Officer,' and a distinctly Hoppner-like portrait of a young woman by an unknown artist, are illustrated in the excellent sale catalogue, and are obviously all good pictures. One picture, which is not illustrated, is catalogued as by Opie, and is described as "Portraits du peintre Gainsborough et du violoncelliste Fisher, son gendre"; the scene is said to be in the studio of the artist, and the work, which is described as an "importante composition," measures 1 mètre 93 cent. in height, by 1 mètre 64 cent. in width. Chronologically there is nothing against Opie having painted such a picture; but we have not found any record of Opie having painted Gainsborough or Fisher, either separately or together, and nothing whatever is stated in the catalogue concerning the former history of this work.

M. JEAN ANTONIN INJALBERT has been elected a member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts to fill the vacancy caused by the death of M. Jules Thomas. There were three candidates, and out of the thirty-three votes, M. Injalbert received nineteen. The new member is one of the leading sculptors of to-day, and three examples of his work, one in marble, another in plaster, and the third in bronze (cire perdue), are in this year's Salon of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts. M. Georges Lafenestre has been appointed Professor "d'esthétique et d'histoire de l'art" at the Collège de France in succession to the late M. Guillaume. M. Lafenestre is a voluminous author on art.

ON Saturday last the Académie des Beaux-Arts announced the distribution of several important prizes. The Prix Berger, of 15,000fr., was awarded to M. Laloux for the 'Orléans Station on the Quai d'Orsay'; the Prix Brizard, 3,000fr., to M. Henri Marret for his picture 'Rade de Tanger'; the Prix Piot, 2,000fr., to Mlle. M. Carpentier for 'Bélié Joue'; the Prix Meurand, 1,000fr., to M. Grau for his landscape, 'Rives de l'Escaut'; and the Prix Desprez, 1,000fr., to M. Evrard for his statue 'Le Chasseur Surpris.' These five works are exhibited at this year's Salon of the Artistes Français. The Prix Dailly, 1,500fr., offered for a publication on architecture, goes to M. Ballu for his essay on the ruins of Timgad.

THE Prix du Salon and the "bourses de voyage" for the present year have been awarded as follows: M. Henri Zo, a native of Bayonne, and a pupil of Léon Bonnat and Albert Maignan, has obtained the Prix du Salon with his 'Familie Espagnole' and 'Coin de Marché à Seville,' exhibited at the Salon of the Artistes Français. The "bourses de voyage" for painters have been awarded to Mlle. Delorme and MM. Charpentier and Planquette; those in the section of sculpture have been awarded to MM. Émile Perrault, Albert Lenoir, and Descatoire; the two "bourses" in the section of architecture go to MM. Despeyroux and Coutan; and one for engraving was carried off by M. Jacques Beltrand.

The Antiquary for July will contain, among others, the following articles: 'All Saints' Church, Compton,' by Miss Mabel Escombe; 'An Early Anglo-Saxon Migration from East Sussex to the Vale of Taunton,' by the late T. W. Shore; 'Some Monastic Burial Relics,' by the Rev. Herbert Pentin; 'Four Tudor Wills,' by Miss Constance M. Spender; 'The Round Towers of Ireland,' by the Rev. J. B.

McGovern (concluded); and 'The English Cell of a Norman Abbey,' by Mr. J. G. Sieveking.

THE death, in his sixty-ninth year, is announced from Leipsic of the distinguished antiquary Prof. Kurt Wachsmuth. He was the author of a number of valuable works, among them 'De Timone Philiasio Cæterisque Sillographis Græcis,' 'Das alte Griechenland im neuen,' 'Studien zu den griechischen Florilegien,' &c.

A CHURCH HISTORY EXHIBITION is to be held at St. Albans from June 27th to July 8th. There have often been exhibitions on a small scale of ecclesiastical art, as at successive Church Congresses, but the forthcoming one at St. Albans is the first of its kind, for it attempts to illustrate the history of the Church in the British Isles from the earliest times down to the middle of the nineteenth century by means of manuscripts, ornaments, vestments, church plate, portraits, &c. The collection promises to be particularly interesting and comprehensive, and the scheme includes lectures by leading ecclesiologists, such as the Bishop of Bristol, Prof. Lawlor, the Revs. W. H. Frere and H. Bedford Pim, and Sir Frederick Bridge. A great variety of articles that have never before left their owners will be brought together at St. Albans. Among the contributors are the Chapters of Canterbury, Winchester, Chichester, Hereford, Worcester, Wells, and St. Davids; the Colleges of Magdalen (Oxford), Emanuel and Sidney Sussex (Cambridge), and Eton; the Society of Antiquaries, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Duke of Rutland, Canon Gibbs, Dr. G. F. Warner, the Rev. E. S. Dewick, and Mr. W. J. Hardy. Lord Aldenham exhibits a remarkably fine collection of Bibles and Prayer-Books, and there is a valuable collection of MSS. from Lambeth Palace Library.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

COVENT GARDEN.—Roméo et Juliette; Ballo in Maschera.

THE special interest of the performance of 'Roméo et Juliette' at Covent Garden last Saturday was the appearance of Mlle. Selma Kurz as Juliette, and her excellent singing easily won for her the favour of the audience. The cast included Mlle. Parkina and MM. Dalmores, Journet, and Gilibert. M. Messenger conducted. The Wagner performances are at an end; Dr. Richter has left London, and French and Italian operas now for the most part rule the stage. Gluck's 'Orphée,' however, will be given this and next week, and the second performance will be preceded by Franco Leoni's 'L'Oracolo,' announced for last Thursday, but wisely postponed on account of the need of further rehearsal.

On Monday evening came Verdi's 'Ballo in Maschera.' Mlle. Kurz and MM. Caruso and Scotti were at their best. Madame Raunay, the new Amelia, did not satisfy expectations; but a first appearance is apt to cause nervousness. Verdi's opera, neglected for many seasons, seems likely to become popular; it is, indeed, a most delightful work.

WALDORF THEATRE.—Adriana Lecouvreur.

FRANCESCO CILÈA's opera, 'Adriana Lecouvreur,' which was given with such success at Covent Garden last year by the Naples

Company, was performed at the Waldorf Theatre on Tuesday evening. Renewed hearing of the work confirms our impression that the music is fresh and very skilful, but that the libretto is involved. In the last act, in which intrigues are at an end and emotion has full play, the composer is most convincing. The performance was highly praiseworthy. Mlle. Corsini impersonated Adriana, and Madame de Cisneros the Princess; while Signori Pezzuti, Arimondi, Sillingardi, and Angelini-Fornarias Maurice, the Prince, the Abbé, and Michonnet, were all well suited to their respective rôles. The ensemble was excellent. The orchestral playing deserves commendation, although at times it was too loud; but the performers are too near to the stage and to the audience, and this makes it difficult for the conductor to get a suitable tone in loud passages.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Concerts by Vecsey, Elman, and Kubelik.

DURING the past week Vecsey, Elman, and Kubelik succeeded one another at very short intervals at the Queen's Hall: the first gave his concert on Saturday, the other two theirs on the following Monday. Vecsey played the Beethoven Concerto which he performed last year at Berlin, Dr. Joachim conducting. His tone was pure, his technique excellent, but in the reading of the music there were signs that Vecsey is still a boy. The Joachim cadenza in the first movement was splendidly played. The Beethoven Concerto is a severe test, and no one would expect a boy to reveal all the nobility and emotional power of the music. The performance roused the enthusiasm of the audience, for, after all, it was a wonderful performance, possibly as wonderful as the one given by Joachim when, at about the same age, he played it under Mendelssohn's direction here in London.

On Monday afternoon came the Elman concert. He commenced with a Vieuxtemps concerto, displaying, as usual, great dexterity and beautiful tone. But the special feature of the afternoon was the Bach Chaconne for violin alone. We have before now remarked that Elman's conception and interpretation of great music are those of a man rather than of a boy; in this respect he differs from Vecsey. The technical display in the Bach created no surprise, for every one knows what Elman can do; but the power, pathos, and breadth of his interpretation were extraordinary. A bad chanterelle caused him some trouble, yet did not materially interfere with the effect of his performance. Hearing the two young artists in such close juxtaposition naturally prompted comparison; but it must be remembered that Elman is older than Vecsey by one or two years. Anyhow they are both exceptionally gifted. At Elman's concert Madame Wanda Landowska played some delightful pieces by Rameau and Couperin on a Pleyel harpsichord. We recently spoke about this talented artist, who is not only a skilful player, but also interprets the old French music with rare charm and grace. She afterwards played some of Schubert's delightful Valses on an old pianoforte of the composer's time, the effect being exceedingly quaint.

Kubelik at his concert on Monday evening was in his best form. His tone is pure and rich, and his technique flawless; his great success with the public is therefore easy to understand. The programme included concertos by Mendelssohn and Vieuxtemps. We believe that the violinist's aim is a higher one than that of a mere virtuoso; for the time being, however, the material rather than the spiritual side of music seems to have the upper hand. Herr Ernst Schuch, of Dresden fame, was at the head of the orchestra. He accompanied the two concertos with fine tact. His rendering of a Handel Concerto for strings, though somewhat modern, was full of life. It was, however, in the romantic 'Oberon' Overture that the conductor's vigour and enthusiasm found full scope for display. He electrified the London Symphony Orchestra, and also the audience. The request for an encore was granted, the whole overture being repeated.

Musical Gossip.

FOR the fourth Royal College of Music Patron's Fund Concert, to be held at Queen's Hall on June 29th, the committee of experts have recommended compositions by the following young British composers: Bath, Bix, Carse, Dale, Farjeon, Geel, Hathaway, Hazlehurst, Ivey, Ivimey, Keyser, Moore, Pratt, Rudall, and Bonholst.

ON June 10th forty years had elapsed since the memorable production of 'Tristan und Isolde' at Munich, under the direction of Hans von Bülow. Ludwig Schnorr von Carolsfeld and his wife Malwine took the principal parts—the one died a little over a month after the production, the other only last year. Fräulein Deinet, who impersonated Brangäne, is now the wife of Ernst von Possart.

HERREN FORCHHAMMER AND BREITENFELD, of Frankfort and Bayreuth, were to impersonate Parsifal and Amfortas in the two stage performances of 'Parsifal' announced to be given on Thursday and to-day (June 22nd and 24th) by the Wagner Society at Amsterdam under Dr. Henri Viotta, to which only members were to be admitted.

SIGNOR PUCCINI has gone to Buenos Ayres to superintend the performances of his 'Edgar,' 'Manon Lescaut,' 'La Bohème,' 'La Tosca,' and 'Madame Butterfly.'

M. GABRIEL FAURÉ has been appointed the new Director of the Paris Conservatoire in place of M. Théodore Dubois, who lately resigned. The composer, formerly organist of St. Sulpice, has written a symphony, pianoforte quartets, a violin concerto, pianoforte pieces, and many original songs.

MESSRS. GLENDINING & Co. sold on Wednesday some valuable violins, among which were a very fine violin by Antonius Stradivarius, dated 1721, 550l.; an important violin by Joseph Guarnerius, Del Jesu, 340l.; and a fine violin by Francesco Stradivarius, of Cremona, 150l.

GIACOMO OREFICE's lyric drama, in four acts, entitled 'Chopin,' produced at Milan in 1901, was performed on June 13th at the Paris Sarah-Bernhardt Theatre by the Sonzogno Company. The composer has written three other operas which have been favourably received—'Consuelo' at Bologna in 1895, 'Il Gladiatore' at Madrid in 1898, and 'Cecilia and Vicenza' in 1902. The music of 'Chopin,' culled from various of the composer's works, is described in

Le Ménestrel of June 18th as an "immense pot-pourri." The critic acknowledges skill in the piecing together and developments of certain themes, but considers that Orefice has committed a sacrilege rather than achieved a work of art.

'UN PRIMITIF FRANÇAIS DU VIOLON' is the title of an interesting article, signed Lionel de la Laurencie, in the second number of a fortnightly review, Le Mercure Musical, published at Paris. François du Val, a member of Louis XIV.'s band of "fameux joueurs d'instruments," appears to have been the first to introduce into France violin sonatas with continuo. Jean Ferry Rebel is said to have written works of this kind in 1695, but they were not published until 1705. Du Val's first book of 'Sonates et autres Pièces pour le Violon Seul et la Basse' appeared in 1704. He is, therefore, of some importance in the history of violin music in France. He is not mentioned by Grove. Fétis gives him six lines; Mendel and Eitner not even so much.

THE May number of the musical review Finsk Musikrecy, published at Helsingfors, is devoted to F. Pacius, who was born in 1809. It contains, amongst other things, some letters of Spohr to Pacius, who studied with him. In 1834 the latter was appointed music director of the University of Helsingfors, in which city were produced his two operas 'Karis XII. Jagd' and 'Loreley,' the one in 1854, the other in 1857.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |  |
|--------|--|
| SUN.   | Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.                              |
| MON.   | Miss Lucie van Hulst's Cello Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.             |
| —      | Herr J. Mossel's Cello Recital, 3, Eolian Hall.                      |
| —      | Messrs. Fryer, Neuman, and Walenn's Trio Concert, 8.15, Eolian Hall. |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| TUES.  | Madame Albani's Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.                            |
| —      | Mrs. Rollie Borden-Low's Song Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.            |
| —      | Miss Matilde Verne's Recital, 3.30, Eolian Hall.                     |
| —      | Misses Fletcher's Concert, 8.15, Eolian Hall.                        |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| —      | Grand Opera, Waldorf Theatre.  |
| WED.   | Mr. Mark Hambourg's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.             |
| —      | Mr. Edward Mayron's Vocal Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.                |
| —      | The London Trio, 3.10, Queen's Hall.                                 |
| —      | Mr. Charles Williams's Orchestral Concert, 8.15, Queen's Hall.       |
| —      | Mr. Louis Arens's Concert, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.                     |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| —      | Grand Opera, Waldorf Theatre.  |
| THURS. | Mr. Wilhelm Ganz's Concert, 3, Eolian Hall.                          |
| —      | Musie Patron's Fund Concert, 8.15, Queen's Hall.                     |
| —      | Madame Lilith and Mr. Curtis's Concert, 8.15, Eolian Hall.           |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| —      | Grand Opera, Matinée and Evening, Waldorf Theatre.                   |
| FRI.   | Mr. Herbert Grover's Concert, 8, Bechstein Hall.                     |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |
| —      | Grand Opera, Waldorf Theatre.  |
| SAT.   | Grand Opera, Matinée, Waldorf Theatre.                               |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.  |

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

CORONET.—Madame Bernhardt's Season.—Angelo, Tyran de Padoue: Drame en Trois Journées. Par Victor Hugo.

IN the drama of Victor Hugo Madame Bernhardt first established herself in the favour of the English public. Her appearance as Doña Sol in 'Hernani' was the great feature of the famous season of the Comédie Française at the Gaiety in 1879, and her assumption of the part of La Tisbe in 'Angelo' bids fair to be the most interesting incident in her present visit to the Coronet. Of both characters Madame Mars was the original exponent, though the latter was commended to Madame Bernhardt by Rachel, who took it at the Théâtre de la République fifteen years after its first production in 1835. It is a curious fact that until its revival by Madame Bernhardt on February 7th, at the theatre bearing her name, 'Angelo' had not been seen on the French stage for fifty-five years. Even more curious is it, in view of the wave of Hugolatry that passed over us all during the middle of the last century, that it cannot be recalled in any recognizable shape in England. Four exponents of mark in all have essayed the part of the comedian courtesan of Venice: Mlle. Mars, whose appearance took place on February 19th, 1835; Madame Dorval, née Delaunay, the Catarina of the original performance, known to fame also as Amy Robsart and as Lucy Ashton in 'La Fiancée de Lammermoor,' who appeared as La Tisbe in 1836; Rachel, who first assumed the rôle on May 18th, 1850, her sister Rebecca Félix playing Catarina; and now lastly Madame Bernhardt. Considering that Hugo himself hesitated to which of the two, Madame Mars or Rachel, to award the preference, saying that the former excelled her rival in the early scenes of finesse and the later scenes of emotion and resignation, while Rachel could only be accorded the superiority as regards the ensemble of the interpretation, one may maintain that the part of Tisbe has found exponents "fit though few." Why a preference should be awarded Tisbe over Catarina by actresses is not quite plain. By reason of its death scene Tisbe is the more tragic character, and on account of her position as the representative of the Venetian courtesan of the Renaissance she is the more showy and picturesque. Catarina is, however, the more tender, and it may be doubted whether any scene allotted the mistress of the Podestà is more touching and harrowing than that in which the wife pleads for mercy to the stranger whose interference in her affairs seems so gratuitous and so woeful.

Had we to treat 'Angelo' as a novelty, it would be difficult to apply to it any qualification except melodrama. As such it was branded on its first production, and the critics of to-day are careful to recall that their predecessors of a couple of generations ago were wont to allude to Pixérécourt, a prose Heywood of the epoch, who was responsible for over a hundred pieces, sentimental, violent, and lachrymose. 'Angelo' is certainly in the full sense grandiose, and, though written in prose, as was no other piece contributed by Hugo to the Théâtre Français, magnificent in phrase. It is, however, futile to awaken old controversies. With all its Udolpho-like mysteries, 'Angelo' is a powerful and a stirring drama, and one that merits its resuscitation, or, so far as England is concerned, its production. It will be received with delight by a public that recalls 'Hernani,' 'Ruy Blas,' and 'Le Roi s'Amuse,' and chafes at the restrictions which prevent it from remembering with satisfaction 'Marion de l'Orme' or 'Lucrece Borgia,' without the music of Donizetti. The selection by Madame Bernhardt is in the full sense judicious, and the part she chooses, though it displays no unrecognized facets of her genius, recalls the best of her purely romantic creations. As treated by Hugo, the character of La Tisbe has more in common with Esmeralda than with Doña Sol, but it has a measure of the seduction of both, especially as it is played by its latest exponent, who is careful to leave out the most sensual aspects. Surprising as such a statement may seem, Madame Bernhardt's performance was inferior in no respect of witchery and power to anything she has previously exhibited, and was received with highest favour. Mlle. Blanche Dufresne as Catarina, M. Decœur as Angelo, and M. Deneubourg as Rodolfo were all good. For the benefit of M. de Max, who, as Homodei, reached the pinnacle of popularity, a scene which does not appear previously to have been played was interpolated. It presents the death of the spy, wounded by Rodolfo, who in the original tells Catarina that he has slain him, under circumstances told also by Angelo to Tisbe. What purpose this action serves, except to reconcile the actor to a small part, it is not easy to say.

TWO SHAKSPEARE QUARTOS.

Two Shakspeare quartos of unusual rarity and interest will be sold by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge during next month, the first on July 5th, and the second on July 12th. The first of these is "The true Chronicle History of King Leir and his three daughters, Gonorill, Ragan, and Cordelia. As it hath been divers and sundry Times lately acted," 1605. This play is one of the sources of Shakspeare's 'King Lear,' of which the first quarto edition appeared in 1608. This is a comparatively common quarto, for six copies have come into the market during the last eighteen years. The 'King Leir' of 1605, on the other hand, is excessively rare, and there is no record of a copy having been sold under the hammer. There is one in the British Museum, and this seems to be the only specimen hitherto known; it is reprinted by Steevens in the fourth volume of his 'Twenty Plays of Shakspeare,' and by Nichols in the second volume of his 'Six Old Plays,' 1779.

The second Shakspeare quarto is an excellent copy of the fourth issue of 'The Tragedie of King Richard the Third,' printed by Thomas Creede, 1605. The only two other copies known are those in the British Museum and the Bodleian, so that it is more than probable that the price of the example about to be sold will run well into four figures. The recent history of this particular copy illustrates the curious and accidental vitality of very rare books. It has been for many years in the possession of the family of the vendor, and its importance was only realized a few weeks ago, when Messrs. Sotheby were consulted as to its probable value. With characteristic haste, one of the morning papers proclaimed its discovery, with the additions, first that it was the first edition of the play, and secondly that Messrs. Sotheby had offered 800*l.* for it and had been refused. Both statements hardly need contradiction.

Dramatic Gossip.

ON Monday evening Mr. Charles Hawtrey reappeared at the Avenue Theatre as Horace Parker in Mr. Richard Ganthony's 'A Message from Mars,' a part which he has long been playing in America. Miss Lydia Rachel was once more the poor woman, and Mr. Arthur Williams the Tramp. The general cast had, however, been almost entirely changed. 'Miss Bramshott's Engagement,' a one-act play by Mr. G. E. Street, first produced at the Prince of Wales's on April 30th, 1902, was also given.

ON Wednesday Signora Duse appeared for the first time in England in 'Odette,' and on Friday reappeared as Gioconda.

MADAME LEBLANC MAETERLINCK has begun at the Criterion a series of musical and dramatic recitals, in the course of which she delivers a causerie upon the plays of her husband, M. Maurice Maeterlinck, and sings songs of his which have been set to music by M. Gabriel Fabre. Her repertory is not, however, confined to the works of M. Maeterlinck, but includes arrangements of Chinese and Japanese music. Endowed with a good voice, the new-comer sings effectively, and recites with much limpidity of style.

MR. TREE will appear on July 10th at His Majesty's Theatre as Fagin in 'Oliver Twist,' adapted by Mr. J. Comyns Carr. Miss Constance Collier will be the Nancy.

'HER OWN WAY' has been withdrawn from the Savoy, and Miss Maxine Elliott will in the autumn return to New York, in order to appear in a new play by Mr. Clyde Fitch.

MR. ARTHUR BOURCHIER is preparing an adaptation of 'Le Duel' of M. Henri Lavedan, in which he will next appear. The original was given at the Théâtre Français in April.

DURING her present visit to the Coronet Madame Bernhardt will appear in a play by herself on the subject of Adrienne Lecouvreur, differing wholly, it is said, from that by Scribe and Legouvé.

M. TARRIDE has joined M. Ginisty in the management of the Odéon, with the result that the second Théâtre Français, as regards the class of piece produced, is now a species of Théâtre de l'Œuvre. 'Le Portefeuille' of M. Octave Mirbeau may be accepted as a specimen of the kind of piece in favour. A commissioner of police takes a fancy to a street-walker who has been arrested while plying her vocation. A man brings in a well-stocked pocket-book which he has picked up. At first the new-comer is praised for his honesty. As the man is homeless, however, professional instinct is allowed by the commissioner to prevail, and the finder is sent to gaol as a vagrant. Protesting against this cruelty, the street-walker finds herself compelled to join him.

'CŒUR DE MOINEAU,' a four-act piece by M. Louis Artus, produced at the Théâtre de l'Athénée with complete success, has been translated by Mr. Cosmo Gordon Lennox, and will be produced in the autumn, presumably by Miss Marie Tempest.

MISCELLANEA

"INWARA" AND "UTWARA."

The College, Llandoverly.

A GOOD example of this interesting pair of words occurs in the Register of Worksof Priory, Nottinghamshire. Although published in so familiar a collection of material as Dugdale's 'Monasticon' (vi. 118), this instance does not seem to be known generally, and a note on the subject may therefore not be superfluous. In his foundation charter William de Luvetot grants to the priory "in campo de Wirkesop unam carucatam terræ ad Inwara" (sic), and this grant is repeated in a charter of the founder's son, Richard de Luvetot, who, however, adds to his gift "duas bovatas in Herthewik ad Utwara" (sic). These phrases are repeated in a confirmation charter of Henry II., the "Herthewik" of these documents representing the modern Hardwick Grange, near Clumber. Probably the most natural interpretation of these words would be that the original carucate at Worksof was reserved for the service of the canons, the two bovates at Hardwick Grange being intended to meet the responsibilities of the priory towards the king, the "forense servitium" of Domesday Book and Bracton. In any case, it is interesting to find the pre-Conquest terms "Inwaru" and "Utwaru" surviving in actual use in the Midlands in the Angevin period.

F. M. STENTON.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—R. R. M.—W. H. J.—F. J. F. J.—R. B.—received. T. H.—P. G.—Many thanks. No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST.

Catalogue sent post free on application.

Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

HENRY THE THIRD AND THE CHURCH.

A Study of His Ecclesiastical Policy, and of the Relations between England and Rome.

By the Right Rev. Abbot GASQUET,
D.D. O.S.B. [Ready June 23.]

CHEAPER REISSUE. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE EVE OF THE REFORMATION.

Studies in the Religious Life and Thought of the English People in the Period preceding the Rejection of the Romish Jurisdiction by Henry VIII.

By the Right Rev. Abbot GASQUET, D.D.

"Dr. Gasquet has produced a book which will set many men thinking. He has done an excellent piece of work, and has offered to students of history a highly interesting problem." Athenæum.

BOHN'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

NEW VOLUME. Post 8vo, 5s.

SWIFT'S PROSE WORKS.

Edited by TEMPLE SCOTT.

Vol. VII. HISTORICAL and POLITICAL TRACTS (IRISH). [Ready June 23.]

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUE. 1s. net.

THE ANGEL IN THE HOUSE.

By COVENTRY PATMORE.

Pott 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 1s. net; or in limp leather, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. net.

DEFOE. By Albinia Wherry.

[Bell's Miniature Series of Great Writers.]

THE POCKET HORACE.

HORACE. The Latin Text, with Conington's Translation on Opposite Pages. Complete in 1 vol. printed on Thin Paper for the Pocket, bound in stamped sheepskin, 5s. net; or limp cloth, 4s. net.

*. Also in 2 Parts: The ODES and CARMEN SECLARE. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; limp leather, cut flush, 2s. net. The SATIRES, EPISTLES, and ART of POETRY. Cloth, 2s. net; limp leather, cut flush, 2s. 6d. net.

BOOKS FOR ARTISTS AND ART STUDENTS.

LIGHT and WATER. An Essay on

Reflexion and Colour in River, Lake, and Sea. By Sir MONTAGU POLLOCK, Bart. With 39 Photographic Illustrations and numerous Diagrams. Small 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

The TREATMENT of DRAPERY

in ART. By G. WOOLLISCROFT RHEAD, R.E. A.R.C.A.Lond. With over 50 Diagrams and Drawings in Line by the Author, and 32 Half-Tone Illustrations. Post 8vo, 6s. net.

JAPANESE ILLUSTRATION. By

EDWARD F. STRANGE, M.J.S. With 83 Illustrations and 8 Coloured Plates. Second Edition, with New Preface. 8vo, 6s. net.

ANATOMICAL DIAGRAMS for the USE of ART STUDENTS. Arranged with Anatomical Notes and drawn out by JAMES M. DUNLOP, A.R.C.A., Antique and Life Class Master, and Lecturer on Artistic Anatomy in the Glasgow School of Art. With Introductory Preface by JOHN CLELAND, M.D. LL.D. F.R.S., Professor of Anatomy in the University of Glasgow. With 71 Plates, containing 150 Subjects, printed in three Colours. Second Edition. Imperial 8vo, 6s. net.

Catalogue of Books for Artists and Art Workers sent post free on application.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S STANDARD WORKS.

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.—New Series.

Crown 8vo, red cloth, flat backs, 2s. net each.

EDWARD FITZGERALD. By A. C. Benson.
 ADAM SMITH. By Francis W. Hirst.
 THOMAS MOORE. By Stephen Gwynn.
 HOBBS. By Sir Leslie Stephen, K.C.B.
 MARIA EDGEWORTH. By Hon. Emily Lawless.
 ROSSETTI. By Arthur C. Benson.
 CRABBE. By Canon Ainger.
 FANNY BURNEY. By Austin Dobson.

SYDNEY SMITH. By George W. E. Russell.
 JEREMY TAYLOR. By Edmund Gosse, M.A. LL.D.
 BROWNING. By G. K. Chesterton.
 TENNYSON. By Sir Alfred Lyall, K.C.B.
 RUSKIN. By Frederic Harrison.
 GEORGE ELIOT. By Sir Leslie Stephen, K.C.B.
 HAZLITT. By Augustine Birrell, K.C.
 MATTHEW ARNOLD. By Herbert Paul.
 RICHARDSON. By Austin Dobson.

OTHERS IN PREPARATION.

EDITIONS OF TENNYSON'S WORKS.

The POETICAL and DRAMATIC WORKS. Complete in 1 vol. crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

* * INDIA PAPER EDITION. Crown 8vo, limp leather, 10s. 6d. net.

COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS.

"POCKET EDITION." Pott 8vo, bound in leather, 7s. 6d. net.

"GLOBE EDITION." Cloth, 3s. 6d.; or, with gilt back and gilt edges,
 4s. 6d.

In 12 vols. demy 16mo, cloth, 1s. net each; or, in cloth box, 14s. net.

In 23 vols. cloth, 1s. net each; leather, 1s. 6d. net; or, in handsome case, cloth, 25s. net; leather, 36s. net.

GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; limp leather, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. net.

The DRAMATIC WORKS.

MINIATURE EDITION. 5 vols. in box, 12s. 6d.

POEMS: In Memoriam, Maud, The Princess, Enoch
 Arden, &c. With Portrait and 16 Illustrations. 8vo, gilt edges, 2s.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON. A Memoir. By Hallam,
 LORD TENNYSON, late Governor-General of Australia. With Portrait and Facsimiles. Extra crown 8vo, 10s. net.

IN MEMORIAM.

The PRINCESS.

LYRICAL POEMS.

IDYLLS of the KING.

COMPLETE EDITIONS OF THE POETS.

With Portraits. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON.

The COLLECTED POEMS of T. E. BROWN, Author of 'Fo'c's'le Yarns,' 'The Manx Witch,' &c.

MATTHEW ARNOLD.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY. Edited by Prof. Dowden.

ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH.

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI. With Introduction, Memoir, and Notes by W. M. ROSSETTI.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. With Introduction by THOMAS HUGHES.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE. Edited, with a
 Biographical Introduction, by DYKES CAMPBELL.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. With Introduction by JOHN MORLEY.

The BAB BALLADS, with which are included Songs of a Savoyard. By W. S. GILBERT. Sixth Edition. Illustrated.

MACMILLAN'S LIBRARY OF ENGLISH CLASSICS.

Edited by A. W. POLLARD. A Series of Reprints of Standard Works in Library Form.

Demy 8vo, cloth elegant, price 3s. 6d. net per Volume.

Also in Roxburgh binding, green morocco back, cloth sides, and gilt tops, price 5s. net per Volume.

BACON'S ESSAYS: COLOURS of GOOD and EVIL: and ADVANCEMENT of LEARNING. 1 vol.

SHERIDAN'S PLAYS. 1 vol.

MALORY'S MORTE D'ARTHUR. 2 vols.

STERNE'S TRISTRAM SHANDY and SENTIMENTAL
 JOURNEY. 2 vols.

BOSWELL'S LIFE of JOHNSON. 3 vols.

CARLYLE'S FRENCH REVOLUTION. 2 vols.

FIELDING'S TOM JONES. 2 vols.

WHITE'S SELBORNE. 1 vol.

TRAVELS of SIR JOHN MANDEVILLE. With Illustrative Narratives from Hakluyt. 1 vol.

LOCKHART'S LIFE of SCOTT. 5 vols.

DON QUIXOTE. Translated by Shelton. 3 vols.

WALTON'S LIVES and COMPLETE ANGLER. 1 vol.

DE QUINCEY'S CONFESSIONS of an ENGLISH
 OPIUM EATER; MURDER as a FINE ART; The ENGLISH MAIL
 COACH and OTHER ESSAYS. 1 vol.

CARLYLE'S SARTOR RESARTUS and HEROES and HERO WORSHIP. 1 vol.

GOLDSMITH'S SELECT WORKS. 1 vol.

HAZLITT'S CHARACTERS of SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS, and LECTURES on the ENGLISH POETS. 1 vol.

MILTON'S POETICAL WORKS. 2 vols.

THE BOOK OF THE SEASON.

PRINTERS'
PIE, 1905.

EDITED BY

W. HUGH SPOTTISWOODE,

PUBLISHED

ON THE FIRST OF JUNE.

*Every Copy sold helps one of the best-managed Charities in the Country—The Printers' Pension
Corporation. President for 1905,
Mr. C. ARTHUR PEARSON.*

CONTENTS:

STORIES, &amp;c.

BY

W. L. ALDEN.
F. ANSTY.
DUKE of ARGYLL.
G. B. BURGIN.
Lieut.-Col. NEWNHAM-
DAVIS.
Major-Gen. Sir A. G.
FRENCH.
TOM GALLON.
G. L. GRAVES.
J. K. JEROME.
E. V. LUCAS.
H. W. LUCY.
BARRY PAIN.
Major-Gen. B A D E N-
POWELL.
C. ARTHUR PEARSON.
MOSTYN PIGOTT.
WM. LE QUEUX.
W. PETT RIDGE.
ADRIAN ROSS.
LORD STANLEY.
G. R. SIMS.
KATHARINE TYNAN.
I. ZANGWILL.

&amp;c. &amp;c.

DRAWINGS, &amp;c.

BY

CECIL ALDIN.
C. A. BUCHEL.
E. M. CROXTON.
C. DANA GIBSON.
DUDLEY HARDY.
JOHN HASSALL.
L. RAVEN HILL.
GUNNING KING.
PHIL MAY.
WILL OWEN.
CHAS. PEARS.
F. PEGRAM.
L. THACKERAY.
F. H. TOWNSEND.
DAVID WILSON.
LAWSON WOOD.
STARR WOOD.

&amp;c. &amp;c.

1s. net.

Of all W. H. SMITH & SON'S Bookstalls,
And of all Booksellers and Newsagents.

Published by THE SPHERE and TATLER, Ltd.,
Great New Street, London, E.C.

VOLUME FOR 1904 JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ANNUAL REGISTER:

A Review of Public Events at Home and Abroad for the Year 1904.

8vo, 18s.

* * Volumes of the ANNUAL REGISTER for the Years 1863-1903 can still be had, price 18s. each.

LONGMANS, GREEN &amp; CO. 39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

THIS WEEK'S NUMBER CONTAINS—

NOTES:—Grandeas of Spain—Danteiana—The 'Faithful Admonition' of May, 1554—"Boast"—James Glen—St. Piran's Oratory, Cornwall—"Bloody Warriors"—"His Majesty's Opposition"—Evangelical Zoology at Vitoria.

QUERIES:—Sir Balthasar Gerbier—Zoffany's Portrait of Mozart—Bishops' Signatures—Carnegie: its Pronunciation—Lytton Quotation—De Teixeira Sampayo—Major Monro—"Pictures of the Old and New Testaments"—P.C.C. Will Registers—Prattenton: Heatley: Darby—Tacitus translated by Greenway and Savile—"Table Talk of Samuel Rogers"—"Concerts of Antient Music"—Alliterative Greek Verses—Guidot—Simon and Simon Smyth Mountfort—Jules Verne: Star and Crescent Moon—St. Gilbert of Sempringham—Sonnet on N. M. Constance—Queenington, Gloucestershire—Mint at Leeds—Conyers—Messianic Medal—Besant on Dr. Watts—Lulach, King of Scotland.

REPLIES:—Parsloe's Hall, Essex—"Pop goes the weasel"—"England," "English"—William Shelley—Audience Meadow—53, Fleet Street—English Crown Jewel—"Coryate's Crudities"—Chester Piea Rolls—Parliamentary Quotation—William Tyndale's Ordination—Fanshawe Family—Shakespeare's Grave—Children at Executions—"Jockteleg"—Coliseums Old and New—House of Lords, 1625-60—St. Patrick—Indian Kings—"The Lass of Richmond Hill"—La Scala—Lines on Mug—Ghost-Words—Southwold Church—"I sit with my feet in a brook"—Local 'Notes and Queries'—Dryden's Sisters—Human Sacrifices: Ghosts—Sir R. Fanshawe.

NOTES ON BOOKS:—"The Wild Marquis"—"The Old Service-Books of the English Church"—"Index to Obituary Notices in Jackson's Oxford Journal"—"The York Library"—"The Gull's Horn-Book"—"Printers' Pie"—"The King's Novels"—"The Water Babies"—"Descriptive Index to Shakespeare's Characters."

Notices to Correspondents.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.
And of all Newsagents.

JARROLD &amp; SONS' NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY.

A HOUSE OF LETTERS.

Being Excerpts from the Correspondence of Miss CHARLOTTE JERNINGHAM (the Hon. Lady Bedingfield), Lady JERNINGHAM, COLERIDGE, CHARLES and MARY LAMB, SOUTHEY, Sir CHARLES and Lady BOUGHTON, and others.

Edited by ERNEST BETHAM. 10s. 6d. net.
Covering the period from 1750 to 1850, and many of the quieter, yet attractive aspects of English life as it then was, are apparent in this House.

The volume is illustrated by a number of Photogravure Portraits, Half-Tone, and Three-Colour Work, and contains a reproduction from a Miniature painted by Sir WILLIAM ROSS of

HER MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA, when a Young Woman (not previously published).

SECOND EDITION.

OLD DAYS IN DIPLOMACY.

By the Eldest Daughter of Sir EDWARD CROMWELL DISBROWE, G.C.B., En. Ex. Min. Plen. With Preface by M. MONTGOMERY-CAMPBELL. Contains several Photogravure Portraits, and an Autograph Letter from Queen Charlotte. 10s. 6d. net.

"Gives a graphic account of various European Courts during the stirring times of the first half of the last century."—Court Journal.

TALES FROM GORKY.

Translated from the Hungarian by R. NISBET BAIN. With Autobiography and Photogravure Portrait of Maxim Gorky. 6s.

"Maxim Gorky has the mastery of the phrase; half a dozen deft touches, and there is your picture."—Daily Chronicle.

TALES FROM TOLSTOI.

Translated from the Hungarian by R. NISBET BAIN. With Biography and Portrait of Count Leo Tolstoi. 6s.
"The stories are excellently well selected, and show Tolstoi's wonderful power of treating an astonishing variety of subjects with equal ease and success."

"The book is well worth reading—it is absorbing."—Westminster Gazette.
—Daily Express.

MORE TALES FROM TOLSTOI.

Translated from the Hungarian by R. NISBET BAIN. With Biography brought up to date and Photogravure Portrait of Count Leo Tolstoi. 6s.

"The snow-storm is a brilliant piece of writing.....every page is living and full of colour."—Daily Mail.

London: JARROLD & SONS,
10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,
ACCIDENT AND DISEASE
(SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID, DIPHTHERIA, APPENDICITIS, &c.)

BURGLARY AND FIDELITY INSURANCE.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.
Established 1849. CLAIMS PAID £4,800,000

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

NORWICH UNION FIRE OFFICE.

Founded 1797.

HEAD OFFICE: NORWICH.

CHIEF { 50, Fleet Street, E.C.

LONDON OFFICES { 71, 72, King William Street, E.C.

Claims Paid ..... £19,042,000

Applications for Agencies invited.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT
INSTITUTION

Estab.]

[1835.

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

Accumulated Fund over ... .. £6,000,000
Paid in Claims more than ... .. £12,400,000

PROFITS.

These are divided every five years solely amongst the Assured. At the 1902 Division a Cash Profit of £761,602 was apportioned amongst the members, being considerably more than one-third of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years.

ENDOWMENT-ASSURANCE

Policies are issued, combining Life Assurance at minimum cost with provision for old age, and are singularly advantageous.

L. F. HOVIL,

Actuary and Secretary.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN,
HEADACHE, GOUT,
And INDIGESTION.
And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA

A STRONG LIST OF NEW BOOKS

JUST ISSUED BY

CHAPMAN & HALL,

MR. H. G. WELLS'S MASTERPIECE. A MODERN UTOPIA.

By H. G. WELLS. With Illustrations by EDMUND J. SULLIVAN.

The ATHENÆUM says:—"There has been no work of this importance published for the last thirty years.....It is an amazingly able constitution, and one wonders that it should be the outcome of a single mind.....This astonishing book is a piece of work which embodies imaginative science at its highest."

The BOOKMAN says:—"Close packed with thought, yet as interesting as a novel: a fascinating and amazingly clever piece of work."

A MODERN UTOPIA.

By H. G. WELLS. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MR. ARCHDALL REID'S NEW BOOK. A NEW LIGHT ON EVOLUTION.

THE PRINCIPLES OF HEREDITY.

By G. ARCHDALL REID, Author of 'Alcoholism: its Cause and Cure.' Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

Dr. C. W. SALEEBY in the EVENING STANDARD says:—"Mr. Reid goes on from strength to strength. His latest book is one which every student and amateur of biology should read and inwardly digest; whilst there is no legislator or publicist in any land who is unconcerned with its teaching.....The volume is scientific, in that the author quotes his authorities, forswears rhetoric, probes to the depths; and popular, in that he is always intelligible and never forgetful of the relations between theory and practice, between science and life.....Adequately to deal with any one chapter of so comprehensive and suggestive a book would entail weeks of work.....We have scarcely begun to indicate the reasons why we regard this book as one of the most valuable that have appeared since the epoch-making date of 1859."

MR. BENNET BURLEIGH'S GREAT WAR BOOK. EMPIRE OF THE EAST.

Japan and Russia at War, 1904-5.

By BENNET BURLEIGH, War Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph. Crown 8vo, profusely illustrated, 6s.

The DAILY TELEGRAPH says:—"Will rank as the standard book on the struggle between Russia and Japan.....Admirably lucid accounts of the great scenes of the war."

The EVENING STANDARD says:—"It is needless to praise the vivid pictures that he paints, or the absorbing result of his untiring energy and tried skill."

RUSSIA IN REVOLUTION.

By G. H. PERRIS. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

The DAILY CHRONICLE says:—"A vivid, well-ordered, and altogether fascinating book."

The STANDARD says:—"The substantial accuracy of the terrible facts and statistics marshalled in these pages cannot be seriously challenged."

The DAILY GRAPHIC says:—"Not only a timely book, but one that contains many elements of permanent value. The revolutionary portraits make a very striking gallery."

The EVENING STANDARD and ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE says:—"A series of romantic yet terrible life-histories.....A book of blood and tears."

KEBLE HOWARD'S NEW NOVEL.

LOVE IN JUNE. A Pastoral Comedy.

By KEBLE HOWARD, Author of 'The God in the Garden,' and 'Love and a Cottage.' Crown 8vo, 6s. Illustrated by FRANK REYNOLDS, R.I.

The MORNING LEADER says:—"It would be a great benefit to the human race at large if Mr. Keble Howard would write one novel a week, instead of one a year. He has the lightest touch in the world, the happiest wit, the most kindly humour."

NOW READY EVERYWHERE.

POVERTY BAY. A Nondescript Novel.

Profusely illustrated by HARRY FURNISS, and written by the Artist.

The DAILY GRAPHIC says:—"It has a dreamy, poetic charm that will delight the artist and the poet—the possessor of an imaginative temperament, in short.....it is the work of a man who has grown old in experience, and yet kept young in heart,.....and this lends to his writing the distinctive quality of its charm."

POVERTY BAY. A Nondescript Novel.

By HARRY FURNISS. Illustrated by the Author. Square crown, 6s.

MISS NETTA SYRETT'S NEW NOVEL.

THE DAY'S JOURNEY.

By NETTA SYRETT. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Mr. H. HAMILTON FRYE in the EVENING NEWS says:—"Finely imagined, and written with sincere emotion.....If you like books which help you to understand your fellow-creatures, you should certainly not miss 'The Day's Journey.'"

The TIMES says:—"The story moves, and there is clever handling both of dialogue and of the play of emotion."

London: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED,
11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

Features of the rich and varied Contents for JULY (now ready).

FRANCIS DRAKE as PIRATE and FREE-BOOTER. See 'The Romantic Adventures of Francis Drake,' with Facsimiles of Old Prints.

EDWIN A. ABBEY, R.A., contributes Illustration of Shakespeare's Henry VI.

WHAT AMERICANS OWE to LONDON. Narrated by W. D. Howells in his illustrated Article 'American Origins.'

HOW GRAVITATION EXERTS its FORCE. The many interesting Theories are graphically dealt with in Dr. Saleeby's Article, 'Gravitation and the Ether.'

J. J. SHANNON, A.R.A., and PICTORIAL PORTRAITURE. With 8 fine Reproductions of his Masterpieces.

The DEMAND for CAPABLE MEN. In 'The Search for Men' the Author shows that "never in the world's history were there such opportunities as now for men of ability."

AN ARTIST'S PRAISE of NEW YORK. With Illustrations revealing the beauties of New York Harbour.

BOOTH TARKINGTON'S STORY of INDIANA. See 'The Conquest of Canaan.'

The AGRICULTURE of ANTS. An Illustrated Article by H. C. McCook, D.D. Sc.D. LL.D.

ROMANCE on a FISHING SMACK. Norman Duncan's 'A Romance of Whooping Harbor.'

EIGHT STORIES of the HIGHEST ORDER. Besides the Serial by Booth Tarkington, Author of 'Monsieur Beaucaire,' &c., there are Eight Complete Stories by Favourite Writers.

TWENTY-TWO FULL-PAGE DRAWINGS of characteristic excellence, and a profusion of smaller Illustrations.

MISS BELLARD'S INSPIRATION.

By W. D. HOWELLS. 6s.

A captivating tale of a summer episode in the New Hampshire hills, in which the course of the love story takes a novel turn. Mr. Howells's subtle humour is manifest on every page, and the whole story is a delicate veiled satire on certain modern ways of doing and thinking.

HECLA SANDWITH.

By E. U. VALENTINE. 6s.

"Mr. Valentine, with a grave, high sense of the art he was newly essaying to use, looked out upon our civilization for a fresh, original, great story—and he found it. There can be no mistake here—it is a story of the first magnitude."—JAMES LANE ALLEN, Author of 'The Choir Invisible,' &c.

THE TYRANNY OF THE DARK.

By HAMLIN GARLAND. 6s.

An attempt, by a powerful and original Western novelist, to build up a love story, the whole machinery of which is supplied from across the Border.....It will set many people thinking, and its net effect will be to make us all feel more the mystery of life."—W. T. STED in the Review of Reviews.

THE CANDIDATE. 6s.

JOSEPH A. ALTSHELDER.

THE ACCOMPLICE. 6s.

FRED. T. HILL.

THE SILENCE OF MRS. HARROLD. 6s.

S. M. GARDENHIRE.

THE CLUB OF QUEER TRADES. 6s.

G. K. CHESTERTON.

THE FORTUNES OF FARTHING. 6s.

A. J. DAWSON.

THE CHRONICLES OF ADDINGTON PEACE. 3s. 6d.

B. FLETCHER ROBINSON.

HARPER & BROTHERS,
45, Albemarle Street, London, W.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY. THE NEW EDITION OF LORD BURGHCLERE'S TRANSLATION OF THE GEORGICS OF VIRGIL.

Fcap. 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

"We confess that when we compare Dryden and Lord Burghclere side by side we cannot say that the advantage is always with the former."—Athenæum.

"Lord Burghclere's work will excite the constant envy and admiration of all readers of taste."—Spectator.

"He expresses the exact meaning in the words best calculated to produce poetry's emotional effect. It is impossible to give higher praise to a translation than this."—Westminster Gazette.

"Most admirably are the sustained power and melodious utterance of the great master poet reflected in our Saxon speech."—Leeds Mercury.

"Amongst the finest translations of Virgil ever made; a very high place will be taken by Lord Burghclere's rendering of the Georgics into verse."—Yorkshire Post.

THE YEAR OF TRAFALGAR.

By HENRY NEBWOLT, Author of 'The Sailing of the Longships,' 'Admirals All,' &c. With Photogravure Portrait of Lord Nelson and Plans of Battle, &c. Large crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"Gathered together in the small compass of this book is what may be called the epic of Trafalgar, told almost throughout by those who took part in the battle, and told in language whose noble simplicity puts mere fine writing to shame.....a genuinely satisfactory piece of work, a real contribution to Nelson literature."—Daily Chronicle.

THE BOOK OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

By the late LADY DILKE. With a Memoir of the Author by the Rt. Hon. Sir CHARLES DILKE, Bart., M.P. With Portraits and Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"A model of what such work should be—informing, sympathetic, and restrained."—Times.

"Sir Charles prefaces the book with a memoir from which my Baronite learns much that is fresh of a many-sided character, whose charm of manner had a tendency to hide the depth of feeling and character that gleamed beneath it."—BARON DE BOORWORMS in Punch.

THE DIARY OF A GIRL IN FRANCE IN 1821.

Written by MARY BROWNE. Illustrated by HERSELF. With an Introduction by EUPHEMIA STEWART BROWNE. Edited by Commander the Hon. H. N. SHORE, R.N. Square demy 8vo, 9s. net.

BYGONE YEARS.

Personal Reminiscences. By the Hon. FREDERICK LEVESON-GOWER. With a Photogravure Portrait. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

"We welcome Mr. Leveson-Gower's entertaining volume."—Athenæum.

"What Mr. Leveson-Gower does is to jot down in simple and natural language fragments from his long and rich social experience.....and to add to the world's stock of anecdotes about distinguished people from the days of Lady Holland down to those of Mr. Lowell."—Times.

THE CONFESSIONS OF LORD BYRON.

A Collection of his Private Opinions of Men and of Matters, taken from the New and Enlarged Edition of his 'Letters and Journals.' Arranged by W. A. LEWIS BRETANY, Editor of 'Johnson's Table-Talk.' With 2 Portraits in Photogravure. Square demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

MISS MARY DEANE'S NEW NOVEL.

THE LITTLE NEIGHBOUR.

By MARY DEANE. Author of 'The Rose Spinner,' 'Treasure and Heart.' Large crown 8vo, 6s.

HISTORY OF ANCIENT POTTERY, GREEK, ETRUSCAN, and ROMAN.

Based on SAMUEL BIRCH'S famous Work. By HENRY B. WALTERS, M.A., Assistant in the Department of Greek and Roman Antiquities, British Museum. With numerous Illustrations. 2 vols. medium 8vo, 3l. 3s. net.

A CHEAP EDITION.

SINAI AND PALESTINE IN CON- NECTION WITH THEIR HISTORY.

By the late DEAN STANLEY. With Coloured Maps. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

A CHEAP EDITION.

THE RISE AND EXPANSION OF THE BRITISH DOMINION IN INDIA.

By Sir ALFRED LYALL, P.C., Author of 'Asiatic Studies,' 'Life of the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava.' With 3 Maps. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

Messrs. CHATTO & WINDUS have pleasure in announcing that they have commenced the issue of a COLLECTED EDITION of
MR. SWINBURNE'S TRAGEDIES

IN FIVE CROWN 8vo VOLUMES, price 6s. net each Volume, or 30s. net for the Five Volumes. Subscriptions can be accepted only for Complete Sets.
 The First Volume, containing the Two Plays THE QUEEN MOTHER and ROSAMOND, is now ready.
 The Paper, Printing, and Binding of the Volumes will be uniform with those of the POETICAL WORKS.

The Contents of the Volumes will be as follows:—

Vol. 1. THE QUEEN-MOTHER. ROSAMOND.

Vol. 2. CHASTELARD. BOTHWELL, Acts I. and II.

Vol. 3. BOTHWELL, Acts III., IV., and V.

Vol. 4. MARY STUART. APPENDIX: Mary, Queen of Scots.

Vol. 5. LOCRINE. The SISTERS. MARINO FALIERO.
ROSAMUND, QUEEN of the LOMBARDS.

Messrs. CHATTO & WINDUS have also pleasure in announcing that they are publishing THREE NEW VOLUMES by
ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

ENTITLED RESPECTIVELY—

Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s. each.

1. ESSAYS OF TRAVEL. [Ready. | 2. TALES AND FANTASIES. [July 6. | 3. ESSAYS IN THE ART OF WRITING. [Sept.

The Contents of these Three Volumes have not before been collected in book form in England, excepting in the EDINBURGH EDITION.

The following is a List of the Essays and Stories included in the Volumes:—

ESSAYS of TRAVEL.—The Amateur Emigrant: From the Clyde to Sandy Hook. Cockermouth and Keswick. An Autumn Effect. A Winter's Walk in Carrick and Galloway. Forest Notes. A Mountain Tour in France. Rosa quo Locorum. The Ideal House. Davos in Winter. Health and Mountains. Alpine Diversions. The Stimulation of the Alps. Roads. On the Enjoyment of Unpleasant Places.

TALES and FANTASIES.—The Misadventures of John Nicholson. The Body-Snatcher. The Story of a Lie.

ESSAYS in the ART of WRITING.—On Some Technical Elements of Style in Literature. The Morality of the Profession of Letters. Books which have Influenced Me. A Note on Realism. My First Book: 'Treasure Island.' The Genesis of, and Preface to, 'The Master of Ballantrae.'

RECOLLECTIONS of ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON in the PACIFIC. By ARTHUR JOHNSTONE. With Portrait and Facsimile Letter. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s. net.

SOUTH SEA IDYLS: Summer Cruising in the South Seas. By C. WARREN STODDARD, Author of 'The Island of Tranquil Delights.' A NEW IMPRESSION. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

The WILD MARQUIS: Life and Adventures of ARMAND GUERRY DE MAUBREUIL. By ERNEST A. VIZETELLY, Author of 'With Zola in England.' Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

STINGAREE. By E. W. HORNING, Author of 'A Bride from the Bush,' &c.

The MISSING ELIZABETH. By ADELINE SERGEANT, Author of 'The Story of a Penitent Soul.'

DON TARQUINIO. By FR. ROLFE, Author of 'Hadrian the Seventh.'

BALIOLE GARTH. By ALGERNON GISSING, Author of 'A Secret of the North Sea.'

The PHANTOM TORPEDO-BOATS. By ALLEN UPWARD, Author of 'The Prince of Balkistan.'

The ERROR of HER WAYS. By FRANK BARRETT, Author of 'Fettered for Life.'

A SPOILER of MEN. By RICHARD MARSH, Author of 'The Beetle.' [Second Impression.

The YOUNGEST MISS BROWN. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of 'The House on the Marsh.'

The MILLIONAIRE BABY. By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN, Author of 'The Leavenworth Case.'

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY STORIES.

CLOCLO. By GYP. Translated by NORA M. STATHAM.

The POET and the PIERROT. By DOROTHEA DEAKIN, Author of 'The Smile of Melinda.'

WHEN a GIRL'S ENGAGED. By HOPE MERRICK.

A RAINY JUNE, and other Tales. By OUIDA.

LI TING of LONDON. By GEORGE R. SIMS ('Dagonet'), Author of 'Mary Jane's Memoirs.' Fcap. 8vo, picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

TAKEN from the ENEMY. By HENRY NEWBOLT, Author of 'Admirals All.' A NEW IMPRESSION. Fcap. 8vo, picture cover, 1s.

HANDLEY CROSS. By ROBERT SURTEES. Illustrated by JOHN LEECH. CHEAPER ISSUE. Post 8vo, picture cover, 1s.

THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY.—NEW VOLUMES.

Printed in clear type on fine paper; full size of page, 6½ by 4½-16 inches. Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net each; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net each.

MACAULAY'S HISTORY of ENGLAND. In Five Volumes; and [Vol. V. just ready.

JUSTIN MCCARTHY'S The REIGN of QUEEN ANNE. In One Volume;

A HISTORY of the FOUR GEORGES and of WILLIAM IV. In Two Volumes; and

A HISTORY of OUR OWN TIMES, from the Accession of Queen Victoria to 1897. In Three Volumes.

[Preparing.

By Sir WALTER BESANT.—SIR RICHARD WHITTINGTON.

GASPARD de COLIGNY.

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.—The MERRY MEN.

NEW SIXPENNY COPYRIGHT NOVELS.

DOROTHY FORSTER. By Sir WALTER BESANT.

LOST SIR MASSINGBERD. By JAMES PAYN.

GOD and the MAN. By ROBERT BUCHANAN.

RED SPIDER. By S. BARING-GOULD.

CHANDOS. By OUIDA.

A BIRD of PASSAGE. By B. M. CROKER.

PARIS. By ÉMILE ZOLA.

A TERRIBLE TEMPTATION. By CHARLES READE.

LOURDES. By ÉMILE ZOLA.

[Shortly.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

AP                      The Athenaeum
4
A8
1905
Jan.-June

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

---

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

---

